Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music
Movie Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.
TUESDAY KARAOKE HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs DOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES
FRIDAY GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs HUSH, SIMI AND BON BONS
SATURDAY HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY LIVE JAZZ
COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available.
DUBLIN $95
LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121
MILAN $132
FARES ARE ONE WAY ROUND TRIP FARES ALSO AVAILABLE
Tickets are subject to availability and must be paid in full at time of booking. Tickets are non refundable. Taxes and fees are extra. Additional restrictions and blackout dates apply. Must stay over a SAT. Some departures may be restricted through March 2002. Fares are subject to change.
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL www.councilitravel.com
Call 24 hrs. 8am Tues. Nov 6 - 12am Fri. Nov 9 & 10am - 7pm Sat. Nov 10

SAVES THE DAY
& THURSDAY
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
SUNDAY NOV 18 7:00PM

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Need Business Experience? Good Pay! Interested? Spring/Summer Internships/Jobs Call College Pro 888-277-7962. See us in the Campus Center on Wednesday

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

EFOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

1994 Plymouth Laser 90,000 miles regular maintenance done recently asking $2600, negotiable. 549-5422

Les Paul Copy Guitar Good condition and practice amp for sale $150. Call 546-3029

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

LOST AND FOUND

Found car keys by Skinner. 549-5109

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 2 females to share one large bedroom in Hobart Lane. 549-9192 Start January 1

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley-Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Dating and Relationship questions answered at askdoclove.com

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island,Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/onlinemall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

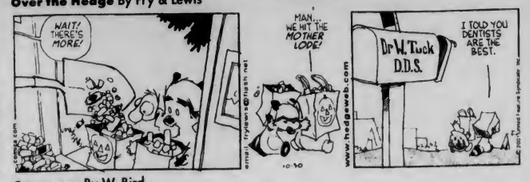
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

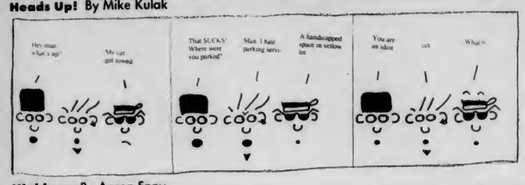
THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 8, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Scenic Rail Journeys		Frontline "Gunning for Saddam"		Mystery! "Second Sight" (N)		This Old Hse.	Hometime (N)
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa "The Twist" (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Agency "Deadline" (In Stereo)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa "The Twist" (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Agency "Deadline" (In Stereo)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	56	Nanny (N)	Just Shoot Me	Friends (N)	Raymond	Popstars 2 (N)	Popstars 2 (N)	Charmed "Brain Drain" (N) (N)				Friends (N)	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N) (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me		ER "If I Should Fall From Grace"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends (N) (N)	Just Shoot Me	Popstars 2 (N)	Popstars 2 (N)	Charmed "Brain Drain" (N) (N)				ER "If I Should Fall From Grace"	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "If I Should Fall From Grace"		Seinfeld (N) (N)	Raymond
WTIC	61	Simpsons (N)	Friends (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Raymond	Family Guy (N)	That (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me			News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me		ER "If I Should Fall From Grace"		News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		This Old Hse.	Dns. on Call	Frontline "Gunning for Saddam		Mystery! "Second Sight" (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB	40	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	News	Frasier (N)	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (N)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier (N)	5th Wheel (N)	Shopmates (N)
WTBS	72	Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Friends (N)	½ "A Few Good Men" (1992, Drama) Tom Cruise. Demi Moore.						½ "Fire Birds" (1990)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio (N)	Law & Order (N)		Biography "Enzo Ferrari" (N) (N)		Biography "Ferdinand Porsche"		Pointer "Dead Man's Mirror" (N)		Law & Order "Computer Virus"
CNN	32	Moneyline (N) (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire (N)	The Point (N) (N)				Larry King Live (N)		CNN Special Report (N)	Greenfield Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live (N)		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	½ "Raising Arizona" (1987, Comedy) Nicolas Cage.				Reel Comedy Pulp Comics		Daily Show (N)	Friars Club
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Wild Dogs		Wild Discovery: Whitetail		Ghost Detectives		Mysteries of the Unexplained		Science Mysteries		Science Mysteries	Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter (N)		Gameday	College Football	Air Force at Colorado State. (Live) (N)						Sportscenter (N)
LIFE	50	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Patti LaBelle"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo) (N)		½ "Secrets" (1992, Drama) Christopher Plummer.		Making Video	Becoming	Diary (N)	Golden Girls (N) Making Video
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Who Knows?	Spankin' New Pop (In Stereo)		TRL (In Stereo) (N)						Cheers (N)	Diarrassed (N) Family Ties (N)
NICK	53	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats (N)	Rugrats (N)	Spongeb	SJ Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers (N)	Cheers (N)	Family Ties (N)	Family Ties (N)
SCIFI	55	Star Trek "The Menagerie" (N)		Babylon 5 "The Fall of Night" (N)		Farscape (N)				Outer Limits "Deja Vu" (N)		Star Trek "The Menagerie" (N)	Crossing Over Crossing Over
TLC	54	Armageddon on Wheels		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Misdiagnosis of Death				Tornado: Survival		Superstorms (N)	Misdiagnosis of Death
TNT	45	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) (N)		Pretender "Exposed" (N)		Law & Order "Pax Icy" (N)				NBA Basketball Philadelphia 76ers at Houston Rockets. (In Stereo Live) (N)			NBA
USA	34	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Birdhouse" (In Stereo) (N)		½ "Mr. Holland's Opus" (1995, Drama) Richard Dreyfuss, Glenne Headly. (In Stereo) (N)						Martin (N)	Martin (N)
HBO	24	*½ "Blue Streak" (1999, Comedy) Martin Lawrence. PG-13 (N)		Inside the NFL (In Stereo) (N)		½ "Under Suspicion" (1991, Suspense) Liam Neeson. (N)						Tsscab Confessions
MAX	25	(5:30) * "American Beauty" (1999) R (N)		 "The Perfect Storm" (2000, Drama) George Clooney. (In Stereo) PG-13 (N)								("Dark Asylum" (2001) Pauline Porizkova. (N) (N)	Bedtime
SHOW	26	"The Inspectors 2: A Shred of Evidence" (2000) Lewis Gossett Jr. (N)		"The Wild Girls" (2001) Olivia Newton-John. (TV) (A Rice-Feast				Going to California (TV) (N)				Leap Years (TV)

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Monty By Jim Meddick



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Follow not the truth too closely, lest it dash out thy teeth."

–Lord Byron

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 39	HIGH: 48 LOW: 26	HIGH: 50 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Take care not to let a minor error go unnoticed today. It may blossom into something you can't easily deal with on your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21) – Trust friends and colleagues to keep you away from anything too dangerous or risky today. Even your neighbors have a stake in your security.

CAPRICRON (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – It will be time to accept a few standing invitations and go out on the town. Seek out people who share your interests.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may be put in a difficult position that will prevent you at first, from doing your best work. An ingenious approach breaks the deadlock.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Use your ingenuity today, and don't settle for anything less than the best. You may have to spend money to make money at this time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your efforts may be interrupted temporarily today if you are sidetracked by an unexpected occurrence. Try to remain patient, and don't overreact.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – This may prove a busier day than expected. You must make sure to pace yourself, particularly when you've got more than one thing going.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Guard against doing any physical, spiritual or emotional harm to yourself today. Someone needs you more than you know.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You will have someone else to thank today for your good fortune. However, you must not forget to role that luck plays in your affairs right now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone you've had your eye on for some time will capture your attention in a different way today. A new professional relationship may be forming.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – There is no room for error today, particularly when you are working closely with others. Remember, practice makes perfect. Always use caution.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may be reunited with someone who played an important role in your life many months or years ago. Your immediate reaction will send an important message.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Staying on top means changing with the times, and no artist has undergone more image transformations than Madonna. But no matter what persona the Material Girl has put on, she has always been smart enough to keep two things thrust clearly into the limelight to keep her fans begging for more...

Her talent and desire

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Stroganoff

Chicken Chow Mein

Vegetable Chow Mein (vegan)

DINNER

TASTE OF NOVA SCOTIA

Steamed Mussels

Lumberman Boiled Dinner

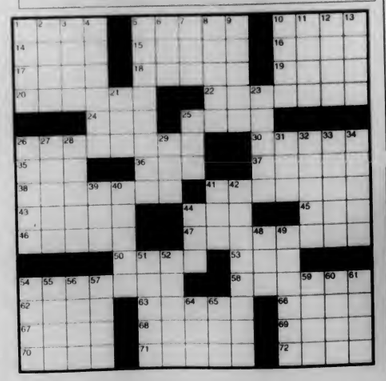
Batter Fried Cod

Ratatouille (vegan)

Amherst Brewing Company
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday Karaoke w/ Cloud Nine Productions $2 cover
Saturday Spooky Doty Pride Psycho Hip Hop Roll $3 cover
Sunday Funk & Monk Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst
413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS

1 Extra
5 Walked in the ocean
10 Confess
14 "Ranger —" magazine
15 Zoo attraction
16 Grant, as land
17 Earthenware pot
18 Consumed
19 Use the post office
20 Radio noise
22 Pranced on the runway
24 Lodge member
25 Bronte heroine
26 Snow vehicles
30 Move smoothly
35 NYC's Madison, e.g.
36 Street in Paris
37 Was unwell
38 Setback
41 Observing Yom Kippur
43 Payola
44 Placed
45 Red — rose
46 Expensive
47 Unwelcome visitor
50 Encourage
53 Purpose
54 Gin-flavoring berry
58 Office machine
62 Very dry
63 Trust
66 Capri, for one
67 Low-lying area
68 Murphy of films
69 Police bust
70 Pub brews
71 Units for 58 Across
72 — nut scraped by with



DOWN

1 Old hands
2 Jaunty tune
3 Bruins' sch.
4 Uses the rink
5 They raze buildings
6 "Go!"
7 Morse signal
8 Foe
9 Benefactor
10 Highest point
11 Wiener schnitzel base
12 Garfield's pal
13 Fuse together
21 Sick
23 Painter of ballerinas
25 Flight dir.
26 Pointed remarks
27 Plain as day
28 Contradict
29 Expected
31 Burning
32 Homeric epic
33 Tightly packed
34 Poe's first name
39 Actor Vigoda
40 Enliven
41 Pleasure
42 Embassy staffers
44 Mom's dessert?
48 — Grande
49 Ballpark official
51 Consult one's notes
52 Mark
54 Coffee, slangily
55 — River of Asia
56 Cairo's river
57 Dangerous March date
59 Meryl, in "Out of Africa"
60 Writer Wiesel
61 "Sanford and Son" name
64 Boise's st.
65 Scrooge and Tiny

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	P	A	N		D	A	U	B		H	E	L	M
A	L	M	A		R	U	S	E		O	N	I	O	N
G	O	R	I		A	G	E	E		S	T	A	R	E
S	T	O	R	A	G	E		R	E	T	I	N	A	S
			D	O	O	R		D	E	C	A	L	S
R	I	B	B	O	N		A	N	G	L	E
A	D	L	I	B		T	I	D	E		Z	I	P
F	E	D		L	A	R	M	A	R	K		I	N	A
T	A	W			L	E	E	K		H	I	N	T	S
			F	L	O	Y	D		M	A	S	C	O	T
A	T	T	A	I	N			A	I	N	T
P	A	R	T	N	E	R		B	A	S	H	F	U	L
S	L	A	T	E		U	T	E	S		M	I	L	E
E	L	D	E	R		M	A	A	M		U	R	N	S
E	V	E	N	S		P	U	M	A		S	E	A	T

11-8-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Collegian Staff

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician: Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor: Joss May
Production Supervisor: riki Alcid
Production Staff: Frank DiMeglio, Mike Kulak

INSIDE: Men's soccer is No. 3 seed for A-10 Tournament

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, November 8, 2001 | 14

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Soccer's Iron Chef

For four years, Sarah Cook, a two-year captain, was a constant ingredient in women's soccer coach Jim Rudy's on-field cooking. As a senior, Cook played every minute of every game for the Maroon and White.

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

She may not be a culinary master like Bobby Flay or Masaharu Morimoto, stars of the Food Network's hit show Iron Chef, in fact she doesn't even like to cook. But while those two have her number in the kitchen, she could easily run circles around both of them on a soccer pitch.

Sarah Cook arrived in Amherst four years ago after starring at soccer, basketball and track for Sycamore High School in Cincinnati, Ohio. It was in soccer that she separated herself from the crowd, winning all-city and all Greater Miami Conference selections her senior year. Her performance helped her win a number of scholarship offers from around the country and she was eventually forced to choose between UMass and Florida State.

"I almost committed to Florida State and Coach [UMass' Jim Rudy] called me that [signing] week," Cook, a sociology major, said. "He wanted me to come in for a visit as a last minute thing. But I ended up coming in and making the choice to come here."

Cook, an attacking midfielder, was thrown into the mix from the moment she arrived on campus, appearing in and starting all 21 matches for the Minutewomen in 1998. However, the team struggled that season finishing with a 10-11 record and missing out on the NCAA Tournament.

"For some odd reason, little girl Ohio had always followed the UMass program and known about the tradition and all the NCAA appearances and I wanted to be a part of that tradition," Cook, said. "So it was really tough [that first season]. For me it was a big thing to try and get that tradition back. I learned a lot my freshman year."

Next year was somewhat better for Cook and the Minutewomen as they improved to 11-5-1 but lost to Dayton in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. Cook set career highs in goals, assists and points that season, finishing with eight points (2 goals and 4 assists), placing her fifth on the team scoring chart. She tallied a pair of goals and an assist in the Maroon and White's season opener, a 6-0 triumph over Albany.

Then it all got turned around.

Following a successful two years in the UMass midfield, Cook looked like she would be a permanent fixture there for her final two seasons. But Coach Rudy had other ideas. During the spring of Cook's sophomore year he informed her that she would be the new UMass sweeper.

"I think it was out of necessity [that we made the switch,]" Rudy said. "We tried it indoors and she handled that role so well I decided to try it in the spring too, and we went with it. What I admire about her is that she sacrificed a very dynamic attacking midfield role, and that's a great sacrifice to make, it's a hard one. I don't know how many players would do it."

"My junior year that was a big, big transition for me," Cook said of the move to the back. "It's a position where you learn a lot through game experience, so it was hard. But overall I've really liked the change and it was what was best for the team."

Along with making the move to sweeper, Cook had her responsibilities greatly increased when Rudy named her team captain for the 2000 season.

"She had earlier leadership qualities than some of the other kids," Rudy said. "It's unusual to have a junior-senior captain, but for me she was my captain, that is who I wanted and that's who I felt comfortable with."

"I was really surprised [being named captain] because I was only a junior and because I was the only one," Cook said. "It was a weird role for me to step into being that young trying to lead the team, it was so overwhelming."

However, "Cookie", as she is known by her teammates, did not let the changes get to her. It was in her junior season of 2000 that Cook truly came into her own, starting all 19 matches for the Minutewomen while marshalling a defense that allowed just 20 goals in 19 matches. For her effort Cook was named first team all-Atlantic 10, second team National Soccer Coaches Association of America Northeast Region and third team Soccer Buzz all-Northeast Region.

Playing a major role in Cook's success was her high fitness level. A former high school track star who still runs extensively during the off season, Cook was able to play most if not all of the Minutewomen's 19 matches in 2000.

"Being a sweeper you probably do the least amount of running out of the whole team," she said. "But fitness is one of my big things so I don't plan to come out of any game."

Despite all of her success through her first three years on campus, Cook had never won the A-10 Tournament nor appeared in

Turn to COOKIE, page 9

"Mass Attack" to take on top program, biggest rival

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

It has to be a big weekend if UConn-UMass is the underdog.

The Massachusetts hockey team (5-3-0 overall, 2-1-0 Hockey East) heads to the Midwest Friday to kick off a non-conference weekend with an upscale matchup against No. 4 Michigan State before finishing off its weekend by returning to the Bay State for a contest against Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference opponent UConn, a game that will be played at the Springfield Civic Center on Sunday.

The Minutemen will have no easy task in attempting to knock of the Spartans, who have gone unbeaten in their last 22 contests held at Munn Ice Arena.

"It's exciting for our guys because they're going into a storied program – what they know is going to be a big crowd, a real challenging situation," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said.

MSL (5-2-1, 3-2-1 Central Collegiate Hockey Association) leads its conference, but will be facing off against its first non-conference foe in the Maroon and White, which went 0-2 in its first trip West this season. UMass came up winless in two contests against nationally ranked Colorado College on Oct. 20 and 21.

"We need to be respectful of the fact that it's a very good team, one of the top teams in the country for sure," Cahoon said. "Playing in front of 7,000 people – if we can block that all out, be respectful, but not so afraid that we play to the best of our ability and do the things we need to do to keep the game competitive – to stay in the game so that we give ourselves a chance coming into the third period."

The biggest hill for the Minutemen to climb will certainly be the task of putting pucks by last year's Hobey Baker Award winner Ryan Miller, who has been a force in the crease ever since he arrived in East Lansing three years ago. This year, Miller has a 1.91 goals against average to go along with a .916 save percentage and three shutouts heading into Friday's contest.

"Ryan Miller's a great player, no question, and they have what is arguably the best defensive core in college hockey," Cahoon said. "So there's two tasks here – the task of putting enough pressure on Miller to challenge and threaten and the task of being able to turn their defense into a different group of players."

The scary fact is that those numbers are well below what Miller has shown he can do in the past. Last season, college hockey's best player allowed just 1.32 goals per game, turning away 95 percent of the shots he faced. Of his 31 victories last season, nearly a third (10) came via the shutout.

Still Cahoon and his squad are far from fazed about going into East Lansing.

"I'm looking for the growth of the program," he said. "As I told the guys last night, I want to take them any place to play anyone so that we can play the best in the toughest of circumstances. When we start to succeed in those circumstances, then we too will be one of the best."

As for the Huskies, they stand at 1-3-1 on the young season, with their lone win coming against lowly American International College. In the team's three losses, they have failed to amass a single goal. UConn was dominated in its lone Hockey East matchup of the young season, a 6-0 drubbing at the hands of Lowell.

Last season, the Minutemen fell apart against the Huskies, blowing a two-goal third period lead en route to a 2-2 tie at the Mullins Center. Cahoon sees a repeat of that letdown unlikely.

"Connecticut is UMass' number one rival in almost every sport," he said. "This game will be a game that we'll play every year. We better take it seriously, because I don't think we want to lose our bragging rights to UConn over a hockey game in Springfield."

Game time Sunday is slated for 7:00 p.m.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman defender Jeff Lang will try to improve on his -2 +/- this weekend against Michigan St. and Connecticut.

Soulive hits Pearl Street this weekend. The world may never be the same.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The Minuteman travel to Maine this weekend. Can they run away with a win?

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 46 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, November 9, 2001

Alumna discusses women and the Jewish experience

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

The first meeting of the Business Leadership Initiative Program brought University of Massachusetts alumna Leslie Bornstein Stacks to campus to discuss her experiences as a female and a Jew in the business world from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. yesterday before an audience of approximately 15 students in the conference room of the Hillel House.

The program was geared towards Jewish students in the School of Management (SOM), program advisor Saul Perlmutter explained.

"The program is important to talk about both working in the world of business, particularly as a Jew," he said. "It's a way for people to share their experiences."

Perlmutter furthermore accredited the program's student chairman, Jonathan Hyatt, as the one who arranged Stacks, who owns and operates the full service floor-covering distribution business of L. Bornstein & Company, as the program's first speaker of the semester.

"I thought I would talk about my experience here as a student and how it relates to what I later did," Stacks began, explaining how she was the only female Business major at SOM in 1962.

Stacks recalled the atmosphere of the University during her years as an undergraduate, causing the audience to at times smile (due to comments such as, "When I graduated, the school had grown to 10,000 people, and we thought the school was ruined forever.") or gasp (in reaction to her recollection of how female students were mandated to be in their dorms by 7 p.m. on weeknights or else face being expelled).

Stacks also recalled two discrimination events she experienced at the University due to her gender, including a time when she was sexually harassed by her Economics advisor, an event which ultimately led her to switch her major to Business.

"Sexual harassment was just not in the vocabulary in those days," she explained, providing a reason as to why switching her major was the only official action she took concerning the situation.

Another professor who felt women did not belong in the business world, and graded Stacks' course work as poorly done based on that belief, caused her to have one of the most difficult experiences on campus.

"I never felt I was graded on my ability," Stacks said. "I said to my professor, 'How could you give me a 'B' on my senior project when I won the department award?' He said, 'I hate women who always have something to say.' I hope that isn't your experience today."

She related this example to her observance that people in historically oppressed roles, women and Jewish people in particular, must be twice as good as anyone else in order to be considered average.

"I just kept my own personal goal in mind and never even thought to quit," she said, attempting to provide inspiration for those in similar situations by reminding students to be flexible.

She also cited her inspirations, such as historical figures Eleanor Roosevelt and Helen Keller and biblical figure Queen Ester, as her key role models. Particularly, she told the story of Queen Ester, a Jewish woman who, after becoming queen, was reminded by her cousin of the importance of resolving problems afflicting the Jewish community.

"I think if I were writing commentary [on this story] today, I'd say she put on her power suit and went into talk to the king about her people," she said, adding that this story relates to both Jewish people and all women in society entering into an unknown situation in which success is vital.

She sounded a warning that students may face a situation, such as a job interview, where someone will have a problem with them based on a characteristic such as their gender or religion. Sacks advised to just give such people space and attempt to continue with their own plans, however different they may be from the majority.

"I've always loved working in a man's world," she cited as an example. "And now, fortunately, a man's world isn't a man's world; it's a peoples' world."

Freshman SOM major Betsy Feldman relayed how she enjoyed listening to Stacks' advice for the future as well as her personal stories.

"I wanted to know how women were treated back in the '60s and '70s, and I wanted to learn from her experiences," Feldman said. "Despite all of her hardships at the University, she has triumphed over unfavorable treatment and is a successful businesswoman."

Feldman also noted how she enjoyed listening to Stacks' stories on her father and his experiences of being a Jewish baseball player in the 1930s.

Stacks herself said one story in particular demonstrated how she believes Jewish people live their lives daily, explaining how her father, who was at the time a New York Yankees player, was told by his mother not to forget his Jewish heritage upon joining the major leagues.

In compliance, he always wore a tallit koton, a traditional Jewish scarf, attached to his uniform. Because the others on the baseball team, including the noted anti-Semitic School Boy Row, were unaware of the significance of the accessory, the team called him "Turk," assuming he was from Turkey.

After one game with the Detroit Tigers, Hank Greenberg, also a Jew, walked through the locker room and secretly whispered to her father, "You must be real tough or real stupid."

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Parade ... rest!
U.S. veterans were honored yesterday in a ceremony held in front of Memorial Hall.

Social critic speaks at Amherst College

America's college elite

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Author and social critic Barbara Ehrenreich spoke at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel on Wednesday, Nov. 7, where she presented first-year students with a question. "Are you going to struggle to get to the top of the heap, or are you going to consider the people crushed at the bottom of it?"

Ehrenreich, author of the recent book Nickeled and Dimed: On (Not) Getting by in America, delivered the annual Croxton Lecture, an address to the campus's freshmen. Her lecture, "The College-Educated Elite and the Working Class Majority: Figuring Out Where You Fit In," dealt with the need to recognize the plight of the uneducated.

"My job today is to put perspective on the college experience," Ehrenreich said. "Put simply, college is about being inducted into an elite. Only 25 percent of Americans have gone to college.

"College graduates," she said, "are an elite of wealth. The gap between the incomes of college graduates and non-college graduates is at an all-time high. College graduates make about 70 percent more.

"You know perfectly well," she continued, "that one of the reasons you're here is luck. If your parents had put their money into dot-com stocks, or if they didn't have any money to begin with, or your little brother decided to come down with a disease, you probably wouldn't be here. So you have to ask yourselves, who are the people who aren't sitting here right now, but instead are in orientations for places like Wendy's and Wal-Mart?"

She proposed that the students envision over 1000 empty seats in the Chapel Auditorium, representing the percentage of the population that does not continue their education after high school.

"What kind of people do these seats represent?" she asked. "They're much more likely to be poor. There's a big wealth gap in terms of who goes to college. You should also realize that these empty seats are more likely to include people of color than blacks or Latinos.

"As you prepare to become the socioeconomic elite, be sure to think about what will happen to them," she said. "For the most part, you know what kind of jobs they're going to get – the kind of jobs you've vowed never to do again."

Ehrenreich explained the several years she spent preparing to write Nickeled and Dimed, in which she tried to support herself with low-income jobs. She worked as a house-cleaner, a waitress, and a Wal-Mart associate, and found that it was nearly impossible to survive on low-wage salaries.

"How did I and my co-workers get by?" she asked. "By facing serious

Turn to BARBARA, page 03

A new perspective on terrorism

Barbara Ehrenreich was scheduled to deliver her lecture about classism at Amherst College on Sept. 11. The lecture was cancelled, along with all other campus activities, after the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. At an all-campus meeting addressing the day's events, several professors spoke about the political ramifications of the attacks, and the appropriate psychological responses. Ehrenreich took a different route, and delivered an impassioned plea to the US government not to "bomb a bunch of Afghan civilians who had nothing to do with this." She also described her fear that the government would curtail civil liberties, and referred to George W. Bush as "our supposed president." Her comments drew a large ovation, but also infuriated many attendees. Ehrenreich spoke to the Collegian on Wednesday, and described her feelings about the bombing campaigns against the Taliban.

Collegian: What is your reaction to the government's response to the attacks?

Ehrenreich: I am dismayed. What I said on Sept. 11 was that I was afraid that this would turn into a war that would hurt civilians. My fears were justified. We want to see the terrorist network eliminated, but the network is dispersed, and worldwide – and that's assuming that there's just one. The way to go about uprooting them would be through intelligence – and I mean that in all senses of the word – and through cunning and espionage. What we're doing seems a little off the mark. We know that this network reaches to places like Germany and Malaysia. Why don't we bomb them too? The way we're going about this, we'll just generate a lot more fanatics. I'm really worried.

Collegian: Polls have repeatedly shown that at least 90 percent of Americans support the bombing campaigns. What do you make of that?

Ehrenreich: There's a natural, "rally around the flag" response. We understand that we're all Americans, and Osama bin Laden has said to kill all Americans, so this is a natural response. In recent weeks, though, there have been more doubts expressed about this war – if not here, than in the rest of the world. Unfortunately, a lot of the mainstream media are not allowing dissident views to be voiced. The head of CNN has said that they'll downplay casualties in Afghanistan.

Collegian: You said on Sept. 11 that you were concerned about the potential for a massive loss of civil liberties. Do you feel that this has happened?

Ehrenreich: Yes, particularly for immigrants. This is very worrying. Others have written a lot about that. I certainly respect the need for some sort of sacrifices for security's sake. But I think you can go too far.

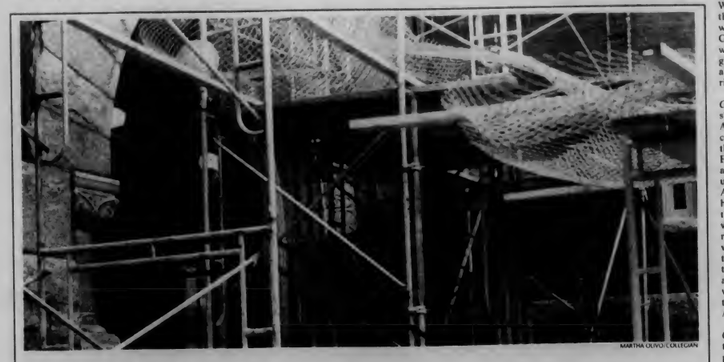
Collegian: You recently were quoted as saying that it bothers you tremendously that the group that's standing up to globalization is so oppressive to women.

Ehrenreich: I had an op/ed in the Los Angeles Times, raising this issue. I think it's bizarre, and in an intellectual way, kind of fascinating. Bin Laden claims to speak for the downtrodden of the world, but he belongs to a religion that has no respect for the downtrodden gender.

I should point out that the Clinton administration was friendly with the Taliban, and Bush was friendly with them up until last spring. All of this time, a lot of people were screaming about the treatment of women there. What's fascinating is that, in the 1950s and '60s, in Third World liberation movements, they almost always talked a good line about women's rights. What a switch! We have a group that pretends to represent the downtrodden, but is the most misogynist group of people I can think of in history.

But I don't believe in bombing their victims. A lot of women's groups don't, either – they're protesting the bombing, saying it's a big mistake. I think this is a time when we need an anti-war movement. We need to say, "Take a cleverer, less costly approach to fighting terrorism."

But, this is not Vietnam, and Al-Qaeda and bin Laden are not the Viet Cong. They are misogynist and anti-Semitic. We can't imagine that we're back in the sixties or something.



Collegian: You just said that bin Laden believes in a religion that has no respect for women. Is that an accurate description of your feelings about Islam?

Ehrenreich: Islamic feminists say there are no roots for this in the Koran. There are sexist things in the Koran, just as there are in the Bible. But they insist that this fundamentalism is not representative of Islam, and I'll take their word for it.

Collegian: You feel that the media isn't covering the anti-war movement fairly. Do you have any hope that it will?

Ehrenreich: It's a problem. In the Gulf War, I was an activist. I was going to rallies and getting people involved. At one point, the media decided that they wouldn't cover anything we did. If this goes on and on, and the war continues to involve a shameful loss of civilian lives, we'll have to do what we did in the Vietnam days. We'll have to go door-to-door, and person-to-person. You have to be your own media, and get the message out.

-Interview conducted by Jake Lilien

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Holy scaffolding, Batman!
The Amherst Town Hall gets a face lift.

Campus Perspectives

By Martha Olivo

Are you allergic to anything and if so what kind of harm does it do you?

Heather Clark
Junior
Nursing
"Cats – runny nose, sneezing, runny eyes, itchy eyes, sometimes shortness of breath, wheezing."

Burt Holdredge
Senior
Economics and Sociology
"Pollen – makes me all stuffy."

Jon Celli
Senior
Physics
"No, nothing. Not that I know of."

Tamisia Wilson
Junior
Psychology
"All the cats – penicillin, penicillin. I break out in hives."

Johanna Aguilar
Sophomore
Political Science
"Aspirin. I get red spots all over my body."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

30th Anniversary
Celebration Sale
Wed. Nov. 7th thru Sun. Nov. 11th
Enter to win a
$1000 Shopping Spree
ZANNA
30 years of serving Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Is there a doctor in the house?
Dr. Herschbach delivers a lecture in the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

Campaign continues, says general

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The American-led military campaign in Afghanistan will go on as long as it has to, the Pentagon said yesterday.

The campaign now enters its second month, and Defense officials say that the end is not in sight.

General Tommy Franks, the operational commander of Operation Enduring Freedom, told reporters yesterday that the war would continue to be unconventional.

"This will not, day by day, be all about the establishment or the movement of troops along a line of contact," Gen. Franks said. "This effort is 24 hours a day; it has been, and it will continue to be 24 hours a day."

There are more than a thousand troops in the area of operations, including soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division on standby status in Uzbekistan.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld explained that Taliban and terrorist numbers in Afghanistan are not known, and the general doesn't believe that the enemy has been destroyed yet.

"[Franks] does not believe they've been eviscerated," Rumsfeld commented. "Of that I can assure you."

Franks confirmed the secretary's joke.

"The direct answer I'm going to give you will not be a number, because I think, as has been the case since Sun Tzu said it about 2,500 years ago, precise knowledge of self and precise knowledge of the threat leads to victory," Franks said. "What I can tell you, though, is however many Taliban troops were in this at the beginning, that same number are not in this today."

Franks also commented on the Northern Alliance, which had announced earlier this week that it was close to seizing the city of Mazar-e Sharif. Mazar-e Sharif is a key location, with a paved airstrip that could be used for re-supply of both military and humanitarian aid. While the fight is going on, Franks cautions that it is early to call a winner.

"There is a gunfight that is going on in the vicinity of Mazar-e Sharif. I believe, as the secretary said – I think yesterday, perhaps the day before – it's a bit early for us to characterize this as the success that will enable our establishment of the land bridge," Franks said. "So I'm not prepared to do that right now. But yes, there is a big fight that's going on in the vicinity of Mazar-e Sharif.

"We are interested in Mazar-e Sharif. We're interested in it because it would provide a land bridge, as has been said, up to Uzbekistan, which provides us, among other things, a humanitarian pathway for us to move supplies out of Central Asia and down into Afghanistan," Franks added.

Franks said he wouldn't give in to the pressures from retired generals, who have been clamoring for a victory before winter.

"I think it has been said that the views of the retired generals and so forth, whom you mentioned, and others, are respected," Franks said. "Now if – when it comes to a point that says, well, we need something quick, we need to do something before winter – I simply don't take that as a form of guidance or pressure. Our commander in chief has said we have a plan. This is being done at our initiative."

Besides, Rumsfeld said, the campaign won't stop for winter.

"The implication there is that the fighting is going to stop during the winter, and I think that would not be correct," Rumsfeld said. "It's a big country. There's all kinds of weather patterns."

As for a quick end to the war, both Franks and Rumsfeld were cautious.

"We like the progress we have had up to this point. We have certainly said that the tactical targets have been taken down," Franks said. "Along with that, it's obvious that we have postured forces in the region that give us a greater capability. It is only those who believe that all of this should be done in two weeks' time or in one month or perhaps two months who are disappointed by this.

"So when I say we're on our time line, that's what I mean. Our job has to do with terrorist organizations, networks with global reach, and it has to do with the command and control of the Taliban," the general added. "And so when we say we're on our time line, that's what we're talking about. When I indicate that I find our progress up to this point satisfactory, that's what I'm making reference to."

Rumsfeld explained that comparisons between previous combat and Operation Enduring Freedom were in error.

"I think people have in mind Desert Storm and Kosovo, and they're beginning to compare different sortie rates and so forth. You have to look at the availability of ports, the availability of airfields and the distances one has to fly," Rumsfeld said. "If you can fly an aircraft two or three times in a day, because of the distance being close and the access you have, you're going to get a higher sortie rate. To the extent you can't, you don't. And I think trying to go back and in your mind compare numbers like that is a misunderstanding."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

German film company signs new deal

By Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts German Film Corporation (DeFA) Film Library has gained exclusive rights to East German videos through an agreement with Icestorm International.

The agreement lets UMass distribute videos on VHS and DVD. While the DeFA Film Library and Icestorm have worked together for the last three years, this new arrangement combines the efforts of both groups and will provide clients with access to a broader range of formats including film, VHS and DVD. In addition, the agreement will provide programming, teaching and research support from a single distributor at UMass.

Prior to the agreement with Icestorm, the DeFA Film Library could only rent out movies on 16mm and 35mm film. The library now hosts more than 500 titles in film and video formats.

In addition, Five College professors can use the videos free of charge. Most videos in the collection cost $39.95 for individuals and $69.95 for libraries. The price is higher for libraries because it includes the public performance rights.

Associate Professor Barton Byg started the library in 1990. It is the only film library of its kind outside of Europe, making it a focal point for distributing these films and videos to all of North America and possibly Japan.

"While studying at Washington University at St. Louis I became fascinated by the contrast between East and West," Byg said. "I was intrigued and wanted to know more."

The library, located on the fifth floor of Herter, offers a wide range of films and videos. It includes classic feature films, innovative productions of European fairy tales, animation films, documentaries, "banned films," and Westerns made from the Native American point-of-view. It includes the original version of Jacob the Liar, which was remade in 1999 starring Robin Williams.

"We are the main place outside of Europe that works with these films. The new license agreement now allows the University to distribute the videos for non-commercial users, on a not-for-profit basis," Byg said. "We now pay a license fee to the rights holders to do this…UMass logos can appear on all we distribute — to the U.S., Canada and potentially Japan."

Byg started teaching in the late '70s. "10 years before the wall came down." He brought filmmakers to this country before the wall came down. However, the arraignments he had made fell through as the social changes in Germany after the wall came down resulted in the destruction and loss of significant amounts of film.

Icestorm International, Inc., located in Northampton, Mass., formed with Icestorm Entertainment GmbH in Berlin, Germany.

"[It is] one of the largest independently owned film distributors which holds the world rights in all home entertainment media (VHS and DVD) for the entire production of the DeFA Film Studios of former East Germany," Icestorm's web site stated.

Lee Edwards, dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts is excited by this new agreement.

"In the past few years, the national resonance from our cooperation with Icestorm has been one of the most exciting aspects of our outreach programs," Edwards said. "We're delighted that we can now bring our resources more closely in concert to expand this contribution to cultural and historical understanding."

On the Net: The DeFA Film Library: http://www.umass.edu/defa; Icestorm International, Inc.: http://www.icestorm-video.com

Author discusses gay identities

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Stonewall Center Lecture Series continued yesterday with a brief talk and discussion about the gay "Bear" community, led by author, historian and activist Les Wright.

A self-identifying gay Bear, Wright is also the author of two books, The Bear Book: Readings in the History of Evolution of a Gay Male Subculture and The Bear Book II: Further Readings in the History of Evolution of a Gay Male Subculture. Wright said that the books constitute the first academic analysis of the culture, which he referred to as a "culture of outsiders."

Bears are often identifiable by their appearance, according to Wright. They are most often heavyset men with hairy bodies, with an especial focus on beards and other facial hair. Their rugged appearance, according to Wright, is how they earned the name "Bears."

Wright, who was also a founding member of the Gay and Lesbian Historical Society in San Francisco, also focused on the impact of the AIDS epidemic on gay culture in the '80s during his lecture. He said that early attempts at creating a gay historical archive were thwarted when families of AIDS victims would "come in and destroy all evidence of the gay life of their sons."

The stigma on homosexuality was especially hard on the community during the advent of AIDS, he said.

"People were literally hiding," he explained. "Today, AIDS is seen as an inconvenience. You take the drugs and go on. It's not the trauma it was for my generation."

He also said that there are generational differences in dealing with the social stigmatization of gay identity that go beyond the impact of AIDS. "I meet young people now who say, 'I've been gay since I was five years old and it's not a problem for me,'" he said. "I wish that I had been born during that time."

Meanwhile, Wright said, Bears have also been stigmatized within their community. "Bears were everywhere [in the '80s]," he said. "But no one was recognizing them. They were like the elephant in the middle of the living room floor that everyone else was trying to ignore."

Since the '80s, Wright said, awareness has been raised about Bear culture, but it has also since morphed into a more stratified, divided community.

"Anyone who called him or herself a Bear was accepted. It's ironic, now, how gay Bears became exactly what they had started out in protest against," he said. "Now there's all kinds of racial, social, class and ethnic divisions."

He distinguished, however, between Bear identities that focus on attitude and those who focus on body type. The groups that focus on attitude tend to be more open, he said.

"One of the things that gets talked about is that Bears have a non-attitude," he said. "They are gay men, naturally mon, comfortable in their own skin. It's amazing how much it has become the opposite.

"Bear identity [of this nature] addresses the issue of how people relate to their bodies," Wright said. "Most of us in this society are raised to find our bodies unacceptable – it's one of the ways capitalism works. Bears have a particular issue with that and react by setting their own standards of beauty."

But, he says, Bear culture can be an example of "intra-community racism" among gays and lesbians. "People who are heavier seem healthier to us," he said. "Rather than small people who look like concentration camp victims, or people bulked up on steroids who can be imperious or domineering."

This becomes tricky, he said, when a supposedly egalitarian culture like the Bears comes to believe that "thinness is not acceptable."

One audience member told of a friend being rejected socially by a Bear. "He said to my friend, who easily weighed 250 pounds already, 'come back and talk to me when you've gained another hundred pounds'," he said.

Wright explained that offshoots of the Bear group, such as Otters and Wolves, had come about because of the narrowing of acceptable Bear identities. "Now we have a whole Noah's Ark of creatures," he said.

"Bear culture is ultimately a microcosm of gay society as a whole, with all the richness and complexity as any social group," he said. "But I think since [Bears] are a smaller group these things stand out more.

"I guess whenever you get any group of people together," he said, "there will be politics."

■ Barbara

continued from page 01

hardships every month – missing meals, not making rent, and forgoing medical care." She described the agony of physical labor, and the demeaning manner of most of her employers.

"You're probably thinking, 'what else is new'?" Ehrenreich said. "Well, here's what's new. It's harder now than it was 20 years ago to get by without a college degree. A lot of blue-collar jobs have disappeared due to industrialization.

"You can find a lot of people within the college-educated elite who say, 'this is the way things are, because this is what the market dictates,'" Ehrenreich continued. "They'll say, 'you wouldn't want to interfere with the market, would you?' Two hundred years ago, these people would have talked about God the way they talk about the market today.

"But there are also people," she added, "who are part of the college-educated elite who fight against this. Nationwide, students are demanding better opportunities for campus workers." She cited as examples Harvard students who occupied a building to protest the low wages given to many employees.

"My hope," Ehrenreich concluded, "is that you will gain the skills to change this system. And I'd like you to make that choice for the sake of your own happiness. It's a lot more fun for everyone when these seats fill up."

Ehrenreich's speech received high marks from most of the attendees.

"I was very impressed with her," said first-year student Isaiah Tanenbaum. "I thought her ideas were firmly grounded. I'm not sure I agreed with everything she said, but I liked where she was coming from."

Others felt that her description of college campuses as a bastion for the wealthy were off-base.

"I was here on Sept. 11," said Theodore Hertzberg, an Amherst sophomore, referring to Ehrenreich's last campus appearance, in which she criticized the Bush administration at a college-wide meeting held in the wake of the attacks. "Considering the nonsense she promulgated on that day, I was not surprised today."

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!
THURSDAY
40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
sco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
ro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

College Street Motors
- Complete Foreign & Domestic Car & Truck Repair
- Oil Changes
- General Maintainence
- 24 hour AAA Towing
- Brake Jobs
289 College St.
Amherst MA 01002
Phone : 253-3200

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available.
DUBLIN $95
LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121
MILAN $132
FARES ARE ONE WAY, ROUND TRIP FARES ALSO AVAILABLE
Tickets are subject to availability and must be paid in full at time of booking. Tickets are non refundable. Taxes and fees are extra. Additional restrictions and blackout dates apply. Visit ctsi.com for more details. Valid for departure through March 2002. Fares are not all inclusive.
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
council travel
1-800-2COUNCIL
www.counciltravel.com
Call 24 hrs. 8am Tues. Nov. 6 - 12am Fri. Nov. 9 & 10am - 7pm Sat. Nov. 10

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

From the pre-Sept. 11 world:

Our problems still exist

Recently we've been bombarded with idyllic descriptions of pre-Sept. 11 life. The 1990s, we're told, were a time of absurd excess and banality. Frank Rich wrote in The New York Times that "the fat, daydreaming America is gone now, way gone, as spent as the tax-rebate checks, as forgotten as the 2000 campaign's debate over prescription-drug plans, as bankrupt as our dot-com fantasies of instant millions."

There is no doubt that American life has changed drastically over the past two months. And it isn't hard to see why many Americans would look back to the days when the word "anthrax" brought to mind images of a burnt-out '80s band as a time when nothing really mattered.

But to imagine life on Sept. 10 as little more than a pampered, idyllic time when Britney and Chandra were the most important issues facing the nation is woefully inaccurate, and does a great disservice to Americans who were suffering before the World Trade Centers collapsed. Yes, America saw unprecedented prosperity in the 1990s, but have we forgotten that the economy was already headed downhill before the attacks, and that many Americans were being laid off from their jobs?

Students who were struggling to pay tuition last semester are probably amused to hear of the pre-Sept. 11 "glory days," in which everyone was rich, vapid, and complacent. Single mothers who worried, and continue to worry, about feeding their families and making the next month's rent are probably equally incredulous. There has never been a time in which every American is wealthy, and there likely never will be. So why do we insist on referring to the 1990s, a time when many Americans lived in poverty, as a fantasy world?

In the 1990s, the gap between rich and poor grew, despite the claims of the media. Now that America is under attack, we will most likely focus even less on issues like classism and poverty than we used to. And the economy is continuing ever downward, meaning that everyone, not just World Trade Center workers, will be feeling the effects. When America's underclass struggles, will anyone pay attention, or will we be too busy focusing on whether or not Bill Maher said something inappropriate on his television show, or whether some students burned a flag at Amherst College?

There were, and are, other problems in America besides poverty. No matter how great the threat facing our country, we cannot ignore them. The attacks on America may have had the positive effect of increasing interest in international news and foreign relations, but it has also forced issues like discrimination, crime and health care out of the spotlight – not that these issues were ever focused on that greatly. If we are now concentrating on what really "matters" – as many in the media have stated – then now is the time to give these issues the thought and consideration that they richly deserve.

When University of Massachusetts Communications Professor Sut Jhally delivered a lecture about class and race at Smith College last week, he said that he had considered changing the topic of his speech to deal with the terrorist attacks, but decided against it. The issues of class and racism, he said, were as prevalent as ever.

"We had problems before Sept. 11," Jhally said. "We can't forget that."

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Submit to Ed/Op @

collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The media hold the key to our shackles

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

A few weeks ago, upon walking into a liquor store in Northampton, I noticed a large "God Bless America" poster on the window displaying the flag and the statue of liberty. When I brought my bottles to the counter I noticed that the teller was not American. In fact, as I later found out through some conversation, he was the owner of the store, born in India and a practicing Hindu. So I ask him what was up with the "God Bless America" thing. He simply answered, "It's good for business." I paid and walked out.

Why is it that all of a sudden this country is so "God" oriented? Where did this come from? Since when did we all get so religious? Am I to believe we have entered the start of another great awakening period?

I wrestled with the idea for several days. At first I thought that maybe the country was uniting under a more religious president. But now I look back on that and laugh at my naivety. My hypothesis as to where and why this "God" thing is being pushed is simple. When the Sept. 11 attacks happened, everyone was looking for an answer when they wanted to know who did it. When news broke about the bin Laden possibility, God came into play. The media decided to create a ploy uniting God and America over God and the Arabs or Afghans. As we kept hearing how bin Laden felt his cause was "God's cause" our anger grew and we accepted the God vs. God scenario.

The media will try to lead you to believe that the Muslim religion is based on a different God than the Jews and Christians. This is a lie. One of the highest principles in Islam is recognition of God and his oneness. In fact, the media will go to the extent of not translating the word God from Arabic into English. You might hear about an Arabic speaker whose words have been translated into something like "Allah is great and merciful." This is absolutely ridiculous. This is yet another media tactic that creates a feeling of separation between the eastern and western world. Imagine how preposterous it would be if a Spanish man had said the same thing in Spanish and the media translated it, as "Dios is great and merciful" or a French man "Dieu is great and merciful."

Also, a Boston based paper had published a picture of a so-called anthrax letter. One of the lines of the letter was "Allah is Great." Immediately I knew that it was fabricated because a true Muslim would refer to "Allah" as God in English.

We act according to what we know, therefore those who control what we know control how we act. The media controls the way we act by telling us what they want us to know. They can get us to buy "God bless America" propaganda and put them in the windows of our liquor stores. They can basically get us to do almost anything by controlling what we know.

> "My basic admonition to you is that the media are going to throw a lot of crap at you. Its will be those who can sort through the crap that will be closer to reaching the truth behind issues."

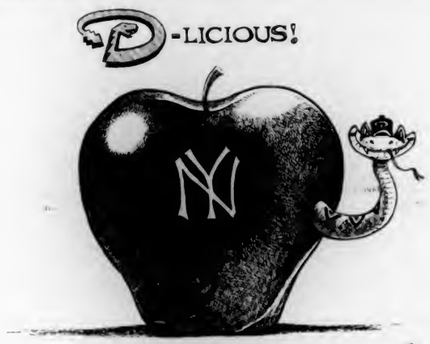
The media are powerful and uses tricky tactics to satisfy the average American's thirst for knowledge. For instance, if a foreign leader is responsible for ordering an armed force strike, he is labeled a murderer. But if it is done by the USA and civilians are killed and hospitals are bombed it's "collateral damage."



Again the wonderful media keeps telling us how terrible the Taliban is and how bad it has been but never explains why the U.S. Government set the Taliban regime into power after the Russo-Afghan conflicts in the 1980s. And it always fails to inform us as to why the United States had never stepped in and intervened with the "obviously terrible" Taliban.

The media like to rerun certain stories continuously, almost to the point where I want to scream out in insanity. For instance when the whole OJ thing was going on, it was the only thing on the news. A more recent story would have been that of Chandra Levy, the missing woman from Washington, D.C. who had relations with a Congressman. We heard that story for months. What bothered me the most about it was that there were 141 other people who disappeared in the DC area in the same week as her. What about their families, what about their pain? Does your daughter have to sleep with a congressman to get on the news? Seems to be the trend. And how could I forget the months we spent hearing about nothing other than Monica Lewinsky. Every day the same story is repeated.

The media can also blatantly lie. For example, this week there was news about Israeli tanks in the West Bank. The mass media soon reported that the tanks had withdrawn. I have an aunt that lives in Bethlehem. She just happened to have a tank sitting outside her living area a day after the news of the withdrawal broke. We should be alarmed at the inaccuracy of the mass media. And for those recently new additions to the God bandwagon who just ran to K-mart to buy a God Bless America poster, how do you feel about the fact that these weapons of mass death and destruction were made in the same roads that Jesus Christ walked on.

My basic admonition to you is that the media are going to throw a lot of crap at you. It will be those who can sort through the crap that will be closer to reaching the truth behind issues. The truth is out there, but the only way to find it is to search hard. Don't rely on one news source. Especially regarding international affairs. Read news from websites of other countries, they will usually tell what the American media doesn't want you to know. Why they don't want you to know is another story, in fact, that could be an entire new column. But from now on, when you hear "collateral damage," "Allah" or news from across the globe, question the sources and the basis for this news. This way we will find out the truth, and the truth will set us free.

Yousef Munayyer is a Umass student.

Into the heart of the news

JIM PIGNATIELLO

With collapsed buildings, anthrax and the threat of more terrorism in the back of my mind, I headed to Washington, D.C. for the last weekend in October.

I traveled down south with my beat partner to cover two games for the women's soccer team in what was a big road trip for the team. I also saw the trip as a chance to experience how the city was reacting to what was going on.

After covering the soccer game on Friday night in Richmond, I decided to use my day off to walk around the capital city, take in the sights, and talk to some patrons about the situation. I headed up to my favorite place in D.C., the Lincoln Memorial.

Not knowing what to expect, I was amazed at the number of people on the grounds that day. I spoke to a few people while there, and found that the reasons for coming to see the Great Emancipator were varied. Some had planned the trip long in advance and felt that seeing this man that "led the nation through its worst time" was even more important now, a thought shared by others that I met. One boy, who was having trouble keeping a tear or two from shedding while reading the Emancipation Proclamation.

There was also a wedding party at the Memorial having its picture taken. I found this odd and asked a member of the wedding party if this had always been the plan. He told me that the original plan was to take the pictures at the reception hall, but they were changed over the past few weeks. It seems that everyone was celebrating freedom in some way that day.

I continued on to both the Vietnam and Korean War Memorials. There was something touching about watching men and women, as old as my parents, taking a tracing of one of the names off the great wall at the Vietnam Memorial. With everything else going on, it was impossible not to get a little misty-eyed.

> "...I certainly learned more about living in fear in the fifteen minutes at the Air and Space Museum than I had all day asking questions...It takes an honest experience to truly understand."

I followed this up by walking down the length of the reflecting pool to the Washington Monument and watched a few minutes of coed flag football, then decided to check out the American History Museum on the Mall.

Inside the museum was a tribute to the position of the American president. Harry Truman compared the role of president to "riding a tiger," which seems at least as appropriate now as it was when he said it.

Within the presidential display was a timeline of what the presidents were dealing with. I took a lot of time looking at this. I checked out everything significant that has gone on politically and really tried to grasp the significance of those times while trying to relate them to 2001.

After a long day of sightseeing and quasi-reporting, I was ready to relax and take in an IMAX show at the Air and Space Museum (where I was supposed to meet my beat partner an hour or so later). I bought the ticket and walked into a movie getting into contamination suits and immediately assumed that someone suspected anthrax in the museum.

I trotted over to the street vendor next door and purchased a disposable camera for at least twice its value and started snapping photos of everything I could. After getting some dirty looks from what I can only assume were Secret Service agents, I decided to put the camera away to try to get some answers.

The firemen weren't talking, at least until I found one that was Italian looking and convinced him that our relatives were probably Ginzo-ing around the home country somewhere back in the day. He informed me that a large amount of blue powder was found in the ladies' room on the second floor and while just about everyone was convinced that it was makeup, no one was taking any chances anymore.

I met up with my beat partner, and we waited around to hear the final ruling from the contamination-suited men who went into said bathroom. They confirmed that there was nothing to fear.

While it turned out to be nothing, I certainly learned more about living in fear in the fifteen minutes at the Air and Space Museum than I had all day asking questions. I guess it proves that hearing about something and watching it on television can only give you an idea about what is going on in the world. It takes an honest experience to truly understand. And I know I will never forget what happened to me.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian staff member.

Power to the "People"

KATIE LANDERS

So I got a kick ass job this year. No lie. For the first time in a long time, I love going to work. You ask, "Katie, where is this great place you work? This land of opportunity?" I'll tell you: The People's Market.

You've heard of it. If you haven't, you live a sheltered UMass life. People's Market is tucked away in a little corner of the Student Union, right next to Earthfoods (the grassy knoll is just outside). At the Market, we sell a variety of great things. I must tell you my favorite thing to eat there is a fresh bagel (delivered every morning, promptly at 8:45) with a slice of mozzarella cheese. Sometimes I drink a "grapeade" Snapple with it. But you can get just about anything there.

The Market caters to the vegan and vegetarian community here at UMass, but everyone is always welcome. Let me tell you, I am the first to advocate eating at McDonald's, but I love to eat at the Market too. You can get anything there. We sell incredible bagels (yes New Yorkers, they're just as good as home), coffee and tea that would put Starbucks to shame, and fresh everything: sandwiches (thank you Green-O sub shop), fruits and veggies, lots of bulk granola and nuts, Cliff bars and Luna bars – even cough drops. Guess what you'll love? It's ridiculously cheap there. The annoying guy on the collect calls commercial asks you what you can get for a dollar? I'll tell you. You could get a coffee, a bagel, a bag of granola, two apples or some cheese and crackers. It's funny, because today I was working the register and this woman came up to me with her arms filled to the max. She spent $3.85, or something arbitrary like that. When I told her the total, she laughed and said, "Funny, that's the most I've ever spent on lunch here."

If you came in Wednesday afternoon, you probably saw everyone who was working burst out in song to the soundtrack of Grease. I'm not Sandra Dee, but I did enjoy myself without everyone looking at me like I was cracked out. We listen to great music, whatever anyone working at the time feels like putting in. Someone told me today that it made them a little happier when they came in the store because they always heard such good music.

The People's Market is more than good food, good music, and an amazing staff (yeah, they're amazing). There's a philosophy and an aura that you feel when you walk through that door. In 1973, seven undergrad women founded the Market as a bulk food store, and over the years it has progressed to a place where you can get groceries for a week or a snack between classes. The Market is a place of equality and diversity, definitely increased two-fold by supporting local farms and distributors. Don't think you can come in and find a Coke, because for all those who know about multi-national corporations, Coca-Cola is on the Boycott list. Don't come in and hope to find a blueberry bagel here either; those have artificial coloring in them and that doesn't fall into line with what the Market will sell. People's supports local organic farms and will purchase goods from places where labor is equally exchanged for goods. No sweatshops here.

The best thing about working for People's; it's a co-op. What's a co-op you ask? Someplace that you do your laundry? No, toolbox. It's a place owned by all of its members. Sound a little complicated? What's a collective? Little bit easier to explain.

People's Market as a collective is a place where every worker is a co-manager. Therefore, everyone runs the show. If a decision needs to be made then it is made by everyone. The money made at the Market is "limited return on equity capital." This means that we're not making a ridiculous profit. The money goes back into the business to make People's better for everyone!

The Market works to be socially responsible with everything they buy and sell. This should make everyone at UMass that much happier. Meat isn't sold because that means an animal was killed; products aren't sold that are tested on animals, and we look to be environmentally conscious (we recycle, yay!)

You can find lots of things going on besides food at the Market, too. Interested in Alternative Spring Break? Stop by and get an application. Looking for an apartment? I'm sure there are some posted on the bulletin board. Shows are always posted in there, and if you're looking to display some art, why not start at People's?

I couldn't write this editorial without mentioning Katja Hahn d'Errico. She is a huge part of the Market as our advisor, and Katja's been there for over 12 years. Katja keeps everything flowing smoothly at People's and knows all the ropes.

Word to the wise: The little tip cups we keep on the counter don't ever go to us, the workers. They go to different causes. So if you want to drop your change in, it would be appreciated. Smile big when you come in, and don't ask if we have a toaster. Check out our high tech registers.

People's is the best job I've ever had. I've tried a little bit of almost every job there and it's great. I'm just happy being there. If you ever need a pick up, stop in. You'll feel better. (I swear, I'm not shamelessly advertising.)

So now before I go on my merry way and continue to drink my bottomless coffee, I must give the vegans a quick warning:

Don't eat bagels.
Bagels have whey!
Vegans don't eat whey.
No way!
Thank you Christopher.
Why are you just sitting here reading this? Go get some coffee!

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

America the jamming

On this day, nearly two months to the day of the Sept. 11 attacks, we all need to step back and take a good long look at this nation. As important it is to think about our country, the nation that I will speak about is, of course the jamband nation. With the industry moving so very quickly, it is important to take a snapshot of the current scene and evaluate what is going on.

President: Currently, the String Cheese Incident is the commander in chief of this strong and growing nation. With relentless campaigning (read: touring) over the last few years, String Cheese was able to knock off the incumbent Phish. However, as I personally hope their presidency is long and very prosperous, Phish will hopefully be making a bid for reelection in the near future, which could lead to some much-needed competition.

Vice President: Checking the latest polls, there is a close race for office of the vice president. Currently holding the lead are the New York based moe. Having released their new live triple CD Warts and All: Version 1, moe. is beginning to create a buzz. Having not played in this area since last winter, New Englanders are a little bit out of the loop. Also vying for the vice presidency are southern rockers Widespread Panic. With continued touring and yet another solid studio album, these boys from Athens are a symbol of consistency. They will not change their sound for anybody, and that's what makes them so appealing.

Speaker of the House: Speaking on behalf of the jamband community for quite a long while now is Mr. Phil Lesh. The Grateful Dead bassist has not missed a best (literally), continuously touring for most of the last forty years. He continues to spread the word about the jamband scene by passing on the music of the Dead by continuing to play it for new audiences. Check him out when Phil and his Friends come to the area later this month with performances at the Orpheum Theater in Boston, Oakdale Theater in Wallingford, Conn. and a six-show run at the Beacon Theater in New York City.

Secretary of Development (Read: New Groove of the Month): Bluegrass newcomers Railroad Earth is really creating a buzz around the jamband nation. Opening for Yonder Mountain String Band at Pearl Street earlier this fall, Railroad Earth stole the show. Their tight jamming and stage presence will make them a jamband regular. Formed from members of a few departed bluegrass bands, these New Jersey and Pennsylvania natives sure sound like they are from the south. With Andy Goessling ripping away on the banjo, these guys offer a very tight and entertaining package. Be sure to catch them when they play the Iron Horse in Northampton on Nov. 29.

Upcoming Shows: Taj Mahal at the Calvin Theater Nov. 14. Jack Johnson playing at Pearl Street Nov. 15. The Zen Tricksters at Pearl Nov. 16. The Wailers at Pearl Street Nov. 29. Connecticut's Rane with Aaron Katz of Percy Hill opening at Pearl Street Nov. 30. Dark Star Orchestra recreating a Dead show also at the Calvin Nov. 30. Support the local scene and have a blast!

David Siegel is a Collegian staff member.

Jam Bands

by David Siegel

Montgomery climbs aboard "Enterprise"

By Robert Lopez
Daily News (Ball State U.)

(U-WIRE) MUNCIE, Ind. – On "Enterprise" the future is history, and one Ball State University alum is carrying on that legacy.

Indianapolis native Anthony Montgomery feels blessed to be exploring new worlds as Ensign Travis Mayweather aboard the UPN series.

"I take my job very seriously, but this is much less like work," he said. "What we're doing is making magic."

"Enterprise," the latest installment in the "Star Trek" franchise, takes place in the 22nd century. Humans are beginning to set out into deep space and form alliances with alien worlds. The show is the predecessor to the "Star Trek" folklore setting up the history that would eventually lead to the Enterprise of Captain James T. Kirk a hundred years later, which was depicted in the original 1960s television series.

Montgomery described Mayweather as a veteran of space who is eager to play an important role in pioneering the heavens, as a helmsman to pilot the starship.

"Travis is a space boomer who was raised on cargo ships that could not travel as fast as Enterprise," he said. "Though he has seen a lot, this ship will allow him to experience things no one has ever seen before."

AT SCHOOL

A 1994 graduate of the university's theatre department, Montgomery worked on several stage productions while at Ball State, including "Working," "Rumors" and "The Count of Monte Cristo." Acquaintances described him as a gregarious hard working actor who had a good sense of what he wanted to do.

"Anthony always looked on the positive side and always had a smile," said Don LaCasse, department chair. "I felt that Anthony was going to be successful, because he was very self-confident."

Theater professor Bill Jenkins, who co-starred with Montgomery in the 1994 production of "Rumors," recalled his charisma.

"He was always very professional but liked to have fun," he said. "He wanted to work in movies or do some stand-up comedy and modeling."

Montgomery also spent some time in the department's costume shop. Costume shop manager Linda Smith best remembered the record that he broke on his sewing project, which was an overview of various sewing techniques such as stitching seams and sewing buttons and fasteners.

"The project, which students completed at the beginning of the semester, is pretty difficult, especially if you've never sewn before," she said. "Anthony had never sewn before, and he wanted to get it done as soon as he possibly could. He did it in two hours, 45 minutes, where for some people it might take six, eight or 10 hours."

After graduating Montgomery worked as a stand-up comedian in Indianapolis and R&B singer in Chicago. He came to Hollywood shortly after playing a bit part in the movie "Hard Rain."

STRUGGLING IN HOLLYWOOD

Before getting the part as Mayweather, Montgomery was borrowing money to pay the rent.

"My biggest worry was eating, and I mean that with every fiber of my being," he said. "There were times when I went to sleep without eating because I didn't have any money."

"The job competition is fierce," he said. "You work at getting work. Hard work pays off and aspiring actors have to believe that, but you can't be delusional."

In 1999 he landed a recurring role as George Austin on the series "Popular" and co-hosted the children series "Amazing Adventures," which took him all over the world.

"That was a real fun experience for him," LaCasse said. "He told me that he couldn't believe they were paying him to have so much fun."

Montgomery also made appearances on "Charmed," "Frasier" and "Passions." He had tried out for the previous "Star Trek" series, "Voyager," and the producers remembered him when they were casting "Enterprise," according to the Internet Movie Database.

GETTING THE PART

The audition process was kept secretive, he recalled.

"I knew that it was a 'Star Trek' series, and I knew a little bit about the character, but that was it," he said.

When Montgomery learned he got the part, it was like a life changing experience.

"I screamed really loud, and I just yelled and smiled and laughed," he said. "I still didn't know exactly what I had, just that it was a really cool job."

Though he had never been an avid watcher of "Star Trek," Montgomery said that whenever he happened to come across the series, he would watch it.

Since the show is a prequel, Montgomery avoided having to learn the complex mythology and chronology that was the basis for the other series. He conducted most of the research for his role at aeronautical schools.

"I talked to a couple of pilots about what they do and how they're comfortable with what they do," he said. "But since this is the beginning, you don't need to have a previous 'Star Trek' background. You just need an active imagination."

One of the most enjoyable aspects of his job, he said, is the cast and especially veteran television actor Scott Bakula, who stars as Enterprise Captain Jonathan Archer.

"As well as being captain of the ship, Scott is like an uncle to us," he said. "He is a genuinely good person, which is really rare out here. If you've been out here for awhile you tend to get a bit jaded, but he's not like that."

Montgomery said he also gets along particularly well with Jolene Blalock, who plays Vulcan Sub-Commander T'Pol.

"She's actually one of the nicest people on the set, even though she plays one of the ickiest officers on the show (Vulcan Sub-Commander T'Pol)," he said.

THE FUTURE

The financial freedom granted by "Enterprise," has allowed Montgomery to pursue his other interests.

"There's an animated TV series I'm interested in and a script I'm working on," he said. "I'm not a writer, but I figure that the hell, I got the time. I'm interested in nothing and interested in everything, as long as it's positive."

Montgomery has yet to experience the fame that comes with being part of the "Star Trek" legacy, but he's been told to expect big things.

"Right now I'm just glad for the fact that I have a job," he said. "By talking to other people on the set and to fans of 'Star Trek' it seems I haven't experienced a fraction of what's in store."

Are You a Trekkie or a Trekker?

Bern's social thought

By Serge Pinsky
Collegian Staff

Every generation needs a great protest singer. In other words, a musician who can lyrically break down his society and criticize it, and who isn't afraid to poke fun at it. As I listened to singer/songwriter Dan Bern's new album New American Language, it occurred to me that lately I haven't heard many artists do that. Sure, I've listened to Dylan, but he hasn't protested anything in a while. In fact, with the exception of Bruce Springsteen's notorious "American Skin (41 Shots)," the protest song genre has practically disappeared and the world in which we live hasn't been rebelled against for far too long. The Rage Against the Machine lineup change isn't helping. Thankfully, Dan Bern reminds us how effective a few lyrical masterpieces and some simple strumming can be on showing people that music can indeed move you (and I'm not talking gyrations).

Dan Bern, who isn't new to the music biz (this is his fourth album), joins many other artists in wearing the "new Dylan" mantle. Sure enough, with his deep nasal-like delivery (which at times is more reminiscent of Elvis Costello's voice) and acoustic guitar in hand, he does remind one of early Bob Dylan. Much like his predecessor once did, Bern shifts his music into a more electric sound on this album. On his previous discs (one of which was produced by Ani Difranco), he focused on folk revival, while this album generally rocks more.

New America Language takes familiar modern images and places them in folk songs and the strangest thing is that it works. On "Alaskan Highway" Dan Bern mentions everyone from Leonardo DiCaprio to Eminem to Britney Spears to the recent election and manages to incorporate Billy Joel's songwriting attack-ack-ack-ack in the bridge. And the track is also a great road song that has thought-provoking lyrics like "Commandment Three says Do Not Kill, Amendment Two says Blood Will Spill." I haven't heard an American song this good since Tom Petty faded away into obscurity.

On the title track, Bern sings of his dreams, which include an accepting America, new beginnings and love. When Bern wistfully sings "I dream of your clock radio, waking you up with my songs," it makes you wish that his dream would come true. "I have a dream of a new pop music, that tells the truth, with a good beat and some nice harmonies." Bern tells us and judging from the majority of music I've heard this year, his wish is quite overdue.

Bern's lyricism shines brightly on the track "God Said No," on which he sings of going back in time to change our world. He asks God to let him save Kurt Cobain by talking to him and showing him how loved he is. He asks God to let him stop Hitler's reign. He asks God to let him take Jesus off the cross and bring him back to life. You can probably guess what God's response is by the song's title. The song's lyrics are amazing, especially in Bern's depiction of God and why he does the things he does. I think that every time I've listened to this song, I've gotten chills and I'm not even religious. However, the weakness of Bern's songwriting is evident on the track as well. The lyrics are so strong that they overpower the music, which is often haunting, but just as often, unoriginal.

What we get is an artist that has a lot to say, and does manage to in his clever wordplay, but less so in his music. For instance, on the song "Turning Over," Bern sings of his fear of growing old and mortality, and manages to do so effortlessly, except that the guitar sounds exactly like a Velvet Underground song. On the singer/songwriter scale, Dan Bern is no Ryan Adams (whose new album is undeniably one of this year's best) but he's far better than Freedy Johnston, whose song-crafting skills seem to be waning lately.

However, Bern redeems himself on the album closer "Thanksgiving Day Parade," which is a great homage to the form of Dylan's epic narrative song "Desolation Row." Like Dylan, he describes characters and images that relate to one particular scene. The song contains no chorus and is simply sung in a stream of consciousness style that Dylan and other great folk heroes made famous. The band slowly builds (one instrument joins the song with each verse) to a spectacular crescendo, which makes a great last track. After the song ends, you get the urge to hear the album again or find out who Dan Bern is and why you've never heard of him before.

At one point in the album, Bern sings, "If you judge me tonight, judge me by the songs I write." Well the majority of these songs speak for themselves as bold and intelligent and perhaps one day, people will listen to them as irrefutable proof that the world in which we now live is totally messed up. Dan Bern's sound was once described by Rolling Stone as a cross between Woody Guthrie and Pee-Wee Herman and if that doesn't sound good to you, then check out the new Michael Jackson (who at this point, looks like Pee Wee Herman) album. For the rest of you, Dan Bern will be playing on Friday night at 7 p.m. at the Iron Horse.

COURTESY DANNY CLINCH

Widespread Panic comes to the Mullins Center TONIGHT!

Where have all the protest singers gone?

Time is on your side in Happy Accidents

By Lauren Sommer
Cornell Daily Sun (Cornell U.)

(U-WIRE) ITHACA, N.Y. – Boy meets girl, boy loses girl – everyone has seen one too many sickeningly sweet romantic comedies. And yet in Happy Accidents, this tired genre is boldly revived when writer and director Brad Anderson merges it with science fiction. An unorthodox match, to say the least (Pretty Woman meets The Matrix?), but what results is a pleasant surprise – an honest and unconventional love story full of charm.

The narrative centers on Ruby (Marisa Tomei), an emphatic codependent who is drawn to the male equivalent of a live wire. She hangs out with hip New Yorker-loud-mouthed gal pals who keep an eyeliner shadow for disposed boyfriends. Enter Sam (Vincent D'Onofrio), a sweet and idiosyncratic bespoke worker. As quickly as she has fallen for him, Ruby begins to notice his odd behaviors: his fear of small dogs and dark use of Dramamine.

This standard formula takes a twist when Sam reveals he is an escapee from the year 2470 and has "back traveled" to find her. He comes from Dubuque, Iowa (which in Sam's world is located on the Atlantic Coast due to the melting of the polar icecaps). Ruby attempts to believe it's a role-playing game, but struggles with whether to trust him or retain normalcy through the explanations of her shrink.

As absurd as the plot sounds, the film is carried by the genial chemistry between Ruby and Sam. A fresh-faced Tomei delivers the disenchanted Ruby quite well in typical exasperated lash out.

D'Onofrio balances her performance nicely by making the oddness of clueless Sam both endearing and believable. Their relationship is luckily far from formulaic, and Anderson's script, though it contains echoes of "Sex in the City," is at once original and funny. It avoids the gloss and glant of most romantic comedies with its use of a gritty New York backdrop.

Happy Accidents could almost stand on its own without the science fiction element. Ruby is a typical twenty-something, balancing her need for love, her independence, and over-analysis from her shrink ("I have a therapist to answer to").

In the vein of Tomei's Untamed Heart, it could be a story about love based on instinct instead of others' opinions. However, in the final scenes of the film, the story reaches new levels and adeptly dodges a trite ending through Sam's complex history (well, future).

Anderson does not get too weighed down by the technical details of time travel, but conveys its mystery well with intimate close-ups and disjointed montages.

The outcome is remarkably refreshing in a world where predictable John Cusack movies just keep rolling along. Anderson aims just high enough and achieves it, while avoiding convention and being, above all, honest.

When Sam and Ruby first meet, Sam exclaims, "The heart regulates time," speeding up and slowing important moments. The film is a reminder of exactly this – that time should be a personal thing, and most of all, enjoyed.

COURTESY ANDREW MCNAUGHTON

Soulive is among the many groovy bands appearing in the area this weekend. They'll be at Pearl Street Saturday night.

Packed weekend for jamband devotees

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

This coming weekend in the Valley is an absolute smorgasbord of great music. From heavy jams to comforting folk, there is something for everybody. If you are thinking about going home for the long weekend, think again as you won't want to miss all three of these great touring giants.

Starting things off at the Mullins Center on campus on Friday night will be the famed southern jamband Widespread Panic. This six-piece band formed as a trio in 1985 at the University of Georgia in Athens. For many years now Widespread Panic has been considered one of the greatest touring bands of our generation.

Through continuous touring, Widespread has gained a reputation for soaring, energetic live-shows and amazing songwriting and musicianship on their ten albums including their latest Don't Tell The Band. Although Widespread Panic has not yet become as popular up here in the Northeast as they are down south, this show should be very exciting. Widespread Panic plays a very diverse live-show, integrating immense guitar jams with rhythmic drum sessions and imaginative lyrics. There should be plenty of tickets available at the Mullins Center Box Office on the day of the show, which will start at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday is when a really difficult decision is going to have to be made. Are you in a funky, groovy mood or more of a down home folk, storytelling type of music? If you have a lot of extra cash lying around you might be able to catch both. But who am I kidding, you all are college students. Well, either of these great acts would be worth checking out. In the big Ballroom at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton will be the amazingly tight jazz-groove trio, Soulive. Having played this rocking venue last April, these guys usually draw a huge crowd of fans ready to dance hard. Their show showcases the amazing talent of all three musicians.

Formerly from the Boston groove band Lettuce is guitarist Eric Krasno. This Hampshire College grad plays a breathtaking jazz guitar modeled after many of his influences, including his friend John Scofield. He sits center stage, really letting things rip. Flanked to Krasno's left is Neil Evans on the Hammond B-3. His brother Alan Evans completes the trio playing an amazing set of drums. Both brothers, formerly of Moon Boot Lover, are incredible musicians able to hold the audience's attention all by themselves. Coming off of their Blue Notes Records debut Doin' Something, these guys are ready to step forward and make a name for themselves among the Blue Note elite. Due to the Saturday Night Dance Night at Pearl Street, this is going to be an early show beginning at 7 p.m.

Later Saturday evening, just a stone's throw away from Pearl Street at the Calvin Theater, will be famed folk artist and storyteller Arlo Guthrie. Being the son of one of the best folk artists ever, Woody Guthrie, allowed for Arlo to grow up in a very musically oriented family. Since his first public performance at the age of thirteen, Arlo became absorbed in the music that was shaping our country in the mid- to late-'60s. For decades Arlo has been astounding audiences around the world with his impressive musicianship and great story telling abilities. In 1967, Guthrie's career began to take off when he debuted his most famous song "Alice's Restaurant Massacree" at the Newport Folk Festival. Later that year, Arlo was nominated for the Grammy in the Best Folk Performance category. A few years later "Alice's Restaurant" was made into a movie directed by Arthur Penn, in which Arlo starred as himself in 1969. Since then, Arlo has been spending significant time on the road touring around the world. He has picked up fans all along the way. On this tour, Arlo brings his daughter Sarah on vocals and his son Abe on keyboards and accompanying vocals. This show begins at 8:30 p.m. and tickets start at $25 and can be purchased at the door or from the Northampton Box Office at 586-8686.

Australia's The Avalanches runs the gamut of musical influences on their new Since I Left You

By John Bringardner
Daily Texan (U. Texas-Austin)

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN, Texas – The best album of the year has finally arrived stateside. After coming out in its native Australia a year ago and a European release six months ago, The Avalanches' first full-length, Since I Left You, has nearly finished its global circumnavigation and is ready for American audiences. Avalanches' frontman and co-founder Darren Seltmann spoke on the phone from Melbourne about taking the scenic route.

"It's been crazy to think that it was two years ago that we finished [the album]. It's better for the album, I guess, every kind of delay. We're happy it finally came out. It's something that we never expected – that it would even come out in Europe," he said.

Part of that delay is inherent in the nature of their music and its sticky relationship with the legal world. The inside of the album jacket is a laundry list of sample credits in pint-sized print – a fractional representation of the more than 900 samples used. Put thousands of records, a few samplers and five Aussies in the same room, and you have The Avalanches with a new genre-bending sound that defies attempts at simple categorization.

Seltmann had done his time in other more traditional setups playing drums for indie-rockers Ripe. But, following a North American tour, he settled back down in Melbourne with future Avalanches bandmate Robbie Chater.

"Robbie and I just became friends out of living together, and that was '94, '95. I'd just left this band, and was fed up with band life," he said.

"Gradually, we just kind of were experimenting with new stuff; some involved samples, and some didn't. And from there, anybody who ended up living in this house became a part of the band."

Since I Left You has been stylized a "traveling" album, a jetsetter's party soundtrack that floats from the wistfully cheerful Jackson 5 funk of the title track, through snippets of French hip-hop, instructional golf videos, ambient '70s soul and clinking champagne flutes.

"For us, it's always been such an unconventional album, because there was never a real plan. And it was like, every time, things kind of seemed to work out well," Seltmann said.

The whole album flows in a single fluctuating groove. It never stops long enough to pick out where one song stops and the next one begins, but paces along in a schizophrenic stream of consciousness. Its disco-licious hedonism is poppy enough to appeal to a wide spectrum without losing itself in fluff. Seltmann's idea of The Avalanches' live show reflects this idea.

"The crowd's definitely coming from a dance scene...It is meant to be, the live show and the DJ set, like a party, really. It's hard to know whether it's what people expect or not, but people seem to respond very well," he confessed.

The Avalanches have already made their mark in terms of impressing international acts, having opened shows for the likes of Beck and the Beastie Boys in Australia. They've done remixes for Badly Drawn Boy and Manic Street Preachers and are constantly courted by the big names for new projects. But things seem to be a bit too hectic at the moment.

"We've been asked to do a lot, which is really frustrating, because there are artists we'd love to work with, but we just haven't got the time," Seltmann lamented.

They have made time for at least one more fellow artist. Though they already have videos for the singles "Frontier Psychiatrist" and "Since I Left You," they're allegedly having the latter redone by none other than Spike Jonze, the man credited with the American popularization of other overseas acts Daft Punk and Fatboy Slim.

COURTESY PINK FLOYD

Shine On

Pink Floyd is releasing a career retrospective titled Echoes: The Best of Pink Floyd. Look for an upcoming review in Arts, you crazy diamond.

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
FRIDAY thru NOV. 15 – for seven days only!
THE NEW YORK TIMES: "Leelee Sobieski and Albert Brooks deliver outstanding performances!"
"TWO THUMBS UP!" – Ebert & Roeper
"Deeply funny! An Oscar®-caliber performance from Albert Brooks!" – Peter Travers, Rolling Stone my first mister
DAILY at 7:00
BACK BY DEMAND
Value... Added Footage
24 Extra Seconds Free
"It's Fun Night At The Movies"
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
ONLY WESTERN MASS SHOWING
DAILY at 9:15
Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music
Movie-Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

"★★★★★!"
San Francisco Examiner, Boston Herald, Dallas Morning News, Ft. Worth Star Telegram, Tallahassee Democrat, Detroit Free Press, Reel Detroit, Chicago Tribune, Arizona Republic, Salt Lake Tribune
"COULD THIS BE THE FUNNIEST MOVIE EVER MADE? GRAND SCALE INSANITY THAT'S UTTERLY INSPIRED—BELOVED BY ANYONE WITH A PULSE AND AN IRREVERENT SENSE OF HUMOR!" -Amazon.com Editorial Review
"A WORK OF COMIC GENIUS!" – CBS TV
ALL NEW RESTORED AND ENHANCED STEREO SOUNDTRACK AND MISSING FOOTAGE
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
LAUNCH RELEASE
www.pythonline.com
NOW PLAYING! ACADEMY of MUSIC
274 Main St. Northampton, MA 413-584-9032

WOMEN ARE MORE THAN THEIR BODIES!
Come create a student-run task force to work on the following:
POLITICAL ACTION, ADVOCACY, SUPPORT AND CONNECTION
Explore these issues with a group of professional women on campus.
TIME: November 15, 4–5 p.m.
PLACE: Campus Center Room 802

Minutewomen spurt comes on too late

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

It was simply just a case of too little, too late.

The Minutewomen will close up their 2001 campaign against Duquesne at home on Saturday night, falling just a bit short of reaching the Atlantic 10 postseason. UMass notched its third straight conference win and seventh A-10 win overall after defeating Fordham on Sunday, but was eliminated from the playoff hunt when Temple (owning the tiebreaker over UMass) picked up its eighth conference victory on Tuesday to stake claim to the fourth and final seed. Now the Maroon and White (14-11 overall, 7-8 A-10) will be looking to finish the season with a four-match winning streak, and have the graduating seniors go out with a victory in their last home match.

"Unfortunately, we're not getting in, so I think it's just a matter of pride and seeing if we can finish at .500 and let these four seniors win their last match that they'll play in the [Curry Hicks] Cage," Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said.

For Lauren Vander Veen, Lymarie Llovet, Celia Wiste, and Janeen DeMarie, the matchup with the Dukes will be the last time they don the maroon and white in their careers. All four seniors have had solid seasons for the Minutewomen, but will fail to reach the postseason in their final campaign. Still, Kenny expects her four outgoing players to be fired up for Saturday, and thinks that the intensity shown by her team during its last three matches will continue against Duquesne.

"They've [played hard] for the last three weeks, so I don't see why they would throw it all away in the last match of the season," Kenny said. "I would hope it's important to the [four seniors] to remember their last match in the Cage on a positive note."

"I haven't had trouble motivating them in practice."

Duquesne visits the Cage with a record of 16-8 overall, and 8-6 in the A-10. The Dukes are led by Sherene Lemonias (3.93 kills/game) and Brooke Saunders (3.47 kills/game), and come into the weekend having won five of their last seven matches. Duquesne defeated the Minutewomen in the Steel City, 3-1, on Oct. 12, as Lemonias had a match-high 17 kills on the evening. Vander Veen led the Maroon and White with 15 kills against the Dukes, but UMass could not contain the powerful offense of the hosts.

The Minutewomen could not only split the season series with Duquesne with a victory, but they also have an added incentive: playing the spoiler role. Although UMass has been ousted from the playoff race, Temple still has one more team to fend off – Duquesne. A strong finish by the Minutewomen could help send the Dukes back to Pittsburgh with no postseason play.

"Duquesne's had a very good year; they've played well, and we haven't been able to beat them," Kenny said. "We have another opportunity. Hopefully we'll play as well as we've been playing and it'll be a good match."

Still, the Minutewomen could be looking back at this season on what might have been. Had UMass displayed the dominant attack and strong defensive play evident in the last three matches (against URI, Fordham, and GW), the Maroon and White very well could be competing for the A-10 crown being held here in Amherst. Unfortunately, the team could not make up the ground it lost during the middle of the season.

"I think it's unfortunate that we're not going to be in the tournament; we just started to play well a little too late," Kenny said.

GERALD LINGUS/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Martin Burwell (No. 3) and the UMass men's soccer team face Dayton today in the Atlantic 10 Championship semifinals.

■ msoccer

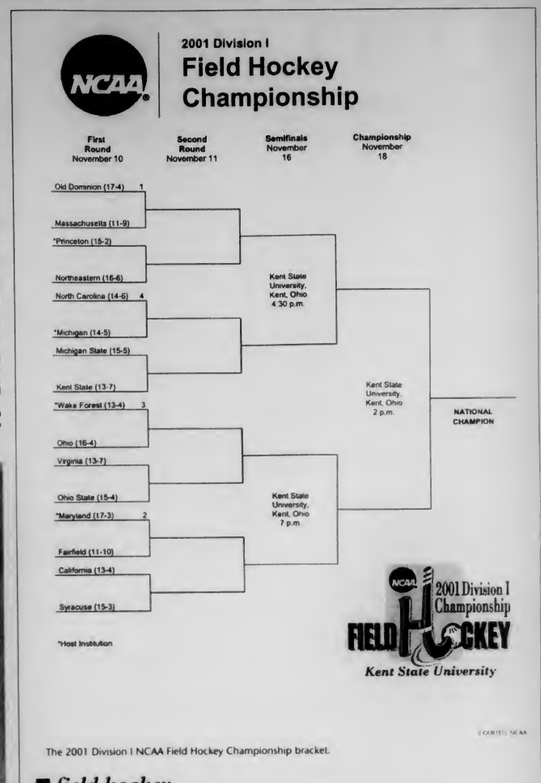
continued from page 10

Two other starters were named to the first team of the conference, sweeper J.R. Pouncey and forward Yuri Morales. Pouncey earned the honors of first team for the second year in a row, and is currently a third-year captain. The sweeper has been a big part of a defense that has only let in 19 goals in the 16 games he played this season. During the 2000 campaign, Pouncey was the first UMass player since 1995 to be named to the All New England team.



Morales has been key for the success of the team in his third season, with 11 assists and three goals. The junior sits first in assists and assists per game for the conference, with his .77 assists per contest ranking fourth in the nation in that category. Morales' assist total is the second most in a single season at UMass.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, only Deren is at full strength. Pouncey was injured Friday during the game against Dayton, possibly breaking his toe. Pouncey finished up the game but was unable to make an appearance against Xavier. Morales didn't even leave with the team for last weekend's road trip, after ending his season with a sprained knee.

Also on the disabled list last Sunday was John Lytton with a ligament strain and Andrew Eicher with a pulled hamstring. The freshmen of the team racked up some minutes on the grass last Sunday and Koch said, "They're sound defensively." Koch also said that the team didn't play up to its full potential last Friday against Dayton.

"We struggled but we still made it a close game," Koch said.

The Minutemen will face off against host Dayton tonight at 8 p.m. in the second game of the Verizon Atlantic 10 Championship Tournament.

The 2001 Division I NCAA Field Hockey Championship bracket.

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

finished as runner-up in three others. Head Coach Beth Anders has compiled a remarkable 390-55-7 record in her 20 seasons with ODU, and guided the team to last year's national championship with a 3-1 victory over UNC on the Lady Monarchs' own Foreman Field.

Despite facing such a formidable opponent, Shea is quick to point out a few factors that may sway momentum in the Maroon and White's favor.

"We have a shorter trip than they do to get there, and the field we'll be playing on is very familiar to us," said Shea of the Tigers' home turf, dubbed Class of 1952 Stadium. "Plus going through the A-10s like we did helped us grow as a team; now, we're tournament tough. It's great to have that going into the national championship."

Shea knows just how tough the tournament can be firsthand, having tended goal for UMass in the first-ever national title game against UConn in 1981. The game has changed dramatically since then – games on grass have all but vanished and players can no longer control the ball with their hands – but Shea still sees the same qualities as paramount to success on the ultimate field hockey stage.

"The pride factor, the importance of competing at the highest level, has stayed the same," Shea said. "There may be other distractions, like huge stadiums and specially-designed field hockey facilities, but the heart and soul of the game is still there."

Shea also pointed to parity among the nation's field hockey elite, particularly when it comes to the loss column. She says that there is "no one dominant team" and that this is the first national tourney in recent memory where "the fewest number of losses by any team is three or four."

"We really don't care who we play right now," Shea said. "We are one of only 16 teams in the country still playing field hockey right now, and it's extraordinary."

Don't forget...
Monday @ 7 p.m.
UMass men's hoop
vs.
the EA Sports All Stars
at the Mullins Center

Look for the 2001-2002 Massachusetts Daily Collegian Hoop Preview special issue sometime during the week of Nov. 18.

moc.naigellocyliad.www
moc.naigellocyliad.www
moc.naigellocyliad.www
moc.naigellocyliad.www
moc.naigellocyliad.www

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Interested in Business?
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the spring semester. Great resume builder!
Sophomores call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E. HAMPTON 413 586 8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413 781 5742

DUNKIN' DONUTS
UMass Mullins Center Ice Rink
Open Daily 8am-5pm
FREE DONUT!
with the purchase of any medium or larger beverage
Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts
Not to be combined with other offers. Limit one per offer.
This coupon required for redemption. Expires 12/3/01

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Pleasant seasonal leaf and or guitar work $6.50 an hour 549-0413 references

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

FOR SALE

1994 Plymouth Laser 90,000 miles regular maintenance done recently asking $2600, negotiable. 549-5422

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

HOUSE FOR RENT

Attention Students: Sunderland 3 bedroom 1 1/2 bath steps to P.V.T.A. stop. $1100.00 + utilities 665-2311

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 2 females to share one large bedroom in Hobart Lane. 549-9192 Start January 1

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/onlinemall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

Missing Cat $250 Reward Presidential Apts Photo at http://surf.to/cat5. 413-219-7895

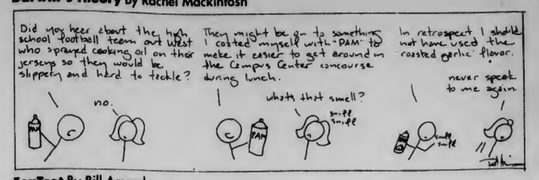
545-3500
545-3500

NEED TO ADVERTISE?

YOU HAVE OUR NUMBER!!

545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

4 HSCN Bulletin Board
5 CBS Hartford
6 CBS 3 Boston
7 ABC 40 Springfield
8 FOX 61 Springfield
9 HSCN Movie Channel
10 UPN 30 Hartford
11 HSCN New Movie Channel
12 NBC 30 New Britain
13 Fox 61 Hartford
14 FOX 24 Hartford
15 NBC 40 Springfield
16 International Channel
17 UMATV (Academic Channel)
18 WB 59 New Haven
19 ESPN
20 ESPN2
21 UVU TV (Student Channel)
22 Weather Channel
23 Guest to Guest
24 C-Span
25 CNN
26 CNN Headline News
27 Lifetime
28 USA
29 A&E
30 TBS
31 TNT
32 E!
33 Sci-Fi
34 Discovery
35 Nickelodeon
36 Sci-Fi
37 Cartoon Network
38 Nick at Nite
39 TV Land
40 Comedy Central
41 BET
42 Discovery
43 Bloomberg Financial Network
44 College TV Network
45 MTV
46 MTV2
47 VH1
48 The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 9, 2001

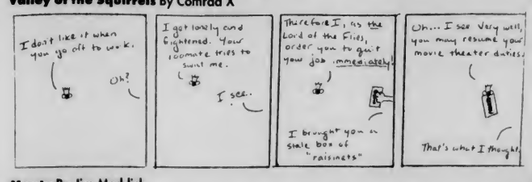
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	16	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Business Rpt.	Women's College Basketball (Live)				Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Life 360 "Junk" (In Stereo)	Positivly Conn.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Funny Flubs	Ellen (N)	That's a Life "Plus One" (N)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Funny Flubs	Ellen (N)	That's a Life "Plus One" (N)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	America 24/7 (N) (In Stereo)		Thieves' Jack's Back" (N)	Once and Again (In Stereo)		Friends	Raymond
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N)	Raising Dad	News
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Deseline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N)	Raising Dad	News	Law & Order: Special Victims	Tonight Show
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Deseline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Dark Angel "Two" (In Stereo)		24 "12 Midnight - 1:00 AM"		News	Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Deseline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	8	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With	Jim Lehrer	Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Life 360 "Junk" (In Stereo)	Time Goes By	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	11	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Friends	America 24/7 (N) (In Stereo)		Thieves "Jack's Back" (N)	Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	11		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News		e s "Batman Forever" (1995, Adventure) Val Kilmer, (In Stereo)				Fraser	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	99		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	e ss "As Good as It Gets" (1997, Comedy-Drama) Jack Nicholson, Helen Hunt.					"It Could Happen to You" (1994)
A&E	45		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Burt Reynolds		e s "Serenity" (1981, Comedy) Burt Reynolds.			Law & Order "Mother Love
CNN	24	21	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report	Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	26	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live	Sat. Night Live
DISC	28		Wild Discovery: Rhinos		Wild Discovery: George		Elvis Presley's Graceland		High Rollers 2: The Nine Breed		Hot Zone!	Justice Files "Out for Justice"
ESPN	27		Sportscenter		Rites of Autumn		NFL Matchup	NFL Films	College Basketball: Coaches vs. Cancer Classic Championship			Sportscenter
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Linda Dano"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A House of Secrets and Lies" (1992, Drama) Corey Sellecca			e s "The Bonfire of the Vanities"
MTV	31		Becoming	Making-Video	Family Values Tour (In Stereo)		TRL (In Stereo)			Charlts	New: Jay-Z	Diary	Cribs: How to Live Large
NICK	33		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Rugrats	Spongeb	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Kablam!	Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	35		Star Trek "The Menagerie"		Chronicle (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Going Postal"		"Alien Cargo" (1999, Science Fiction) Jason London, (In Stereo)			Invisible Man "Going Postal"
TLC	32	26	History of Bikers		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Protect and Serve (N)		Military Force: Air Power		Military Force: Sea Power	Protect and Serve
TNT	30		NYPD Blue "Family Ties"		Pretender "Nip and Tuck"		e s "Murder at 1600" (1997, Suspense) Wesley Snipes.				e s "The Running Man" (1987) Arnold Schwarzenegger.
USA	34		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "The King of the Peas"		Nash Bridges "Double Trouble"		e s s "Back to the Future Part III" (1990, Fantasy) Michael J. Fox. (In Stereo)			"Big Ledowsh"
HBO	51		(3:00)	Shallow Hal	Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		e s "Hollow Man" (2000, Suspense) Kevin Bacon.				e s "Gunmen" (1994) Christopher Lambert.	Curb-Enthsm
MAX	52		e s "Revenge" (1990, Drama) Kevin Costner. (In Stereo)				e s "Three to Tango" (1999, Comedy) Matthew Perry. "PG-13"				e s "The Whole Nine Yards" (2000)	Nightclose
SHOW	53		e s s "Felicia's Journey" (1999, Drama) Bob Hoskins. "PG-13"				e "Boys and Girls" (2000) Freddie Prinze Jr.		A Rice-Feast		Stargate SG-1	Going to California (In)	Chris Isaak

Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Scarecrow By W. Bird

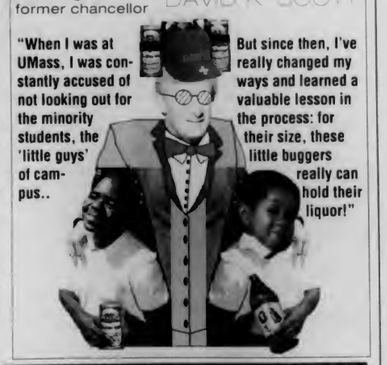
Monty By Jim Meddick

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"The news goes on for 24 hours a day."

-Citizen Kane



Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 46 LOW: 39	HIGH: 50 LOW: 27	HIGH: 46 LOW: 28

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You have reached an important landmark in your emotional development today. Now you may have to make an important and permanent decision. You're going to get some.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You will want to get right to the heart of the matter today, but there will be many reasons why you should move slowly and strive to get more information. You're going to get some.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An old friend may prove your closest competitor today. Instead of fighting each other, why not join forces? You're going to get some.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – The first day of the month may prove more complicated than expected. You will have to work hard to maintain a positive attitude and perspective. You're going to get some.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You will benefit today from an important revelation. When deciding what to do with the information, remember that timing will be crucial. You're going to get some.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Seek and ye shall find. At the very least, you'll discover that what you seek is not available after all. Either outcome will prove positive. You're going to get some.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may end up sharing more with a friend or partner than you had planned. Strive to keep envy or resentment at bay. Try not to be petty. You're going to get some.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – What you do today may be a significant departure from the norm. The outcome may surprise you. Motivate yourself to write that letter or make that call! You're going to get some.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You will want to spend more time on a favorite project today. Keep distractions at a distance, and work to perfect your skills. You're going to get some.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone may approach you quite aggressively today. Do not let this person convince you to behave in a manner that is unusual for you. You're going to get some.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Today, what you want will not be unusual, but way you're going to have to get it will strike you as odd. By all means, use your imagination. You're going to get some.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Why wait for someone else to make the first move? Even though it may be out of character, you can get results by acting aggressively. You're going to get some.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Pot Roast

Fish & Chips

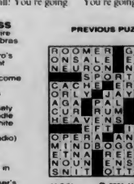
Spinach Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

Wild Barley Pilaf (vegan)

DINNER

Veal Parmesan

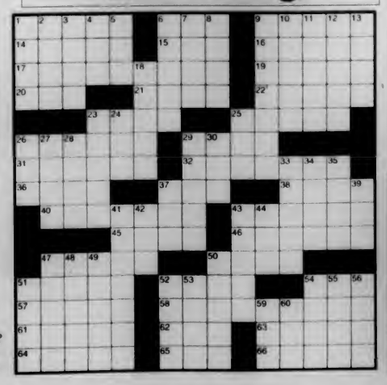
Boston Scrod



Tofu Fajita

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

Collegian Graphics is funny... like student comic strips.



ACROSS
1 Chef's attire
6 Mo. for Libras
9 Cluster
14 Peter Nero's instrument
15 Caviar
16 Luau welcome
17 Place for valuables
19 Say
20 Look closely
21 Knife handle
22 Rye or white
23 Pal dry
25 Play (a radio) loudly
26 Repeats
29 Fit to —
31 Mountain in Turkey
32 Astronomer's study
36 Learn by — memorize
37 Barbecue tidbit
38 Quark's home
40 Cycled
43 Hun leader
45 Prong
46 Acted like a CEO
47 Caterwauls
50 A lot
51 Warming drink
52 Inlets
54 Haul
57 Washington's follower
58 Exactly
61 1902 erupter
62 Ultimate (degree)
63 OPEC vessel
64 Schemes
65 "Of course!"
66 Garden tool

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-7-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Arched recess
2 Feel sorry for
3 Not easy to find
4 Lennon's wife
5 Aries refusal
6 Planet's course
7 Not friendly
8 Schoolbook
9 Trinkets
10 The U of UHF
11 Reminders
12 Swindle
13 Unyielding
18 Halloween figure
23 World-weary
24 Meadow
25 Painter Shahn
26 Attention
27 Harvest
28 Despise
29 Certain stage remark
30 Shower alternative
33 Fall guy
34 Elevator guy
35 Decorated tinware
37 Stimpy's pal
39 Filled up
41 Map books
42 Fleur-de-—
43 Disconcert
44 Huge weight
47 Alpine refrain
48 Florida city
49 Females
50 Ancient isles
51 Daisy Mae's creator
52 Like some fish
53 Gambling stake
54 Dancer Montez
55 Pre-owned
56 Actor Richard
59 Dawn goddess
60 Snap

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Ken Campbell
Photo Technician — Martha Olive
Copy Editor — Matt Brady
Production Supervisor — Adi D. Huseinovic
Production Staff — Meraj Hydary, Mike Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Ptah Myers and rthe UMass men's soccer team have the No. 3 seed in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Four left in A-10 grouping

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team did not lose in the month of October. It won all of its nine slated games during that time.

But UMass' last two games were a different story. Both resulted in defeat.

That needs to change.

The Minutemen left yesterday for a weekend road trip to the Verizon Atlantic 10 Championship in Dayton, Ohio where it must begin a new winning streak if it plans to continue its season into the NCAA tournament.

It's sudden death, and the Maroon and White have gone to battle.

The Minutemen are looking to capitalize in today's game versus Dayton to earn a spot in the championship game on Sunday, the ticket to the tourney.

UMass is coming off a tough weekend with two losses against Dayton and Xavier. Ending at 8-3 in the A-10, the Maroon and White earned itself the third seat in the conference at the end of the regular season. The Minutemen loss at Dayton last Friday was a fierce battle that ended a nine game winning streak for UMass.

The team isn't one to look for excuses, but several key players were down for the count and the team suffered in the end.

Dayton is coming off its season-ending win against Rhode Island, 2-0. The Flyers shut out URI, a team that was leading the conference at 9-1 in the conference prior to the loss.

Dayton finished at 8-2-1 in the A-10, just sneaking in to the Championship series for the second consecutive year.

The Minutemen have been working all week to step up in Friday's game, and it will come down to the wire in terms of who will be ready to play in their opening game of the post-season.

"We're working on making everyone healthy," head coach Sam Koch said.

More than health, the team will need to support some of the front runners and get the ball in the net. Jeff Deren could be just the one to do that. The senior forward was named this week as the A-10 Player of the Year. Deren not only led the Minutemen in scoring for the 2001 season, but led the conference as well with 14 goals, five assists, 33 points and five game-winning goals.

Turn to MSOCCER page 7

Post-season gathering

Field hockey to face top seed in NCAAs

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts Minutewomen used last-minute heroics to down Richmond and West Chester in last weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament, many in attendance began calling them the Yankees of field hockey.

Though Head Coach Patty Shea would likely prefer her team not to pull a subsequent crunchtime collapse akin to their diamond counterparts' in this weekend's NCAA Tournament, the fifth-year coach can't help but echo further World Series clichés when describing her team's first-round draw of top-seeded Old Dominion.

"It's like the Diamondbacks said: if you want to be the best, you've got to beat the best," said Shea on Wednesday, less than 24 hours before her team departed for Princeton, NJ for this year's 16-team tourney. "We have nothing to lose against Old Dominion, and they have everything to lose. They're the defending national champs."

UMass (11-9, 6-0 A-10) will certainly have to wear the underdog tag in its showdown with the Lady Monarchs, who outscored their last five opponents by a total of 35-5 and finished as the No. 2 ranked team in the country. ODU (17-4, 3-0 Colonial) went 8-3 against Top 20 competition this year, beating three Top Five ranked programs (No. 4 North Carolina, No. 3 Wake Forest and No. 1 Maryland twice) in the process.

The Minutewomen took a decidedly different route into the NCAA's field of 16, going 3-9 out of conference but running the A-10 table to capture one of the national tournament's six automatic bids.

"Getting into the tournament is the hardest part," Shea said. "Once you're in, then it becomes a new season, where it's just a matter of all-out competing."

That sort of unbridled field hockey fury will be a necessity if Shea's squad expects to pull out an upset and advance into a Round Two showdown against the winner of the Princeton-Northeastern game. Old Dominion features a classic double-barreled attack of scoring and defense, with the firepower coming primarily from senior back Adrienne Yoder and junior goalkeeper Marsbeth Freeman.

Yoder racked up 12 goals and a team-high 11 assists this season en route to Colonial Conference Player of the Year and Tournament MVP honors. Freeman stopped just over three quarters of the shots against her (.774 save avg.) in posting a tidy 1.01 goals-against average.

But as dangerous as ODU is, Shea sees her own team as having adequate weaponry to shut down the Lady Monarchs. The Minutewomen seemed to grow stronger as the season went on, allowing a scant 0.24 goals against average in conference play behind the stellar goalkeeping of two-time A-10 Player of the Week Ashley Egland. The offense also picked it up down the stretch, outscoring the opposition 17-5 in its final eight wins thanks to forwards Lindsay Abbott, Stacy Blue and Erika Whiston.

"I think they're a great draw for us, because we match up very well against them," Shea said. "We have an advantage over them in a few different areas on the field. The place where they have the advantage is that they've been there and won it all before."

Saying that ODU has "been there before" is like saying the Yankees have "been to a couple of World Series." Since the inception of the NCAA Field Hockey Championship in 1981, Old Dominion has emerged victorious in nine of the 20 title games and

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY page 7

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Coach Patty Shea (left) and the UMass field hockey team will face defending National Champion Old Dominion in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Offense is Maine threat in A-10 matchup

Surging Bears up next for UMass

By Matthew F. Sacca
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts football Head Coach Mark Whipple has never met a Maine team he couldn't beat – that is, until this year.

"This is the best Maine team we've faced since I've been at UMass," Whipple said.

The motivation for Whipple's bold proclamation is clearly visible in the Black Bears' gridiron successes this season.

The Bears have jumped out to 6-2 (5-2 Atlantic 10) and with only three games remaining, they have tunnel vision toward a singular goal.

"They are 6-2 and they are talking about the playoffs," Whipple said.

The key to Maine's torrid season has been its explosive offense, while the catalyst for the Maine attack has been double dangerous quarterback Jake Eaton.

"Eaton is a veteran guy," Whipple said. "He's been starting for awhile so he knows what it takes to win in this league."

The Bears signal caller has shredded opponents on the ground and through the air this year. He's completed 150 of 229 passes in eight starts, while throwing for 1690 yards and 15 touchdowns.

His 134.26 efficiency rating is eye-catching at the least for an everyday starter, and that's without even mentioning his rushing prowess.

Eaton's athletic ability has spurred him to three TDs and 190 yards with an average of 23.8 yards per game.

Despite his ground skills, when Maine wants to run the ball it hands the pigskin to Royston English. In eight games English has ran for 828 yards and six scores.

He is averaging over 100 yards per game and just under five yards a carry, but English's overwhelming running is nothing the Minutemen haven't seen before.

UMass (2-6, 2-4 A-10) has stood toe to toe with some of the best runners in the country, including Brian Westbrook and Stephan Lewis. The problem is that the Maroon and White hasn't succeeded against any of them.

Lewis busted a double centurys on UMass in Amherst, while Westbrook took three balls to the house on the Minutemen.

It will be hard enough to deter English and the powerful Maine rushing attack. But the loss of Anton McKenzie to injury will certainly not help the cause.

To have any chance of slowing the English "department," the Minutemen will have to get a top effort from their linebackers. And that means Jeremy Cain.

Since coming back from an early season injury, Cain has been arguably the team's best defensive player. And going up against English, he'll have to be even better.

When Maine does decide to go with the vertical passing offense, Eaton has a pair of flankers that know how to go and get the ball.

Stefan Gomes and Paris Minor have combined to catch 90 balls this year, with both averaging over 70 yards a game. The rest of the Bears receivers provide little threat, as they have only made 41 catches among the five of them.

But Gomes and Minor are talented enough to carry the load. Ten of the 15 TD passes that Eaton has thrown this year have landed in the steady hands of the lethal pair. If UMass is to have a chance in this game, Minor and Gomes will have to forget what the deep ball is and English may have to forget his legs at home.

GERALD ING/COLLEGIAN

Wideout Neal Brown has been the most consistent UMass reciever in the last three games.

This guy could steal anything -- even your heart. Check out our Heist review.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Men's hoop played the EA SPORTS All-Stars yesterday at Mullins. Read about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 47 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, November 13, 2001

Fires burn in Queens after another plane crashes in NYC

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

An American Airlines passenger plane crashed in a residential neighborhood of New York City yesterday morning.

Nine crewmembers and 246 passengers are presumed dead after Flight 587 crashed shortly after taking off from John F. Kennedy International Airport. The plane went down near the airport in Queens, starting several fires in homes.

The jet, an Airbus A300-600, was en route to Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic when it crashed at 9:15 a.m.

National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) investigators, known as a 'Go Team,' arrived in New York and began collecting evidence. The cause of the crash is as yet unknown.

"The Safety Board is investigating the crash of American Airlines Flight 587 in New York. A 'Go Team' has arrived at the scene in New York," an NTSB spokesman said. "One of the recorders has been found and is en route to Washington."

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) shut down area airports following the crash, but reopened the LaGuardia and Newark airports later in the day.

No flights were allowed to leave JFK, although incoming traffic was allowed to land. The FAA declined to comment on the crash and the closings.

White House Press Secretary Ari Fleischer briefed reporters on President George W. Bush's reaction to the news of the crash.

"The president called Mayor Giuliani and spoke with Governor Pataki, and the president expressed to both of them his deepest sympathy for the people of New York to be enduring any other such trauma at a time when New York has already gone through so much," Fleischer said. "The president said to both that the federal government will do everything it can to help."

The cause of the crash is unknown, and officials warn that no explanation is being ignored.

"On the question of whether there's any terrorism, as I indicated at the beginning, first information is always subject to change. We have not ruled anything in, not ruled anything out," Fleischer said. "But as I mentioned, the investigation is being headed by the National Transportation Safety Board to try to determine the cause of it."

American Airlines has set up a toll-free phone number for family members searching for loved ones. The number is 1-800-245-0999.

"American Airlines will not speculate as to possible causes of the accident. At this point, no additional details can be confirmed," American said in a released statement. "American Airlines officials are in direct contact with officials of the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board, and American is cooperating fully with federal, state and local authorities."

The crash is the first fatal incident in the United States of an Airbus A300-600. The series has been in service since March of 1984. American Flight 587 was built in southern France by Airbus in 1988.

On the Net: Airbus: http://www.f.airbus.com/; American Airlines: http://www.aa.com; the NTSB: http://www.ntsb.gov; the FAA: http://www.faa.gov; the White House: http://www.whitehouse.gov; the City of New York: http://www.nyc.gov.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Veteran voices
Veterans and other Amherst residents gathered in the common on Sunday to protest the "War on Terrorism."

Another bad Bulger brother in trouble for talking with Whitey

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Federal investigators arrested John "Jackie" Bulger on Friday on charges of perjury before a federal grand jury investigating his brother, fugitive James "Whitey" Bulger. Both Bulgers are the brothers of William Bulger, president of the University of Massachusetts and former president of the Massachusetts State Senate.

Jackie was charged with two incidents of perjury and obstruction of justice dating from 1996 when he told the jury that he had not heard from his brother since he fled custody in 1995. The Federal Bureau of Investigation now claims to have evidence that indicates Whitey had indeed contacted his brother in 1996 through another individual.

He also told the jury in 1996 that he was not aware of the fact that Whitey had a safety deposit box in Clearwater, Fla. Contradicting evidence has now surfaced to indicate that Jackie had paid rent to the box that was opened four years earlier.

Bulger appeared in front of a Boston federal magistrate briefly Friday and was released on a $10,000 bond. His arraignment is scheduled for tomorrow where he could face, if found guilty, a maximum sentence of five years of prison time for perjury and 10 years of jail time for obstruction of justice. Both charges could bring up to a $250,000 fine.

James "Whitey" Bulger is currently on the FBI's most wanted list and is wanted for racketeering, 18 counts of murder, conspiracy to commit murder, extortion, money laundering and narcotics distribution. He was known for running the Somerville Winter Hill gang.

The FBI is offering a one million dollar reward to anyone who has any information that could lead to the capture of Whitey.

"James 'Whitey' Bulger is being sought for his role in numerous murders committed from the early 1970s through the mid-1980s in connection with his leadership of an organized crime group that allegedly controlled extortion, drug deals and other illegal activities in the Boston, Massachusetts area," the Official FBI website states. "He has a violent temper and is known to carry a knife at all times."

Reports indicate that Bulger has been traveling with his girlfriend Catherine Greig to such places as New York, Louisiana, Mexico and Mississippi but it is unknown as to where they are now. The duo has been traveling with a considerable amount of money at their disposal and has managed to evade police capture.

The FBI is continuing their investigation into his whereabouts, tracing calls made by the fugitive to the Boston area.

UMass president William Bulger's tenure as senate president was the longest in state history and he has had a 33-year-career as a state legislator. Attempts to tap his telephone were thwarted by an informant at Bell Atlantic in 1999 as were attempts to tap the telephone lines of his brothers. William Bulger maintains that he has had no contact with his brother since his 1995 disappearance.

Information from the Associated Press and FBI.gov was used in this story.

Sioux author to speak on a path to peace

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will host Sioux author Arvol Looking Horse tomorrow. Looking Horse will meet with religious leaders at a gathering open to the public at 10:30 a.m. in room 905 of the Campus Center.

Looking Horse is the nineteenth in a line of holders of the sacred C'anupa, or white buffalo calf pipe, which he received from his grandmother at the age of 12. He is also the author of the book White Buffalo Teachings, and has lectured across the world on the importance of peace and environmental protection.

The 10:30 gathering is a continuation of the monthly UMass Religious Affairs Committee meeting. At the assembly, Looking Horse will meet with chaplains, advisors, and representatives from UMass faith communities. Students are especially encouraged to attend.

"Arvol Looking Horse is, in some ways, the Dalai Lama of the Sioux people," says Chaplain Jonathon Rhemus, a member of the Committee. "He's a religious leader who strongly encourages a path of peace. In his recent book, White Buffalo Teachings, he spoke about humanity at a crossroads – both in terms of its relation to itself and to the earth."

This topic, Rhemus explained, will be discussed at tomorrow's meeting.

Rhemus feels that it is important for anyone with an awareness of religious traditions to attend the gathering.

"He's a 19th Generation keeper," he said. "We're dealing with ancient religious teachings here. This is a must for anyone with an interest in that subject."

Looking Horse was born in South Dakota's Cheyenne River Reservation in 1954. Since receiving the C'anupa, he has spoken in many prominent arenas. In 1994, he traveled to the United Nations, where he presented the opening prayer at the Cry of the Earth Awareness

Turn to SIOUX page 3

MTV looking for 'Real' people

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Looking for fifteen minutes of fame?

Bunim/Murray Productions (BMP) will be holding an open casting call for upcoming seasons of "The Real World" and "Road Rules" at Jillian's Boston tomorrow, from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Jillian's Boston is located at 145 Ipswich Street, behind Fenway Park.

Anyone between the ages of 18 through 24 is eligible, provided that they bring a recent photo and form of picture identification. Participants need not be United States citizens, or enrolled in college.

"We're really enthusiastic about people from diverse backgrounds, who have a perspective they want to share with others," said Jason Horowitz, BMP's senior casting coordinator, explaining what characteristics are ideal for potential cast members. "There's no standard profile – we're always looking for new perspectives."

At the auditions, attendees will be divided into groups of ten and given a topic to discuss, as casting directors look on. Participants are not given a choice of which show they will appear on, should they be chosen.

"There's no guarantee that we'll get to see everybody," warns Horowitz. "We encourage people to head out early. But unfortunately, there will be situations where 600 people show up, and we can't see them all."

"The Real World" and "Road Rules" are generally considered the pioneers of the "reality television" trend. On "The Real World," MTV's longest-running series, seven strangers live and work together in the heart of an American city. Recent locations have included New York, New Orleans, and Honolulu. As is customary, the settings for the yet-to-be-filmed seasons of both shows have not been revealed.

On "Road Rules," a "Real World" spinoff, a six-member team travels to various locations around the world and lives in a Winnebago, while accomplishing "missions" – which often include bungee-jumps and sky dives. The most recent season of "Road Rules," set in Morocco and Spain, introduced a concept borrowed from "Survivor," in which the team was forced to vote off a member.

Many "Real World" and "Road Rules" alumni have gone on to careers in the entertainment industry. Examples include "Real World: New York's" Eric Nies, who hosted MTV's "The Grind," and "Real World: Seattle's" Rebecca Lord, who is now a successful musician. Others, such as Lord's Seattle housemate Irene McGee [who was famously slapped across the face by another cast member] have gone on to denounce the show.

"Some people find out who they really are by appearing on the shows," explains Horowitz. "Others don't have the same experience."

Despite the criticism of former cast-members like McGee, Horowitz still feels that the shows offer a worthwhile opportunity.

"You get to find out how you react to certain situations, and to learn more about yourself through meeting other people," he says. "And you get to live in a really 'phat' pad."

As over 30,000 people audition for both shows every year, Horowitz admits that the odds are hardly in anyone's favor. But, he says, "It's still worth a shot."

"We do take thirteen people every year," he says. "These people are shocked and surprised, and very happy at the same time. And there's a very good chance that at least one person from the Boston casting call will be chosen."

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

How does the caged pumpkin sing?
Are your pumpkins in their cages too?

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Woof, woof, woof
Who let the hairy house pets out?

GEO fights to raise wages

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the Graduate Employees Office (GEO) collected signatures Wednesday afternoon to qualify two labor friendly ballot initiatives sponsored by the Mass AFL-CIO for statewide elections in November 2002.

One of the initiatives would increase the minimum wage 25 cents in 2003 – from $6.75 to $7.00 – and index the minimum wage to the rate of inflation in 2004. The other initiative would establish the New Families Trust Fund to reimburse working parents of newborn or newly adopted children if they chose to leave work.

If approved, the minimum wage initiative would increase wages every Jan. 1 to reflect increases in the consumer price index, calculated by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics for all consumers during the most recent 12 months for which data are available. From 1974 to 1995, the purchasing power of the minimum wage decreased 25.7 percent.

"Indexing the minimum wage will ensure that low-wage workers maintain a fair and decent salary," the Mass AFL-CIO said. "Enacting this legislation would allow employers to prepare for a predictable pay scale rather than adjusting to extreme spikes in the minimum wage."

The New Families Trust Fund, a three-year pilot program, would provide parents of newborn or newly adopted children and who qualify for state unemployment insurance benefits, with an undetermined income for up to 12 weeks.

Currently, workers can take unpaid family leave only if they work at a company employing more than fifty workers under the family and Medical Leave Act of 1993.

"The program will help to ensure that all working parents, not just those who can afford to take unpaid leave or who have employer-provided paid leave, are able to balance work and family by taking much needed time off when a new child arrives," the Mass AFL-CIO said.

The initiative also proposes pro-

Turn to GEO, page 3

National Briefs

Minnesota

By Anne Preller
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS — Marjorie Cowmeadow, associate dean of General College and University of Minnesota employee of 33 years, has been waiting for the University to enact same-sex domestic partner health care benefits.

Cowmeadow and Teresa Schneider, partners for 23 years, will receive these benefits starting Jan. 1 when the University will begin a new health insurance plan. Employees in same-sex domestic partnerships will receive the same medical benefits offered to married partners.

"It's a work equality issue," Cowmeadow said. "It means (the University is) not discriminating against employees."

"With Teresa and I, there were periods of time where she was out of work and I could not cover her," Cowmeadow said. "For the first time we're able to cover our partners."

"I retire Jan. 2, 2002, and I feel like I can retire having pulled this off," Cowmeadow said. "If I didn't have this I'd feel terrible leaving this place."

In the past

The University has tried to implement medical benefits for same-sex domestic partners since the Board of Regents passed a resolution in 1985 saying the institution is committed to providing equal benefits.

"This has been an issue that's been under discussion quite a bit at the U over the last number of years," said Carol Carrier, vice president for human resources.

But the University used the state's insurance plan – the State Employees Group Insurance Program. Under the state's plan, the University was limited in the medical benefits it could offer to same-sex couples.

"We were not allowed to include domestic partners and treat them the same way we do married spouses," Carrier said.

A reimbursement program was instituted to provide some insurance coverage to registered same-sex domestic partners.

"There's a process that people go through to register their same-sex domestic partner at the University, and that's a process we've used for years," Carrier said.

The University defines a domestic partnership as two individuals of the same gender who are in a committed relationship similar to a marriage for an indefinite amount of time.

Under the reimbursement program, employees in same-sex domestic partnerships could be reimbursed for premiums up to the level the University was providing for family coverage, Cowmeadow said.

"But you had to go out and get the policy," Cowmeadow said. "And the key thing in going out and getting the policy is you had to have health insurance."

Last June the Board of Regents voted to sever ties with StGIP and proceed with a new self-insurance system.

"We knew that if we were going to go off and do a program on our own without the state that having same-sex domestic partners insured would be a big priority for us," Carrier said.

"The plan is self-insured," said Fred Morrison, professor of law and chairman of the benefits advisory committee. "The University is acting as the insurance company for it."

Four different carriers are available under the University's new health care plan: HealthPartners, PreferredOne, Definity and a series of HMO clinics. The University's physicians and Boynton health service are also available under all of the plans.

"As far as the U is concerned this is the first time we've included (same-sex domestic partners) in our health care plan," said Robert Fahnhurst, acting director for employee benefits.

"Now we have our own plan and can include those people in our definition of eligible dependents," Fahnhorst said. Eligible dependents are defined as those in a married partnership or in a registered same-sex domestic partnership. Health care will not be extended to non-registered same-sex domestic partners.

The people behind the policy

Cowmeadow and Schneider have been renovating their Victorian home since they bought it 15 years ago and have enjoyed the company of Duncan — a German Shepherd — for 15 of those years.

With a work-shop in the basement, Schneider has herself on a five-year plan to finish their home's renovations.

Time now seems to be on their side.

"I can quit a job I don't like and go out on my own and not worry about health and dental insurance," Schneider said.

"It's huge for me and my family and other people," Cowmeadow said. "It's affirming. My university is finally treating me comparably and equally and providing me with the same benefits."

"It has taken almost 10 years to actually getting the benefits implemented," Cowmeadow said. "The University is finally becoming compliant with University policy."

New York

By Dan Bock
Campus Times (U. Rochester)

(U-WIRE) ROCHESTER, N.Y. — A recent flood of warning letters has made it more difficult for students to share copyrighted files on University of Rochester's computer networks.

NetPD, a company based in London, has been scouring the computers at UR and at other colleges and Internet Service Providers looking for illegally shared copyrighted content.

In the past week, UR has received warning letters from the company, pertaining to 17 students. Associate Vice Provost for Computing Liudvikas Bukys said. The students' network connections were temporarily cut.

Bukys said that UR has to respond when it gets these notices, or face legal action.

"We kind of have no choice," he said. "The university doesn't want any liability on this issue."

The legal issues arise from the Digital Millennium Copyright Act, a federal law enacted in 1998 and intended to update copyright law for the digital age.

Junior Jeff Sottolano was one of the students whose computer was disconnected. He said his connection was cut without warning Thursday and he didn't know why.

"After I had uninstalled all my Ethernet devices, I finally called ResNet," he said. "I definitely didn't think it was fair that I was given no prior warning."

He said that ResNet didn't get his connection working again until Wednesday.

"I don't see how it's in [Rochester's] right to shut down our internet access, especially since e-mail is such an important way of communicating," he said. "I was dying without it."

Bukys said that in the future, students will be given a three-day warning to stop sharing the infringing files.

He said that UR has received the warning letters in the past, but not the volume that have come in from NetPD in the past week.

"The companies are getting more animated," Bukys said. "It's easy for them to find you because if your intent is to share your files with a few thousand of your friends, then that includes the record companies too."

A feature of NetPD's software is that it searches the content of files, not just file names. So if users rename copyrighted files in an attempt to hide them, NetPD can still find them, co-founder and technical director Bruce Ward said.

"The software was designed to handle pops, cracks, skips, and all the wonderful things that degrade the quality of MP3 files, and still identify the songs accurately," he said in an article in the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Concerns have arisen at UR and at other colleges as to whether NetPD's warning notices are in compliance with the DMCA.

"NetPD doesn't always send them to the right place," Bukys said. "I kinda wonder if they're doing this very carefully or not."

"I have seen no indication that NetPD, in fact, is the authorized agent for the copyright works that they bring to our attention," said Rodnes Petersen, the director of policy and planning at the information technology office at the University of Maryland in the Chronicle.

Still, UR takes the letters seriously.

"The fact that NetPD doesn't always send it to the right person doesn't make us completely comfortable about ignoring it," Bukys said. "It's kind of grossly inconvenient for everyone all around, but at the same time copyright infringement is a serious issue."

Oregon

By Courtney Cross
OSU Daily Barometer (Oregon St. U.)

(U-WIRE) CORVALLIS, Ore. — With rumors of rape and sexual assault spreading throughout the Oregon State University campus, many students have been taken aback by the notion of an unsafe environment.

But, public safety officials say the rumors — ranging from tales straight out of horror movies to the stereotypical scene of a girl raped while walking alone at night — may only be rumors.

"We have not had any reported cases to this office," said Lt. Randie Martz of the Oregon State Police.

Martz clarified, however, that the lack of reported cases doesn't mean that no rapes occurred; only that none had been reported.

"If there has been a recent assault on campus, we would like to know about it so that we could help the victim through it," Martz said. "We're really good about supporting victims of sex crimes."

Paulette Ratchford, the manager of the Department of Public Safety at OSU, said that the rumors have at least a surface appearance of being untrue because they all have to do with non-acquaintance rapes. An overwhelming amount of rapes — especially on campus — are date or acquaintance rapes, she said.

Public safety officials did say they'd heard the rumors and had been pursuing information about them in the past two weeks. However, the investigation has not confirmed any actual cases of rape or sexual assault.

They did, however, find plenty of people who had passed along stories of recent assaults.

Rebecca Farrow, a graduate student at OSU, had reported some of the rumors in a women's studies class she teaches. Students in Farrow's class reported that their teacher had told them there were nine different assaults, four of which were rapes and one that occurred on the walkway between the Gladys Valley Gymnastics Center and the Valley Library.

Kappa Alpha Theta president Jennifer Jo Wight reported a similar rumor.

Farrow said she doesn't actually have any exact numbers, or know where to find them.

"It is difficult to make sense of them because none of them have been reported," Farrow said. "And confirmed cases — for example, if two people at different times disclose that a close friend has been assaulted on campus, and they each speak to a different person — you can imagine how quickly numbers can be skewed."

Farrow said she wanted to encourage women to report any assaults or attempted assaults, and reassures them that if they do seek help they won't be forced into any decisions surrounding their assault.

Instead, she suggested that they would find countless resources to help them through the trauma.

The Center Against Rape and Domestic Violence has a toll-free hotline to support and assist anyone who feels that they need to talk.

"Our hotline is completely confidential, you don't even have to say your name," said Robin Lindquist, a client advocate for CARDV. The number is 1-800-927-0197.

According to Lindquist, a first step for anyone who has been a victim of rape is go to Student Health Services to use a rape kit. However, the evidence collected with that kit would not be disclosed to the police unless the patient specifically requested so.

Dr. Sam Sappington, assistant director for education and training at Counseling and Psychological Services, is one of many available to help victims of assault. The counseling center is located on the fifth floor of Snell Hall and is free to all students.

"All of us on staff here are in positions to help someone who has been a victim of sexual assault," said Sappington, who is a licensed psychologist. "Unfortunately, on all college campuses around the country, this is a fairly common issue."

According to OSU's 2000 Crime Report, 10 forcible sexual assaults were reported to campus security agencies between 1998 and 2000. In addition, six assaults were reported to Student Conduct and Mediation.

Some 75,000 rapes occur in the United States every year, the Merck Manual of Diagnosis and Therapy reported. Two to 10 times that number go unreported.

"If we hear about one, chances are nine are happening," said Prudence Miles, equal opportunity associate for Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity. "I certainly hope it is not happening, and if so, it gets reported."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January, 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tihora Garcez-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
Class Begins Fri. Nov. 16th 6:00pm Valentine Hall Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

WOMEN ARE MORE THAN THEIR BODIES!
Come create a student-run task force to work on the following:
POLITICAL ACTION, ADVOCACY, SUPPORT AND CONNECTION
Explore these issues with a group of professional women on campus.
TIME: November 15, 4–5 p.m.
PLACE: Campus Center Room 802

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

Volunteer Bulletin

By Marcella Gajek
Collegian Correspondent

Nov. 1-Dec. 31 — Salvation Army- Bell-ringers needed to staff kettles and help raise funds for local Salvation Army projects in 2-3 hour shifts.
Contact: Sabrina Moran 586-4732

Nov. 13 – MassPIRG — Volunteers needed to staff an "Open Mic" fundraiser for area shelters.
Contact: MassPIRG 545-0199

Dec. 1/Dec. 2 – Volunteers needed to hand out programs and candles at vigils to honor those killed/injured in drunk driving crashes.
Contact: Laurrie Broussard 413-527-8254

Dec. 8 — Salvation Army — Volunteers needed to help out at a Christmas party for low-income area children.
Contact: Elizabeth Cowart 586-5243

Dec. 8 — Salvation Army — Volunteers needed to visit local veterans.
Contact: Linda Sapp 586-5336

Ongoing – MADD—Legislative Issues Telephone Network – Supporters needed to contact elected officials concerning drunk-driving related bills.
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

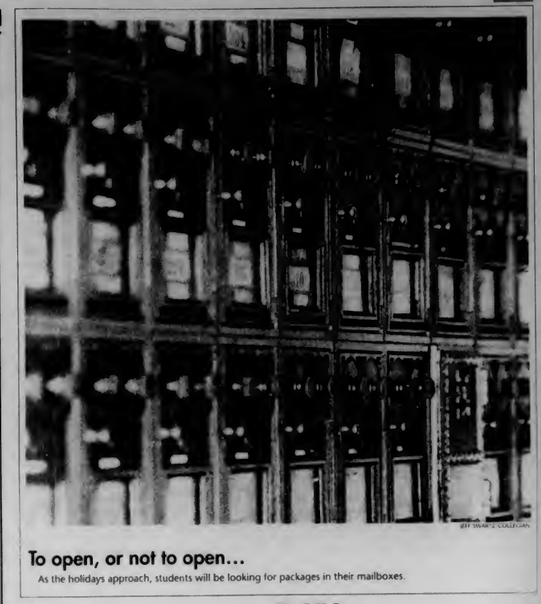
Ongoing – SERVICENET – Volunteers needed to help with fundraising for shelters.
Contact: Lisa Davol 582-9512

Ongoing – Amherst Regional Middle School – Volunteers needed for applying magnetic strip to all books, magazines, videos etc. in library collection, anytime between 8am-3pm.
Contact: Mrs. Jones 549-9866, 7:30-3 M-F

Ongoing – Amherst Family Center of HCAC – Volunteers needed to staff monthly fundraising and community events.
Contact: Mary Rives 549-4969

Ongoing — Family Outreach of Amherst
Low-income women's support organization needs childcare for meetings once a week.
Contact: MorningStar 665-9806

Ongoing — Volunteers needed to post posters for Stavros Center for Independent Living at University of Massachusetts bulletin boards.
Contact: Sandy Miliefsky 800-804-1899



Ongoing — MassPIRG — Volunteers needed to help test various water sources.
Contact: Liz 256-1209

MassPIRG, The Salvation Army, the Hillel House and the food bank will be involved in an event on Nov. 13 from 7 p.m. – 10 p.m. in the Commenwealth Room of the Student Union to raise awareness about issues of hunger and homelessness and to highlight ways in which students can get involved. The event will feature guest speakers and performances by acts such as the Tours.

For more volunteer opportunities or to learn how to get credit for volunteer work, call the Office of Community Service Learning at 545-2015 or stop by 610 Goodell Hall.

The Volunteer Bulletin is a public service of the Daily Collegian.

To open, or not to open...
As the holidays approach, students will be looking for packages in their mailboxes.

■ Sioux

continued from page 1

Conference. Four years later he again spoke at a United Nations event, when he delivered a lecture at the Conference on Sacred Sights. He has been on the board of Society of Peace and Prayer, and has won numerous awards from peace organizations.

Looking Horse will not be the only prominent author in attendance tomorrow morning. He will be accompanied by his co-editors on White Buffalo Teachings, Paula Horn and Harvey Arden. Horn is a staff writer for National Geographic, and is noted for her attempts to establish the Summer Solstice (June 21) as an international day of unity and prayer. She is known to her people as H'e Sapa winyan [or, "Black Hills Woman"]. Arden is the editor of incarcerated Native American activist Leonard Peltier's Prison Writings, and the author of Wisdom Keepers: Conversations with Native Spiritual Leaders.

The Campus Center meeting is not Looking Horse's only stop in the Five College area. On Thursday, Nov. 15, he will speak at Hampshire College's Franklin Patterson Main Lecture Hall at 7:00 p.m. At the conclusion of his lecture, he will participate in a book signing. He will also speak at the Fare Thee Well Wellness Center in Huntington, Mass., on Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 2:00 p.m., where he will deliver a prayer and a lecture, followed by a reception.

■ GEO

continued from page 1

viding businesses with a personal income tax credit, determined by the number of employees at the company. However, employers with more than 250 employees would receive no credit.

Mass. businesses would finance the fund by giving $30 per employee to the state Division of Employment and Training. The Mass AFL-CIO said the fund would receive approximately $64 million dollars from employer contributions.

While GEO representatives awaited voters in room 802 of the Campus Center, other groups across the state collected signatures as well. According to the Mass AFL-CIO, volunteers hoping to collect 75,000 signatures petitioned citizens from Boston to Springfield on Election Day, Nov. 6.

Once the Mass AFL-CIO collects 57,100 signatures, the state legislature must vote on the initiatives by the end of May 2002. If the legislature rejects the proposal, then the Mass AFL-CIO must gather another 9,517 signatures by July 5 to place the initiatives on the November ballot in 2002.

The Mass AFL-CIO sponsored both initiatives in coalition with the Campaign for Working Families, a national political action committee that supports pro-life, pro-family, and pro-free enterprise candidates and legislation.

On the Net: The Massachusetts AFL-CIO http://www.massaflcio.org/

Hey news writers, don't forget the meeting tonight at 5:30!

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real barclub setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

VALLEY Furniture and Crafts
15% off Bookcases

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHALLOW HAL (PG13) 1205 450 745 1025*
LIFE AS A HOUSE (R) 1220 405 715 1010*
HEIST (R) 1230 430 705 1000
MONSTERS INC (G) 1200 1240 220 300 440 520 700 740 920 1009*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1215 410 800 1030*
THE ONE (R) 1230 455 710 950*
K-PAX (PG13) 1210 435 725 1015*
13 GHOSTS (R) 1240 415 735 1005*
ON THE LINE (PG) 1220
FROM HELL (R) 1250 800 750 1040
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 415 720 1020
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1255 740
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 400 1010
COMING 11/16
HARRY POTTER TICKETS ON SALE NOW
SENIOR MOVIE NOV. 15 K-PAX DOORS OPEN AT 1145AM
NO PASSES ACCEPTED
A DAY ADVANCE PASS SALES ARE FINAL FOR ALL MOVIES SHOWN
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

the Ground Round of Hadley
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL
BOOMER MUGS only $2.79
Budweiser BUD LIGHT MICHELOB Ultra
Nightly Specials
Sun.. Mon.. Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings
-$3.00
9 TV's, Smoking Section, Monday Night Football

YAMAHA HONDA DUCATI KTM Husqvarna
VALLEY MOTORSPORTS
M.V. Augusta Kawasaki CAGIVA
216 N. King St. Northampton, MA 01060 www.valleymotorsports.com 413-584-7303
State Inspection & Winter Storage
SUPERB, PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/MASLEY • 256-0011
Hours: Sun.-Wed. 11 a.m.-1 a.m. Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out Expires 5/31/02
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Plane crashes in NY: don't panic

The sky is falling. Again. That was the initial reaction to yesterday's plane crash in New York City by many of us, at least until we found our senses and realized that more than likely, the crash was just a horrible accident.

There at this point is absolutely no information that suggests that the crash of American Airlines Flight 587 was caused by terrorism. Our government has left the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) in charge of the crash investigation. That should quell any terrorism fears for now; if the crash looked like anything other than a horrible accident, our federal government would have put the FBI in charge and classified it as a criminal investigation.

Other hints suggest that yesterday's crash was nothing other than horribly bad luck, as well. Many eyewitnesses have stated that they saw the plane either explode or on fire in mid-air, which makes mechanical failure of an engine a much more likely scenario than a conspiracy theory.

So relax. The footage on television yesterday was horrible, without a doubt. Before the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, we would have been shocked by the devastation of a residential Queens neighborhood. A closer reaction for many people to yesterday's event was one of fear and uncertainty. Way too many of us were waiting for the other shoe to drop and hear the news we expected: that of a hijacking, a bomb on the plane, or some other horror.

Realistically, that is probably to be expected. The atrocities of September 11 will affect the way we think for the rest of our lives. We can't always expect the worse, though. It isn't healthy.

Mechanical failure is a perfectly reasonable answer to this plane crash. If yesterday's crash had occurred this summer instead of yesterday, it would have been near the only explanation. It just makes too much sense.

Nevertheless, there is going to be thousands of people who have other ideas. A quick visit to Internet message boards confirms that Americans are openly paranoid about yesterday's crash and everything else that has to do with national security, for that matter.

For every rational voice one hears, there's three or four that will be screaming, "It was a bomb! A bomb I swear!"

Hysteria isn't going to help anyone. It's beginning to sound like a tired, broken record, but avoiding flying and the like because of yesterday and because of Sept. 11 is the wrong thing to do. It still means giving in to fear that the terrorists responsible for the World Trade Center have tried to instill in us.

So live your life. Mourn for the victims of Flight 587, if you wish. Unless the investigation turns up ghastly evidence pointing towards sabotage or a bomb, though, don't be too amazed by yesterday's crash. The timing is terrible. The setting (another crash in New York City) is even worse. But planes crash every year. Things go wrong; it's a sad and inevitable part of life. If we all join the ranks of conspiracy theorists, it's only a matter of time before we all need to be committed.

Unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Why I need to be on MTV

MELODY ZAGAMI

As young Americans there, are three letters that are more important to us than any other in our beloved alphabet: S. T. and D. Wait, that doesn't sound right. I mean M, T, and V. Yeah. I definitely mean MTV. Oh, my beloved Music Television. I would be nothing without thee. What would I have been doing for the past ten or so years since I started watching you religiously? Reading books? How could I have won the approval and admiration of my peers if I hadn't watched hours and hours of "Yo, MTV Raps" and hung out with Downtown Julie "wubba, wubba wubba" Brown, Martha Quinn and yes, the intellectually stimulating, the thespian, the MTV sports dude, Dan Cortese.

I have heard (and hold onto your hats, kids, cause this, this is huge, it's bigger than the Swift's new budget cuts) that MTV is coming! Yup.

I read it in this very College paper just last week. Now, it might just be a rumor. I searched the MTV website and I couldn't turn up anything except Busta Bust's favorite stuffing recipes, but the Collegian wouldn't lie to me. Anyway, I hope I don't get you too riled up, but the article did say they'd be coming to town this week to record a day in the life of UMass. So girls, grab your sexiest Moulin Rouge bustiers and dudes, rock your best boy band outfits and we'll show these music people how we do it in Amherst. I want everyone to act natural. Don't let them think we're too excited, just be cool, but be Carson-cool if you can.

Now if they don't show, no biggie. I ask that everyone I see uptown Wednesday night dress as an MTV personality (this includes music stars, Real World/Road Rules cast members and Matt Pinfield). Hey, who says every Wednesday can't be Halloween?

Actually the truth is, I have a real love/hate affair with my longtime amigo, MTV. Our relationship started a long time ago. It's taught me so much about fashion, comedy, cartoons, politics, weaves and rollies, the implications of seven strangers, picked to live in a loft, to have their lives taped, oh yeah and music, sometimes, but that may have been a boo-boo in the editing department. It's been there for me a lot. It's disgusting. It's trendy. It's an evil, Viacom owned, top forty-breeding, pop culture factory that grotesquely dictates how we should look, act, talk and what we should buy. But god, I love every revoltingly fabulous minute of it.

We've been together through all stages of my life and this past July when it turned twenty, I wasn't even in the country to celebrate its long, successful life. The guilt, oh the guilt. I was so guilty, in fact, I had a recent dream that went like this. I'm driving Kurt Loder to a show. I ask Kurt how everything's going, he says fine but he's ready for retirement. I drop him off at the venue, and it's a Church. I wake up and the first thing I thought was, "Oh my God I forgot to congratulate him on the twentieth anniversary." What the hell is wrong with me? I actually felt guilty afterwards.

Is MTV that much a part of my being that I should dream about Kurt Loder and Churches? Either that, or I'm crazy. Hey you're the one who's reading my column, what does that say about you? Hmmmm?

It just proves, though, how locked into the human sub-conscious a cable channel can be if you watch it daily for eleven years straight. Even though MTV always reminds me how fat my ass is (in comparison with Shakira's, mind you), I still embrace it. Even though I am inadequate and will never, ever be Beyonce, I still watch. I figured that because they basically play crappy music I don't like, I'd stop watching. I thought as I grew older we would go our separate ways. I would go to College, and MTV would stay at home with my parents, where they'd ignore it, and it would go away. Sure they'd probably pass over it, by accident, on the way to the Home and Garden channel or Lifetime, but it certainly couldn't thrive without me worshipping its inviting glow. I would grow academically and become a young adult. I would mature into a responsible woman of the world and live, happily, without those three little letters. How wrong I was, for we are still together to this day. I watch "Cribs," "Becoming," and "Making the Video." I check in with TRL on a bi, if not tri-weekly basis. I tell myself I do it so that I can keep tabs on what my 14-year old cousins are watching, but it's a lie. I tell myself I do it so that I can one day be knowledgeable Media critic and use it as a negative example. I won't.

Somehow I just can't let go. Someday when I'm out on my own (which is far sooner than I care to think about) I won't be able to afford cable. Of course, I could watch through the neighbor's window or I could probably get a black box pretty easily, my friend knows a guy who knows a guy who knows a guy's roommate who makes 'em. And then there's always cable on the TV's in the gym so that'd be fine and even if I can't hear, there's closed-captioning.

Oh, it's too much to bear, really it is. I love it, I need it, I want to be on it. You do too, so get your over-educated, intellectual alter ego down from that ivory tower and join me in rolling out the red carpet for those that get their money for nothing, and their chicks for free.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian columnist.

Music makes it all so much better

I listened to a Hootie and the Blowfish song last week, and I am quite sure that I enjoyed the whole song, beginning to end. I am pretty certain that it was "Let Her Cry," but that's neither here nor there. Does that make me a loser? I don't think it does. I am going to go out on a limb here and say that music makes you feel really good every time you hear it, excluding a few Marilyn Manson tunes and Nirvana's Rape Me.

Even if you're already feeling good, it helps. You could've just won an autographed Dolly Parton bra, found out that Seinfeld's coming back (what my personal definition of happiness is), and could turn on the radio only to hear Wham's smash hit, "Wake Me Up Before You Go-Go," and though you're ashamed to admit it, you'd grab the closest household appliance and start dancing in your kitchen. That's what music does to you: it's the best pick-me-upper around. Well, maybe the second or third best pick-me-upper around. Ok, I know, so it's definitely in the top five on the pick-me-upper list. And if that was an actual list that would make sense. But I digress.

Anytime that life has been trying for me, I can always just pop in a CD. Before I can even hit Route 9, I am air drumming to "Mr. Jones" with my left knee poorly compensating for two hands, which of course are needed to provide the difficult ride rhythm. You just my point, and I am sure you do some of the same things. Music can be so beneficial that it could actually take the place of some common day therapy. How many times have you said to yourself, "That singer is talking about me?" You identify with the lyrics and you use them to help recover. That isn't strange and we all do it.

Think of how many song lyrics you've quoted already in your AIM profile. It is easier to write a song quote, because in a way, you're saying, "Hey, this guy went through this too." Plus, it's a lot less scary to see a Staind lyric than seeing, "Hey I'm giving up on life, leave me." We've learned to speak without using any of our own words, and yet using our voice at the same time.

Whether it was Black Sucubus singing "Drink my blood, cut my skull, anarchy and pain for all," or a quartet of frosted-haired prepubescent snots, err, I mean "talented artists" crooning on MTV, "I want to love you girl, and kiss your face, if I hit a home run, I'm gonna slide into your second base," it doesn't matter. It still could take the place of some four-eyed Harvard grad telling you that your father beating you is the reason you feel inadequate about your life. Right, oh, and if the latter type of the aforementioned music is your cup of tea, maybe the shrink wouldn't be such a bad way to go. Don't worry, I know a guy. This is all coming from a kid who boasts having two Oasis CD's, go figure.

I guess it doesn't matter what kind of music we listen to, but rather than we take it as it is meant to be taken: as enjoyable messages and expressions. All music has ever tried to do was to enrich the mind and body with emotion. Listen to me. I sound like a brochure for a weekend yoga retreat or the insert of Yo-Yo Ma's latest CD (which is in fact entitled "Soho" if you want to nab that one off the shelves before they are all gone!). Note to self: disregard anybody's music, if the creator's name is Yo-Yo. His name is Yo-Yo, people. I like one Yo wasn't enough, he had to go and make a name for himself. As if it wasn't shameful when just his hometown knew his name.

Music also plays a huge sentimental role to us. We attach music to so many parts of our lives, and we connect them with fond or not-so-fond memories. Special songs with a girlfriend, your class song that was played at the prom, or a song you heard every day on the radio when you were a kid riding in the back of your mother's station wagon (such as any Don Henley song) these are the songs that comfort us in the most personal way. They relieve us from the everyday stressors that get under our skin. It's all right that the Red Hot Chili Peppers' "Suck My Kiss" reminds you of that weekend at your aunt's house last summer. Only you, my friend, the UPS guy who filmed it, and the flies on the wall know why it is a meaningful song to you.

That's why music is so important; it is so personal. If it weren't (then it would lose its mystique), I am pretty sure that mystique isn't the right word to use there, but it sounded a little cooler than most other words I could've used.

I guess my overall point is the fact that music equals good. Music makes you forget without having to suppress, it's healing without having to down a capful of Robitussin, only to later feel the side effects of nausea and diarrhea. It's very precious; you should take time to acknowledge that once and awhile. Next time you're driving down the highway and you're swerving in and out of lanes because you and your friends are trying to sing that stupid "One Week" song from the Barenaked Ladies, just remember how thankful you are for music.

If it didn't exist, you would have to hear about your buddy's performance problems with his girlfriend or his nagging "acne" that just won't pop. When you are pulled over for your drunken-like driving, just show the officer the CD you'd been playing and shrug your shoulders. He'll just nod and let you go. Oh, and if he doesn't, and you end up in cuffs in the back of his cruiser, just tell him to turn up the FM. Everything will be alright, just listen.

Mike Chechile is a UMass student.

MIKE CHECHILE

An open letter to Amherst pedestrians

Crusty, weather-beaten senior that I am, I feel I have acquired a certain venerable layer of cynicism as I've gone through my trials and tribulations here at UMass. I've gotten used to phone registration, Whitmore lines, the Miser's (oh, sorry, I mean Bursar's) Office, and living in a dorm long after most of my upperclassmen colleagues have gotten a clue and moved into a real house. But there's one thing that, no matter how many semesters I end up spending here, still just sticks in my craw. Yes, I'm talking about you, the pedestrians of Amherst.

I have long since ceased to give a crap about your right of way. And I take exception to your continual habit of darting out in front of cars on a day-to-day basis.

But you're saying, the pedestrians of Massachusetts have the right-of-way in crosswalks. Well, Whoop-de-freakin' doo. I come from the eastern part of Massachusetts, where that right of way is no different under the law. But if I ever behaved there the way UMass pedestrians feel they have a right to behave around here, I would be killed outright.

It all comes down to basic mathematics. My car is a minivan built in 1989. It weighs approximately 4 tons (give or take due to rust). That's 8000 pounds. The average compact car weighs 2 tons, or 4000 pounds. PVTA buses, last I checked, weigh 20 tons, for a whopping total of 40,000 pounds of pure Detroit steel. How much do you weigh, tough guy? 180? Do the math. When you can divide your weight into the weight of an oncoming hunk of metal and come out with a whole number, the hallowed right of way should begin to lose its meaning.

This is not to say that drivers are usually careless enough to allow such an equation to be graphically demonstrated. But no matter how careful a driver is, there's also such a thing, for all you physics majors out there (and I know some of you have been among the pedestrians that regularly give my blood pressure a run for its money), as momentum. Each car requires at least another car's length of stopping distance per every 20 miles per hour of speed (or so I learned back in Driver's Ed). That means that, driving my illustrious '89 land boat, I need a distance of about a land boat and a half to stop if I am obeying a speed limit of 35 m.p.h. So no matter how desperately I wait to stop for you, at times simple physics may make it impossible. Whenever you dart out into the road in front of an oncoming car, as you are so often want to do, think about that.

If that doesn't convince you, think then about the drivers that aren't careful, or who are distracted. Think about the people driving down the road who have just spilled coffee into their crotch, or whose kid has just projectile-vomited onto the windshield. Think about that guy with his buns turned up too loud for him to see straight, or that girl who's putting on lipstick as she cruises along. Yes, some of them are irresponsible, and they deserve to be punished. But the sad fact of the matter is if you are not more responsible for yourself, then it will be you who meets the ultimate punishment. No moral argument is worth grievous bodily injury. I wish more of you would give that some thought, as well.

What's worse, though, is that this darting-out problem is especially bad when it comes to buses, which boast the most competent and careful drivers on the road. I can't count the number of times per day I see one of you pedestrians dive out into the road, crosswalk or no crosswalk, in front of a PVTA bus loaded with passengers. Sometimes I've been on the bus, and all but thrown into the windshield as the lone fellow passengers at the bus careens to a halt to let you pass.

Okay then, you're thinking, but buses travel more slowly than most cars, so they should be able to stop. Let's say it's lumbering along at 25 m.p.h. It weighs 20 tons empty, but maybe you can add another ton for its weight when it's packed with passengers. Think about this one: Momentum equals mass times velocity. Add mass, add momentum. Not only does that bus driver need another bus length (about 15 feet) to stop for you empty, add his passengers and he probably tack on another 2 or 3 feet. So when you've already run out so close as to barely graze his bike rack, things can quickly get messy.

I can't fathom why you would do this. Perhaps you feel that since the bus driver is an employee of a company that would be liable for whatever accidents you and he might get into, that it's his responsibility to stop in time. Perhaps instead you should give some thought to the fact that if he can't or doesn't follow that responsibility, he may be in the wrong, but you may be dead.

Trying to drive down North Pleasant Street while avoiding getting into a terrible accident with one of you is bad enough — like some video game conceived in hell. But when you factor in darkness, it turns into a literal nightmare. Here are a few tips that I'm sure you've been hearing since first grade. When walking at night, avoid wearing dark clothing. Stick to well-lighted areas and marked crosswalks if possible. Be especially careful when crossing the street at night.

Still, simple as it may sound, you actually often pick nighttime to do your worst. Cloaked in black, you come flying out of the shadowy recesses of the most ill lighted roads, and then make obscene gestures in our headlights as our brakes squeal. That isn't just stupid — it's simply unconscionable. Then again, since "looking both ways" seems to have become such a challenging concept, maybe the idea that darkness means that drivers can't see you is a course to save for next semester.

Yes, I am bitter. I apologize if I sound a bit hysterical, but there's nothing like flirting daily with vehicular manslaughter to ratchet your personal torque up just a little bit higher. After four years, that feeling really grates on a person.

During the past four years that I've been here, there have been a number of injuries, and even deaths, due to accidents between cars and pedestrians. I'm not saying that all of those were the pedestrian's fault. But looking at the way you behave, even when you probably know those statistics, I can only come to the conclusion that many of them probably were.

Of course, we can debate all day if you want, about who's to blame. But when it comes right down to it, it's hard to argue anything if you've been hurt or killed because of your own carelessness. I wouldn't say this if I didn't genuinely care about your safety: if you can't think about yourself, think about your friends and family. Think about the driver and what they're dealing with. And then for Christ's sake, look both ways.

Elizabeth Pariseau is a Collegian Staff member.

ELIZABETH PARISEAU

Animation booms

Monsters, Inc. grossed an impressive $46.2 million this past weekend, down only 26 percent from its $62.6 million bow — a record for an animated film. Pixar and Disney labored for more than four years to craft the tale of two amiable beasties, Mike and Sulley (voiced by Billy Crystal and John Goodman), who find an errant human child (every monster's worst nightmare) wandering around Monstropolis.

And who said it's not easy being green? Last week Shrek took in an ogre-iffic $110 million in VHS and DVD revenue its first three days, the biggest first-week take since Disney released another huge animated film The Lion King to home viewers nearly seven years ago, selling 20 million videos and taking in a roaring $340 million in six days.

Kids aren't the only ones who have gone wild over animated flicks. Adults and even teenagers (most of whom claim to hate cartoons and the like in order to proclaim their "maturity") whose inner children still burble about previous field trips to Toy Story, A Bug's Life and Toy Story 2, look forward to these life-like creations, knowing that no matter what happens, the monsters will look remarkably real.

Technology has advanced so much since Toy Story's debut six years ago so that every hair on Sulley's furry blue-and-green body ruffles in the air, and Boo's every toddler gesture is lovingly captured. In fact, Randall Boggs (Steve Buscemi), a slithery reptilian creep who challenges Sulley for terror championship in a showdown between good and evil among the monster population, goes invisible during the end of the film in what becomes one of the state-of-the-art animation pieces in the movie.

But magic isn't about technology, no matter how whizzy the tech is; it's about story, style, and substance. And so far, these animated flicks have delivered. From Toy Story to Antz to Shrek, this film genre has been better than most others at the multiplex.

And the fact that these movies are entirely animated adds another element to their jewel premise: hidden messages are subtly buried in these films that you no longer need an excuse for watching them for the third and fourth time. With all that time to digitally sharpen every claw and buff every fang, the filmmakers manage to slip in some hard-to-spot visual gags and in-jokes.

This summer's smash, Shrek, was brimming with inside jokes. Dreamworks honcho Jeffrey Katzenberg, who also worked as one of the producers of the fairy tale, advised the writers and animators at Pacific Data Images (who made Antz) to plant subtle jokes that poke some fun at movie studio Disney that banished the exec in 1994. Remember the dictatorial, real-estate-hungry Lord Farquaad (try saying that name ten times fast!) and you may see an authoritarian resemblance to Katzenberg's old boss, Disney chief Michael Eisner. You may also remember Farquaad's theme-park-style castle — clearly Disneyland in disguise. (The battle between the studios continued last weekend. Unlike most videos, which are released on Tuesdays, Shrek came out on Friday in a move apparently meant to steal thunder from Disney's Monsters, Inc. where the soap dispensers in the monsters' locker rooms say "Do Not Eat.")

COURTESY DISNEY PIXAR

SOUND OFF

with Nick Markantonatos

COURTESY DISNEY PIXAR

Post Sept. 11, these films have even more meaning. Everything from Pixar Animation Studios and Pacific Data Images, the chic, cutting-edge computer animation behemoth, contains exceeding vivacity and melts the heart with enormous character and warmth. Filled with multilevel awareness to kids' eye sensibilities and adult-pitched humor, Monsters, Inc. offers more entertainment than others in the movie theater. Unlike say action flicks (most of which have been pushed back) or heavy-handed dramas, Monsters, Inc. is providing light-hearted fun to a grief-stricken America.

But there's a fight brewing in the two current computer-generated titans: Can Mike and Sulley top that big green ogre's almost $270 million take so far? After just 10 days in release, the Monsters have scared up $122.8 million. By comparison, DreamWorks' Shrek had earned a total of $111.7 million after its second weekend. Then again, there's also the comparison of DVD sales.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY SCOTT GURSKY

Folk-al lessons

Arlo Guthrie played at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton on Saturday night -- If you missed the show, put some Guthrie on the CD player and stare intently at the picture for the next hour... it'll start to feel like you're really there.

Mamet's Heist: brilliant characters, average film

COURTESY TAKASHI SEIDA

Ricky Jay, Gene Hackman and Delroy Lindo rob a jewelry store in The Heist before setting their sights on bigger fish.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Cinematically, David Mamet is first, a wordsmith, and second, a director. His movies, more often than not, feature unbelievable sequences of dialogue packaged around subtly textured plots in what are basically very raw films.

While not being crude, Mamet's cinematography is hardly Guy Ritchie's. His set pieces are more often simple than lush. He rarely falls back on his soundtrack to tell his story. Instead of relying on any of these typical tricks to tell his tale, Mamet offers only his characters and their crisped, cropped dialog.

His latest, Heist, is no exception. A complex tale out of the "one-final-job" school of storytelling, Heist's characters and their complexities are overwhelming. Mamet, in taking the most basic crime-caper film, risked his own reputation on something so overdone. While his most recent hustle film, Steve Martin's The Spanish Prisoner, was the complex con of a single man – a one-final-job storyline is something entirely different. Done to perfection in films like Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid and Out of Sight, and more recently (albeit not as well) in Ed Norton's The Score, Mamet has still found a way to make Heist appealing without making it seem like any of these films.

Starring Gene Hackman and Delroy Lindo as aging thieves, and Danny DeVito as the man who bankrolls the thefts against their future profit, the film puts together three characters who are never at ease with each other. Hackman plays the criminal about to retire, Lindo his friend, DeVito as the bankroller forcing Hackman into one final theft. Rebecca Pidgeon (Mamet's real-life wife) and Ricky Jay also star.

But a relatively simple story slowly unravels. After a masterfully conceived theft goes awry – Hackman's face is captured on camera – DeVito forces him and his crew (Lindo, Pidgeon and Jay) together for the fateful final job: the theft of Swiss gold. The obligatory catch is the involvement of DeVito's nephew, relative newcomer Sam Rockwell (The Green Mile's "Wild Bill" Wharton). Inexperienced and seemingly into the job for only himself, Rockwell continually steps on Hackman and Lindo, at one point causing both of them to declare that the job is a no-go.

Mamet loves smart characters and in Hackman and Lindo, he has two of his best. Playing incredibly smart conmen, their constant

Turn to HEIST page 6

Oppressive fat jokes and monsters rule the box office

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Monsters Inc. enjoyed another monstrous weekend at the box-office, making that not-so-subtle use of "monstrous" only the millionth time it has been used to describe the Pixar film. Raking in a cool $46.2 million, Monsters crossed the ever-important $100 million barrier before facing its stiffest competition in next week's Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone.

Monsters' big victory wasn't any big surprise especially considering that its closest competition was that of Shallow Hal, a supposedly hilarious take on fat people, thin people and self-image. Taking in $23.2 million, good enough for second place this week, Hal won the prestigious honor of being Hollywood's single stupidest concept for a movie since last summer's Bubble Boy.

In the film, Jack Black (the character actor that was supposedly funny in some of his other roles...The Jackal for instance) plays the kind of guy who reads Maxim. His ideal woman is a centerfold. That all changes when, on a chance encounter with self-help-guru-late-night-television-personality Tony Robbins, Black is spelled into only seeing inner beauty. Then the hilarity starts! He starts meeting all of these women whose inner beauty is only hidden by the layers and layers of fat on their skeletons. But he can't see the fat, only the inner beauty! Get it? Isn't that great? He thinks fat chicks are hot! But they're actually not because they are total fatties! My god, the merriment!

The film stars Gwyneth Paltrow as Rosemary "she's really fat but Black can't see that because that is a hilarious premise for a film" Shanahan. In a "fat suit" for the better part of the movie, Paltrow has given interviews in which she discusses the shame and degradation she felt while being leered at by strangers for being a lard-ass. She's said that she took the role so she could explore America's prejudice against the heavy.

Now, God forbid she eats like a normal human being. God forbid she protests Hollywood's truly repulsive behavior of hiring only waifs as skinny as Paltrow is, regardless of their non-existent levels of talent (hello Uma Thurman, Cameron Diaz, Lara Flynn Boyle, Calista Flockhart, et al). God forbid she do anything to break the suffocating mold that self-image has on our society. Instead – because she is a smart one – Paltrow claims, again in interviews, that she's had self-image problems too.

Aww, poor Gwyneth. Somebody ought to send her a card for being so empathetic. She who could have practically any man she desired, she who is hired precisely for how she looks and not how she acts, she who is herself waif thin because it is the only thing Hollywood will tolerate, has had problems with her self-image. Listen up fatties: Gwyneth is with you! She feels your pain.

Of course, she's never going to do anything about it. When she was asked what she thought about the media's presentation of beauty, which she herself has called ridiculous, she said this: "Unfortunately, that's a multibillion-dollar industry, and it's very tied to a certain image of women. Until that changes organically, there's nothing anybody can do about it. We can try to alter people's perceptions, but it does seem we're at the whim of editors and fashion directors. It's up to them, really."

Yep, there's no way society can change until those damned editors are fired! It has nothing to do with Paltrow, who owes her success to those same shallow editors. It's the fashionista's fault.

In summation, here is what Shallow Hal has actually accomplished:

– It has reinforced every stereotype America has about fat people by conceptually creating a movie where the joke is ultimately on Black's character for daring to find a fat chick attractive.

– It makes Paltrow, who was awarded an Oscar for her work in Shakespeare in Love, look about as shallow as the kiddie pool when she attempts to feel for the real heavyweights, while benefiting from her own waif-thin existence.

– It Continues Hollywood's grand tradition of taking a social problem and reversing it to the point where it makes no sense. Want evidence? Try Demi Moore's character in Disclosure. Some Hollywood executive somewhere said, "You know, sexual harassment has been a huge problem in America, so instead of addressing the inherent sexism in the American workplace in a film, why don't we reverse everything and have a woman sexually harass a man!"

If Hollywood is truly interested in assaulting the common sense of the American viewer, why not hire Black and Paltrow to go door-to-door, slapping whoever answers? It seems like it be much quicker, and ultimately, a cheaper way to do what Shallow Hal has ultimately done.

Meanwhile, the only other film debuting last weekend was David Mamet's Heist (see review on this page). A crime-caper starring Gene Hackman, Danny DeVito and Delroy Lindo, Heist took a soft fifth place with only $8 million.

Taking third place was Jet Li's The One, with $9.1 million. The film showed surprising staying power considering that it has already been made and released in theaters (as The Matrix). Domestic Disturbance came in fourth place with $8.5 million, but only after stoned fans turned out in droves for the John Travolta film after confusing it for Pulp Fiction.

Meanwhile, the bottom half of the top-ten was once again desolation row.

– K-Pax groveled for $6.2 million. Kevin Spacey had better hope that dame Judi Dench carries him in The Shipping News because if his latest work is any indication, the E. Annie Proulx written Newfoundland drama is going to totally suck.

– Thirteen Ghosts was still in the theaters, scaring up $4.1 million in total receipts. Like cancer, Matthew Lillard has a staying power than cannot be easily destroyed.

– Kevin Kline's Life as a House earned a whopping $3.6 million, the most ever for a movie entitled Life as a House. When titling the film, director Irwin Winkler tossed possible titles Life as a Boring Movie about a Dad and his Son and Life as Kevin Kline's Career Dives Further into the Depths of Mediocrity.

– Riding in Cars with Boys came in ninth with $2.1 million, proving the allegations were true. Everybody's grandparents were forced out of the nursing home and into the theater this weekend!

– Training Day made $1.9 million, like a beggar movie on a street corner, imploring people to ignore the stench (read: Ethan Hawke's involvement) and give a little.

Art house cinema? Amelie, Maze and Waking Life all did respectably.

Next week: Harry Potter, this year's Pokemon! See a little nerd fly on a broom! See him cast spells! Realize halfway through the movie that the money forked out for the ticket was a total waste!

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Staff Member.

COURTESY JAMES BRIDGES

Domestic Disturbance is still on the top ten list, thanks to another mediocre list of new movies.

Acting saves Life as a House

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

LIFE AS A HOUSE
Directed by Irwin Winkler
Starring Kevin Kline and Kristin Scott Thomas
Playing at Cinemark 12 in Hadley

If there ever was a movie that relied on good acting to obscure glaring flaws, it's Life as a House. A dubious attempt to cross American Beauty with a Hallmark card, the film features edgier moments that give way to easy sentimentality and sitcom-cute distractions. In an early scene, young actor Hayden Christensen (soon to be seen as Anakin Skywalker in Star Wars: Episode II) playing depressive teen Sam, is shown waking up, halfing gas, slipping a noose hanging in his closet around his neck, and then proceeding to masturbate. This may be a shocking scene (it must've shocked the mostly gray-haired audience I attended with), but it ends in a sitcom moment: the pole holding the noose snaps, dropping Sam to the ground.

Director Irwin Winkler (A First Night) and screenwriter Mark Andrus (As Good As It Gets) want to have it both ways – they want to shock us with sex, drugs and nudity while also reassuring us everything will be okay, there will be a smiley face and a cheap laugh at the end.

As flawed as it may be, Life as a House can be recommended due to the sheer force of its acting. Kevin Kline gives a career pinnacle performance (it deserves an Oscar nod) as George, a middle-aged man who discovers he's dying of cancer the same day he's fired from his job. With only months to live, George decides to spend the summer tearing down the rotting, cliff-side shack he lived his whole life in to build the dream house he always wanted. He also wants to repair relationships with his ex-wife Robin (Kristin Scott Thomas), remarried to an emotionally constipated workaholic (James Sheridan), and estranged son Sam.

George recruits Sam to spend the summer to help on the project. Sam is hostile and wants to leave, until he meets girl next door Alyssa (Jena Malone), whose divorced mother Colleen (Mary Steenburgen) once dated George. Meanwhile, Alyssa's boyfriend (Ian Somerhalder) is sleeping with Colleen while trying to recruit Sam as a male prostitute. George is keeping his cancer a secret and battling an uptight neighbor who wants to wreck George's dream.

The movie felt like a soap opera and there are times the Life comes perilously close to Lifetime movie territory. Will anyone be surprised that Sam takes the piercings out of his face and learns to love his parents? Or that Robin falls back in love with George?

The movie admirably veers into darker waters, especially when dealing with Sam, but it always plays it safe, preferring to tie things up with a tidy bow. There are a few one-liners and even some slapstick, and plenty of teary speeches and heartfelt confessions. Imagine an American Beauty where Kevin Spacey hugs his family rather than telling them off, and you get the picture.

By the end, I liked Life as a House. I even choked back a tear or two. It isn't a fantastic film – its ordinary cases it wouldn't even be a good one – but it is elevated by the acting. Kline, an Oscar winner for A Fish Called Wanda is a terrific actor who has a gift for bitter comedy and can deliver even the most groaning lines with aplomb. He's also a remarkably subtle dramatic actor, able to underplay even the most overwrought scenes. Scott Thomas, often cast as a cold bitch, gets to play a warm human being for once. Christensen, in his first real film role (previous credit: the short lived Fox Family series "Higher Ground") proves to be as good as Kline. For an actor destined to become the next big heartthrob, this role proves to be a brave choice and Christensen more than lives up to the promise. He alternates between anger and loneliness, despair and tentative happiness with a skill that sets him miles apart from the pretty boys that often capture the attention of young girls.

Winkler and Andrus do their hardest to turn Life as a House into a soggy melodrama. The cast does their best to raise it above the muck of a made-for TV drivel. In large part, the cast succeeds.

Kevin Kline stars in Life As A House - the story of what happens when you find out that your life is ending.

Tickling the ivories

Nadine Shank(above), pianist, will perform with Marjorie Me... soprano, and Christopher Krueger, floutist, in a faculty recital on M... Nov. 19 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.

■ Heist

continued from page 5

scheming throughout the movie is duplicitously brilliant. Rockwell is the constant victim of their schemes. However, the hustles they pull on others sets these characters apart from others Mamet has written. An investigative police officer is convinced that he has done something wrong by the two men; Hackman playing frustrated. Under sympathetic, Rockwell almost screws the lie up – he'd rather gun than run – but Jay keeps him relatively controlled.

Meanwhile Jay's character, like his portrayal of a businessman in Prisoner, is sublime. Mamet tailors his best lines for Jay, who delivers them with a polished cool of a man disinterested by all that occurs around him. Jay is a professional conman (he has been the technical advisor for numerous tricks, sleights-of-hand and illusions in Hollywood films) but he is most notorious for his tricks with playing cards – abilities he has put to use in an Off-Broadway show "Ricky Jay and His 52 Assistants."

Mamet's characters mesh on screen, hustling and scamming their way towards the gold. DeVito's character, his best role in at least five years, is paranoid, seeming to know full well what the audience is realizing, the guys that he's employing might be running circles around him. Twisting and turning as Hackman tries to manhandle DeVito, and as the diminutive actor comes right back at him, the film relies heavily on a continually redirected plot. But the characters' brilliance is hardly important in Heist's culmination: a botched shootout between DeVito and Hackman.

Like the end of Paul Newman's Twilight, old men engaged in gun battle must inevitably do it poorly. Critics have knocked the shootout's stylistics, but there could be nothing smooth about it. It had to be done in such a way as to make it believable not cool. A more appropriate critique of Heist would mention the plot's many sudden reversals. While it is a con film, and as such it must shift, having the characters double and triple back on each other seemed excessive at times. Mamet relied too heavily on his characters' ... continually fake it, rather than then ability ... enough the first time.

At a certain point in the film, Hackman ... Rockwell if he "ever came up with an excuse ... didn't have to use." Rockwell doesn't understand ... query, so Hackman then asks if he'd wasted ... creating the excuse.

Mamet might ask himself the same thing.

With brilliant characters and standout ... Mamet wastes time proving he's done both. ... certainly doesn't deepen Heist. Mamet's capable ... much better.

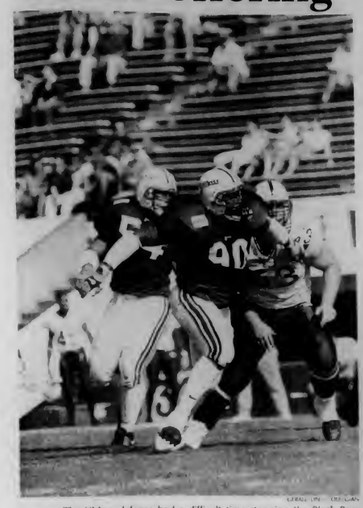
DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and



- ❒ A. Contracting an STI.
- ❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
- ❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

Orono offering

The UMass defense had a difficult time stopping the Black Bear attack Saturday

UMass falts exposed again

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

One of the most inconsistent teams in recent history threw another wrench into conventional wisdom on Saturday. The 2-7 Massachusetts football team took the lessons of six previous losses and erased them from memory in a 37-7 loss to Maine in Orono.

Mati Guice reverted back to his early season form, throwing four interceptions against zero touchdowns. The redshirt freshman did manage to be accurate when he was throwing to his team, however, as he completed 24 of 32 passes for a fairly impressive 242 yards.

Maine	37
UMass	7

Again the problem was ill-timed turnovers and breakdowns. The offensive line was porous once again allowing four sacks on the young quarterback. All in all, the Minutemen totaled five turnovers on the afternoon tone fumble that turned a three point second quarter deficit into a halftime blowout at 20-7.

The running game was again anemic. The combined rushing attack of Kevin Quinlan and Omari Howard garnered only 57 yards while Guice's scrambling went for a gain of only 16.

The Minutemen couldn't even move the ball in crunch time, as only a trio of UMass' first downs came compliments of the ground game.

While the Maroon and White offense came to a screeching halt after Quinlan's paydirt scamper in the first, the UMass defense decided to enlarge its already gaping holes.

Maine running back Rosston English had a day against the Minutemen, piling up 171 yards on 34 carries. English was barely visible in the final 30 minutes, as the Bears had the contest well in hand, but who knows what he could have done with a whole game to work with.

Jake Faton also enjoyed the splendors of the UMass defense, as he threw the ball only 22 times. He ended up completing ten passes to five different receivers for 165 yards and two touchdowns.

Stefan Gomes was the main threat, as he caught six balls for over 100 yards and a TD.

How bad did things go for the Minutemen? Even David Sunger, the All-America candidate at punter had an off day, averaging less than 38 yards a punt.

For a team in desperate need of progress, it seems the only steps the Minutemen are taking are headed back toward sloppy football.

■ hoop

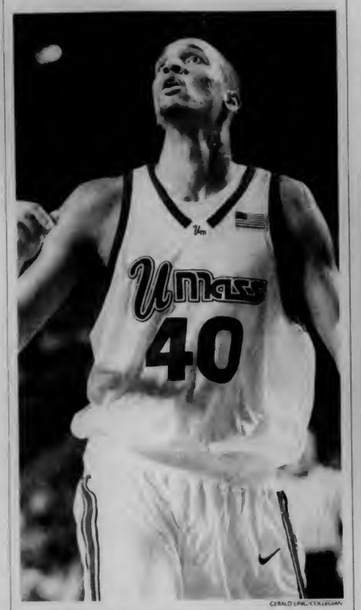
continued from page 10

away at the once mighty UMass lead, getting it down to as little as one at 58-57 midway through the second half. However, that would be as close as EA Sports would get as the Maroon and White went on a crucial 10-0 run in the next three minutes to go ahead 68-57 and regain control of the contest.

For the games final seven minutes Lappas played Crooks alongside newcomers Anthony Anderson and Kyle Wilson in a three guard set for the first time. Playing with two true point guards helped open up the Minuteman attack, creating a number of easy buckets on the inside for Rhymer.



"I was real comfortable playing the off guard, we did it a lot in practice," Anderson said of his role in the three guard set. "The only thing is I'm looking more to pass instead of shoot, but I'll get used to it."

While Anderson and Wilson were impressive in running the offense and distributing the ball, the pair struggled to find their shot and combined for just five points on 2-11 shooting.

"I was very pleased, they didn't shoot well but they had seven assists and no turnovers," Lappas said. "They made some great passes inside, they can both shoot and they can play together, there's no doubt."

With UMass' regular season home opener just three days away Lappas and his coaching staff will be forced to quickly analyze what it is that they did right and what they need to do better in order to beat the University of Arkansas-Little Rock on Friday night and get the 2001-02 campaign off on the right foot.

"I feel like we're where I hoped and thought we'd be," Lappas said. "I think we have a chance to be a good team, we are going to have to do some things but I think there is some potential."

Micah Brand and the UMass men's hoop team begin the regular season Friday versus Arkansas-Little Rock at home.

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

first frame, neither team was able to tickle the back of the cage, and the two squads went into the half with the score 2-1, ODU.

However, the momentum once again switched sides early in the second frame when Tiffany Snow tallied off a penalty corner with assists from teammates Adrienne Yoder and Melissa Leonetti. That play proved to be the turning point, as the Minutewomen were never able to mount another serious threat to the nation's No. 1 seed.

"At halftime we felt we could win the game," Fantasia said. "But when they scored early in the second half, it kind of sucked the life out of our team because it was so quick. After that, we could never generate much of an attack."

At the 23:49 mark, Snow decided to do it with the pass, assisting Angie Joy to put the game safely out of reach. Snow was able to tally her second score of the contest at the 19:01 mark, while Hermann closed out the scoring by netting her second goal with only three minutes remaining.

"We were very positive and we had a lot of fun the entire weekend," Fantasia said. "ODU had everything to lose and we had nothing to lose, so it was different than the A-10s when all of the pressure was on us. In the first half, we proved that we could hold our own with them.

"We were happy to be in the tournament," the senior added. "Only 16 teams make it and we accomplished all of these other goals throughout the season (A-10 regular season and tournament champions as well as going undefeated in conference). And we were convinced that we could beat them."

As the final second ticked off the clock, it marked the last time that seniors Anke Bruemmer, Lindsay Abbott, Kerry Ann Jaggassar, Kaitlyn Byron and Fantasia would be on the field for the Minutewomen. However, even after UMass was already back in Amherst, the awards continued to come in.

Soon after the first round of the NCAA tournament had been completed, both Bruemmer and freshman sensation Heather Kenney were named to the Northeast Region All-American team, with Bruemmer garnering first team honors and Kenney picking up the second team award. Bruemmer especially shined throughout her illustrious four-year career in Amherst, becoming only the second UMass player to tally 50 career goals.

Kenney, on the other hand, will lead the Maroon and White back into battle next season, when it looks to advance to its first final four since 1992.

Collegian Sports is like your Aunt Emma's fruit cake, it makes a good doorstop.

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES FUTONS BEDS ETC
"BYOB"
THE AREA'S BEST SLEEP SHOP FOR COLLEGE LIVING

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

UMass Student Legal Services Office
Free confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

McMurphy's
positive id
no cover
Best ol' sk... hip-hop & 8... inc.
tuesday's: 10-1

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413) 545-3500 Fax: (413) 545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

86 Oldsmobile runs, heat and radio work, engine and brakes recently replaced. NO OFFER TO LOW! 256-6267

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995. 922 Campus Center

EMPLOYMENT

ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT? TEAM PLAYER/LEADER? Consumer Power in virtual marketplace leave message for overview team_works@hotmail.com 1-866-800-3985

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

www.Fluid Visions.com

FOR SALE

1994 Plymouth Laser 90,000 miles regular maintenance done recently asking $2600, negotiable. 549-5422

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

HOUSE FOR RENT

Attention Students: Sunderland 3 bedroom 1 1/2 bath steps to P.V.T.A. stop. $1100.00 + utilities 665-2311

INSTRUCTION

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 2 females to share one large bedroom in Hobart Lane. 549-9192 Start January 1

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.spring-breakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/online-mall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

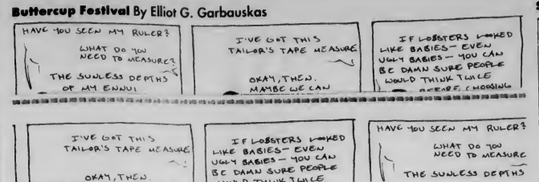
Need to buy a car?

Need a job?

Want to go away on Spring Break?

Check out the Collegian Classifieds and find what you need!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSN Bulletin Board
3 - CSPAN Hartford
4 - CBS, Boston
5 - ABC, 40 Springfield
6 - FBN, 22 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - CBS, 30 Hartford
9 - HSCN Pay Movie Channel
10 - NBC, 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS, 24 Hartford
13 - PBS/WB Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS (Academic Channel)
16 - WB, 59 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel & Living
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - Ylife
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nesn
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Shopping Channel Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 13, 2001

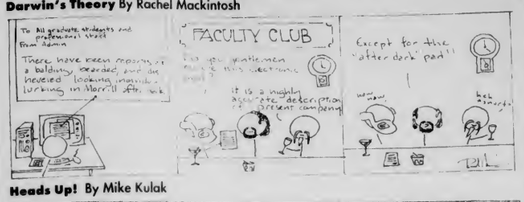
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Nova "Bioterror" (N) (In Stereo)			Coping/Reality	Scientific American Frontiers		Positivity Cond.	Bargain Hunt
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "JAG-a-Thon" (In Stereo)		Michael Jackson: 30th Anniversary (N) (In Stereo)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "JAG-a-Thon" (In Stereo)		Michael Jackson: 30th Anniversary (N) (In Stereo)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Philly "Brown Away" (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Cool" (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Frasier	Frasier	Frasier (N)	Frasier Clip	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Cool" (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Just Shoot Me	Med Abt. You
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Frasier	Frasier	Frasier (N)	Frasier Clip	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	15 Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Undeclared	24 1:00 AM-2:00 AM (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Raymond
WWLP	61	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Frasier	Frasier	Frasier (N)	Frasier Clip	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Bioterror" (N) (In Stereo)			Coping/Reality	2.0 V: "High School" (In Stereo)			Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	28 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Philly "Brown Away" (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Softly the Yankees Slaynor		Roswell "To Have and to Hold"		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	8th Wheel	Unsolved Mysteries
WTBS	46		Roseanne	Friends	Fresh Prince	Friends		NBA Basketball: Toronto Raptors at Sacramento Kings. (Live)			Inside NBA
A&E	45		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order			Biography: Saddam Hussein		Law & Order		100 Centre Street "Daughters"
CNN	49	23	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire		The Point (N)		Larry King Live		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	53	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stern's Money		ss's "Up in Smoke" (1978, Comedy)		Thomas Chong		Battlebots	Battlebots
DISC	48		Wild Discovery "Giraffes"		Wild Discovery: Lost Jungle			New Detectives "Cold Cases"		New Detectives		FBI Files "Deadly Trio"
ESPN	51		Sportscenter		NFL's Greatest NFL Films			NFL Films (N)		College Basketball: Preseason NIT		Sportscenter
LIFE	50		Golden Girls	Golden Girls		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)				Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	52		Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Making-Video	Music Videos		Artist Collection "Green Day"		Making-Video	Real World	Real World	Becoming
NICK	47		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Rugrats		Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers
SCIFI	55		Star Trek "Balance of Terror"		Babylon 5 "Convictions"			Farscape "Die Me Dichotomy"		Outer Limits "The Donor"		Star Trek (In Stereo)
TLC	54	28	WWF: True Colors		Secrets of Forensic Science			World's Worst Drivers		Ultimate Ten Unexplained		Mysteries at Museum Asia
TNT	44		NYPD Blue "Writing Wrongs"		Pretender "Collateral Damage"			Law & Order "Sniff" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Narcosis"		Charmed "Brain Drain"
USA	42		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Pledge vs. Rank"			Nash Bridges "Blow Out"
HBO	59		ss's "Chamber Girl" (1996, Comedy)		Smart "POI-T"			ss's "Men of Honor" (2000, Drama)				Real Sports	"Big Stand Alone Together: The Men of Easy
MAX	60		ss's "What Planet Are You From?" (2000)					ss's "The Perfect Storm" (2000, Drama)				Resurrection Blvd.
SHOW	61		ss's "Cherry 2000" (1988)		Melanie Griffith, "PCI-17"			ss's "The Virgin Suicides" (1999)					Queer as Folk (N) (In Stereo)



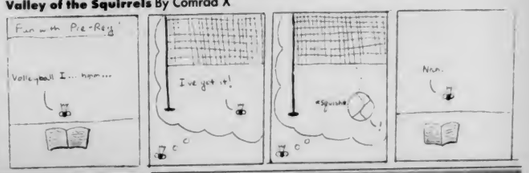
Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Skybox By Blake

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I have people everywhere that I stalk."

–Erin Renner

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 33	HIGH: 50 LOW: 36	HIGH: 61 LOW: 41

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A clash of wills may actually turn out in your favor today. Make sure not to give everything away too soon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You will have to take care of some personal business early in the day to clear your schedule for some unexpected developments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19) – Even if you only know a little bit about one topic, you should find another that allows you to show off your natural expertise.

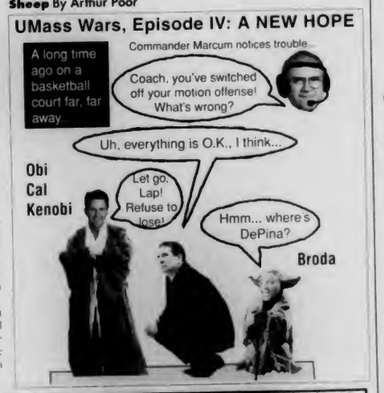
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take a break, and don't demand so much from your self at this time that you are unable to meet your expectations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may find yourself agreeing with people who may have disagreed with you tremendously in the past. Your life will change for the better.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care not to let your frustrations control you. You may have to readjust your thinking in several ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – If you look at what others around you do today you'll realize that you may still have to get with the program.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Someone may be after you today, but not for the reasons you think. Try not to be too quick to view this situation in a negative way.



CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Some excitement will come your way, and you won't want to miss out. Make sure to tend to routine duties as quickly as possible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your concentration and focus must be invulnerable today if you expect to achieve a temporary but highly complex goal.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Simplicity will prove essential today. Sometimes the answer is so simple that others mistake it for something complicated and out of reach. You will be on top.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It will be up to you to control all the influences that revolve around you at this time. Take care not to lose touch with a friend.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Night Graphics... We are the chia on your pet.

ACROSS
1 Misbehave
6 Exceeded the limit
10 Brew, as coffee
14 Gladiator's venue
15 Actress Garr
16 Home appliance
17 Smooth fabric
18 Bunny features
19 Berlin single
20 Hoists
22 Couch
24 Scoundrel
25 Young pigtyty
26 Leather punch
27 Gloomy
31 Blurts out
33 Dem. of films
34 Rock festival site
38 John Glenn's state
39 Bicker
40 Riding the waves
41 Exhausted by overwork
43 Composer — Joel
44 Foot problems
45 Channing and Kane
46 Feather wrap
49 Seasonal beverage
50 Six-shooter
51 St. Francis' town
53 Reject
56 Waiter's rewards
59 Ripped
61 Jazzman Blake
62 Fool part
63 Film director Bunuel
64 Plunders
65 Coastal flyer
66 Puppy noises
67 Driving hazard

DOWN
1 Plight
2 Europe-Asia border range
3 Monsieur's pate
4 Where to earn a BA
5 Cure-all
6 Charger
7 Green veggies
8 Mess up
9 Advise against
10 Writer of verse
11 A Peron
12 Keep subscribing
13 Prepare to propose
21 Road coating
23 Wanes
25 "Pull"
27 Untidy person
28 Molokai neighbor
29 California's — Woods
30 Wild horse
31 Fake
32 Flight of steps
34 Mistaken
35 Norway's capital
36 Mom's quarters
37 Boyle and Kyser
39 Skillfully
42 Long periods
43 Flags
45 Stray dog
46 Wash
47 Willow shoot
48 Rocky Mountain sight
50 Speculate
52 Dot on the map
53 Voyage
54 Twofold
55 Tony's cousin
56 Roomy
57 Cozy dwelling
60 Yes, to Yvette

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	M	P		P	O	L	A	R		C	R	I	B
P	O	E		I	R	E	N	E		T	H	O	S	E
H	O	T	S	P	R	I	N	G		I	O	T	A	S
I	R	A	T	E		O	A	R	L	O	C	K	S
D	E	L	U	D	E	S		L	A	T	S
		B	U	L	L	S		G	E	I	S	H	A
H	A	T		P	L	A	I	T		D	E	T	E	R
O	N	U	S		A	S	T	R	O		R	A	R	A
G	E	N	E	S		H	E	A	D	S		B	B	B
S	W	E	A	T	Y		S	M	O	K	E
		W	O	R	M		P	R	I	V	A	C	Y
R	E	V	E	R	S	A	L		P	E	D	R	O
A	K	E	E	M		P	O	I	S	O	N	O	A	K
N	E	E	D	Y		L	O	C	A	L		R	T	E
T	S	P	S		E	M	I	L	E		N	E	D

11/13/01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

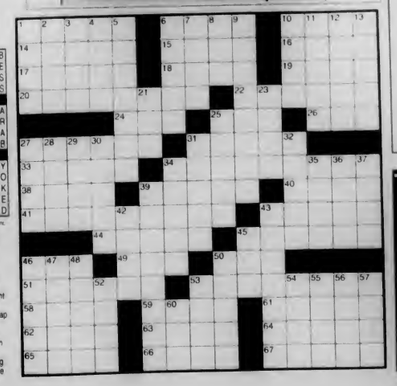
Grecian Pocket Sandwich

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Vegetable Egg Rolls (vegetarian)

Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER



Honey Garlic Roast Pork

Tomato Basil Cod

General Tso Chicken

Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan) (W Basics)

Jamacian 3-Beans (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician — Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor — Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak
Production Staff — Jess May, Cara Horowitz

INSIDE: Football downed by Maine, 37-7.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, November 13, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen clinch NCAA berth

Jeff Deren, the Atlantic 10's Offensive Player of the Year, attempts a bicycle kick

Men's soccer stuns Atlantic 10 foes

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

It is really too bad that the championship game of this year's Atlantic 10 men's soccer tournament was not televised because if it was, it would definitely be appearing on the ESPN-Classic network for years to come.

In one of the most intense games played in A-10 soccer history, Massachusetts (14-5-1) defeated the Richmond Spiders (12-6-2) in a thrilling shootout on Sunday. The 4-3 penalty kick victory on the campus of Dayton University in Ohio gave UMass its first-ever A-10 championship.

The Maroon and White advanced to the title game by beating the Flyers 4-2 in the first round on Friday.

One hundred and fifty minutes of scoreless play consisted of 90 minutes of regulation and four sudden death overtime periods led to the Minutemen's first title-game shootout since West Virginia downed UMass in 1992.

Junior defender John Lytton ended the heart-stopping match as he netted the championship-winning goal in the fifth and final round of the shootout, clinching the victory. The game goes in the record books as a 0-0 4OT match.

The heroic goal gave the Minutemen their first-ever automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

The Spiders got on the board first in the shootout as senior Cam Letke fired a shot to the upper right corner of the goal.

UMass quickly answered back as A-10 Player of the Year and leading goal scorer Jeff Deren placed a shot past UR keeper Shawn Alexander.

UMass	0 (4)
Richmond	0 (3)
UMass	4
Dayton	2

In the next round, senior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn came up huge when he stopped a shot attempt from UR sophomore midfielder Eric Dutt to give UMass the advantage.

The co-captain played like it was his last game and it possibly could have been. O'Quinn posted a career-high 10 saves en route to his 15th career shutout. The blanking tied the school record set by Sam Ginzburg (1985-88) for shutouts.

The Spiders evened the advantage when, with the score 2-2 in the third, Alexander made a diving stop on sophomore forward Derek Rhodes' shot.

In the fourth round, UMass watched UR freshman back Grant Dickens give UR a 3-2 lead. Minuteman junior forward Yuri Morales was not shaken by the goal as he immediately countered – knotting the score at three after four rounds.

In the fifth and final round, Richmond had a chance to take a 4-3 lead but came up short when senior midfielder Bryon Waggoner misfired – hitting the bottom of the crossbar.

Waggoner's blunder set up a chance for the recently injured Lytton to be heroic. He took advantage of the rare chance and rocketed a shot past Alexander.

"I've taken home that second-place trophy three times and I didn't want to do it again," head coach Sam Koch said. "I'm just extremely proud of all these guys and the way they have played all season. This game was an example of how hard they fought all year long."

After the match O'Quinn, Deren and senior defender J.R. Pounces were named to the all-tournament team. Co-captain Pounces was also named the 2001 Atlantic 10 Tournament Most Outstanding Player thanks to his unbelievable defensive work in the 150 minutes of shutout play.

Next up for the Minutemen is the pinnacle – the NCAA tournament. They will have the opportunity to face up with national powerhouses such as North Carolina and St. John's.

The 2001 NCAA Division I Men's Soccer Championship bracket will be announced on Monday, Nov. 19 at 5 p.m.

UMass is 'in the game'

Early, late runs spur Minutemen past EA Sports

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

It easily could have been third time's the charm for Massachusetts' basketball team as it raced to a 76-67 victory over the UMass All-Stars last night at the Mullins Center. Sophomore forwards Lonnie Kinnear III and Ryan Schwandt-O'Mara led the Minutemen with 17 points apiece while adding nine rebounds each. O'Mara's contribution from the net was scoring the game's first 14 points and leading by as many as 21 points with 3:16 remaining in the first half.

However, from that point on, EA Sports stepped up its defensive intensity and began to find its shooting touch. Shawn Bankhead, a graduate of Iona State, scored seven of his game-high 18 points in the final two minutes of the first half to help his team get into the locker room trailing by just 37-34 at 40-33.

"I don't really like doing that at home," UMass head coach Steve Lappas said of his team's quick start. "You know at some point the score is going to be 16-10 or 18-12 and the other team starts to feel they're really doing something because they had nothing. I think it's really not a good way to start a game, not that I'll stop it from happening. But I'd rather be down like 10-8 and have us go on a good spurt at that point."

As the second half got underway, EA Sports was able to keep pecking away at the Minutemen's lead, but it would never get closer than three points.

UMass	76
EA Sports	67

Turn to HOOP page 2

UMass falls hard in tourney

No. 1 ODU guns are overpowering

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Old Dominion was not who the University of Massachusetts field hockey team would have chosen to play in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

The Lady Monarchs came into last Saturday's contest with the No. 1 seed, a 17-4 record and a history that included nine collegiate championships in only 20 years of competition.

With all of those factors against them, the Minutewomen were unable to advance to the second round, instead falling to ODU by a 6-1 score on the University of Princeton campus.

The loss finished UMass' season with an 11-10-1 Atlantic 10 record, but did mark the sixth consecutive year that it was able to qualify for the NCAA tournies.

Although the game ended with a fairly lopsided score, it was not quite indicative of how the contest actually went. The Maroon and White were able to remain close to the opposition until the middle of the second half, when Old Dominion netted three scores in the span of 14 minutes to put the game away.

"The score didn't reflect the game at all," senior back Jill Fantasia said, who was able to tally her team's lone goal in her final collegiate contest. "We scared ODU for awhile and we were able to compete. We had them out of their game."

Just over three minutes into the contest, the Lady Monarchs struck first when Lotte Bant took a pass from teammate Crystal Carper and knocked it into the back of the Maroon and White cage.

At the 27:31 mark of the first half, Tata Hermann extended her team's lead on a pass from Julie Miracle, and at this point, ODU was absolutely crushing the Minutewomen.

UMass fought back, however, as Fantasia answered Hermann's tally with a score of her own with 19:05 remaining to get her squad back in the game. The goal was assisted by Stacey Blue, and turned the momentum in the Maroon and White's favor.

"We were right back in it [after that score]," Fantasia said. "We picked it up and all of a sudden it was a completely different game out there. I wish we could have played like that in the second half."

Over the final 19 minutes of the

ODU	6
UMass	1

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY page 7

Weekend split does not impress

Minutemen fall to MSU; take vengeance on Conn.

By Matthew F. Socco
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. – If an upset victory is cause for a letdown, than a pasting at the hands of that same ranked opponent enters into the formula for vengeance.

Visiting Massachusetts took a 6-1 loss against No. 4 Michigan State before turning its frustrations loose on under-talented Connecticut.

Despite the split weekend, the Minutemen failed to meet the emotional watermark set by coach Don "Toot" Cahoon for both contests.

"The first three shifts we had were excellent shifts [at Michigan State]," Cahoon said. "I said 'geez, we're going to compete tonight.'"

But instead of carrying that momentum through the rest of the period, UMass watched Adam Hall celebrate two power play goals.

"We gave up a soft man down goal and we gave up a second one," Cahoon said. "You could just feel the emotion leave the bench."

The Minutemen managed to regain some of their passion in the second frame but by then it was too late, as a lone Thomas Peck tally was all the offense the visitors could muster on the evening.

"We started thinking that you've got a Hobey Baker winning goaltender and a terrific team you're playing against. It was just a waste of thought process," Cahoon said. "So we never got to playing hockey until the second period and the lights were already out."

The middle twenty minutes gave the Minutemen an opening to show that they could compete with possibly the best team in the nation. At first it looked like they had taken full advantage of that opportunity, as they outhustled and outplayed the Spartans for the first 14 minutes of the second.

That is until MSU tallied a pair of goals from Hall and Brock Radunske 14 seconds apart to suck the wind out of the visitors for a second time.

Peck managed to slip one past All-American Ryan Miller early in the third but it was too little, too late in a sub-standard effort.

Sunday night's matchup with rival UConn at the Springfield Civic Center proved to be just as disappointing, though the Minutemen did hold on for the win.

"It wasn't a confidence builder," Cahoon said. "The first two periods I thought we played O.K. But what is most disturbing was the last twenty minutes was a breakdown of discipline and being on the right side of the puck."

Goals by Peck, Greg Mauldin (2 goals, 1 assist) and a pair from Martin Miljko (2 goals, 2 assists) staked UMass out to a 4-0 lead with the second period nearing its conclusion. But a Mike Boylan conversion with under two minutes remaining gave the Huskies renewed life.

Boylan was untouched as he pinched into the slot and fired a pass from Trent Landrs into the back of the net.

The mood of both coaches was different as their respective squads skated onto the ice for the final stanza. With a three-goal lead coach Cahoon felt his team was in control enough to pull senior Mike Johnson (11 saves, 1 GA) in favor of rookie net minder Tim Warner.

On the other hand, UConn coach Bruce Marshall saw another chance for a comeback.

"I last year we were down two goals and we came back and tied them," Marshall said. "We felt like three goals was a steeper hill to climb but we were optimistic."

Warner's presence coupled with a lackluster third period effort and a suddenly emotional Husky squad led to a six-goal frame.

Instead of cruising to an easy victory, the Minutemen ended up holding on for a 6-5 win.

"It's like a bus rolling down a hill," said Cahoon of his squad's subpar finishing effort. "You've got to stop and start pushing it back up. We never quite did that."

Defenseman Samuli Jalkanen's first goal of the year gave UMass a 6-5 lead, and ended up being the game winner. His top-circle slap shot found the twine for a power play goal at 13:09 of the third.

Anders Johnson and Matt Herhal scored to cut the deficit to one with as little as 42 seconds left on the clock, but the Minutemen sat on the puck for the rest of the period to secure the win.

Michigan State	6
UMass	1
UMass	6
UConn	5

Sean Regan assisted on UMass' first goal in its 6-5 win over UConn Sunday.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 48 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 14, 2001

Whoo-Haa! Arts got you all in check!

Bust on into Arts to read all about it.

ARTS p. 5

Check out the UMass Women's Volleyball team, it's all set up in Sports.

SPORTS p. 8

Déjà vu for SGA judiciary committee

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

"Hey John, I'll buy the first round of beers if you fold," former Senator Zack Spilman said to Student Government Association President John Sheehan last night.

Jokes surrounding grabbing beers were only some of the topics discussed at the first Judiciary Hearing of the semester.

Members of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and members of the SGA convened last night to debate and pinpoint exactly what illegalities occurred during Senate elections this fall.

Steve Castillo and Steve Morin filed the case against Sheehan, Speaker Aaron Saunders, Secretary of Finance Gabriel Tavares and Chancellor of Elections Sam Blaslak on Oct. 11 under the grounds of illegal elections activity, which in turn resulted in an unconstitutional Senate.

The case submitted was a direct photocopy of a case presented last year charging former Speaker Jim Eltringham with similar charges. The charges claim that due to a lack of the required one elections commissioner per polling station, the elections were unconstitutional. As a result, last year's Senate was dismissed on the grounds of illegal and unconstitutional acts.

Under the petitioner's council were former Senate members Spilman, Jeff Bazydlo, and Pat DeCourcy. The petitioners brought forth many complaints to the judiciary; however the lack of official elections commissioners and wording of referendum question three were their main cause for complaint.

The case began with questions, but resulted in much confusion as the petitioners and defendants both tried to make sense of one another. The meeting began with positive as well as negative remarks on both sides. As the trial pressed on, the call for factual information became a reoccurring question and debate between members of the judiciary and the petitioners.

The petitioners stressed the fact that the elections were systematically unjust for blatantly violating the Constitution and its By-Laws.

"We don't want the Senate thrown out; what we want is a functionally stable SGA," Spilman said. "But right now the SGA is completely disenfranchised."

The defendants disagreed, claiming that the SGA had done the best that they could under the circumstances. Sheehan further explained that under the SGA By-Laws, because the Senate was under the Coordinating Council, it was not allowed to appoint elections commissioners prior to Elections Day.

"If the goal before us is not to toss the Senate elections, then my question for you is 'why are we here?'" Sheehan asked. "Why is this something that had to be taken to the judiciary, rather than been taken care of the legislature?"

Turn to SGA page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Student Judiciary of the Student Government Association met last night to hear cases presented to the SGA.

UMass violates Clean Air Act

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Environmental Protection Agency found violations of the Clean Air Act in and around the filling stations near the PVTA bus garage.

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Environmental Protection Agency announced last month that the University of Massachusetts-Amherst had been found to be in violation of the Clean Air Act.

As of Oct. 16, the EPA had proposed fines against UMass for four violations totaling $272,600.

The fines are negotiable, and the University is currently involved with the EPA to determine whether it should ultimately be paid, according to both the UMass News Office and EPA sources.

According to a press release put out by the EPA, the University "did not have a properly operating vapor recovery and control system at its gas station, thus allowing smog-causing chemicals into the air; did not keep records of gasoline storage tank maintenance, malfunctions and repairs; did not keep adequate records of its degreasing operations; and used automobile paints with excess levels of smog-forming solvents."

"These violations resulted in an excess of volatile organic compounds, the main component of smog, being released into the air," the release stated.

The EPA first introduced newer, tougher environmental codes for colleges and universities in March 1999, the release explained. Since then the "EPA has made an all out effort to help UMass meet its environmental responsibility," according to a statement included in the press release by Robert W. Varney, Regional Administrator of the EPA's New England Office.

Since the violations were found, the EPA has stepped up these efforts, according to EPA official Tom Olivier, who has worked closely with the University during the inspection process. Olivier said that the proposed fines are a last resort in this situation. He also said he sympathized with the problems that the UMass administration encounters as it manages a large facility.

"[The violations] are all easy to correct," he said. "However, it's a challenge for an institution like UMass, which essentially runs a medium-size town. It's a challenge for any big organization."

Location may also play a part in the violations on campus. Olivier said that to the best of his knowledge, no other University of Massachusetts campus was found to be in violation of air codes, but explained that this may be because the other campuses in the UMass system are located in the eastern part of the state.

"Western Massachusetts as a region is regularly at non-attaining levels of air quality," he said.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University had also been cited for EPA violations, he said, but their violations concerned the storage of hazardous materials in labs. No other col-

Turn to EPA page 3

HASA CASA

a huge success

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Correspondent

The eighth annual HASA CASA cultural celebration was held on Nov. 10 at the Student Union Ballroom. This yearly semiformal event was a joint effort by the Haitian American Student Association and the CASA Dominicana. This year's theme was entitled "Embracing Our Future" and aimed at celebrating the two cultures.

The event was held from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. with an extended after party at the Malcolm X Cultural Center until 4 a.m. Entrance to the main event was $8 with Five College ID and $10 without. Catered by volunteers, the event featured traditional Haitian and Dominican food served in a buffet setting at a first-come, first-serve basis.

The master of ceremonies was Abraham Anderson, who started up the night by introducing dancers from the Lawrence Ballet Academy. Next on the program was the guest speaker for the night, artist and author Dio-Genes Abreu. The president of HASA, Erline Achille, describes him as a multi-talented individual who has been around the world.

"He came to share his personal experiences with the issues of Haitian and Dominican relations," Achille said. After a short speech, he went on to display a short film involving this subject.

A skit also addressing Haitian-Dominican relations followed the film. The skit was based on the true story about the efforts presently

Turn to HASA page 3

Islam Awareness includes women

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The third event in Islam Awareness Week entitled "Women in Islam: Oppressed or Empowered?" brought speaker Da'Iyyan Abdul-Rahim to Campus Center 168 last night. Abdul-Rahim proclaimed, "[Men and women] are equal in faith but in our roles we will never be equal."

Abdul-Rahim, a member of the Islamic Society of Western Massachusetts, a home-school teacher and a natural health consultant bused out of Springfield, focused her lecture on the topic of women's roles in Islam, specifically in childhood, marriage, motherhood and believer.

Abdul-Rahim began with the assertion, "Muslim women oppressed? No. Empowered? Yes." Muslim women empowerment, she said, stems from the willful submission of both men and women to Allah. She believes that when people understand their roles, the community as a whole benefits, and added that in American society, people don't understand their roles, which leads to chaos.

"That's the beauty of [Islam] – there's no guesswork. I know my role; these things are defined for me," Abdul-Rahim exerted.

As a mother of 11 children and wife of 21 years, Abdul-Rahim spoke largely of marriage and motherhood. According to her, Islam regards man and woman as complementary parts and that marriage in Islam "is not a form of oppression but empowerment for both parties."

One member of the audience of approximately 80 attendees, asked if marriage was required by Islam. Abdul-Rahim said no, but added, "Marriage in Islam is a completion of your faith. [Also,] we have been created for procreation and we cannot do that alone."

Women, she said, may not become an Imam (a prayer leader) but may lead other women in prayer, as their roles dictate. Abdul-Rahim listed the accomplishments of Muslim women throughout history, noting that the first Muslim martyr was a woman, and that women have served as teachers and soldiers of Islam.

Abdul-Rahim also asserted that "there's no Islamic country that exists in the world." She, as well as audience members, explained that each culture defines what is allowed in that society and is not to be mistaken for Islam as dictated by the Koran.

"This is empowerment when you know the history of Islam, but you have to know it; you have to understand it and accept it," Abdul-Rahim said.

Islam Awareness Week, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Muslim Students Association, brings its biggest event to date to the Campus Center Auditorium tonight at 6:30 p.m., featuring world-renowned speaker, Imam Siraj Wahaj, speaking on the topic, "The Solution."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

"Women in Islam" was presented in the Campus Center as a continuation of Islam Awareness Week.

Advertising comes out of the closet

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

From the overly affectionate male models of the Abercrombie and Fitch catalogue to the two men searching for used furniture in a Volkswagen Golf commercial, the advertising industry is increasingly promoting gay-themed images. Yet despite the many positive portrayals of happy gay couples in advertisements, there remain many instances in which homosexuality is used as the butt of a joke.

Michael Wilke, the director of The Commercial Closet, the world's largest database of "gay" commercials, delivered a lecture about images of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered (GLBT) people in advertising last night in the Campus Center Auditorium. Wilke displayed numerous commercials from the database in his presentation, including some ads that have never been aired.

"Not long ago, it was possible to read every book, see every movie and watch every television show that dealt with homosexuality," Wilke said, opening his lecture. "But it's not possible anymore. We've gone from being invisible to inescapable." One aspect of this inescapability, he said, is the increasing presence of GLBT images in television advertisements.

"You might ask, how many advertisements actually make some reference to being gay?" Wilke said. "The answer is, 'More than it seems.' Unfortunately, these ads tend to run only in places like New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, and they usually run for a short time."

The first commercials presented by Wilke were those that he found to perpetuate negative images of gays. He opened this segment of the presentation, titled "Hustlers, Queens, Pornographers, and Pedophiles," with a public service announcement from the Partnership For a Drug Free America, which showed a drug addict disgustedly recounting his days as a gay prostitute. Also included was a commercial for Calvin Klein jeans, in which a youthful male model wearing only a pair of cutoff jean shorts is asked intrusive questions by an older, presumably gay, photographer.

Wilke also showed a segment on depictions of the transgendered. Many of the ads displayed men's disgust after discovering that an attractive woman is actually a male. Other ads, such as a pantyhose commercial from 1974 featuring Joe Namath, go out of their way to demonstrate the cross-dresser's heterosexuality. In the Namath commercial, the football star is shown wearing the pantyhose, and seconds later is seen kissing an attractive woman.

As Wilke's presentation continued, he showed ads that portrayed gays in a neutral or positive light. One segment, titled, "Gay Vague," featured commercials in which homosexuality is never referenced, but discretely alluded to. This segment included the famous "Da da da" Volkswagen commercial.

Wilke concluded his lecture by showing distinctly gay-friendly ads, such as a Miller commercial in which two women order a beer for a man in a bar, only to see him greeted by his male lover. Another ad, for John Hancock insurance, depicted a lesbian couple waiting at an airport for the arrival of their adopted child.

"Ikea opened the door for these commercials in 1994," Wilke said, referencing a commercial narrated by a gay couple buying furniture. The ad is generally perceived as the first mainstream "gay" commercial. However, it was pulled from the air after Ikea stores received bomb threats.

"It took a while for everyone else to catch up," Wilke continued. "But it's happening."

After Wilke's talk, the audience was permitted to ask questions and make comments. One attendee asked about the lack of gay people of color in the ads.

"I would say that it's reflective of a larger problem," Wilke responded. "Society is not doing a good enough job representing people of color." He added that images of bi-racial gay couples are especially rare in advertising.

Another question dealt with the prevalence of GLBT images in print

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Michael Wilke presented a lecture spotlighting commercials and homosexuality.

Turn to CLOSET page 3

Cultural Events Calendar

PERFORMANCES

UMASS – Adrienne Kennedy's play "Ohio State Murders" will be performed in the Fine Arts Center's Curtain Theater on Nov. 14, 15, 16 and 17, at 8:00 p.m. There will also be a matinee on Saturday, Nov. 17, at 2:00 p.m. Tickets are $7. $5 for Five College Students. Call 545-2511 for tickets. The play tells the story of a black author who returns to her college campus, and recounts her struggles there.

UMASS – Ballet Hispanico featuring dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz, and ethnic styles will be performed on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Tiny Arts Center Concert Hall. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

UMASS – The Hillel House Drama Group and the Gay/Straight Alliance Group will be sponsoring a RENT Extravaganza, to be held at Hillel House at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 15. Perform and sing to your heart's content, with the award winning Broadway soundtrack. Costumes are encouraged.

UMASS – Bombay Jayashri will perform a Carnatic vocal concert in the Campus Center Auditorium on Friday, Nov. 16 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $12. $8 for Five College students.

FILMS

UMASS – An Asian/Asian-American Film Festival will be held in room 108 of South College on Wednesday, Nov. 14, from 7:00 to 11:00 p.m. The festival will feature recent films from Asian and Asian-American filmmakers. The films will coincide with filmmaker-in-person events and mini-conferences with scholars of the Asian American cinema. The event will continue in room 231 of Herter Hall on Thursday, Nov. 15, and Friday, Nov. 16, from 7:00 to 11:00 p.m., and on Saturday, Nov. 17, from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m., and Sunday, Nov. 18, from 7:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

UMASS – The Radical Film Series will continue with School of the Assassins Documentary Studies on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 7:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room 917. This event, sponsored by the Radical Student Union, is free and open to the public. A variety of documentaries from the SOA Watch Library will be shown in support of their annual mobilization to Fort Benning, GA on November 16th-18th. Details about transportation from the Valley will be available at the event.

SMITH – The Film "Cousin! Cousin! Ishlat Ya Ibn Il 'Amm!] will be shown in Room 103 of McConnell Hall on Thursday, Nov. 15 at 7:00 p.m. This is in Arabic.

AMHERST – The Film Die drei von der Tankstelle [Three from the Petrol Station] will be shown on Thursday, Nov. 15 at 4:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. in Morrill Science Center I. This event, part of the German Film Series, is free.

SMITH – The film Pan Tadeusz will be shown in Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium on Saturday, Nov. 17 at 7:00 p.m. and Sunday, Nov. 18 at 2:00 p.m. The film, based on Adam Mickiewicz's epic poem of 19th century Poland, is free.

UMASS – The Radical Film Series will continue with Advertising and the End of the World, a film narrated by UMass Communications Professor Sut Jhally, in room 917 of the Campus Center on Tuesday, Nov. 20, at 7:00 p.m. This event, sponsored by the Radical Student Union, is free.

DANCES

UMASS – Cape Verdean Cultural Night will be held on Saturday, Nov. 17, in the Student Union Ballroom from 6:30 p.m. to 2:00 a.m. Admission is $8, $5 with student identification. Dinner will be served at 7:30. The evening will include food, skits, dancing and poetry. Proper dress is a must.

NORTHAMPTON – The Northampton Area Lesbian and Gay Business Guild will present their Eighth Annual Charity Ball on Saturday, Nov. 17 at the Inn at Northampton, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $35 at the door, $30 in advance. Call 585-8859 for tickets.

RELIGIOUS

UMASS – Chabad House will host a workshop on "Inner Harmony Through Judaism" on Friday, Nov. 16, after evening services.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

AMHERST – Peter Neufeld, cofounder and director of The Innocence Project at the Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law, will deliver a lecture, "Actual Innocence: The Emerging Civil Rights Movement to Reform Criminal Justice," in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 4:30 p.m.

UMASS – The UMass Muslim Students Association will present "The Solution," a lecture by Imam Siraj Wahaj, on Wednesday, Nov. 14 in the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:30 p.m. The talk will address racism, genocide, intolerance and hate crimes.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Boston writer Susan O'Neill reads from "Don't Mean Nothing: Short Stories of Vietnam," based on her experiences as a Vietnam nurse, in Odyssey Bookshop on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

SMITH – Dr. Phuntsog Wangmo will deliver a lecture, "The Relationship Between Tibetan Medicine and Tibetan Astrology," in the Browsing Room of Neilson Library on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. This event will conclude the second of a two-evening presentation of both the field of Tibetan medicine and her life and career as a doctor in Tibet.

AMHERST – UMass English Professor and distinguished poet Martin Espada will read from his works in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 8:00 p.m.

UMASS – Kristin Esterberg, associate professor of sociology at UMass-Lowell, will deliver a lecture, "The Bisexual Menace: Or, Will the Real Bisexual Menace Please Stand Up?" in room 904-908 of the Campus Center on Thursday, Nov. 15 at 12:30 p.m. This event is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series.

UMASS – Betsy Hartmann of Hampshire College will deliver a lecture, "The Politics of Population Policy" in room 620 of Thompson Hall on Thursday, Nov. 15, at 4:00 p.m.

UMASS – Hansella Caines and Dianne Walker will hold an informational workshop on AIDS education among African-American women on the UMass campus in the Malcolm X Cultural Center at 6:00 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 15. Light refreshments will be provided.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Journalist Kevin Snow will deliver a lecture, "Africa and America," in room 101 of Dwight Hall on Thursday, Nov. 15 at 7:00 p.m.

SMITH – Abdaf Soueif, author of "In the Eye of the Sun" and "The Map of Love", will deliver a lecture, "Between Past and Present: Reflections from Egypt and Exile," in room 101 of Smith College's Seelye Hall on Thursday, Nov. 15 at 7:30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Meghan Cope will deliver a lecture, "Flexible Welfare: Local Social Service Organizations and the Regulation of Poor Women's Lives," at the Five College Women's Research Center on Thursday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. The Center is located at 83 College St., South Hadley.

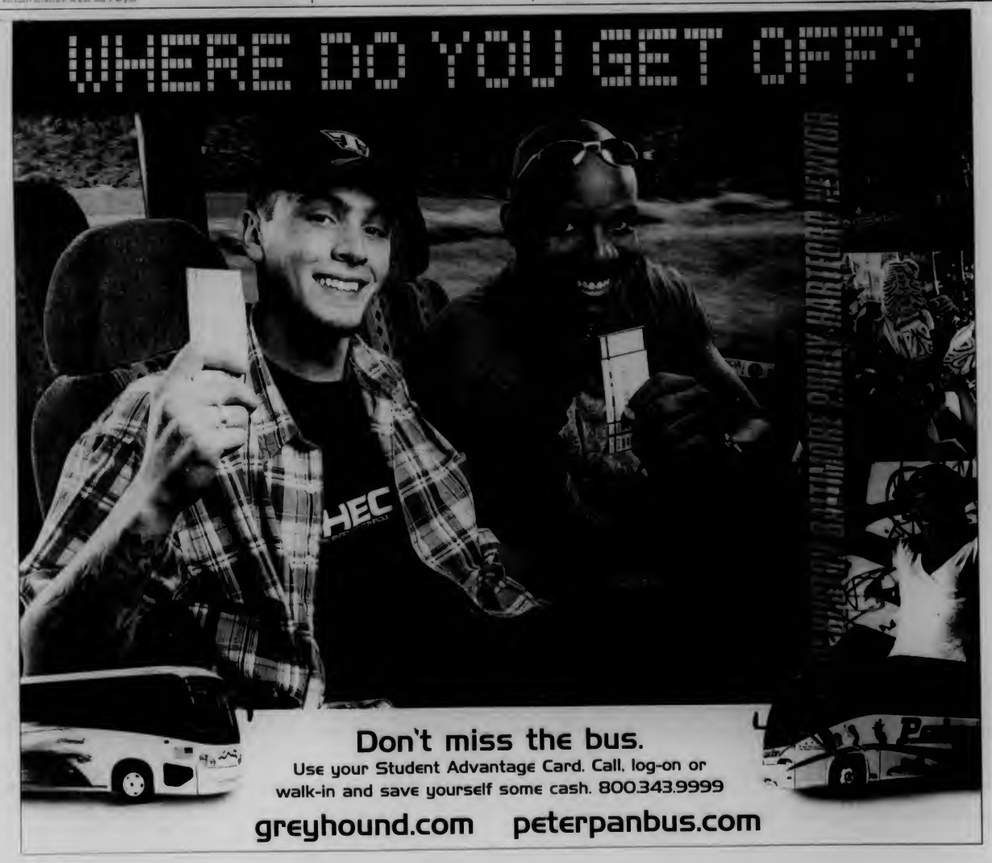
SMITH – Roald Hoffmann, Holocaust survivor and winner of the Nobel Prize for chemistry, will read from his poetry works on at 3:30 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 16, in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Nielson Library.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Cuban-American author Achy Obejas will read from her new novel, Days of Awe, in Odyssey Bookshop on Saturday, Nov. 17, at 2:00 p.m. The bookshop is located at 9 College St., South Hadley.

UMASS – "No Secret Anymore: The Times of Del Martin and Phyllis Lyon" will be presented on Monday, Nov. 19, at 8:00 p.m. in Room 18 of Skinner Hall. The lecture will focus on the story of what it was like to be out, activist lesbians during the McCarthy witch-hunt.

UMASS – Srirupa Roy, Assistant Professor of Political Science at UMass, and Michelle Stephens, Assistant Professor of English and American Studies at Mt. Holyoke, will discuss "National Identity in the Public Sphere," continuing the Organization of Graduate Students in Comparative Literature's OPDICS series, on Tuesday, Nov. 20, at 6:30 p.m. in room 601 of Herter Hall.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and is the daily newspaper operated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life and continued as such until 1907. The Massachusetts Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1991. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargamis Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tihora Gonzyez-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

EPA

continued from page 1

kee campus in the western part of the state other than UMass had been cited. In fact, he remarked, "the problem at UMass Amherst has been unusual in that it focused on the Clean Air Act."

Still, Olivier said he was optimistic about the current negotiation process.

"This will be a process to try to come to an agreement on applicable fines and what UMass will need to do to come into compliance and stay in compliance," he said. "But my sense is that UMass is trying to learn about its environmental responsibilities."

Representing the University, according to Olivier, are Vice Chancellor Paul Page; In-House Counsel Brian Burke, Environmental Health and Safety head Don Robinson, and a few representatives from the Physical Plant. An unnamed attorney from the Boston area is representing them.

The members of this group, as well as Rules Committee Chair Ernest May, Provost John Cunningham, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos, Interim Chancellor Marcelette Williams, Chair of Environmental Health and Safety Department Salvatore DiNardi, Manager for the Campus Hazardous Waste Department James Fox and Head of University Communications Robert Connolly were unavailable for comment as negotiations got under way. The list of UMass representatives given by Olivier could not be confirmed by University sources.

According to News Office representative Barbara Pilvinis, the University is avoiding making statements about the violations to either the local or regional press as negotiations continue.

"Our response [to the press] [has been] limited," she said, "but only by the fact that the matter is being taken up by UMass officials and the EPA, and neither party is interested in doing so in the press."

However, she assured the Collegian that there will be some sort of resolution at some point, which we will probably announce."

Olivier mentioned that UMass could defer the fines by participating in supplemental environmental projects," in addition to coming into compliance with the basic codes. Olivier said that he didn't know if UMass would take that option.

On Oct. 31, the University announced that it had been selected for an EPA Pilot Program concerning the disposal of hazardous waste. Though the EPA will fund the program, it remains unclear whether this is the type of supplemental project that Olivier specified.

"[The program] could result in less hazardous waste, greater energy conservation, wider use of environmentally safe materials, and improved management of solid waste, among other potential environmental health benefits. UMass is one of only five New England schools selected for the program," according to the Oct. 31 press release.

Chancellor Williams was quoted in the release as saying, "This campus has a long history of environmental stewardship. I view this program as another step that is consistent with our mission."

However, the University seems to have remained reserved about its commitment to the environment. Junior Psychology major Jamie Lavin said that she was shocked to hear of the violations.

"That's really scary," she said. "The fact that it's being hidden from students, that we didn't know about it is a little unsettling."

As for Williams' statement in the UMass press release, Lavin commented, "that is also extremely unsettling and I hope that there's some truth in what she says. She's got students to protect. Not just herself."

Junior English major Clare Chadbourne, who is here for the year on exchange from the University of Leeds in England, said that her view of UMass had changed upon being told of the violations.

"This has an impact on the way I view the University now," she said. "It's obviously not prioritizing environmental issues. I thought it was a committed and liberal university that stood up for ethical values, but now I see that it still bows to the pressures of American commercialism. I'd have no hesitation about telling people at home about that."

Chadbourne said that she hoped that students would speak out about the issue soon. "I hope students take notice and react against this."

closet

continued from page 1

ads.

Gay images are almost completely absent in mainstream print ads. "Wilke said. "I can't explain it. Perhaps it is because television is considered a more entertaining medium, and that's where the jokes come in."

The Commercial Closet database, which features hundreds of ads, can be seen online at http://www.commercialcloset.org/.

HASA

continued from page 1

going on in the Dominican Republic to build an educational facility for both Haitians and Dominicans, according to Achille.

"I enjoyed it. It was so true and dealt with real issues," Regine Lamy, a HASA member and attendee of the event said. "It was funny because then took all the negative things and changed it into the positive."

The NEG Haitian dance group then gave two performances of traditional dances, which preceded a reading of original poetry by Abraham Anderson. This part of the event was concluded by the presentation of different awards to people who helped with the ceremonies.

"This was a way of showing appreciation to all the people that helped to make the night a success," Achille said. "Many people, for example members of Groove Phi Groove, went out of their way to help organize HASA/CASA."

The party commenced after the awards and certificates were distributed to the different individuals. All types of music were played ranging from Latin salsa to Haitian compa. More familiar sounds like R&B and hip-hop were heard.

"I liked the fact that they mixed up the different types of music," sophomore Fabiola Losier commented. "I appreciate the celebration of all the cultures although I would have preferred more Haitian music."

"We had a very good attendance," Achille also said. "There must have been anywhere between eight hundred to a thousand people in the ballroom because we had to move out most of the chairs once the dancing started."

People made their way to the Malcolm X Cultural Center for more partying and celebration. This portion of the evening's events was not semiformal and thus many people chose to go to their dorms and change into more comfortable attire.

"I enjoyed the whole night's celebration because it showed the overall unity among Haitians and Dominicans on UMASS campus," said Regine Lamy describing the events for the night.

Achille summed up the night by saying, "The night was definitely a great success. I'm very glad that everything went well and everybody had a good time."

SGA

continued from page 1

After further discussion and three five-minute recesses called by the judiciary in order to convene for council, the meeting pressed to call a witness. The petitioners called Blasiak to the stand asking questions regarding the referendum question, as well as his choice to appoint assistants to the tables, rather than actual election-commissioners.

"I ran the elections to the best of my ability," Blasiak said.

In regards to the questioning surrounding the wording of referendum question number three on the ballot, Blasiak stated that under the constitution, it was his right to decide if it was fit to be on the ballot.

"In a elections commissioners meeting with quorum, we voted and agreed that question three would be placed on the ballot," Blasiak said.

The case ended with closing statements in which Sheehan and Tavares expressed that the elections were run as efficiently as possible and that it was harmless error.

"I think it was all pretty much garbage," DeCourcy said. "I'm just glad that we got [Blasiak] to admit that he did in fact violate the Constitution, and we'll see from here."

Sheehan had a different response by stating that the hearing speaks for itself.

"They failed to make a valid argument, and we've already wasted our time here when we could have dealt with the matter at hand under different circumstances," Sheehan said.

Members of the Judiciary will be meeting to decide on a final decision regarding the case; however, the date of when it will be released is unknown at this time. Senate will resume as scheduled in the Campus Center at 7:15 p.m. tonight.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE MCCULLOUGH

The American Cancer Society and UMASS peer educators presented information about the Great American Smokeout.

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHALLOW HAL (PG13) 1205 650 745 1025*
LIFE AS A HOUSE (R) 1220 805 715 1010*
HEIST (R) 1235 630 705 1000
MONSTERS INC (G) 1200 1240 220 300 640 520 700 740 920 1000*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1215 410 800 1030*
THE ONE (R) 1230 455 710 950*
K-PAX (PG13) 1210 435 725 1015*
13 GHOSTS (R) 1240 415 730 1005*
ON THE LINE (PG) 1220
FROM HELL (R) 1250 500 750 1040
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 415 720 1020
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1255 740
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 400 1010
COMING 11/16: HARRY POTTER TICKETS ON SALE NOW
SENIOR MOVIE NOV 15
K-PAX DOORS OPEN AT 1145AM
NO PASSES/SUPERPASSES
4 DAY ADVANCE TICKET SALES • NO PASSES/NO SUPERPASSES ON Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

VALLEY Furniture and Crafts
15% off Bookcases
320 Avenue A, Turner's Falls
Call for Directions
Open Mon.-Sat. 10-5
(413) 863-9083

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

WOMEN ARE MORE THAN THEIR BODIES!
Come create a student-run task force to work on the following:
POLITICAL ACTION, ADVOCACY, SUPPORT AND CONNECTION
Explore these issues with a group of professional women on campus.
TIME: November 15, 4–5 p.m.
PLACE: Campus Center Room 802

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!
THURSDAY
Top 40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
Disco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
Retro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

STUDENT TRAVEL
Get me the $%#!&@ out of here!
(We understand completely.)
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 → Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 → A great place to get contact lenses
3 → Convenient hours and location
4 → FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 → Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Airlines may hit bankruptcy
Americans need to face fears

The complete impact of the crash of American Airlines Flight 587 is still unknown to the American people in terms of both the economy and the morale of the people. Was the crash a terrorist attack? Was it a simple engine malfunction that caused the plane en route to Santo Domingo to take a nose-dive towards the streets of Queens, New York? We are still unsure.

However, for many Americans, the news of the crash itself is enough to prevent them from making any plans to travel by plane in the near future. Regardless of whether of not this was a genuine accident, it will still be gone over with a careful eye and will continue to raise fear regarding possible future attacks.

The airplane industry, which has already suffered devastating financial losses following the Sept. 11 attacks, is now holding its collective breath in anticipation.

Many speculate that, if this was indeed another terrorist attack, the industry will never recover, forcing many airlines to simply declare bankruptcy. In fact, some airlines are so far into debt now that they are forced to cut costs and accept financial help from the government.

As it is, the fear of flying has caused many airlines to ground 20 percent of their usual flights. Hotels have also felt the hit of decreased travel, knocking their prices down an average of eight percent to simply fill rooms. Other industries have also felt the impact. Malls have reported fewer holiday shoppers and movie theaters have been all but barren compared to their usual numbers. Pretty soon this will just mean the obvious: a sinking economy with the rate of unemployment continuing to soar.

This recent crash just heightens the fears that many Americans have of getting on a plane, and at precisely the wrong time of year, right near the holidays.

Attacks can occur at anytime in any place; that is the problem with this situation. There have been threats placed upon bridges, items used to make bombs found in bus stations and one would assume some threat has or will be made on train stations as well. But what can we do? Stop traveling? Of course not.

Allowing fear to prevent us from spending the holidays with our loved ones and preventing us from carrying on traditions that make us happy human beings is crazy and unthinkable. Not only will it hurt us economically, but it will do serious moral damage to the country as a whole.

The nature of terrorism is fear. The aim is to get people to change their routines, to jeopardize the economy, to change lives. Life-altering changes such as increasing the rate of unemployment, devastating transportation as we know it, and wrecking havoc in both the minds and the habits of the American people.

We cannot devastate our economy and change our lives simply because we are afraid.

That means that terrorism has won.

Information for this story was obtained from CNN.com.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Supporting our war:
measures against Taliban are appropriate

SAMUEL JENSON

So now it appears that Kabul has fallen.

The United States, with almost as much ease as it had against Iraq, has defeated the Taliban. Seen fleeing towards mountainous hideaways, the Taliban has certainly not disappeared, but has, at the same time, been soundly defeated in its attempts to withstand all attacks.

Where does that leave the knuckleheads protesting the bombing? Up the creek and without a paddle, hopefully where they will stay for a very, very long time. The fact is this: there were actually people on this very campus that opposed an attack on a brutal dictatorship whose aggressive sexism made it one of the most oppressive regimes that the world has ever known. As a matter of law, women were prevented from exposing skin, learning or working. Nobody in Afghanistan could listen to music. Men couldn't shave.

Stupidly, of course, some members of our local community opposed our war against the Taliban, which was in a way a measure of support for the brutal Afghani regime. The local liberals who voiced opposition to the United States campaign against the Taliban, and by extension Osama bin Laden's Al-Qaeda terrorist network, did so because the United States had faults of its own, presumably so great as to make any attack against others hypocritical.

It is an interesting argument, and hopefully one that can be made more succinctly in the coming days. But one part of that argument is made in ignorance; any comparison of the United States to Afghanistan in terms of relative justifications for an "anti-war" stance is ridiculous.

Facts are facts; anyone claiming that the United States is, in any conceivable way, as oppressive as the Taliban has been for the last few years, is completely devoid of the ability to rationally look at the world. Critics of the United States, while taking a beating in the press for their childish notions of oppression, have not been censored, nor arrested, nor imprisoned for their beliefs. In the days and weeks following the Sept. 11 attacks, there were investigations, roundups and recriminations. But for anyone to allege that cultural critics, that political critics, that anybody was arrested for suggesting that the United States shouldn't be involved in a war with the Taliban is lying to themselves. The greatest thing about the United States is the openness that we have to openly criticize, at great lengths, one another and our government. Look no farther than our own ridiculous campus.

We have professors who allege that corporations control our government. We have professors who allege that the media creates a dominant paradigm of images and messages that create, or maintain, a patriarchy in our supposedly equal society. We have students whose rabid support for blatantly illegal activities – like smoking marijuana – is not only tolerated, but also underwritten by our own student government.

"Facts are facts: anyone claiming that the United States is, in any conceivable way, as oppressive as the Taliban has been for the last few years, is completely devoid of the ability to rationally look at the world."

To those that would allege that such that all of our left-leaners have created homogeneity on campus, their opposition is loud and proud.

We have a Republican Club that religiously opposes much of what the majority around here has to say. For every anti-Israeli on campus, there's an anti-Palestinian. For every Naderite, there's a Bushie. For every raunchy, there's an Abercrombie and Fitch wearing-NRA driving send a gun.

And none of them have been arrested, either for saying what they believe or opposing the opposition. Not one of them has truly looked a judge right in the face and been truly forced to pick a spoken cell of quiet freedom. Regardless of the message, opposition in the United States isn't just acceptable; often it's encouraged. The liberals who support an opposition to the certitst American way are no different than the Republicans who oppose that same certainty.

Lest this get too far away from its original point that the war against the Taliban was not only appropriate, but justified even in the face of America's own transgressions, it should be acknowledged that Taliban represented the worst case scenario for most of our local community.

As in, if they think it's bad in the United States presently, if they think that the oppression and repression of cultural norms is bad here, try Afghanistan circa 1999. Try a country where women's skin could not witness the light of day. Try a country where sideburns are punishable by various forms of capital punishment. Try a country where education, when available, was for one gender.

The United States shattered a political organization that zealously oppressed its citizenry. There can be no support for the Taliban, rational, political or otherwise, for it was a body whose very existence was a remnant of political structure long thought dead in the world. To suggest that the United States was wrong to destroy the Taliban, or at least to destroy its political power in Afghanistan, is foolish and wrongheaded.

Instead, revel in the relatively simple defeat of the nation, and hope that the basic freedoms that so many Afghanis have been deprived are returned to them immediately.

Does the United States have fault in the world, for both our own internal existence and our outer political machinations? Of course we do. But to suggest that the United States not participate on the world scene until it is itself perfect is not only shortsighted, it is dangerous.

Should the Taliban have been allowed to stand? Is it preferential that the Taliban continued to brutally rule, if only to change the United States' supposedly horrendous behavior?

The answer to both is clearly no. Our apparent victory is apparent proof of that, and if that isn't good enough, surf the news sites showing pictures of women's faces in a country where that simple act – seeing the sun without facial covering – had previously been punishable by stoning.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

ED/OP: IT'S LIKE THE MINT ON YOUR PILLOW AT A PAY-BY-THE-HOUR MOTEL.

Fly the Unfriendly Skies

Closing, not opening, hope's door

BILL LARKIN

I guess the world's global trading partners have given up on human rights and decency. Too bad more people didn't listen to the anti-globalization protesters in Seattle years ago. I suppose it is difficult to discern what unarmed citizens carrying with riot police want you to vote.

Nonetheless, our ignorance to and disregard of their pleas has allowed the President to certify to Congress that the United States approves of China's savage labor practices, suppression of religious sects and horde of nuclear weapons.

This weekend, trade ministers in Doha ratified their U.S.-approved World Trade Organization (WTO) membership terms, finalizing their entry into the global commerce club. China, the world's most populous nation and fourth largest trader, will become the 143rd member on Dec. 11.

What does this mean? Beginning just before the Christmas season, tariffs between China and many of the world's most influential trading partners will decrease. Therefore, foreign investors from nations such as the United States, United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Saudi Arabia will shovel even more capital into manufacturing plants located in and around recently subdued Beijing. Instead of spending money on badly needed social services, the Chinese government will finance the construction of business infrastructure and give generous tax breaks to foreign-owned companies.

I agree with China's trade minister Shi Guangsheng. As he signed documents ratifying China's membership, he called his nation's entry a historic moment. Unfortunately, the pages of history's annals are filled not only with joy and promise but also with woe and despair.

"WTO membership will inevitably exert widespread and far-reaching impact on China's economy and on the world economy," Guangsheng said. Sure, the unemployment rate in China will decrease. And yes, the country's gross national product will continue to rise despite the global economic slowdown. But how will these moves benefit people across the globe?

It won't, unless they already own a corporation or a private helicopter.

China has made no promises to end imprisonment without trial or to ratify international human rights treaties. Will the nation continue to restrict religious activities or stop the demolition of churches? Probably not.

According to the Straits Times, employees at many Chinese factories must work more than 12 hours nearly every day. Because of minimal safety measures and routine physical abuse, 47,000 people died in Chinese mines, factories, and public places during the first half of this year. Many workers cannot even collect meager salaries from their employers, whether they are state or foreign-owned businesses. As other nations lower tariffs on more expensive foreign goods sure to flood their domestic market, the rate of living for most Chinese will skyrocket.

Not only will the eastern crisis darken the lives of Chinese, but – once again – it will stir hatred and jealousy at the United States. Although the blame the Chinese will direct at average Americans is misplaced, as only wealthy financiers will reap the profits of this global trade bonanza, our country will find nonetheless find itself the target of anger. As our corporate puppeteers continue to direct Washington D.C. to manipulate foreign governments and the global trade market to fatten their own pockets, our horns grow more twisted in the eyes of our neighbors.

We have always had the power to use commerce to work around corrupt labor practices, oppressive governments and saddening social conditions. But by continuing to encourage the repression of decency through opening the doors to unregulated trade – by unregulated I mean a worker condition vacuum – we close the doors to hope. After all, we promote free – not fair – trade. And most of the wealthy elite who direct the influence of government charge that this version of freedom is an egalitarian concept by attaching it to patriotism. And who – especially at this time – wants to appear unpatriotic?

Well, when I see Governor Gray Davis on CNN telling Californians the most patriotic thing they can do is to spend money in the economy, I wonder if he tells his campaign contributors the same rhetoric. After all, shouldn't they be patriotic too? They are, if by patriotic you mean moving the manufacturing sector – which provided the economic fruition that paid for most of our college education – overseas to unprotected labor markets.

On the other hand, I suppose they could be more patriotic by ensuring that their workers – the greasy mechanic fitting gears on Reebok assembly lines and the elderly seamstress separating cotton fibers for GAP cardigans – enjoy civility regardless of the location of the factory in which they work. Maybe then America might not appear the oppressor, maybe then the global economy might work. But why pursue such an end? Doesn't it slow a twisted definition of growth and reduce profit margins? Isn't it cheaper to base your business in nations deaf to the complaints of their working class? I think most of the corporate pseudo-patriots would agree; you'd just have to wave a few flags around first.

Information from the Financial Times was used in this column.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

Baby steps out of school

ANNA FAKTOROVICH

I am almost free. I'm twenty years old and have less than two months left in my college life. I was working from day one and up to this moment. College is a bridge for me and I believe that practicing techniques is a better learning process than listening to lectures. So, I'm looking forward to receiving my diploma and putting the knowledge I acquired at UMass to work.

I'm going to graduate without legally drinking alcohol in an American bar. I'm going to graduate without a car to drive home in. Most likely I won't have a job at graduation – in this economy I'd be lucky if I can get a job in the few months following my departure. My bank account is finally depleted, and I probably won't be able to afford an apartment because I don't have a guy to split the cost with.

But, hey! Everything is ok! I'm graduating after only two and a half years in college. Yep. I'm finishing two majors (Economics and Eastern European Studies) and a minor (Political Science) with high honors from Commonwealth College, and with a 3.7 GPA. I did the extra-curricular stuff, and otherwise took advantage of the resources UMass and Amherst College have to offer. I did the above in two and a half years – that's one and a half years less than the four years that an undergraduate education is supposed to take.

Where else but at UMass could this be possible? I know I made the right decision in coming here. At UMass everything depends on my choices – I can choose to study or to go to a party, I can choose to be a hard-core liberal or a die-hard conservative, I can choose to be in the Commonwealth College or to participate in extra-curricular activities. And this is what I love about college. I just hope that after graduation the "real world" is going to have as many opportunities for those willing to seek them out.

In case while reading the above you got all excited and asked – "Gosh, Anna, how did you do all that. I want to be just like you," I have the following ideas that might be helpful to you:

Carefully planning with my Dean Pirrello (Thank you – you are the best!).

Knowing basically what I wanted to do with my life before starting college.

Re-examining my interests periodically. As they changed, I incorporated them into majors and minors.

Never take a course without a specific reason – even a totally extraneous interest can be satisfied while also taking a required general education course.

And most important of all – schedule the years, schedule the semesters, schedule the days and schedule the minutes – the more time you spend scheduling, the more you are going to get done. This is especially apparent to me now that in my last semester I'm getting senioritis and my scheduling skills are lacking – my grades are reflecting this trend. Basically, become an obsessive psycho-bitch and you are all set.

In case you are still curious how this whole two-and-a-half-year thing works, there are some little things to keep in mind. I took 17 credits my first semester, 21 credits in the second, 19 or so in the third, 25 in the fourth, and now 19 in my senior year. In addition, I received 15 credits for a summer internship, six credits for Russian language and four other credits for something else I can't recall. In the end I'll have exactly 120 credits – topping it pretty close, as one might say. Most of the courses I've taken also satisfied more than one requirement. For example, the six-credit honors thesis in Russian I'm doing this semester satisfies both economics and Eastern European upper-level requirements. Basically, my dean, advisors and I got pretty creative.

So, I've proven to myself that I'm better than the B average student I was in high school – where my individuality was brutally suppressed by teachers who annoyingly insisted that "got" is slang, and instead I should write "received a whipping." I proved that I could achieve my goals (ignoring that the above goals were achieved in a vacuum).

This semester I have the ability to finally let my hair loose. So, if you know about a party, and you see me around, please do invite me – I'm totally there.

At this point in the road, the worst that can happen is that I can't find a job; if so, I'll sit at home and write the book I'm working on –still saving the $15,000 my dad would have paid if I stayed in college the extra year and a half.

Anna Faktorovich is a Umass student.

Jackson takes his swing

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

Music never used to be the most important thing on the mind of artist Jack Johnson. The name might sound a bit familiar; as Johnson wrote and performed on G. Love and the Special Sauce's biggest radio hit "Rodeo Clowns," off their 1999 album Philadelphonic. Growing up in Hawaii, Johnson's first love was surfing, having virtually learned to surf as he learned to walk. Continually getting better, Jack Johnson moved up the Hawaiian surfing ranks, surfing the revered yet feared "Pipeline" at the extremely young age of 10. By the age 17, he made it all the way to the finals at the Pipe trials, becoming the youngest competitor ever to do so, at this world-renowned event. With an eminent professional surfing contract from Quiksilver on the horizon, it was time for Jack Johnson to decide what he really wants to be doing with himself. Like teenagers across the country, he decided to try to find himself at college.

At this point, Johnson gravitated away from competition in favor of kindling his creativity. He left Hawaii for the University of California at Santa Barbara. His first two years were spent dabbling in many different courses, eventually settling on film. Upon graduation, Jack did not waste any time in employing his cinematographic skills, creating a few films including All For One and The Show. After returning from a summer sabbatical across Europe, Johnson went back home to Hawaii.

Upon his arrival, Jack reunited with old friends Chris and Emmett Malloy to conceive and create the acclaimed feature film Thicker Than Water, which has been hailed as a return to the purist beauty of early surf cinema. This film was an important crossroads for Johnson as he had created his first successful movie, as well as being able to rekindle his musical voice during its scoring. Having played guitar for most of his life, at night when he couldn't surf, Johnson took this opportunity to showcase his singer / songwriter skills. On Thicker Than Water, Jack Johnson created soulful folk songs intertwined with blues and hip-hop flavorings. By the time that Thicker Than Water was nominated for Surfer magazine's Video of the Year and the follow-up September Sessions won an Adobe Highlight Award at the ESPN Film Festival, record labels were practically knocking on Johnson's door trying to sign him.

In keeping with his laid back, simple style, Johnson eventually landed with Enjoy Records, who released his debut LP Brushfire Fairytales. This relationship turned out to be a particularly fruitful one, as this album was produced by Ben Harper's manager/producer I.P. Planier. After the album was released, Jack Johnson immediately began being compared to Harper, and rightfully so. Both Johnson and Harper have soulful voices, which seem to soar above their eloquent acoustic guitar fingerings. As Johnson cites Ben Harper as one of his greatest influences, it was with joy and excitement that Jack embarked on a lengthy tour supporting Harper across the country.

On Thursday, Jack Johnson will make his Northampton debut, headlining an evening of music and film featuring a special screening of September Sessions followed by a full set of music. This event will take place in the Ballroom at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. It will certainly play out to be an interesting and entertaining evening of art at its finest.

COURTESY OF CHRIS MALLOY

Buzzworthy Jack Johnson, named after a dominant pugilist from the turn of the century, comes to Pearl Street this Thursday.

MTV will be on campus and in the area today filming for MTV University. Camera crews will be at the Kaffe Haus in Van Meter at 8 p.m. and Atlantis downtown at 10 p.m. All are welcome.

Dan Bern filled the mood-lit Iron Horse Music Hall with Tiger Woods envy on Friday night.

Dan Bern makes a connection in Noho

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

The first time I saw Dan Bern, he opened up for Ani DiFranco at the Northrop Memorial Auditorium at the University of Minnesota. At that time, he was relatively unknown and rather shy, especially opening for a woman who had a reputation for attracting angst-ridden young lesbians. He charmed the crowd with his genuine song writing and received a warm applause.

The second time I saw Dan Bern, he was playing in a much smaller venue. Once again he was playing acoustic, this time at Gabe's Oasis, at the University of Iowa in Iowa City. He played an intimate but powerful show to a packed house of beer drinkers and college folk. By then he was beginning to have a following, and after the show he took the time to shake everyone's hand and take pictures with fans.

This time I saw Dan Bern at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. It had been almost three years since I had seen him live, and his confidence and fan base had significantly increased. The performance on Friday night was the best I've seen so far. Backed by a live band with a drummer, bassist, pianist and a guitar and banjo player, he played a cornucopia of folk that included songs from his latest album, New American Language, as well as old favorites.

For many Iron Horse shows, the floor is empty so as to make room for concertgoers. However, on Friday, the tables and chairs were still down, making it more of a dinner show. The crowd was older than the other Dan Bern shows that I'd been to, but lively nonetheless. When Bern arrived on stage, he opened with "One Thing Real" from his 1998 release, Smarmie Mime. The addition of the band enhanced the already fantastic music, and made his songs come alive. It made such a difference from his earlier performances.

In between playing "Talking Alien Abduction Blues," from 1997's Dog Van Boy and "Chelsea Hotel," from Smarmie Mime, Bern interacted with the crowd by telling stories about being on the road. He then promoted New American Language by playing some of its new tracks including, "God Said No," "New American Language" and "Sweetness." "Thanksgiving Day Parade" was the last song of the first set before the encore. The crowd was definitely getting into his new stuff, but it was when Bern played "Marilyn Monroe," from his self-titled 1993 release that everyone in the house began to sing along. They also laughed when he surprised the room by playing a "Little Ditty about Jewish Guys" that seemed to be entirely impro.

The two highlights of the show came at the end. During the rowdy version of "Tiger Woods" from his 1998 release, Fifty Eggs, he stopped to tell a small anecdote about a woman he had met earlier in the evening who asked him if he remembered sleeping with her. She had said she was kidding, but Bern felt the meeting was amusing enough to warrant her the description of having "one big pair of big balls."

Then, at the climax of the evening, Bern stood away from the mic and asked the crowd to sing along the chorus of "Albuquerque Lullaby" in different accents, depending on whether they were seated in the balcony or on the floor. He made the audience sing in a British accent and then in the accent of their mothers, once again making direct contact with his adoring fans.

The reason Dan Bern is such an awesome performer is not only because of his tremendous musical talent, but because of his relationship with his fans. During the show he made the crowd laugh with little stories or comments, as well as playing his own unique brand of humorous folk. After the show, instead of retiring to his bus or disappearing behind the stage, he stood at the front of the venue to sign autographs, sell CDs, take pictures and greet people. Going to a Dan Bern show is one of the few shows out there that an audience member is treated as if they are part of the performance and the success of the artist. Bern has this amazing talent for writing songs that are real and for connecting to his listeners. I can't wait to see him again. Every one of his shows just gets better.

Biohazard's beautiful chaos, The Wash's all-star line-up

THE WASH
Original Motion Picture Soundtrack
Artemis

"It's not an earthquake, it's just Dre coming." Actually, its Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg storming Hollywood trying to do what Mariah Carey and 'Nsync could not: become successful on the big screen. West Coast rap's dirty duo will attempt to become crossover stars when their comedy film The Wash hits theaters this week. Regardless of Dre and Snoop's success, or lack thereof on the big screen, one thing is for sure: they still know how to rap.

As can be expected from a soundtrack, the tracks don't have much artistic continuity between them; instead they mainly are a collection of solid, self-contained songs. The album includes new material from Dre and Snoop, as well as cuts from other artists ranging from D-12 to Xzibit.

Dre and Snoop join forces in the title track "The Wash" and the album-opening "On the Blvd." While the tracks are satisfactory, they aren't in the classic mold of "Nuttin But a G Thang" or "Still D.R.E." The title track comes closest to living up the lofty status of Dre and Snoop's best work, with the kind of superb production that the Doctor is known for. "On the Blvd" features a jumpy Timbaland-style beat that is not the norm for Dre. As has always been the case for Dre, the tight production nukes up for his mediocre rhyming skills. Meanwhile, Snoop is his usual cool and carefree self behind the mic.

With all the guest stars, the album does have variety on its side. D-12's "Blow My Buzz" is more X-rated, drug-induced stories of date rape and macabre behavior. "Do what you want to, just don't blow my buzz," they state. As un-PC as they are, they are still hilariously over-the-top as usual. Xzibit's weed tribute "Get F—ed Up" has the same quality, as X rhymes between puffs. The song isn't exactly deep. But what do you expect with a title like "Get F—ed Up?" Busta Rhymes makes a contribution with "Holla," a nothing-happening track that is saved by Busta's rapid-fire rhymes. "Bubba Talk," off of Bubba Sparxxx's debut album, provides some country-rap flavor, complete with cows mooing and horses neighing. Heck, even Brad Paisley wouldn't go there. Dre's protege Knoc-Turn'al is featured in "Bad Intentions," a well-produced but boring number.

The rest of the album is pretty much like the album overall: solid, but nothing that will blow you away. While it can't hold a candle to Dre's best work, The Wash is fine for what it is. (Kurt Polesky) significant others

BIOHAZARD
Uncivilization
Sanctuary

It's definitely odd how a new Biohazard song can feel comforting. For a band with album titles like New World Disorder and that is forever talking about ripping the system, comfort is probably the last thing that should be associated with these hardcore vets. But after seeing the video for "Sellout" from Uncivilization, with Evan (voice/bass) and Billy (voice/guitars) hopping around the streets of their native Brooklyn yelling about (shockingly) how they'll never "sell out," there comes a sense of solace. These guys were talking about and living the newly (post Sept. 11) exalted virtues of unity and solidarity in the hardcore and metal scenes long before they were popular buzzwords and character judges. This rallying spirit, layered with the most barbaric and brutal music available, is definitely the MO for Uncivilization.

And yes, to be sure, all of their other albums, too. Nothing has changed in Biohazard's outlook or approach over the years, and you could successfully argue that 1993's Urban Discipline was their defining statement and everything after the fact is simply surplus. Like their past few albums, Uncivilization feels unnecessary as a full-length statement and rather seems like something new to grab from to preserve freshness in their insane live shows.

Surely, there is filler here. "Unified" lets us know they love the hardcore scene. "Plastic" lets us know they hate fake people, and both songs beg the question why there hasn't been a popular revolt against Biohazard for contemptuously including these themes for the millionth time. But the punk energy that races through the album forgives some of the flaws. There is absolutely no room here for experimentation or variety; these are strictly all-purpose big-ass riffs here to get the job done with maximum efficiency. And they do: "Get Away" is as blistering and vital as anything they have ever recorded.

Uncivilization: worth pillaging for the good stuff? Eh, not really. Catch 'em live to truly experience the comfort in chaos. (Michael Delano)

COURTESY OF DEAN KARR

Busta Rhymes hollas on the soundtrack to The Wash.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

86 Oldsmobile runs great and radio work, engine and brakes recently replaced. NO OFFER TO LOW! 256-8267

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Need Business Experience? Good Pay! Interested? Spring, Summer Internships Jobs Call College Pro 888-277-7962 SEE US IN THE CAMPUS CENTER ON WEDNESDAY

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT? TEAM PLAYER/LEADER? Consumer Power in virtual marketplace leave message for overview team_works@htomail.com 1-866-800-3985

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

1994 Plymouth Laser 90,000 miles regular maintenance done recently asking $2600, negotiable. 549-5422

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

HOUSE FOR RENT

Attention Students: Sunderland 3 bedroom 1 1/2 bath steps to P.V.T.A. stop. $1100.00 + utilities 665-2311

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

INSTRUCTION

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 2 females to share one large bedroom in Hobart Lane. 549-9192 Start January 1st

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

Umass #1 Spring Break Company save $80 and free Hippodrome passes, book before Nov. 21st 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

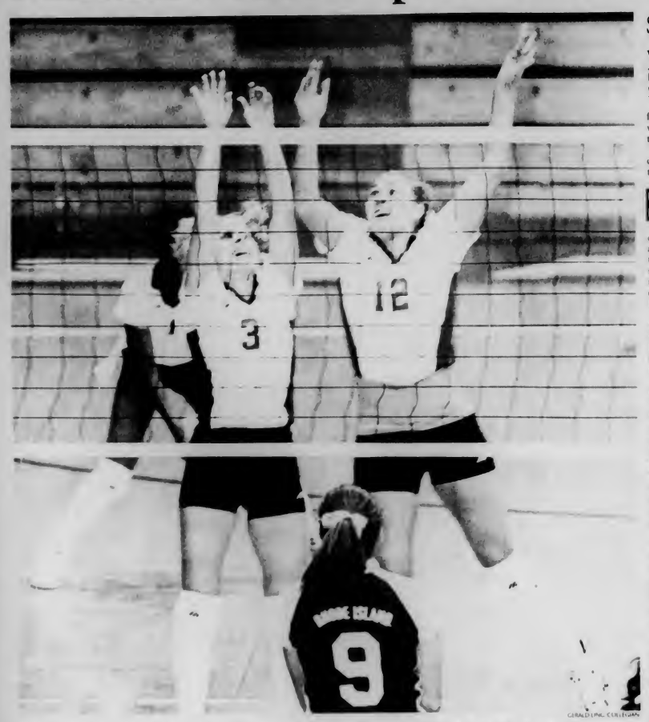
#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/online-mall/



Your Ad Could Be Right Here!!! Call The Collegian Classifieds Today!!! 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN (Hampshire Satellite Cable Network)

- Bravo
- Cinemax
- Comedy Central
- Court TV (Amateur Channel)
- Court TV Channel
- Discovery Channel
- Disney
- ESPN
- ESPN2
- Fox Sports Net
- Fox Sports World
- Fox Sports World Espanol
- Fox Movie Channel
- Fox News Channel
- Fox Sports Channel

Minutewomen spike-tacular in season finale

Jitka Stehnova (left) and Clare Baxter are two of the returning players that hope to lead UMass volleyball to an Atlantic 10 postseason berth in 2002

Seniors end career with A-10 victory

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Although the match was only being played for pride, the members of the Massachusetts volleyball team left Curry Hicks Cage with their heads held high.

The Minutewomen finished up their 2001 campaign strongly with their fourth consecutive win, beating Duquesne 3-1 at home on Saturday night, albeit too late to qualify for the conference postseason. Nevertheless, the Maroon and White played up to its potential during the last few weeks, and if not for its midseason struggles, UMass would be playing with the elite teams of the Atlantic 10 during the conference tournament being played at Curry Hicks Cage this weekend.

UMass	3
Duquesne	1

For seniors Lauren Vander Veen, Janeen DeMarte, Celia Wiste, and Lysiane Lloret, it was their last match in a UMass uniform. Fortunately, their last memory of Minutewomen volleyball will be one of victory.

It was Nitia Small, however, who shined on Senior Night for the Minutewomen. The sophomore continued her offensive rampage on Atlantic 10 foes, leading the Minutewomen in kills for the fourth consecutive match. She has totaled at least 10 kills in each of those contests, all Maroon and White victories. Her .300 hitting percentage against the Dukes was also among the team leaders.

UMass jumped out to a 1-0 lead out of the gates, as they won a tightly contested opening frame by a tally of 30-28. Duquesne rebounded in the second game, however, to deadlock the teams going into the halftime break.

In game three, the Minutewomen continued their tendency to perform strongly out of the locker room, thrashing the Dukes en route to a 30-22 triumph, and finished off the visitors with a 30-26 win in the fourth frame. UMass took advantage of an anemic Duquesne offense that committed 32 attack errors and 11 service errors on the evening en route to a .156 hitting percentage.

Along with Small, the Minutewomen received strong offensive and defensive performances from each of their graduating seniors. DeMarte (11 kills, 8 digs), Lloret (12 kills, 14 digs), Vander Veen (9 kills) and Wiste (5 kills) all said goodbye to UMass volleyball on a positive note, each having extremely successful final campaigns. Vander Veen, Lloret, and DeMarte each had over 200 kills for the season, and Lloret finished with the team lead in digs.

The 2001 Maroon and White volleyball season will most likely be looked on with mixed emotions by the squad's members. UMass was a force to be reckoned with early on in the year, as Head Coach Bonnie Kenny's team won five consecutive matches at one point and was well on its way to establishing itself as an Atlantic 10 powerhouse.

Offensive struggles soon began to plague the Minutewomen, however, as their attack was rendered ineffective as the season progressed. The Maroon and White dropped six of eight Atlantic 10 matches during one stretch, and its drop in the conference standings was too large to recover. Still, the Minutewomen have a lot of encouraging things to look upon for next year.

Despite losing four of its top players, UMass will be returning a solid corps of players to make a run at Atlantic 10 glory. Small will be leading the returning starters along with junior Jitka Stehnova, who became more comfortable in setting the table for the UMass attack as the season progressed. Also returning will be freshmen Michelle Spaleta and Amy Chan, who both proved to be solid contributors for the Maroon and White defense.

The Minutewomen will use their four-match winning streak as a cornerstone to build on for next year, and with a large group of veterans and underclassmen returning, UMass should be a dominant presence in the Atlantic 10.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Janeen DeMarte is one of four departing seniors for the Minutewomen.

NBA's best finally back

GLEN STRAUB

In three weeks we will all see exactly why Allen Iverson is the best player in the National Basketball Association.

Iverson, who has been out of commission for all the Philadelphia 76ers' training camp, pre-season games and the first five games of the regular season thanks to off-season elbow surgery on his shooting arm, returned to the Philly line-up Saturday night. His presence helped the 76ers accomplish their first win of the year.

For the Sixers to have any success this year, their franchise player must be healthy – plain and simple.

Last year's Eastern Conference champions had tamed their lofty expectations for this year, but they had to quit their cheer when word came that Iverson would miss a substantial amount of time. Their expectation was once higher than last year's thanks to the deal that brought the scoring power forward, Derrick Coleman.

However, things changed and changed quickly.

Just about a week ago, fans and the media of Philadelphia were starting to give up on the 0-5 Sixers.

A team that spent all of last year on top of the Atlantic Division and the Eastern Conference standings was suddenly in dead last.

Iverson could only sit back and watch his team fall five times in a row. His team looked lost and confused. The Sixers' ninth man was missing and Head Coach Larry Brown could not find the right way to make up for his absence.

Without Iverson on the floor, Philadelphia looked like a very poor team. They didn't look like a squad that contended with the superior L.A. Lakers in the Finals.

The combination of Coleman's 18.7 points a game and Dikembe Mutumbo's 15.5 rebounds a game is not the answer to Philly's success.

The answer lies in the man who takes on the nick name of "The Answer."

Iverson is the best player in the league because he has the biggest presence on the court, more so than any other player does for his respective clubs. It is pretty interesting that Iverson is almost always the smallest man on the court, but he is also the most noticed by his teammates and the opponents.

In his first game back against the Dallas Mavericks on the road, he scored 18 points and racked up nine assists en route to the 76ers' 98-91 victory.

He only shot a lousy 7-of-28, but his appearance on the court was enough to rile up his teammates and inspire their first win of the year.

Obviously, it is going to take time until his shooting touch returns as he had surgeries on the major joint involved in the shooting motion.

His attitude to winning and magical moves will change the results of for the Sixers. In three weeks, when Philly is on top of the standings once again, we will all know why Allen Iverson is the best player in the league today.

Dynasty potential in the Lake Show

Three years ago, after the second retirement of Michael Jordan, Jerry Reinsdorf and Jerry Krause, President and General Manager of the Chicago Bulls, respectively, tore apart the esteemed Bulls dynasty of the nineties. Jordan, Scottie Pippen and Head Coach Phil Jackson led the team from the Windy City to six championships in eight years.

The team was broken up and sudden-ly went from the best to the worst.

The fans and media around the NBA claimed that there would never be a run quite like the one that the Bulls pulled off – specifically the 72-win season in the 1996-97 campaign.

Well, the NBA has found its new super powerhouse and it resides in a familiar place to basketball dynasties, Los Angeles.

The L.A. Lakers have been unstoppable over the past two years. This year, they are even better as they are in a whole different league than the rest of their opponents.

There are two main reasons for the immense success leading to a 6-0 record. The first one is that the off-season moves are paying off tremendously.

Veteran guard Mitch Richmond and youthful forward Samaki Walker have contributed to the Laker success, but the biggest surprise has been the play of point-guard Lindsey Hunter.

Hunter, who came over from Milwaukee over the summer, is the third leading scorer on the team with 12.2 points per game. This is surprising considered Hunter is known to be a defensive-minded player.

The second reason for the Lakers' dominance has been the shared play of their two best players, Shaquille O'Neal and Kobe Bryant. Shaq is leading the league in scoring with 30.7 ppg and Bryant is right behind him with 28.5 ppg.

These two have finally learned what it takes to be a winning club at all times. If this continues, that 72-win record will most definitely be in jeopardy.

Glen Straub is a Collegian columnist.

UMass BRIEFS

Women's Cross Country

The NCAA Division I Women's Track & Field Committee announced senior Kristin Ciswoski (Salem, N.H.) is among a pool of 38 individual qualifiers for the 2001 Division I Women's Cross Country Championships. In order to be eligible to participate, individuals must finish in the top 25 in their respective region. Ciswoski will compete on Monday, Nov. 19, at the Furman University Golf Course, in Greenville, S.C. The race is slated to begin at 12:15 p.m.

At the NCAA Regionals held on Nov. 10, at the 6,000-meter Franklin Park Course in Boston, Ciswoski finished 25th with a time of 21:34. Ciswoski has led all Minutewoman runners this season, recording top times for UMass in every meet.

Ciswoski placed 137th at 2000 NCAA Cross Country Championships held in Ames, Iowa, finishing the 6,000-meter course in a time of 22:16. She is only the second woman in UMass history to qualify for the NCAA Championships and she is the first woman to do so twice in a career.

As a freshman in 1998, Ciswoski won the Atlantic 10 women's cross country title and was subsequently named A-10 Rookie of the Year. She placed 4th in the Atlantic 10 Championships in 1999 and was named to Atlantic 10 All-Academic team.

In other cross country news...

The University of Massachusetts cross country teams had two members selected to the 2001 Atlantic 10 All-Conference Teams for their top 10 placement at the Cross Country Championships.

Senior Michael Pieck (Guilderland, N.Y.) finished ninth in the championship race, leading all Minuteman runners with a time of 25:35.9.

Ciswoski was the top finisher for the Minutewomen, placing third overall with a time of 18:13.3.

The Minutemen placed third in the conference with 80 points behind Saint Joseph's (52) and A-10 Champions La Salle (16). The Minutewomen secured fourth place with 122 points behind Richmond (72), Rhode Island (65) and A-10 Champions La Salle (55).

Men's Swimming and Diving

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team made its home debut with a 223-73 win over visiting Boston University this afternoon at Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool.

Sophomore Conner Townsend (Memphis, Tenn.) set a pool record in the 200-yard fly as he won the event in a time of 1:55.26.

The Minutemen had three multiple event winners led by senior Chad Arnold (Mohnton, Pa.) with wins in the 50-yard free (21.75) and 100-yard free (47.12); senior Rob Bellamy (Columbia, Md.) with wins in the 200-yard free (1:41.85) and 200-yard back (1:53.57); and sophomore Pete Tawczynski (Holden, Mass.) with wins in the 100-yard breast (59.34) and 200-IM (1:55.04).

UMass returns to action next week as it hosts St. John's on Saturday, Nov. 17, for a 1:00 p.m. dual meet.

Women's Swimming and Diving

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team dropped to Northeastern University yesterday afternoon, 112-185 at Barletta Natatorium.

Four Minutewomen posted wins on the day including junior Kate Allery (South Hadley, Mass.) in the three-meter (267.22) dive, freshman Lynette Sweeney (Plymouth, Mass.) in the 200-yard IM, sophomore Lauren Rowell (Hamburg, N.Y.) in the 200-yard back and Christen Dexter (Centerville, Mass.) in the 200-yard breast (2:25.41).

UMass also won the 400-yard free relay as junior Lizzy Boyle (Darien, Conn.) and seniors Becky Hunnewell (Sandwich, Mass.), Andrea Kazanjian (Troy, N.Y.) and Anne Dettloff (Barrington, Ill.) combined for a time of 3:41.35.

The loss slips UMass to 2-2 on the season while Northeastern improves to 3-0 overall.

The Minutewomen return to swimming action next weekend as they host St. John's University on Saturday, Nov. 17. The meet will begin at 1:00 p.m. and take place at Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. pool.

In other swimming and diving news...

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams both dominated the Central Connecticut State Blue Devils the first weekend in Nov. at the Jack Suydam Natatorium. The Minutemen won easily by a score of 190-42, while the Minutewomen were also victorious 154-81.

Allery led the Minutewomen with a first place finish in both the one-meter (233.43) and three-meter dives (225.43). This marked the second consecutive weekend that she was victorious in both of these events. Also picking up wins for the Minutewomen were Boyle in the 50-yard free (25.43), Kazanjian in the 100-yard free (54.68), Hunnewell in the 200-yard backstroke (2:11.52), Dettloff in the 500-yard free (5:24.77) and Dexter in the 200-yard breast (2:24.53).

Freshman Dylan Smith (Timonium, Md.) led the Minutemen with first place finishes in the 1000-yard free (10:00.53) as well as the 200-yard butterfly (1:59.22). Bellamy and Tawczynski were also multiple-event winners. Bellamy placed first in the 200-yard free (1:49.05) and the 200-yard backstroke (1:59.33), while Tawczynski was victorious in the 400-yard individual medley (4:12.19) as well as the 200-yard breast (2:10.66). Also picking up multiple wins for UMass was sophomore Logan Alomar (Silver Spring, Md.). He placed first in the one-meter (266.03) as well as the three-meter dive (240.6).

- Briefs courtesy UMass Media Relations

Harry Potter.
Yeah, we know it's in theatres Friday, but we saw it Tuesday.

Collegian Arts: We're that good.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Two of these five women have played soccer together since they were ten. See Sports to find out which two.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 14

Volume CVIII Issue 49 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, November 15, 2001

Islam Week showcases key speaker

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

Imam Siraj Wahaj offered an audience of nearly 500 attendees "the solution" to the world's social ills at Islam Awareness Week's key event, held in the Campus Center auditorium last night.

The lecture, titled "The Solution," was selected by the University of Massachusetts Muslim Students Association chapter to address issues of racism, terrorism, intolerance and related issues. Wahaj, a world-renowned speaker based out of New York, discussed the topics in regard to Islam.

"We believe that Islam has the answers for all the social ills the world is presented with. Allah never sends a disease unless he sends a cure also," stated Wahaj. "Maybe the Koran worked 1,400 years ago, maybe hundreds of years ago in the desert ... [but] does it, in fact, have the solutions for the problems that confront man?"

COURTESY MUSLIM POST

Imam Siraj Wahaj speaking at Rutgers University earlier in the year. Imam Wahaj spoke at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Wahaj asserted that Islam is often misunderstood by many, including Muslims. The Koran, which Ramadan (the Muslim holy month of fasting, beginning this Saturday) commemorates, is both a message of faith and a method to live, he said. The assertions within the Koran cannot be changed because "it's not the words of men, which are fallible, but the words of Allah."

In order to deal with societal issues and to carry a relevant message to span centuries, Wahaj said the Koran must be flexible enough to deal with everything. He warns against those who take Koran verses and examine them individually. "When people take [Koran verses] out of context that creates animosity between us and we don't want that."

The Koran specifically deals with time and place, Wahaj said. He underlined the need to distinguish the differences between America and the rest of the world and the current era. Islam is the second most populous religion in the world with 1.2 billion devotees. Since Sept. 11, the American Islamic community has been increasingly popular with a high number of coverts, Wahaj said. He added that retail stores have not only been selling out of American flags due to the current patriotic fervor, but have also been selling Korans at an unusual high rate.

Islamic brotherhood, Wahaj believes, is one of the things that offers the solution to the world's problems. Malcolm X, he noted, appreciated this idea as expressed in Islam. He, as was Malcolm X, was once a member of the Nation of Islam.

As further solutions, Wahaj aimed to stress the difference between doctrine and people, particularly towards racism and terrorism. "There is no racism in Islam, but is there racism among some Muslims? ... There is no terrorism in Islam, but is there terrorism among some Muslims? Yes, we have to be honest!"

He also addressed racism on a wider scale. "There are people in this world, in this country who have dehumanized black people for years – we were [considered] subhuman. By not long ago, I mean 15 minutes."

"Sometimes our Muslim brothers from the East didn't understand that but I'm sure they do now, don't they?" he posed, referring to the recent practice of profiling Arabs and Muslims.

During the question and answer session that followed the lecture, one attendee asked Wahaj to specify the differences between terrorism and jihad. A legitimate jihad, he said, would be called upon by legitimate heads of state and that the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks should not be confused with a jihad mission. A young boy stepped up to the microphone and asked Wahaj whether what was happening in Afghanistan was "war or slaughter?"

Other audience members expressed their grief over the recent war effort in

Turn to ISLAM page 3

Great American Smokeout seeks quitters

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

They're dispersed among the crowds of students walking to class; they're hovered outside of every building; they're discriminated against in area restaurants; they've got numerous air fresheners dangling in their cars and they are always preceded by a pungent odor when they make an entrance.

They are the smokers.

Today, the American Cancer Society is asking smokers to reconsider their potentially deadly habit and participate in the 25th annual Great American Smokeout. On this day, local organizers and public health officials are asking all smokers to give up cigarettes for a day and learn about the dangerous effects of smoking that will ultimately lead to their quitting.

"College students are the youngest age to which the tobacco industry can market and promote," Ellen Leahy-Pile, the Coordinator of the College Mobilization Network said. "If they graduate without becoming smokers, they are unlikely to be purchasers later in life."

This year, the University of Massachusetts is celebrating the Great American Smokeout thanks to the collaborative effort of the Peer Health Education Program, the Residence Life's Community Development and Health Issues Committee, and the Tobacco Free Network of Hampshire County's College Mobilization Network.

Representatives of the Peer Health Education Program have been manning a table in the Campus Center concourse since Tuesday to publicize today's event. They have been distributing lollipops and information about smoking.

Today, the College Mobilization Network is providing even more incentives to quit smoking. Every time a smoker comes to the table and hands over their cigarettes, they will be rewarded with prizes. Terrell Blackmon, a local message therapist, has donated his time and his portable massage chair in exchange for smokers' cigarettes.

Several local businesses have made donations in support of the campus effort, including gift certificates from Aqua Massage at the Holyoke mall, and 20 percent-off cards for anything at the UStore. The promoters of the event hope that by offering treats to smokers, they will be able to educate people about the dangers of smoking and entice them to quit.

Turn to SMOKEOUT, page 3

MARTINA CITOLO/COLLEGIAN

Still going...
Construction on the Boltwood Walk garage continued as rain fell on downtown Amherst yesterday.

Van Meter basement rivals TRL at special MTV Coffee House

Van Meter welcomed the newly established MTV University channel yesterday for their weekly Koffe Haus. The Koffe Haus is a weekly event in the Van Meter basement sponsored by the House Council and led by senior Dave Miller. Miller along with other House Council members set the stage for weekly acts, many of whom have become regular performers.

Miller saw the proposal for the new channel and sent producer Morgan Hertzan an email asking whether they would be interested in coming to the Koffe Haus. Ten minutes after sending the email Miller received a call from Hertzan saying the channel was definitely interested.

"They (MTV) were really psyched about it, especially the performance from the Cold Duck Trio," said Miller.

Van Meter resident Caitlin Crosby was equally impressed.

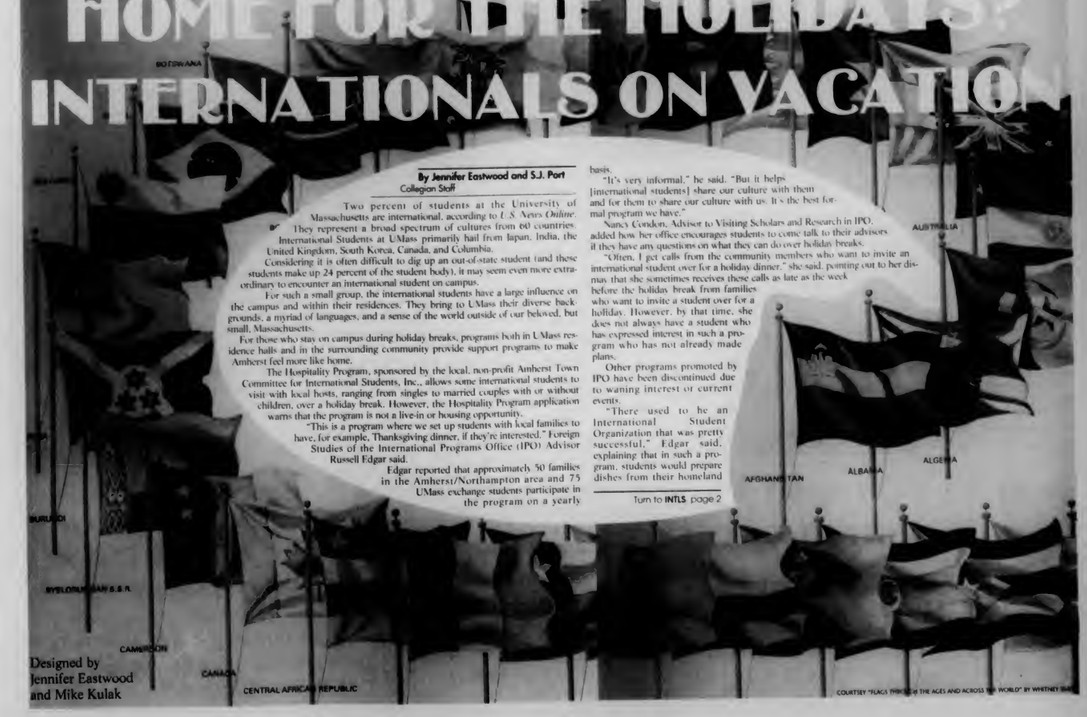
"I was really impressed with how it all came together. Dave Miller, M.C., does a great job every week, and I was especially impressed with the musical talent tonight," said Crosby after the last act had wrapped.

Anyone interested in performing should contact Miller or the Van Meter House Council.

— S.J. Port

Fraternity funding fight in SGA; flag flap returns

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff



The placing of an American flag at the Student Government Association's Senate meeting was just one of the many highlights of last night's Senate meeting.

With little mention of the previous evening's Judiciary Hearing, the Senate pressed on to tackle issues surrounding funding allocations as well as by-law changes.

A motion presented by Steve Hueschele, chair of the Finance Committee asked for the allocation of

Turn to SGA page 3

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS? INTERNATIONALS ON VACATION

COURTESY "FLAGS THROUGH THE AGES AND ACROSS THE WORLD" BY WHITNEY SMITH

By Jennifer Eastwood and S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Two percent of students at the University of Massachusetts are international, according to U.S. News Online.

They represent a broad spectrum of cultures from 60 countries. International Students at UMass primarily hail from Japan, India, the United Kingdom, South Korea, Canada, and Columbia.

Considering it is often difficult to dig up an out-of-state student (and these students make up 24 percent of the student body), it may seem even more extraordinary to encounter an international student on campus.

For such a small group, the international students have a large influence on the campus and within their residences. They bring to UMass their diverse backgrounds, a myriad of languages, and a sense of the world outside of our beloved, but small, Massachusetts.

For those who stay on campus during holiday breaks, programs both in UMass residence halls and in the surrounding community provide support programs to make Amherst feel more like home.

The Hospitality Program, sponsored by the local, non-profit Amherst Town Committee for International Students, Inc., allows some international students to visit with local hosts, ranging from singles to married couples with or without children, over a holiday break. However, the Hospitality Program application warns that the program is not a live-in or housing opportunity.

"This is a program where we set up students with local families to have, for example, Thanksgiving dinner, if they're interested," Foreign Studies of the International Programs Office (IPO) Advisor Russell Edgar said.

Edgar reported that approximately 50 families in the Amherst/Northampton area and 75 UMass exchange students participate in the program on a yearly basis.

"It's very informal," he said. "But it helps [international students] share our culture with them and for them to share our culture with us. It's the best formal program we have."

Nancy Condon, Adviser to Visiting Scholars and Research in IPO, added how her office encourages students to come talk to their advisors if they have any questions on what they can do over holiday breaks.

"Often, I get calls from the community members who want to invite an international student over for a holiday dinner," she said, pointing out to her dismay that she sometimes receives these calls as late as the week before the holidas break from families who want to invite a student over for a holiday. However, by that time, she does not always have a student who has expressed interest in such a program who has not already made plans.

Other programs promoted by IPO have been discontinued due to waning interest of current events.

"There used to be an International Student Organization that was pretty successful," Edgar said, explaining that in such a program, students would prepare dishes from their homeland

Turn to INTLS page 2

Designed by Jennifer Eastwood and Mike Kulak

intls

continued from page 1

and host a social in the Student Union Ballroom.

Condon noted the yearly IPO Montreal trip, scheduled each year during the Thanksgiving break, as another faded program.

"Because of the Sept. 11 attacks and the troubles people are having with traveling, we decided to cancel it this year," Condon said.

Individual programs are set up in residence halls for those living in areas with high concentrations of international students.

Mohamed Good, Residence Director of Prince and Crampton residence halls in Southwest, reported that his office never closes throughout the year, regardless if the University is on break or not.

He has directed 22 programs cluster wide for graduate students, exchange students, international visiting students who spend three to four months, and non-traditional students.

"We wanted to be able to get together and establish a closeness where people can communicate," said Good, citing an international social being held this Saturday as an example.

Although the number changes from year to year, approximately 450 to 500 residents from 40 to 50 different countries participate in the program, creating said Good, a diverse body.

International residents are asked them to cook their traditional dishes by submitting a list of their required ingredients to the cluster office personnel who buy the products, resulting in about 40 different types of dishes. After the dishes are made, everyone in the residence area dines at the social together.

"At Thanksgiving, we have many international students. We buy the dinner for them," Good said.

He noted that it this traditional-style turkey dinner with all the fixings in fact attracted approximately 80 people last year.

"We asked people if they were staying or not, and actually more came than said were staying," Good said. "This year, we've estimated about 100 people, but we always buy more [food] so people can have enough."

"It's very informal," he said. "But it helps [international students] share our culture with them and for them to share our culture with us."

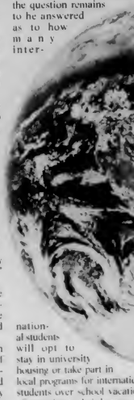
During Winter Break, the cluster office hosts a social on New Year's Eve, providing an opportunity to spend some time with others, said Good.

"During winters, there are two things we encourage students not to talk about with others," he added. "First is religion. Second is politics.

"However," he noted, "culture is not an area of conflict for the us. In the residences halls, the programs have to create a mutual respect for each other," adding that this is done through music, art, and food.

People come from different countries and work well with each other, making it a very successful program, he added.

We ask the residents where they want to go and what they want to do," said Good.



Every week an event takes place, he said, citing examples such as cluster-wide ice cream socials, parties, movie nights, and Sunday brunches prepared by the House Council.

The Round the World Women Program is for the female spouses of visiting international students and professors who come to the area and spend time with their families on holiday breaks, Nancy Condon, Advisor to Visiting Scholars and Research in International Programs Office, reported.

"We usually have a holiday party where people often get invited to people' houses for Thanksgiving or something," said Condon. "It's informal but it seems to work."

The IPO Web site stated that the organization was founded over 30 years ago to promote the interaction of new internationals with the local community, specifically international women who were associated with the educational communities and businesses within the Amherst area.

With fears of more planes crashing spreading across the country and people praying for safe landings, the question remains to be answered as to how many international students will opt to stay in university housing or take part in local programs for international students over school vacations instead of returning to their homes.

As the majority of students drive home to see their families over the upcoming Thanksgiving and Winter breaks international students look closer to campus for alternatives to flying and opportunities to experience American life and holidays with local American families.

Because not all international students live in dorms, such as the Lewis International House in Northeast or Brett in Central, that remains open for nine consecutive months, some must move out of the dorms over holiday breaks. In such cases, Condon pointed out that students often visit friends' homes over extended breaks.

Both the Lewis International House and the Thatcher Language Program housing stay open for students over breaks, as alternative options to leaving the area.

Javier Fernandez, a second year Biology graduate student said that he would not be traveling outside of the country for the Thanksgiving holiday.

"I'm going to my girlfriend's home," he said, adding that he feels little grief over not going home for this particular holiday break. "It's too short of a break for such a trip. It's already such a hassle to try to fly within the states let alone to try to do any international trip."

Those international students who do leave the area sometimes take the chance to travel on the continent, while others choose to fly home to exotic locations such as Italy, Venezuela or Switzerland, that they call home.

Freshman Marilyn Kyere came to UMass as a member of the international community, but has experienced life in the valley for the past four years as a student at Northfield Mount Hermon Preparatory and Boarding School in Northfield, Massachusetts. Born in Ghana, Kyere has lived in Germany and Switzerland and currently resides with her family in Rome, Italy. Thanksgiving and winter break pose a challenge for Kyere who is not sure how she will get to her chosen destinations.

"I have a place to go, but it's always the question of how I can get there," said Kyere, adding that over winter break she plans to fly home to Rome. "I'm so scared to fly, but I still want to be with my family."

Kyere's family had planned to visit her this past October but their plans were canceled due to the Sept. 11 attacks. International flight has become a serious problem for Americans as well as international scholars on visas.

Kyere feels that few people treat her differently because of her international status, a perception she accepts as a compliment.

"A lot of people here think that I am American. I do wish I knew more international students. I think you really have to go to Northeast or Gorman in Central to find international students," Kyere said.

Fernandez also explained that his fears of traveling home, specifically for him to Venezuela, for Winter break do not exceed that of anyone else.

"Everybody has a level of concern," said Fernandez.

"If you're traveling in the U.S., treat it just as you would if you were traveling outside the U.S.," said a representative of the International Programs Office who spoke last night in the Lewis TV Lounge in Northeast during an information session setup for international students and scholars who plan on traveling this coming holiday season.

The representative also strongly recommended students bring their I-94 cards to the office, so that the office could photo copy the card, notarize that copy, and return it for students to carry on them at all times.

The I-94 card is part of the documentation international students with student visas have always been required by law to carry with them at all time. However it is not until as of late that this regulation has been enforced.

Another option for international students remaining in the area during breaks is to work. According to the IPO Globe, international students are much more likely to gain employment permission during school sanctioned breaks than during the regular school year.

The IPO newsletter for October was a litany of advice and recommendations for international students concerning their travel and break plans. The newsletter even addressed rumors facing the community about student visas being frozen for the six months following the Sept. 11 attacks.

As Americans, we often consider what affects the Sept. 11 tragedies have had on our nation and its business. However, the small but important community of international students at UMass forces us to see beyond our locality and value how close how homes are.

"I have a place to go, but it's always the question of how I can get there," said Kyere.

As the holiday season dawns upon us, consider where your peers are headed and take the opportunity to share holiday traditions with all whom you consider friends. Remember though some of us are far from home, home is where the heart is.

Some information in this story came from U.S. News Online.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and mid-semester, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delanó Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gircyez-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Smiarwski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

UMass basketball

Basketball Season Opener

FRIDAY • NOV. 16th • 7:00 PM

UMASS vs. ARKANSAS LITTLE ROCK

William D. Mullins Center

HOW TO GET TICKETS?

Student Tickets FREE!
for undergraduate students with valid UMass ID

TICKETS ARE AVAILABLE AT

CAMPUS CENTER • MONDAY - FRIDAY 10:00 AM - 4:00 PM
CURRY HICKS CAGE • MONDAY - FRIDAY 10:00 AM - 4:00 PM
MULLINS CENTER • MONDAY - FRIDAY 8:30 AM - 5:00 PM
in advance and on game night

NEW FOR THIS SEASON!
DOORS OPEN 2 HOURS PRIOR TO GAME TIME - STUDENTS ONLY - SOUTH GATE

Attention Students!
Sign up in the south entrance for The SpringbreakGirl.com giveaway where two lucky students will compete during the game for a chance to win an all expense paid springbreak trip to Cancun.

UMass HOCKEY
VS.
UMASS LOWELL

William D. Mullins Center
THIS SATURDAY 7:00 pm

IT's CANNED FOOD NIGHT!
bring canned food to the game to benefit the Amherst Survival Center smokeout

continued from page 1

"I think that we need to make our presence," Daniella Ben-Simon, a consultant for the Tobacco Free College Mobilization Network said. "You walk out of a classroom and there's a cloud of smoke in your face. [I think] people don't realize it's so dangerous."

The need for the Great American Smokeout was planted back in 1971 in Randolph, MA. A man named Arthur P. Mullaney asked people to give up their cigarettes for a day and donate the money they would have spent on cigarettes to a high school scholarship fund.

The idea continued to grow when Lynn Smith, of the Monticello Times in MN, organized the first Don't Smoke Day, or D-Day. By 1976, the California Division of the American Cancer Society succeeded in getting nearly one million smokers to quit for the day. Finally, the first national Great American Smokeout was held in 1977.

"Basically it was invented to give some smokers a day to have a smoke-free day," Leahy-Pile said. "They [cigarettes] are really the only product sold in the US that if used exactly the way the manufacturers advise, kill 30 percent of the people who use them."

In 1994, the Amherst Board of Health laid the foundation for the total smoking ban covering the workplace, restaurants, bars and other public areas. The ordinance banned the sale of individual cigarettes and vending machines, and established fines for selling to minors. It also required the licensing of tobacco retailers.

According to the College Mobilization Network and the American Cancer Society, approximately 47 million adults in the US currently smoke and an estimated half will die prematurely from smoking. Similarly troubling are their statistics that claim that lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer death for men and women, and more than 80 percent are thought to result from smoking.

The College Mobilization Network and the Peer Health Education Committee hope that the Smokeout will be successful on campus in raising awareness of the health risks of smoking and will help more people to quit.

"We're a young, active population and it's important to help people quit and help the non-smokers stay smoke-free," Sally Linowski, a Community Health and Patient Educator said. "It's important to recognize [the Smokeout day] because it's a national observance."

Athletic Council defends funding

By Erik Haan
Collegian Staff

The Athletic Council will present its annual report to the Faculty Senate on Thursday.

Among the key issues in the report, which is for the 2000-2001 academic year, are athletic expenditures by the University of Massachusetts compared to its athletic peers and increased costs of athletics amidst declining revenues. A motion to authorize the Program and Budget Council to review these issues will follow the presentation.

The Athletic Council's views on the comparison of athletic expenditures between UMass and its peers came in response to a report entitled "A Comparison of Revenues and Expenditures at the University of Massachusetts and Six Peer Institutions," which was prepared by the Office of Financial and Cost Analysis in cooperation with the Office of Academic Planning and Assessment and the Office of Institutional Research. The report stated UMass spent a far greater portion of its fiscal 1999 general operating budget on athletics than its peers.

The Athletic Council said in its report that this is a misconception because the six peer institutions chosen were not truly comparable to UMass in sources of athletic funding.

"Basically, the critical issue here is that all of the comparative schools have [Division One] football programs with large revenue generation," said Professor Nelson Lacey, secretary of the Athletic Council. "In fact, several of those peer schools have football programs which are larger than our whole athletic program."

The Council also noted that the Athletic Program's budget has been hurt because costs have increased while revenues from the entire program have declined.

"We have found that athletic program operational costs have increased, there have been no real increases in fee support and significant real revenue reductions have occurred in both state support and in revenue production from the revenue-producing sports," the report stated. "Since the highly successful 1995-1996 men's basketball season, the UMass Athletic Fund (UMAF) account has experienced a steady decline, in terms of both donors and the overall amounts of donations."

A motion to allow the Program and Budget Council to review these and other issues presented in the Athletic Council's report will follow, although the final say on the Athletic Department's budgetary concerns may come from elsewhere.

"The final direction we will take will be determined by the Board of Trustees," said Professor Craig Moore, chair of the Program and Budget Council. "I am not sure our council can have very much influence on the outcome."

The meeting will be Thursday at 3:30 p.m. in Herter 227.

Police arrest two for drugs in Durfee

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Numerous arrests occupied the time of the University of Massachusetts Police Department last week as well as incidents of violence during the weekend.

The first liquor law violation arrest occurred on last Thursday, Jim Lyons spokesman for the UMPD explained. Michael Nichols, 19, was arrested outside of Washington Dormitory for the possession of liquor by someone who is under the age of 21.

The police received a call stating that two individuals were seen entering an area near Durfee Conservatory on last Friday. When police arrived they spotted both individuals with what they believed to be marijuana. They arrested 19-year-old Zachary Brefeld, of Edwardsville, Illinois for possession and intent to distribute a class D substance, and Christopher Donah, 17, of Holyoke for possession of a class C substance.

"One individual had what looked to be a burning marijuana cigarette," Lyons explained. "He was arrested for possession of a class D substance."

Also that weekend maintenance men for Van Meter dormitory reported that they spotted a semi-conscious male on the stairs with what appeared to be a pistol.

Lyons explained that police made attempts to rouse him before coming to the conclusion that he was intoxicated and could not care for himself. He was taken into protective custody and it was discovered that the pistol was a BB gun.

The police arrived at North Village Apartments on Wednesday at approximately 9:00 a.m. to respond to a call relating to a domestic disturbance. Police escorted one individual to the Amherst Shelter for counseling.

An arrest in an incident of a similar nature was made on Saturday when 26-year-old David Heers from Kentucky was arrested for violating an abuse prevention order. He was arrested in North Village Apartments that night at 9:50 a.m.

Police also are trying to apprehend the individual or individuals responsible for the increasing number of breakins in lot 11. An additional incident occurred this past week when 80 CDs were stolen from an unlocked car parked in the lot.

Lyons explained that the police were continuing to investigate the break-ins and are still examining the possibility that the incidents may be connected.

"When incidents like that occur they are always looking for way to connect these types of things together," Lyons said.

sga

continued from page 1

$1500 to the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. The amount started a debate between members of the Senate regarding the fact that the motion had yet to go through committee.

Alpha Phi Alpha requested the money in order to fund their Black and Gold Pageant that will take place at the end of November.

"Our fraternity is based on community service and scholarship, this is event is not a beauty pageant," Steve Clunis, Alpha Phi Alpha President said. "Were a non co-ed fraternity and this is an opportunity to include a female perspective into our fraternity's activities."

Members of the Senate brought forth questions regarding the pageant and it's possible tendency towards sexism towards women. Members of the Senate further stated that they didn't feel that by destroying one community to build another was right.

Clunis responded by explaining that the event was open to everyone and not sexist. He continued, explaining that their sister sorority was very much involved in the event as well.

"We've already pulled together the ALANA [Asian, Latino, African and Native American] community," Clunis said. "Our sister organization is very involved and is on the panel of judges for the event. This is not a beauty pageant, it's open to everyone on this campus, and we have people of every background filling out applications to be apart of this program."

Members of the Senate continued to speak out against funding the event due to the fact that the amount Alpha Phi Alpha was requesting was $200 less than their total budget.

"I suggest that they either move their event back or something," Senator Brian Thompson said. "The fact of the matter is that they're asking for $1500 when they were given $1700 for the entire year, and this doesn't make sense to me."

Clunis stated that due to budget cuts, all Registered Student Organizations were not given the amount of funding requested.

After much debate Speaker Aaron Saunders called a twenty-minute recess in an effort for the Finance Committee to meet and discuss the matter in committee.

"This is unorthodox right now, but it's important for things to go through committee so that we can keep procedure," Saunders said. "This way they can come back before the Senate and have their committee's vote."

The Finance Committee returned to present to the Senate a unanimous positive recommendation of the motion. The Senate then passed the motion, with several dissenters.

A request to place a motion on the Senate's agenda calling for the American flag to be present at every Senate meeting struck feedback from members as well. The motion failed to make it to the agenda. However, shortly their after, students came into the Senate and posted an American flag on the back wall of the meeting room.

"That was placing the flag[childish and if they had a problem with the Senate's decision they could have come to me," Saunders said. "They won't interrupt our meetings anymore, and unfortunately I wouldn't expect anything less from those individuals, they're just here to cause turmoil."

Other motions passed were a by-law change regarding misreading between Title 9 and Title 7. The motion called for Title 9 to be changed to read that RSO's may petition for budget appropriation for the Student Activities Trust Fund as set by the guidelines of the Ways and Means committee. The motion passed unanimously by the Senate.

Further motions passed included the appointment of Justin Provencher to the Programming Board as well as a motion calling for the administration to converse with the SGA before approving charters involving the Campus Center and Student Union.

Islam

continued from page 1

Afghanistan, agreeing with the boy that it appears to be slaughter. Wahaj stated his sincere prayer to the Muslims of Afghanistan, of both the Northern Alliance and the Taliban, noting that Afghanistan is the poorest country in the world and has been embroiled in war for decades.

The flexibility of the Koran, Wahaj said, is also shown in the fact that, theoretically, all people are potential Muslims – the Pope, rabbis, and homosexuals.

To Muslims, "Allah understands that we are human" and one could, again theoretically, go through Ramadan and eat everyday if they forget to fast, he said. That day of fasting does not have to be compensated for, Wahaj said, and if a person is sick, they need not fast on those days.

Ending his lecture, he turned again to the Koran to find the "solutions". "If you want to find the gems of the Koran, you have to dig for [them]. Islam makes you think, it's not a religion you just recite. Islam is not just a producer of reciters, but Islam must be a producer of thinkers.

"Brothers and sisters, I wish you really understood the sweetness of this faith," Wahaj said.

work for graphix

SATURN

Get service at Saturn of Hadley, no matter what year, make or model... foreign or domestic!

Oil & filter change only $19.95. Change oil & filter; top off all fluids; adjust tire pressures; hand wash & vacuum; up to 4 quarts of oil; cannot be combined with any other offer.

Cooling System Service - $39.95. Flush and fill antifreeze; pressure test system for leaks; inspect belts & hoses; hand wash & vacuum; up to 2 gallons of antifreeze; cannot be combined with any other offer.

Mass State Inspection - $29.00. Mon- Fri 8-12/1-5, Thurs 8-12/1-7; first come, first served appointments.

Free 25 Point Inspection upon request. Includes checks on steering, suspension, tires, brakes, belts, hoses, lights, wiper blades and more.

Who else will wash and vacuum your car...

while you eat jelly donuts?

10% Off All Orders With A Student Or Faculty ID.

Call our service department today at (413) 584-6066 to schedule an appointment, or just stop by Monday-Friday 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Thursday 7:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and Saturday 7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. We are conveniently located on Route 9 in Hadley at a PVTA stop and have direct access to the bike path. We also offer a courtesy shuttle service within a 15-mile radius (must call to schedule). All offers are valid with any student or faculty ID at Saturn of Hadley.

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 15, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Taliban on the run:
Small freedoms settling in

ERIN WALLACE

Small freedoms, finally, for the citizens of Kabul.

A day after the Taliban regime began withdrawing from the capital city of Afghanistan, obvious signs of oppression being lifted hit the streets: women were removing veils from their faces, men were shaving, and music echoed through the air, flying in the face of the departed, harsh rule.

Under the Taliban – which insisted a strict form of Islam – virtually all forms of Western influence were banned. Television, photography – even items as insignificant as a deck of playing cards – were prohibited to help aid the pursuit of forming the purest Muslim state in the world.

Although the Ministry of the Promotion of Virtue and Prevention of Vice has largely pulled out, the long shadow they cast still hangs – making the actions of the Kabul people that much more laudable. With the chance of repercussions still alive in some forms, they've taken this sudden window and made it a very real opportunity – to erase a past of oppression and forge new personal ground.

Of course, it would be naive to think that these small freedoms will lead to completely new lives – and that all people of Kabul are supportive of the shifts in lifestyle. Included in the latter group would be the Pashtuns – the pro-Taliban citizens who have already experienced aggressive force now that their cause has largely been dissolved. As with most things, one problem leads to another: both sides are never happy – and the ability to fix anything quickly becomes disabled.

These alterations in basic acts are important, but the long term affects of them can't be diagnosed quickly – and must likely for some time to come. As reported by CNN, the scenes of exultation are masking legitimate concerns. As the Northern Alliance marches into the city, fears that the capture will spark ethnic infighting – as were the norm before Taliban rule in 1996 – are real. Also, with the Taliban ousted, citizens will now have to grow accustomed to the sight of armed soldiers in the streets.

The cycle continues, then, with no solution in sight.

It's easy to sit back, removed from the situation as we are, and toss broad statements around. As individuals with unique interests and motivations, we all come out of this on a different side, and tend to think of our opinion as the only opinion.

In the midst of that banter, however, there are indisputable truths: that none of us are exactly right, that no one person among us knows the solution, and that the people of Kabul themselves see the situation shift on a daily basis. It's a stripper, cannot help but escape our grasp for some time.

In that meantime, we see the efforts of good and bad at work; we see innocent citizens regaining certain abilities that we take for granted. Though it should be encouraging, there is much more to get through before the small victories can be considered the very things that "win" the war.

Information from CNN's com was used in this story.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Relive your childhood
Give Harry Potter a shot

TEHANI SCHNEIDER

Regression. As defined by my abnormal psychology professor, it stands as one of our most basic defense mechanisms, a way to cope as an unconscious response to threats or change. It's a form of degeneration, a reversion to simpler times, perhaps even to childhood. A mode of survival, it instinctively comes into play when our lives are disrupted. And it can be a wonderful thing. Wouldn't it help to assuage our fears if we could leave this world of insanity behind? Even for a few hours or so? Right now, we have Harry Potter to show us the way.

On Friday, the much-anticipated movie premier of the first installment of J.K. Rowling's best selling children's books will finally hit theaters nationwide. Just in time, Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone has arrived to captivate audiences of all ages. Not since Dan Gonzalez has one little boy so sparked the interest of the American public. All right, so he's fictional, but that's not the point. Now is an opportune time to retreat into a world of full-fledged fantasy, a world as far away from the reality of today as our imagination will allow. Now is the time to discover a wondrous place called Hogwarts through the eyes of a young boy, ambiguously marked for greatness by the lightning-shaped scar on his forehead. It's a "charm" school where future wizards and witches hone their skills, sorcery reigns supreme, and alchemy and divination are the order of the day. One can soar on a broomstick in a game called Quidditch, capture a troll, keep a dragon for a pet and confront a three-headed dog who guards the key to the Elixir of Life. It's a world where Muggles are kept at bay, invisibility can be a game professors routinely transform into animals, and owl messengers are the main postal source (without bringing the threat of anthrax).

This past summer, I finally took the time to read Rowling's engaging tales, and I was immediately hooked. As one of the last few people to jump on the Harry Potter bandwagon, I admit I was skeptical at first, for I couldn't see what all the fuss was about.

What could possibly be so special about these stories? They are, after all, prose for children. And of course, I do prefer more mature material. But after hearing constant raves and reading the extraordinary, undulating praise, I finally gave in. And I see it now. I think the best word to sum it up would have to be nostalgia.

While reading the first four books in the ingenious series, I was transported back in time to when I first encountered the magic of children's literature. Since I have been a voracious reader nearly my entire life (translation: bookworm), there are many books and other series that I fondly recalled to draw comparisons to Harry Potter. Reminiscent of C.S. Lewis' timeless Chronicles of Narnia, Harry's adventures at Hogwarts brought me back as far as I could regress – to Peter, Lucy, Susan and the lion and witch they found through their wardrobe. I could even see the resemblance to Maurice Sendak's Where the Wild Things Are, which is still one to cherish.

But most similar to Rowling's genius were the tales I read by another gifted British author. Somewhere in between E.B. White, Beverly Cleary and Judy Blume, I discovered the enchanting stories by Roald Dahl.

> "What could possibly be so special about these stories?... I think the best word to sum it up would have to be nostalgia."

Through Dahl's marvelous prose, I journeyed with a boy named James and a flurry of friendly critters aboard a giant, airborne fuzzy fruit. I met an extraordinary little girl named Matilda whose Carrie-esque superpowers helped her find true happiness. A Halloween staple was given a new twist when I learned that those traditional old hags on broomsticks just might don human disguises to carry out their audacious plan for worldwide dominance. And to save the best for last, Dahl's sugar-spun (literally) story introduced that memorable grandmaster of goodies, a genius named Willy Wonka. So what if he was a wild-eyed, oddly dressed eccentric who employed androgynous orange creatures to work his candy factory assembly line? Wonka's wizardry preserved like an Everlasting Gobstopper – he was the original Candyman.

My favorite of Dahl's books (and still one of the best kiddy movies around), Charlie and the Chocolate Factory preached two of life's greatest lessons: 1) strangers with candy are cool and 2) gluttony = punishment. That second lesson – which held fast until the movie Se7en came along and did one better to the psyche – was a direct warning to all the Augustus Gloops, Veruca Salts and Violet Beauregards of the world. Yes, you too might "accidentally" fall into a river of chocolate, be bopped like a bad egg or blow up into a giant blueberry and be disposed of by the Oompa Loompas if you were a greedy, presumptuous spoiled brat. Materialism, expressed in the insatiable desire for edible goodness, was the root of all evil in Wonka's world.

Whether you believed in the existence of snozzberries or not, or if we truly are the music makers and the dreamers of dreams, you had to admit that the creation of Willy Wonka as well as the other offerings by Dahl were truly unique. The same goes for Harry Potter and the future delights Rowling has stored up her sleeve. In Harry's last three years at Hogwarts (although I'm sure the series will be extended – Rowling has a veritable cash cow that's in no danger of being milked dry), I am sure the movie adaptation of Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone will be a smashing success here, just as it was when it debuted in Britain last week.

If you haven't experienced the charm of Harry Potter and you've become nostalgic reading my recollection of Dahl and other books, I recommend you read the first book or see the film. And no, I haven't been paid off by the movie's producers to shamelessly promote the film. If last week's pre-order ticket sales are any indication, it will be one of the biggest films of all time. Take the plunge to journey to platform nine and three-quarters. (Read the books if you don't know what I mean.) Trust me, you won't be disappointed.

Tehani Schneider is a Collegian Staff Member.

Life is not a party

ERIN WALLACE

People in and around Amherst – or Southwest, as Madway my family friends and even kids in my own classes, most high school people call them – UMass and how much of a shit it used to be. They disfavor by saying how we are a drinking school and most of us do – and we do work at go to class because we feel they waste our education by partying.

In my opinion, perhaps the people who do – especially for those generalizations – are speaking from the part of campus notorious for that type of mass which is, of course, Southwest. So they come with that the ideas they have about it becomes true applies to the entire campus. I beg to differ.

First of all, Southwest is the largest living area on campus with 10 dorms including five high rising towers. Of course its going to be said. Many people always spend their weekends elsewhere.

I live in Southwest. I have, on occasion, joined in on the weekend fun. I smoke pot, I drink, I party, I do crazy things and I sometimes get sick as a result of my actions. I'm not proud of it, but I don't regret it. I've had some of the most memorable times of my life in Southwest. I've met some of my best friends here, and even had my heart broken here. I've made mistakes and sometimes paid for them. I've done things that I'm not proud of. The people who are quick to categorize people based on their party habits are the ones who don't get it.

I don't need a reason to attend this university, and I doubt I got a damn good education out of it. Sure I can have no fun every once in awhile, but has every single weekend out of the year. The morning after all drunk, looks at itself out of myself do various things I will regret in the morning, perhaps up, buck crash, sleep and wake with a killer hangover. Big deal. It's not worth it to me. Besides which, technically, drinking is illegal for all of my 18 years. However, it's not like anyone ever seriously takes that into account anyway.

Sometimes I feel as though I'm missing something by not being mixed in the crazy concrete animal anarchy that is Southwest, with the supposed constant parties, Yankee hating riots, bon fires, and fire works, and drunken idiots shouting and stumbling around. But then I remember that I'm not drinking/smoking my life away and I'd rather spend time with great friends, maybe tossing back a few, but not being an idiot about it, not throwing up all over myself and feeling like a truck has run over my head repeatedly.

I can even begin to tell you how many times so far this year I've been thankful that I don't live amongst that mayhem. Yes, I do drink occasionally, but I have morals and principles and a strong belief in my religion which, in addition to causing me to hit the sack early on Saturday nights for church the next day, also tells me that these activities just are not me. I don't find any of it pleasurable or exciting. I find it stupid and revolting.

Please don't get me wrong, this is not an anti-Southwest rant. I'm just using Southwest as an example of why life is not a constant party to me. Finally, to all you Southwest inhibitors, have your fun, with all the bonfires, riots, wild parties and whatever else might ensue. But don't be stupid about it, for the greater good of the rest of campus. This university may be considered a zoo, to you, but life is not a constant party to others.

As a final note, please remember that is my opinion and even though it may not agree with yours, please do not attempt to burn down Sylvan. That would create even more trouble for everybody.

More trouble than alcohol or violent riots could ever cause.

Erin Wallace is a UMass Student

Ed/Op...the soapbox for your soul.

Letter to the Editor
This is not my war

To the editor:

I am writing in response to Sam Wilkinson's column 11/14/01. "Supporting our war" measures against Taliban are appropriate". Mr. Wilkinson, in these politically high-strung days of unrest at home and abroad, it is always important and appropriate to "mind your pronouns". This is not "our" war. I am not fighting this war. I don't have a gun, or an army-issue back pack, and I'm not enlisted. This is not my war. This is not "our" war. We are not the Army of UMass, only a small percentage of the student body is in the army and, well, as far as I know, they aren't shooting down aircraft on their way to Mahar Auditorium. However, it seems that many students share this belief that it is "our" war. With the same fervor that ignited riots over a stupid baseball game, students have adopted this idea that they are soldiers of justice fighting the evil un-American world (in Western Mass).

Sorry, folks, but if you think that donning your house, dorm, car, and clothing (and anything that can stand still) with American flags, than shouting racist comments in the name of America at people who don't appear to be from our country, that getting drunk at some stupid party with your American flag tee-shirt on screaming "U-S-A" over and over means that you are fighting "our" war, then maybe pronoun choice isn't the only problem that some UMass students have.

I, personally, do not agree with "Operation: Enduring Freedom". This is not because I am a filthy, crunchy, "stench-infested hippie" (as The Minuteman might tell you, simply because I don't have my American Flag tattoo), my opposition is largely the result of three main factors (aside from general dismay over any civilian deaths):

George W. Bush is capitalizing off of this war. His approval rating has been higher than ever before, largely because the American people seem to be shocked into stupidity. I feel like I should go on "Good Morning America" and say "Surprise! George W. Bush is still a doofus!" Two months ago we were all ready to bring back old Bill and all of those marvelous interns rather than deal with a man who can't even speak correctly. Now the nation is "united" under a man who appointed a fundamentalist Christian as attorney general (Islamic fundamentalists aren't the only type of fundamentalist maniacs).

The term "Operation: Enduring Freedom" is the stupidest name for a war I have ever heard of. (The "runners up" to the name for this war probably included "Operation: Enduring A Stupid President" and "Operation: Large Scale Murder Is Only Important When Its America We're Talking About".) Seriously, folks, when I hear "Operation: Enduring Freedom" I picture some person being whipped or harassed by some person or thing that symbolizes "freedom" and watching the harassed person grimace in pain and coddling its wounds while saying "Ouch! Freedom! Ooh! Oooh!"

We, as Americans, have still not come to terms with our role in the global economy. We are not the only nation who needs to realize their role in the global economy, but it just so happens that our realization, due to our wealth and power, is a little more important than that of a smaller country. For example, while I was walking through Northampton on a Saturday I came into contact with some flag-waving, George Bush-worshiping yahoos who held a sign that said "America: Love it or Leave it." This perfectly exemplifies the global identity realization problem in America, for even after the deaths of thousands of people, Americans still do not see that there is still work to be done. We are not seeing the issue.

This is about America, but it's about the world too and those demonstrators exhibited the response that 98% of Americans have also exhibited. I don't support this war, but I still love America. Am I supposed to leave simply because I don't, without question, support each and every American endeavor? I won't leave. That would be not seeing the issue (like the global identity paradigm) that I can make waves and try to improve my country. It's sad that people in this country believe Bush's idea that "its all them (the Taliban) and not us (or any of our actions)".

Wilkinson discussed the oppression within the Taliban-governed countries concerning women. I am a devoted feminist, but revolution must come from within a country. I don't recall an incident where another nation stood on the back of America in a "no bra-snapping" campaign. You can laugh at that statement, but it's the same dynamic. It's the issue of the "white man's burden", the nation sticking its noses and guns into cultural customs that are none of its business, simply because those customs are not our customs. If I could help to stop the oppression of women in the Middle East, I would embrace the opportunity to do so without hesitation, but that is their culture, and the women of the Middle East must begin revolution if they desire it. We can only offer assistance when that time comes, when the revolutionaries express need to us.

Mr. Wilkinson's point that "anyone claiming that the United States is, in any conceivable way, as oppressive as the Taliban has been for the last few years is completely devoid of the ability to rationally look at the world", demonstrates sadly, that he, in fact, is "devoid of the ability to rationally look at the world". Mr. Wilkinson, you are a white male in Massachusetts, which is why you don't find America to be oppressive. You can't really talk about oppression, not until you know what its like to be a woman in America, or a minority in America, or gay in America. Until you know what its like to be a girl in a classroom and be scared to participate in class discussions because of the possibility of being harassed by males in the class, you can't talk about oppression. Until you know what its like to be a gay male at a university that has residents like those In Southwest, until you are a gay male and you are so scared to walk alone at night because of the climate of homophobia on college campuses, you cannot discuss oppression. Until you have experienced racism, real racism, until someone has carved a swastika on your dorm room door because of your non-white skin color or religion, you cannot talk about oppression.

Americans speak at length about "accountability", that someone (be it individual or nation) must be held accountable, yet like the yahoos with the "America" sign, we want no part of our own responsibility. There is still work to be done. This war should be called "Operation: End and Understand Oppression." Perhaps under those terms could we assess the dynamic within the USA and in the outside world and learn from these experiences what we need to do to ensure the safety of Americans and citizens of other nations.

Thomas Naughton
UMass student.

William's musie a key player in Potter world

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

HARRY POTTER & THE SORCERER'S STONE
Original Motion Picture Soundtrack
Music by John Williams

Harry Potter & The Sorcerer's Stone, one of the most-anticipated films of the year, will most likely introduce the movie-going public to actors and actresses that will go on to be big stars. It will also serve as the next hugely profitable movie franchise. In all of this exciting newness, one thing remains constant: the magical score by John Williams.

Without composers like Williams, movies would lack the thrilling ability to emotionally stir audiences and take them to places unknown. Williams is the leader of the pack when it comes to extraordinary film scores, having composed the themes to some of the biggest movies of the past several decades: Jaws, E.T. and Indiana Jones. It's only fitting, then, that the Maestro helms the "next big thing" like Harry Potter.

The main theme, heard in the film's coming attractions, is mysterious and soothing. It starts with a very simple yet eerie piano pattern, lulling the listener into the fairy tale adventure of the story. It steadily builds and gains tempo, casting recollections of other works by Williams. At some points you can hear the powerful brass echoes he used in Hook, while other times being fully able to discern the romanticism that was a common motif in Star Wars. Williams has culled from the best of his works, molded and shaped them into something wholly new and highly likable.

Williams has created a bouncy, celtic-sounding orchestration for scenes taking place In Diagon Alley, the hidden London shopping area for wizards. Certainly a feast for the eyes in the film, the backing score casts a spell over the listener with its festiveness. Conversely, the threatening music that accompanies scenes in Gringott's Bank (a mysterious and scary place where wizards store their money) is acceptable, incorporating foreboding cellos, flighty flutes and an ominous background choir chant that was so effective in Williams' score for Amistad.

One of the movie's pivotal scenes revolves around a sports game called Quidditch, which can be compared to football played on flying broomsticks. Listening to the soundtrack selection of the Quidditch game would be enough in figuring out who wins and loses, and you wouldn't have to see any action on screen. Williams continued in figuring out who wins and loses, and you

Turn to SOUNDTRACK, page 8

Harry Potter: just as imagined

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

HARRY POTTER AND THE SORCERER'S STONE
Directed by Chris Columbus with Daniel Radcliffe, Emma Watson, and Robbie Coltrane Opens Friday

It is utterly depressing to watch a wonderful book be turned into an awful movie. It is painful to watch as beloved characters are twisted and prodded into Hollywood's idea of what they should be. It is heartbreaking to think of all the hard work that an author put into book only to have it butchered and marketed by the film industry.

This is not the case with Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone. Adapting a novel for the screen is never easy, but Chris Columbus did a wonderful job in translating author J.K. Rowling's tale of a boy wizard into a movie that is sure to devastate everything else at the box office this weekend.

The added bonus of seeing the movie three days before it premieres in the United States is just the icing on the cake.

It's difficult to review a film like this, especially when you know what's going to happen in it, what's going to happen in the sequel, and what's going to happen in the sequel after that, and well, you get the idea. I know all the characters. I know who the bad guy is. The only thing I didn't know about the world of Harry Potter was what watching a Quidditch match was like, or how the dormitory rooms looked. How tall is a mountain troll? These are the questions that are answered in watching a favorite book come to life on the big screen.

Newcomers to Harry Potter have no idea what I'm talking about.

Harry Potter is an orphan, left on the steps of his aunt and uncle's house after his parents were killed. His relatives treat him like a slave, while lavishing their attention on Harry's cousin Dudley. When Harry turns 11, mail starts to arrive for him; an odd occurrence, because as far as Harry knows nobody in the world cares about him. The mail, as Harry's peculiar abilities to make odd things happen, annoys his Uncle Vernon to no end. When the mail keeps coming, Vernon flips out, scaling up the house. Of course, this fails. Retreating to a small, storm swept island, Harry and his relatives take up residence in a small shack. It is there that he celebrates his 11th birthday, and his world changes.

Harry, cold and utterly miserable, receives an unexpected guest: the gigantic Rubeus Hagrid, gamekeeper at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. Hagrid tells him that he's a wizard, the son of a witch and a wizard, and that he's there to take Harry to school. This is a dream come true for Harry; he gets to get away from his relatives and actually learn something.

His adventures at Hogwarts make great cinema, just as they made great literature. Harry and his friends, in their search for the mystical Sorcerer's Stone (better known as the philosopher's stone to fans of alchemy) go through some interesting trials. The best if these is the Quidditch match.

Quidditch is game played on broomsticks, in which two teams try and throw a ball, called a quaffle, through one of three hoops, defended by a goalie called a keeper. Meanwhile, two balls called bludgers zip around the air and try and knock players off their brooms. The players are defended by teammates called beaters, armed with short clubs. And if this isn't complicated enough, there's a tiny ball called the golden snitch, which flies around the field incredibly fast. Players called seekers, who have to be quick, daring, and really good at flying, hunt the snitch. The Quidditch match is by far the most exciting scene in the movie, with incredible effects and heart pounding action that makes me wish it were a real game.

The really great thing about the movie is that you don't have to have read the books to enjoy the film. It's a kid's film, so character development for the Harry Potter novice may be less than what you're used to, but you still understand what's going on.

Besides, with "Harry Potter" a watchword among people from all walks of life and age groups, it's hard to imagine that anyone could be really in the dark over the movie. Even if you haven't read the books, you're sure to know that Harry Potter is a boy wizard. The movie is about Harry Potter, the boy wizard. 'Nuff said.

Well, not exactly. I can't say enough about how great a job screenwriter Steven Kloves did in truncated parts of the book so that the story moves quickly enough to get through almost the entire first book without getting bogged down. It certainly is a daunting task to take characters that millions of children and adults hold near and dear and create their story on the screen.

Chris Columbus deserves a lot of credit for remaining faithful to book. The best thing I can say about the movie is when I saw everything up there in full color; it was just as I imagined it. The way the characters – the actors, sorry – interact and go through the situations that were once just words on a page.

Columbus had a lot of help, though, from the wonderfully casting. The actors chosen to play the kids, unknowns and newcomers, mostly, are great. Daniel Radcliffe, who plays Harry, only had one other role before this. Rupert Grint IS Ron Weasley, Harry's best friend and partner in crime. Aside form a school play, he is a total newcomer to acting. Emma Watson gives a brilliant performance as Hermione Granger, the bookish gal pal of Ron and Harry.

The professors are spot on. Alan Rickman is scarily cool as Professor Severus Snape, the potions teacher who Harry is sure is evil. Dame Maggie Smith lends her considerable talents, as do Ruhbie Coltrane, Richard Harris, and John Cleese.

The effects are spectacular. The castle, the Quidditch field, the surrounding Dark Forest – the sets are amazingly detailed and wondrous.

The movie is wonderful. That's all I can say. It's a fun, lighthearted adventure that fans and newcomers alike will be sure to love. People of all ages, not just kids, will be able to relate not only to the characters, but also to the spirit behind them. It is great to be able to be a kid again, and to be able to dip into a world of magic and adventure is a pleasant escape as well as an excellent film.

J. K. Rowling and the birth of a phenomenon

Whether you like it or not, Harry Potter fever is here. It's not just books anymore, kids, now the phenomenon has landed upon Hollywood. Short of living underneath a rock, there is no possible way that the story of the boy wizard hasn't somehow come across your path. Now with Hollywood banking on making one Potter movie a year for the next half-dozen years, it is going to be even more difficult to steer clear of Potter-dom.

So why bother? After all, the Potter books are among the most imaginatively exciting and fresh fairy tales in a long time. Any age can take something away from them. If you're six years old, you might just get a really cool story out of it. More mature audiences, however, might be able to pick up on the societal and political commentaries made throughout the series. It's not just kid stuff, since an adult writes them, you know. Oh yeah, this is good, deep stuff.

For those of you yet unversed in the ways of muggles and Quidditch, I offer below an abbreviated, Cliffs Notes look-alike of the initial book in the series from which the film is based. Have no fear, I reveal nothing that would ruin surprises, and I also don't tell the entire book. Instead, it's only offering you a jump-start to the hysteria that is Harry, and if it sounds like it's up your alley, jump on the bandwagon and be prepared for the sequel by reading Harry Potter & The Chamber of Secrets.

Ever since Harry was born, he has lived with his nasty relatives, the Dursleys. They are so horrid, in fact that they make him live in a small alcove under the stairs. On his eleventh birthday, he receives word that he is the son of two famous wizards, who were killed shortly after his birth. Harry's life was spared, but a small lightning bolt scar was left upon his forehead. He is invited to attend Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, where he too will become famous. Despite the Dursleys not believing a bit of this, comedic situations come to pass that Harry is soon sent off to school there.

A giant named Hagrid takes Harry shopping at Diagon Alley, a street specializing in magical items and schoolbooks, only accessible to wizards. He also visits Gringott's Bank to withdraw money for these purchases, where he discovers just how much his late parents put away for him.

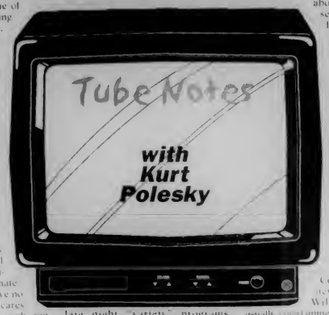
After boarding the train at Platform Nine and Three Quarters (accessible through a magical wall between Nine and Ten), he meets Hermione Granger and Ron Weasley, and the three become friends. He also encounters Draco Malfoy, a mean spirited schoolmate who automatically dislikes Harry upon first sight, because of his famous parentage.

When they all get to Hogwarts, they are led into the Great Hall, where a magical hat, called the Sorting Hat, places each new student into their designated House (similar to a dorm). Each house has their own reputation, and after much thought, Harry, Hermione and Ron are placed together in Gryffindor.

Harry meets a plethora of other characters like Hagrid, the giant groundskeeper, Professor Dumbledore, who can be likened to the headmaster of the school, and Professor Snape, who seems to Harry like he's up to no good. Harry soon joins the Quidditch team, a game that's like rugby on broomsticks. He does very well at the game, which further infuriates Malfoy.

In his travels throughout the school, Harry soon stum-

Turn to NOVEL, page 8



Arts and Living
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Design by Mike Kulak

The Tube's Good, Bad and Ugly

Forget prime time, some of televisions most entertaining fare is on late night. However if your late night viewing consists of watching Jay Leno make Lewinsky jokes, or trying to watch the scrambled porno on Channel 76, then it's time to look to "Tube Notes" as your new late night viewing guide.

Shows With Tube Notes Seal of Excellence:

The Howard Stern Radio Show (E! Weeknights 11/11:30 p.m.): The King of All Media is now the King of Late Night with his program featuring highlights from his radio show as well material exclusive to television. Sure some people hate Stern, but those people have no sense of humor, so who cares what they think. Stern's comedic timing and ad libing ability is what has made his radio show so successful and entertaining. Those same qualities come across in the television show. Add to that a hilarious cast of characters including the lovable Beetleance and you've got one heck of a show.

The Daily Show (Comedy Central Weeknights 11 p.m.): Hosted by Jon Stewart, this show is a consistently witty parody of news. SNL should take notes.

The Late Show With Conan O'Brien (NBC Weeknights 12:30 a.m.): Come and away the funniest of the late night "variety" programs. O'Brien's humor actually has some depth to it unlike his late night counterpart Leno.

Shows With The Tube Notes Seal of Crap:

The Tonight Show (NBC Weeknights 11:30 p.m.): Leno's shtick hasn't changed in years, and that's not a good thing. His softball style interviews are pathetic. Take out a few of his sex jokes, and his program could air on Saturday mornings. And for god's sake, how many jokes about Bill Clinton's sex life or George Bush's lack of intelligence can one person make?

MAD TV (Fox, Saturday 11:00 p.m.): One question about this show: Why?

Shows Somewhere in the middle:

Saturday Night Live (NBC Saturday 11:30 p.m.): Definitely not crap, but not quite well enough for the Seal of Approval. Certainly one can never get enough Will Ferrell. SNL is usually entertaining, but it can't hold a candle to the shows "classic" years. One problem has the show: get rid of the cheesy opening monologues where the host tries unsuccessfully to be funny.

The Late Show With David Letterman (CBS Weeknights 11:30 p.m.): Dave has seemed rejuvenated since his recent heart surgery last year. Like Leno his show suffers from predictability. Still, he has his own charisma and comedic style that gives his show a unique aura. Plus the top ten lists are usually funny.

Turn to TUBE page 8

Prodigy and Havoc of Mobb Deep came to UMass last Friday.

Infamously in Deep with the Mobb

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Dec. 11, 2001, will be a day, which will also live, in Infamy ...according to Mobb Deep.

Because on that date, Havoc and Prodigy, grouped as that "Infamous" duo, are scheduled to release its fifth album, Infamy.

"I feel that, amongst all the rap albums in history, it's going to be labeled as a classic," said Havoc last Friday in the Campus Center Basement, where Mobb Deep came to sign autographs and promote the new record. "We worked hard on it on every track - from the lyrics to the beats. We was like, 'yo, we gotta come out with a bangin' album.' We ain't been out together in a while so our mentality was just to make incredible, incredible type music."

"I feel the album is in a class by itself," Prodigy concurred. "It's definitely going to stand out. It's one of a kind.

"It's a whole new album, kid. It's on and poppin, Infamy."

Mobb Deep is characterized by an intense passion for its script of life on the streets. One of the darkest duos in the history of rap, the Mobb's particular way of delivering urban folk tales has always been remarked by critics as definite musical triumph. It's the flair of relaying harsh figurative language over distinctive Mobb beats that has brought the two-some to the top of the industry and caused critics to chart the group's development.

From 1995's Juvenile Hell (their first record) to now, Havoc and Prodigy have established themselves as some of the East Coast's all-time greatest thug poets.

"You just grow with time," said Prodigy, who released his first solo album H.N.I.C. last year. "It's just a naturally progressive thing."

"Things change, but as much as they change they still stay the same."

Two years ago, the Mobb released Murda Music, its fourth album, which The Source ranked just a half-mic (4.5/5) away from perfection.

"Hav and P have done it again," read that May 1999 issue of The Source, the magazine that first brought attention to the duo in 1991 in its "Unsigned Hype" column. "The Mobb specializes in one thing, and the albums title says it all...Yeah, the tough talk persists, but not without more of the same self-scrutini-

Turn to MOBB page 8

ETI Educational Testing Institute
Massachusetts Teacher Test Preparation
5 Week programs with guaranteed results in Communication and Literacy
Delivering what you need to prepare for success
- Literacy and communication skills
- Test content and test taking strategies
- Supporting writing and individual attention
- Proven test preparation book and curriculum
- Custom programs and private tutoring

Record of outstanding results
- Pass rates improve from 12% to 74%
- Average scores improve over 12% per section

Join ETI and guarantee your success!
800-399-5448 or consult: www.massteachertest.com

Click. It's a prepaid phone card.

The College PrePaid Phone Card: the really cool thing about it is— there is no card. It's virtual. You get it online with a flat per-minute rate* and no hidden fees. And it's rechargeable so you'll never need another phone card— ever.

Ordering is easy and it's instant. Just go to att.com/college/easy and choose your card denomination. Submit the form to get your PIN and you're off and dialing.

The College PrePaid Phone Card. Get it online. Keep it in your brain. How easy is that?

Go to our website now.

AT&T | BOUNDLESS

att.com/college/easy

*U.S. and International rates vary.
©2001 AT&T. All Rights Reserved.

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
OPEN 7 DAYS
Delivery Available
ICHIBAN
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

SAVES THE DAY
HEY MERCEDES & THURSDAY
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE • SOUTH HADLEY, MA
SUNDAY NOV 18 7:00PM
PRESENTED BY MASSCONCERTS WWW.MASSCONCERTS.COM

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Student Union Art Gallery will be showing the work of seven different UMass Alumni from through November 16. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Friday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

UMASS – The Hampden Gallery will be exhibiting Robert Taplin's work Jupiter through December 6 and a closing reception on Sunday, December 2 from 2-3 p.m. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday noon to 6 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn, North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – Photo artist Anne Ross will be exhibiting Digital Photography in an exhibit called "A Space Odyssey 2001." Already an accomplished color photographer, Ross believes that the endless possibilities involved with computer manipulation are "a natural transition." Her show will be at the Smith College Alumnae House Gallery through January 12, 2002. The gallery hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday – Friday.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – The UMass Theater Department presents the play Ohio State Murders. By contemporary writer Adrienne Kennedy, the play examines a mother's loss and the themes of race, class and gender. Nov. 13 - 16 at 8 p.m. and a matinee on Nov. 17 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $4 for students. Call the box office at 545-2511.

UMASS – The UMass Theatre Guild presents Stephen Sondheim's musical Into the Woods on Nov. 15, 16 and 17 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. and a 2 p.m. matinee on Nov. 17. Woods takes the lives of popular fair tale characters like Little Red Riding Hood, Cinderella, and Jack (of Beanstock fame) and sets them to music.

UMASS – "Music and Myth" is a percussion ensemble featuring music by Victorio, Read, Miki & others. It will take place in Bowker Auditorium on Tuesday, November 20 at 8 p.m. and Fields, will perform here at UMass with Artistic Director Kenneth Sillito. Their performance will include Mozart's Divertimento, Dvorak's Two Waltzes, Bruckner's Adagio and Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings. There also will be a selection called "Innocent Ear" which will be a form of "Name that Tune." The event will take place on Thursday, November 8 at 7:30 p.m.

Robert Taplin's Jupiter is currently on display at the Hampden Gallery

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The world famous and widely regarded chamber orchestra, the Academy of St. Martin in the SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Dance Department presents the 2001 Faculty Dance Concert. It features new choreography and performances by Roger Blum and Susan Walter with guest artists Sukarji Sriman and Augusto Soledade. It will take place in the Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts from November 15-17 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7 for general admission and $5 for students and seniors.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Jill Ker Conway will read from her book, A Woman's Education, a memoir about her time

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books presents a book reading and signing by new author Sparrow Patterson and her first novel Synthetic Bi Products, the story of a young bisexual woman and her experiences before entering college. The book has already been called "an affecting fresh first novel." The event will take place on Thursday, November 15 at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books is giving the floor to local academic Dean Robinson as he talks and signs copies of his new book, Black Nationalism in American Politics and Thought. Robinson is a former UMass Assistant Professor of Political Science and is spending two years at Harvard University. The event takes place on Friday, November 16 at 5 p.m.

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books will feature local author Michael Silverstone, who has just finished a young adult's biography on Green Party activist Winona LaDuke, entitled Winona LaDuke: Restoring Land and Culture in Native America. The event is open to all and will be on Wednesday, November 28 at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books will have author Suzanna Danuta Walters, the author of the new book All the Rage, read from her book and discuss the issue of "Contemporary Gay Visibility." She tracks the images from the outing of Ellen to the Mathew Shepard murder and dissects mainstream television shows Will and Grace, Friends, and Dawson's Creek.

GREENFIELD – The Meet Pioneer Valley Author Series continues at the Greenfield Public Library as Vermont mystery author Archer Mayor discusses, sells, and signs his new novel Tucker Peak, the twelfth book in a series about I.T. Joe Gunther. The event will be taking place in the LeVanway Room on Friday, November 16 at 7:30 p.m. The public is welcome for this free event.

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Student Union presents a film by the Media Education Foundation entitled "Advertising and the End of the World." The film draws the connection between a high-consumption lifestyle and environmental crises. It will be showed twice here at UMass, once on Tuesday, November 19 in Campus Center room 911 at 7 p.m. and again on Wednesday, November 20 in Campus Center room 917 at 7 p.m. The event is free.

Voices from Sept. 11

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

Let your voice be heard.

It is a simple idea to address a complicated problem: your reaction to the events of Sept. 11. Students from a College Writing 112 class need your submissions by Nov. 26 to compile an anthology based on this idea. The collection, to be distributed campus-wide, will include essays, poems, journal entries, artwork, or any other original pieces.

Teacher Rita Rich said that the idea for this work came about after class discussion, and when a student in her class, who had been an intern at the World Trade Center last year, dealt with his immediate reactions to the terrorist attacks in an essay.

"We talked about how overwhelmed we feel by news coverage," she said. "We'd like to hear more personal accounts about the condition of the country."

The anthology is in its initial phases, although much work has gone into it already. Students have been busy getting the word out, writing press releases and working on the website (http://www.more.at/BeHeard). When the submissions come in, they will collectively select and edit them.

Rich said that the Writing Program publishes an annual anthology of student work, but this project has taken on an immediate importance.

"We feel a kind of urgency to get some of this writing out for others to read now," she said.

The anthology doesn't have one particular theme, but students have been talking about what they'd like to see in the submitted pieces. Class discussions have stressed connecting and relating to the community.

"We want initial reaction," said Lisa Handy, a freshman in the section six Honors class. "We want all different points of view, from all backgrounds, and we want to know about emotions that people will relate to."

Rich has made community an important element of the project. But she's not sure what exactly the impact will be within the community. She hopes that the voices of the writers are heard.

"I hope that my students leave this course knowing that they have made a positive contribution to our community," she said. "In a time of immense difficulty, they have found a way to channel fear and uncertainty into a sense of connectedness." Students have echoed this sentiment.

"I think a lot of people felt alone after the attacks," said Handy. "I hope this helps them to know that other people felt the same way, so they have the peace of mind that they're not alone."

The anthology, in the end, will offer a catharsis for both the writers and the readers. Sharing and talking about reactions to this tragedy is way to understand and deal with what has happened. We each have unique thoughts on Sept. 11. Now is the time to give them voice.

Entries must be submitted by Nov. 26. Entries may be essays up to 1000 words, or poems, cartoons, journal entries, artwork, or any other original work reflecting on Sept. 11. You may submit entries via email to BeHeard@yahoogroups.com, or they maybe dropped off or mailed to Rita Rich/ Be Heard, c/o UMass Writing Program, 305 Bartlett Hall. There will also be a drop-off box at the Campus Center information desk. You must include a cover sheet with your contact information, such as your name, telephone number and email address.

■ Mobb

continued from page 9

ny characteristic of the thinkin' thug..."

Before that release, the Mobb put out Hell on Earth (1996) and The Infamous (1995). The Infamous, with the hit single "Shook Ones Part II," pushed the Mobb into the stardom while Hell on Earth proved that boys from Queensbridge, N.Y. were for real.

"The message we basically trying to get out, is like, "boom, this is how Mobb Deep feel about it," Prodigy said. "Boom, this is how Mobb Deep feel when we make a beat. This is what you should be spending your money on, because this shit is a work of art. That's how we feel, that's the message we trying to put out to the world."

On Dec. 11, when Infamy hits the shelves, Mobb Deep promises its fans they won't be let down. Tracks such as "Kill or Be Killed (featuring Ronald Isley)" and "Clap" will proclaim more of the Mobb's street-combat classics, while tracks like "Handcuffs" will show the group's diverse melodic background.

On "Handcuffs," Havoc, who produced a majority of the album, experiments with Southern bounce and a fast rhyme scheme.

"That's how I was feeling one day," said Havoc about the "Handcuffs" track. "I was making the track and it just came out. I like all types of music, so that was just another branch of my feelings at that time. From rap to alternative, country, rock – we just open minded musicians."

But the open minds of the Mobb have been challenged recently. On Jay-Z's "The Takeover," Jigga fires a couple shots at Deep, questioning the "straight gangsta" grind that Havoc promised on Infamy.

The Mobb returns the favor on the new album in the form of the track, "Crawling."

"Music, to us, is an art form, so it's going to be personal, because it comes from you," Prodigy said. "I'm creating something from my mind, something from me. So it's definitely personal.

"It's rap music. And rap music is personal to me."

■ novel

continued from page 5

bles upon a magic mirror, called the Mirror of Trised. As Dumbledore soon tells him, Trised is desire spelled backwards, and when Harry looks into it again, he sees his deceased parents as they looked when they were young.

This should serve well enough to wet your appetite for the Harry Potter craze. Twists and turns aplenty soon unravel, such as the identity of Voldemort, the villain who was responsible for murdering Harry's parents. There is also the sorcerer's stone, the namesake of the book, which gives special abilities to its bearer. Harry also begins to learn about himself, his parents, and good and evil. And that's not mentioning all the wonderful gadgets and supernatural entities along the way, like the enormous three-headed dog, trading cards whose pictures move, and magical candies that can do a number on the eater.

Harry Potter, both in novel and film, makes the imagination come to life. It is the most exciting fairy tale in a long time, so what are you waiting for?

Jake Lewis is a Collegian staff member.

COURTESY PETER MOUNTAIN

Daniel Radcliffe with director Chris Columbus on the Great Hall set for Warner Bros. film Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone.

■ soundtrack

continued from page 5

ues to weave the magical story here with the fast-paced excitement perfectly capturing the excitement of the game. The majestic horns and crashing symbols work well in signifying victory, while the striking of the tympanis and the violent stroking of the violins do justice to creating conflict in the game.

In Jurassic Park, Williams wrote two main themes for the film, alternating between them depending upon the response he was trying to elicit. While the more jovial one of the two became better known, the other one, which was slower and calmer, showed a different angle of the same film. Here, too, Williams has crafted a secondary theme that is exquisitely stunning to the ear. Instead of the haunting quality of the primary theme, which will most assuredly be the better-known one, Williams uses string instruments like piano and harp to describe to the listener the wonder of the fairy-tale world.

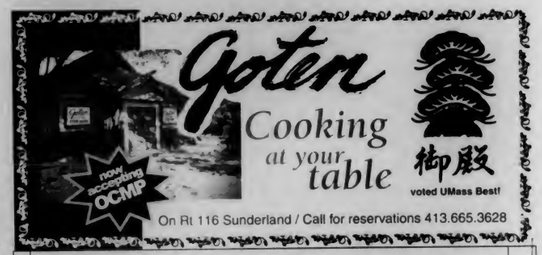
The villain of the film, named Voldemort, remains an enigma throughout the film until the end when he is uncovered. The score purposely holds back when it comes to Voldemort's identity, in hopes of creating suspense. When the moment arrives to unmask Voldemort, the score builds to an exhilarating and dramatic climax, including the main theme showing up again. The score has come full circle, as the storybook closes. Or, at least, this chapter does.

Williams's score for Harry Potter & The Sorcerer's Stone is another astounding achievement for the veteran composer. It is a superb soundtrack to what will become a lucrative and popular franchise, and is an adventure all in itself.

■ Tube

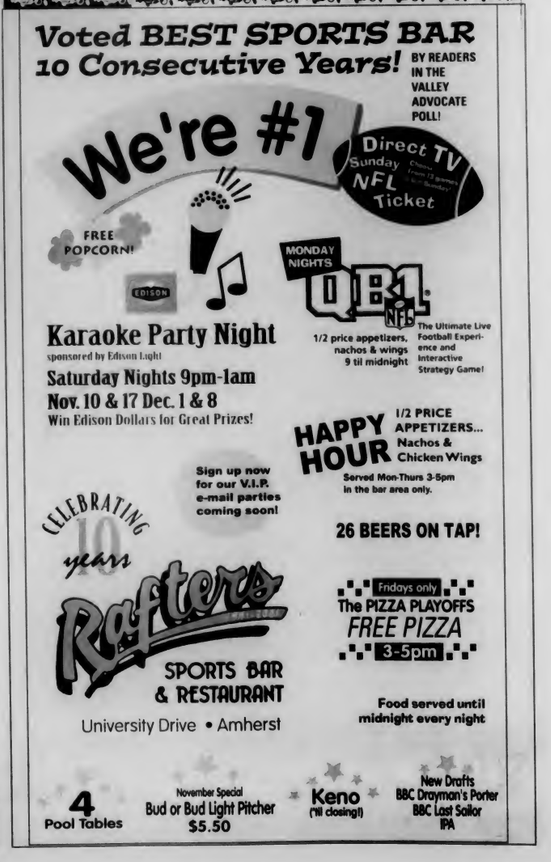
continued from page 6

Show Nobody Cares About:



The Late Late Show With Craig Kilborn (CBS: Weeknights 12:30 a.m.) If a tree falls in the forest and nobody is there to hear it, does it make a noise? If nobody watches a television show, does it... well you get the point.

Shows That Should Never Have Been Cancelled:



Politically Incorrect (ABC): The show was recently canceled due to "anti-American" comments that the host Bill Maher made. To call what Maher said "anti-American" is like saying anyone who doesn't worship George Bush and his entire family is "anti-American." Apparently questioning the military's grounds for losing your job here in the "land of the free." The program was often both informative and entertaining, even if it was a bit foolish at times to listen to celebrities weigh in on political issues.

Loveline (MTV): Late nights just haven't been the same without talk of genital warts, gonorrhea, and oral sex, ever since MTV yanked the chain in Dr. Drew and Adam Corrolla's late night sex themed talk show. Is there any justice in the world?

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

Life is hard without balance.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

At Ernst & Young, we enable people to bring their professional goals into harmony with their personal aspirations. It's a work ethic we believe in. That's why we were named one of the 100 Best Companies to Work For. Three times in a row. Perhaps you'll want to join us as we go for four. Come on over and get a warm welcome.

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

Brooke Bartlett finished sixth on the team in scoring in 2001 with 2 goals and 8 assists, giving her 54 points for her career.

■ pose

continued from page 14

be set for years to come.

Finally, in 1999, Bartlett and Jones stepped onto the field together for an entire season for the first time since high school. They helped UMass to an 11-5-1 record, a vast improvement on the year before, but still not good enough to merit a bid to NCAA's. Jones finished second on the team that year in scoring with 12 points (3 goals and 6 assists) while Bartlett was fifth on the scoring chart with eight points.

Despite the two-year layoff, Jones and Bartlett took no time at all to rediscover their old magic and familiarity on the pitch.

"I know the way that Brooke plays in and out because we've been playing together for so long," Jones said. "The time off didn't impact us in any way. She came back the same player she always was."

Prior to the 2000 campaign coach Rudy brought in yet another Shenendehowa alum in Erin Lilly but once again the team fell to Xavier in the A-10 tournament and failed to qualify for NCAA's.

Despite the team's struggles in 2000, Bartlett had a career year notching career highs in goals (6), assists (9), and points (21) earning herself All-A-10 honors as well as being named third team All-American by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America.

As seniors this past season, Jones and Bartlett set out to win UMass its first conference title in four years, a goal that fell just short with Xavier once again dealing the deciding blow, a 2-1 double overtime victory for the Musketeers that eliminated the Minutewomen from postseason action.

All season long the Minutewomen attacked opposing defenses from the flanks with Jones and Bartlett pumping a continuous series of crosses into the opponents box. This was a tactic that worked right up until the final game of the season with Xavier as Jones scored the lone UMass goal that day, finishing off a Bartlett cross.

"We got our flank penetration in two different ways," Rudy said. "On one side Brooke would beat you with her pace and dribbling while on the other, Jones beat you with subtle, well-timed runs and smart passing."

For the second consecutive season Brooke was named first team all-A-10 after scoring two goals and adding eight assists while Katelyn set career highs with six goals and 16 points during her senior year and was named second team all-conference for the first time ever.

Despite the fact that their UMass careers may be over, Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones will be able to look back on this experience and appreciate just how special it really was.

"What's unique about our situation is that we did get the opportunity to play together again," Bartlett said. "When I left [high school] she wrote in my yearbook 'who knows, maybe I'll even be at UMass next year,' jokingly."

For 12 long years they have been a part of each other's lives, a fact that probably will not change come graduation when they will once again go their separate ways. However, no matter where it is that they end up, they will always have each other to fall back on.

"If I was ever in trouble I know she would be there for me and vice versa," Bartlett said. "There is never that question in your mind that someone is not going to be there for you."

Katelyn Jones finished second on the team in scoring in 2001 with 16 points, giving her 44 for her career.

srutilaya
Presents
Raga & Sahitya
An Indian Classical Vocal Concert By Nada Bhushanam
BOMBAY JAYASHRI
With
Sri R.K. SHRIRAMKUMAR on Violin
& Sri K. ARUN PRAKASH on Mridangam (drum)

Friday, November 16, 2001 at 6:00PM
Campus Center Auditorium
UMass, Amherst
Tickets: Students - $8, General - $12
For more information please contact:
Srinath (413) 546-4596
Srividya (413) 545-0188
Srini (413) 545-0370
or visit
http://listen.to/srutilaya

Event is made possible in part by a grant each from the Student Affairs Cultural Ennchment Fund and the UMass Arts Council.

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
2001 - 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $10, $15 for five college students

Thursday, December 6
The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company & The Dirty Dozen Brass Band in "When the Spirit Moves"
An exhilarating evening of live New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance come together in a program titled When the Spirit Moves - a series of vignettes celebrating the lineage and essence from which these two uniquely American forms emerged.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River, WEIB 106.3FM and WGBY TV 57 / Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

For tickets call

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE
KEGS CIGARS CLOVES
CIGARETTES TOBACCO
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted
333 Russell Street (Route 9) Hadley, MA
Hours Mon.-Sat. 9am-11pm
(413) 584-8774

Interested in Business?

The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the spring semester. Great resume builder! Sophomores call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center.

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 A.M.
TUESDAY KARAOKE HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES
FRIDAY GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs HUSH, SIMI AND BON BONS
SATURDAY HIP HOP/ REGGAE w/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY LIVE JAZZ
COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

20oz Sierra Nevada Pale Ale $3.25
THE HARP
Sierra Nevada Pints $2.50 Free Glass
THE HARP PRESENTS NEWS NIGHT
Tons of Giveaways
Featuring Sierra Nevada Pale Ale
sat. 9:30 - Close
T-Shirts, glasses And Other Cool Stuff!
Great Raffle Prizes!
Early Thurday ◆ The Wildcat O'Halloran Band
Late Thursday ◆ Reggae Jam
Friday ◆ Traditional Irish Seisun
Saturday ◆ Summit House Live
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA (413) 548-6900
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

Grand Opening.
Now you can choose from a variety of affordable vehicles to answer any of your rental needs right here:
Amherst
213 College St
(413) 259-1188
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.
Come in now and take advantage of our Grand Opening Offer.
Free Upgrade On Your Next Visit
Reserve any size car in advance. At the time of rental if a car from the next higher class is available, you'll be upgraded at no extra charge. Valid at the Amherst location through 6/02, but not in conjunction with other promotional offer.
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.

Mike Warner has not scored since the Niagara game. He will look to get on the board versus Lowell this weekend.

■ family affair

continued from page 14

weekend series.

Common knowledge suggests that a pair of Hockey East games between two bitter rivals (UMass and its sister school, UMass-Lowell) would overshadow the tension of an on ice family feud. Well you can throw common knowledge out the window.

While Vitek, a fleet footed forward, and St. John, a goalie, both play down the showdown - "there hasn't been much trash talking," St. John recalled - another family member has taken the reins and left the playing to the players.

"My Grandpa has done most of the talking," Vitek says. "Jimi told him that I probably wouldn't score and that got back to me."

"His Grandpa said that if he scores a hat trick I have to take him out to dinner," St. John remembers.

With the smack talk left out of the equation, the duo can concentrate on the upcoming game, but don't expect the rest of the family to pull any punches.

"I've got about 15 relatives coming for the game," Vitek says. "They are really anxious to see us play. I want to show them how much I've improved as a player."

There is little chance that the two will go head to head on Friday in Lowell, as Cam McCormick is UML's projected starter for game one. If anything, Vitek and St. John will square off in the former's home away from home, the Mullins Center.

In terms of experience, the River Hawk keeper has the edge.

"He's three or four years older than I am," Vitek says.

But what the speedy Canadian has on his goal-guarding relative is the unknown.

"I really don't know what to expect from him," St. John exclaims. "I've really only seen him play pickup hockey since we were younger."

Any appetite for a storyline would be quenched with this tale. For the conclusion, tune in Saturday night.

So what if Vitek does slip one over the goal line in front of an assemblage of anxious family members - "I'll take him to McDonald's or something," St. John grudgingly admits.

Let the drama begin.

■ hockey

continued from page 13

Cahoon is not worried.

"You can't face a better goalie than [2000-01 player of the year] Ryan Miller," said Cahoon of MSU's talented stopper. So no matter how well the UML tandem plays in net this weekend, surprise will not be in the Minutemen's vocabulary.

The key for UMass this weekend falls outside the realm of skill and goal scoring, because emotion and determination will litter the roster of this weekend's victor.

In the pair of games against MSU and UConn, the Minutemen had a significantly low emotion level. Against a very hot Lowell team (No. 10 in the country, UMass will have to bring back the energy they used to split with then nationally ranked Providence in their home rink.

This weekend a very young squad will have the chance to start to etch their name in the national consciousness. Very few people know what these Minutemen are all about, if they want that to change, than the journey begins now.

"We are looking to establish ourselves," Cahoon said. "In this league and beyond."

■ water polo

continued from page 14

who Yarworth calls "a real scary team. They have a higher talent level than any other team at the tournament." UMass went 3-1 against the Terriers this season, with the lone loss coming only a few weeks ago. St. Francis, like UMass, has had its share of players earn Collegiate Water Polo Association Player of the Week honors.

UMass is coming off of a tough defeat at the hands of Harvard in the CWPA Northern Division final. The Maroon and White, which was spelled by injuries to seniors Carlos Ramos and Mike Foley, as well as the absence of senior Greg Trayer, who was attending to family matters, couldn't find the scoring touch, and lost to the Crimson, 6-5.

The Minutemen will also look to senior netminder J.R. VanderWall to continue the type of play that kept UMass in every game this season.

Also involved in this weekend's action are Bucknell, Queens College, the U.S. Naval Academy, Johns Hopkins, and Harvard. The Maroon and White's likely opponents, should it advance past St. Francis and Princeton, are Navy or Queens.

Yarworth said that Navy and Queens "are both solid programs. [Navy] has that military attitude and a really good structure, which we'll have to try to break."

"We've got a great group of kids," said Yarworth, "and we just have to use our game plan."

One speed bump for the Minutemen will be the dimensions of the Princeton pool. UMass has played in pools that are smaller than regulation on average, including its home pool at Amherst College.

However, minus a few bumps and bruises, the whole roster has a clean bill of health, which will make playing the giants of the East a little easier.

So don't let the harsh Amherst winter get you down. There's still one UMass team that could have a few more tricks up its sleeve.

Next stop: regular season

Senior Shannon Crooks and the UMass men's hoop team begin their season tomorrow night versus Arkansas-Little Rock at the Mullins Center.

URI waits after loss.

By T.J. Auclair
The Good Five Cent Cigar (U. Rhode Island)

(U-WIRE) KINGSTON, R.I. - The Rhode Island men's soccer team was looking to win its third straight Atlantic 10 Conference title in Dayton, Ohio, over the weekend, but instead came home early and empty handed.

The Rams (13-4-1) were the No. 1 seed heading into the four-team tournament, but lost 1-0 to No. 4 Richmond in the semifinals on Friday night.

"We went to Dayton pretty confident that we'd win," Rams senior captain Gareth Elliott said. "We knew that if we performed our best we'd win no problem. We're not used to losing. We were meant to come home on Sunday, but got an earlier flight home on Saturday night, because nobody wanted to hang around. It was too depressing. I'm hoping it's not my last game for URI."

Richmond got on the board when goalkeeper Shawn Alexander's kick found Ken Holiday in the midfield, who blasted in a 35-yard shot into the top left corner of the box to give the Spiders a 1-0 lead at 36:07.

Rhody responded in the second half, out-shooting Richmond 10-1, including a flurry late in the game with several scoring opportunities. It would not be enough, however, as Richmond held on for the 1-0 win.

The Rams won't find out until Monday if in fact it was their last game of the season. There are 23 conferences in the U.S. and most of them are playing their respective conference tournaments this weekend. All conference winners earn an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. As opposed to years past where the NCAA took 32 teams, this year there will be 48. The Rams are hoping for one of the 25 available at-large bids, but they won't know if they're in until Monday's selection show.

"It's really tough playing the waiting game," Elliott said. "We're only practicing two days this week. The NCAA draws is Monday afternoon and that's when we'll find out if we got an at-large bid. It's going to be weird not knowing for five days if the season is going to continue or not."

The loss was especially tough for Rhody, because it lost two key players. Junior fullback Ross Smith left the match 25 minutes in because of a twisted knee.

Nicholas McCreath, who missed most of the season with a pulled hamstring, was close to 100 percent for Friday's match. But, with about 30 minutes remaining, he re-injured his hamstring.

"Nicholas started up front with me, but then dropped back to outside midfield," Elliott said. "We probably had our strongest team all season out there. I was sad for both Nicholas and Ross."

The No. 3 seed University of Massachusetts won the Atlantic 10 crown, beating Richmond in a shootout.

Time To Change Horses
12 HORSE

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-8, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 10 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

it's Live and Online!
Allison
CoedCam
Lorri
Haze
Coed Shots
NEW! Win stuff just for watching.
Found a cool shot? Submit it to us and we'll reward you!
Not Watching? See what you're missing!
• 3 strangers. 1 Web cam. 24/7.
• Live video, stills and audio from a secret Amherst locale.
• Roommate love fests, smackdowns and secrets!
Log on today!
www.masslive.com/coed
Listen to: PURE ROCK LAZER 99.3 for details
Sponsored in part by: Peter Pan mass live.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

86 Oldsmobile runs, heat and radio work, engine and brakes recently replaced. NO OFFER TO LOW! 256-6267

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

EMPLOYMENT

ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT? TEAM PLAYER/LEADER? Consumer Power in virtual marketplace leave message for overview team_works@htomail.com 1-866-800-3985

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

DISTRIBUTION

Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 2 females to share one large bedroom in Hobart Lane. 549-9192 Start January 1 st

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Umass #1 Spring Break Company save $80 and free Hippodrome passes, book before Nov. 21 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/online-mall/

NEED TO ADVERTISE?

THE COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS IS THE PLACE!

CALL 545-3500 TODAY!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS/3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 61 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - CBS 30 Hartford
9 - HSCN Sci-Movie Channel
10 - SHOWTIME New England
11 - FOX 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 22 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 - WB 56 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UPN 18 (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel & Living
22 - Cspan
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - E!
30 - Nick
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Travel Channel
37 - BET
38 - Discovery
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 15, 2001

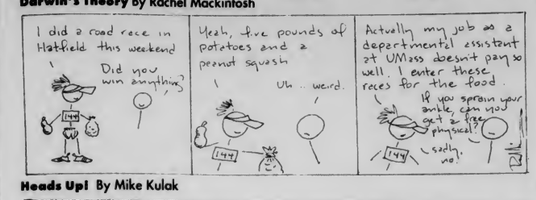
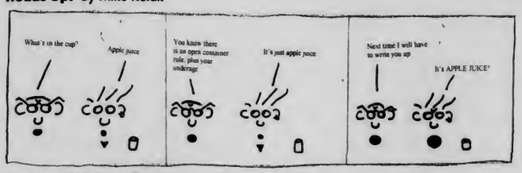
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	4	12 Newshour With	Jim Lehrer ※	Business Rpt.	Women's College	Basketball: WNIT Semifinal –	teams to be Announced. (Live)			Frontline (N) (In Stereo) ※		Mystery! "Touching Evil" ※
WFSB	3	3 News ※	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo) ※		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency "Closure" (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Late Show ※
WBZ	4	4 News ※	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo) ※		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency "Closure" (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Late Show ※
WCVB	5	5 News ※	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ※	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Victoria's Secret Fashion		Primetime Thursday ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WLVI	56	Nanny ※	Just Shoot Me	Friends ※	Raymond	Popstars 2 ※	Popstars 2 ※	Charmed "Black as Cole" (N) ※		News ※		Friends ※	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra ※	Friends (N) ※	Scrubs (N) ※	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER (N) (In Stereo) ※		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends ※	Just Shoot Me	Popstars 2 ※	Popstars 2 ※	Charmed "Black as Cole" (N) ※		News Home Imp.		Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra ※	Hollywood	Friends (N) ※	Scrubs (N) ※	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER (N) (In Stereo) ※		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons ※	Friends ※	Seinfeld ※	Raymond	Family Guy ※	Tick (In Stereo)	Temptation Island 2 (In Stereo)		News		Seinfeld ※	Raymond
WWLP	22	22 News ※	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Friends (N) ※	Scrubs (N) ※	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER (N) (In Stereo) ※		News ※	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	5 BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With	Jim Lehrer ※	This Old Hse.	Ora. on Call	Frontline (N) (In Stereo) ※		Primetime Thursday ※		Mystery! "Touching Evil" ※	Charlie Rose (N) (In Stereo) ※
WGGB	40	28 News ※	ABC News	Seinfeld ※	Frasier ※	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Victoria's Secret Fashion		Primetime Thursday ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	News	Frasier ※	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ※				Ent. Tonight	Frasier ※	5th Wheel ※	Shipmates ※
WTBS	72	Roseanne ※	Roseanne ※	Fresh Prince	Friends ※	※ "Conspiracy Theory" (1997, Suspense) Mel Gibson, Julia Roberts.						※ "Batman & Robin" (1997)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio ※	Law & Order "Asylum" ※		Biography "The Lost Generation" (N) ※				Paired "Incredible Theft" ※		Law & Order "Guardian" ※
CNN	23	39 Moneyline (N) ※		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire ※	The Point (N) ※		Larry King Live ※		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	39	Saturday Night Live ※		Daily Show ※	Stern's Money	※ "Clutch" (1991, Comedy) Ed O'Neill, Lethal Ralphie.				Let's Bowl ※	Primetime	Daily Show ※	Sat. Night Live
DISC	52	Wild Discovery	Yellowstone	Wild Discovery	"Kodiak"	Real Ghosthunters		Real Magick: The Science		Science of Magic		Sportscenter ※
ESPN	49	Sportscenter ※		Gameday	College Football	Louisville at East Carolina. (Live) ※
LIFE	60	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait	"Kim Fields"	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		※ "Lies Before Kisses" (1991, Drama) Jaclyn Smith. ※		Crisis	Diary (N)	Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	63	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Alien Ant	Music Videos	Spongebob	TU Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers ※	Cheers ※	Dismissed	Making-Video
NICK	64	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats ※	Rugrats ※	Spongeb	TU Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers ※	Cheers ※	Family Ties ※	Family Ties ※
SCIFI	59	Star Trek "The Gallileo Seven"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo) ※		Farscape "Suns and Lovers" ※		Outer Limits "Ripper" ※		Star Trek "Shore Leave" ※		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	29	28 Pearl Harbor in Color		Eye Spy: Caught in the Act		Supersleuths: Hillside		Navy SEALs: Untold Stories		Understanding Future Wars		Supersleuths: Hillside
TNT	62	NYPD Blue "Russellriana" ※		Pretender 3 (N, (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order "Sheaf" ※		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Houston Rockets. (In Stereo Live) ※				NBA
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger ※		JAG (In Stereo) ※		Nash Bridges "Grave Robbers"		※ "Bulletproof" (1996, Drama) Damon Wayans. (In Stereo) ※		Martin ※		Martin ※
HBO	65	(5:45) ※※ "The Legend of Bagger Vance" (2000) Will Smith. ※				Inside the NFL (In Stereo) ※		※※ "The Replacements" (2000) Keanu Reeves. (CC) ※		※※ "Jennifer Eight" (1992, Mystery) Andy Garcia. (In Stereo) ※
MAX	66	※※ "The Tie That Binds" (1995) Daryl Hannah... Cloud Nine				※※※ "Charlie's Angels" (2000, Action) Cameron Diaz. (CC) ※				※※ "Jennifer Eight" (1992, Mystery) Andy Garcia. (In Stereo) ※
SHOW	67	※※※ "The Bear" (1989, Drama) Jack Wallace. ※				※※※ "Operation Dumbo Drop" (1995) Danny Glover. ※				Going to California ※		Leap Years (TV) (In Stereo) ※



Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

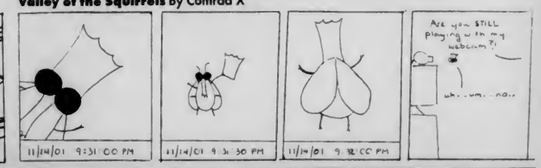
Penthouse Blues By Mike



Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Skybox By Blake

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"To say 'never say never' is to say 'never' twice."

–Common Sense

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 60 LOW: 44	HIGH: 65 LOW: 36	HIGH: 55 LOW: 34

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may not be eager to work hand-in-hand with a certain someone, but that one person holds the key to success where a pet project is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A chain reaction of sorts is likely to find you swept up in something that was not of your making. You can help avoid a major crisis.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A surprise is in store for you today, and it's going to have a major impact in a way that you could not possibly anticipate. Be prepared.

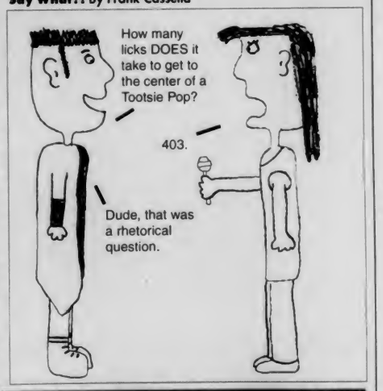
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – It's not up to you to decide – today, tomorrow, or any time – what is "normal" and what is not. Focus on doing things that get results.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Now is no time to retreat. You'll want to stand your ground today, even in the face of a greater challenge than expected. You have what it takes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Someone may be passing down rules and regulations that seem to limit you in a way that is neither fair nor tolerable. Voice your objections.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may be able to walk through day in someone else's shoes – thanks to his or her generosity and eagerness to see you learn.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're likely to have some trouble understanding someone else's point of view today – until a surprise development makes it all crystal-clear.



CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A little common sense goes a long way today. Do what you can to help a friend or loved one get back on track. Don't ignore a certain private issue.

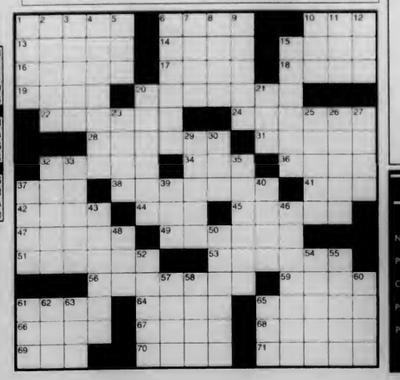
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – It's not up to you today to decide what information is worth sharing and what is not. Tell all you know and the "experts" figure it out.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – There is no point in trying to place the blame for an unfortunate development today. Your time is best spent trying to undo any damage.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may enjoy some unexpected support today when it comes to one or two of your more "controversial" beliefs.

Say What?! By Frank Cassella

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!
Thursday Drunk Stuntman Working Class Rock $2 cover
Saturday Lucky Johnson Funky R&B $3 cover
Sunday 7th Street Jazz Band Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst 413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Let in
6 Clowns' props
10 Greenspan stat
13 Dancer Castle
14 — and hearty
15 Cello kin
16 Challenged
17 Material symptom
18 Covet
19 Arab ruler
20 Desk item
22 Costume
24 Reduced price
26 Hardened
31 Coming out
32 Anticipate
34 Bandleader Brown
36 Categorize
37 Start for fab or face
38 Natural gifts
41 Itinerary word
42 Like Sabin's vaccine
44 Resinous deposit
45 Evaluated
47 Removes the peel
49 Footrests
51 Computer network
53 Dull
56 Mix it up
59 Pine locale
61 Called up
64 Grain repository
65 Put a strain on
66 Layered cookie
67 Read rapidly
68 Surrounded by
69 Honey maker
70 Yin complement
71 Fresh

DOWN
1 Nurse's helper
2 Theater offering
3 — scholarship
4 Sluggishness
5 Actor Danson
6 Ahab's vessel
7 Desdemona's enemy
8 Oversupply
9 Take charge of
10 Whitney's invention
11 Thanksgiving mo.
12 Carry on a trade
15 Poetic lines
20 Cruel
21 Put a stop to
23 — — up to one's ears
25 Overhead
26 Sensational
27 Sundance Kid's gal
29 Vole in
30 Bear's abode
32 Deck out
33 Erodes
35 Electronic flash
37 Bursts
39 Sixth notes
40 Pepper companion
43 Turns loose (2 wds.)
46 Tidal wave
48 Dry, as in champagne
50 Kind of tea
52 Rumpled
54 Early Brit
55 Big happening
57 Play stub acronym
58 Custard
60 Uptight
61 Hold up
62 "— we there yet?"
63 Once named
65 Knitted cap

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	A	R	E	D		Z	O	O	S		I	V	A	N
O	L	I	V	E		A	M	A	H		N	O	D	E
O	P	T	I	C		P	A	T	E		T	I	D	E
K	O	A	L	A	S		R	E	P	L	A	C	E	D
				M	O	A		S	H	A	K	E	R	S
C	A	T	A	P	U	L	T		E	R	E
O	L	E	O	S		T	E	R	R	A		F	O	R
M	A	S	K		H	O	N	E	D		E	L	I	A
O	N	T		G	U	S	T	S		P	R	O	N	G
		D	A	M	E		S	E	A	H	A	W	K	S
S	W	E	A	R	B	Y		T	H	Y
N	A	V	Y	B	L	U	E		A	S	K	I	N	G
A	N	A	T		E	C	R	U		I	N	N	E	R
R	E	D	O		S	K	I	S		C	O	C	O	A
E	D	E	N		T	Y	K	E		S	T	A	N	D

11-21-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Sausage Cacciatore
Sloppy Joe
Native American Stew (W only)
Vegan Sloppy Joe
Pasta Bar: Dinner Balls
Grill Station: Chicken Parmesan Sandwich
International: Sweet & Sour Pork, Thai Fried Rice & Lemon Coconut Rice (W only)

DINNER
THEME SPECIAL RESTAURANT NIGHT
Bub's BBQ (B only)
Eastside Grill (F only)
La Veracruzana (H only)
Great Wall (W only)
Pasta Bar: Dinner Balls
Grill Station: Chicken Parmesan Sandwich
International: Beef Stir Fry Thai Fried Rice Lemon Coconut Rice (W only)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Martha Oliva
Copy Editor	Jess May
Production Supervisor	Riki Alcid
Production Staff	Frank DiMeglio, Sarah Vanderlin

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Seniors Katelyn Jones and Brooke Bartlett finished their careers at UMass by being named to Atlantic-10 all-conference teams.

Permanent pose

Soccer keeps Jones and Bartlett together

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

You would think that after all this time together they would start to get sick of one another. For the better part of the last 12 years the names Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones have gone hand in hand. Both on and off the soccer field the pair has been practically inseparable.

For the past four years Bartlett and Jones were both midfielders on the Massachusetts women's soccer team. Prior to arriving in Amherst the pair was high school teammates at Shenendehowa High School in Clifton Park, N.Y., each captaining the squad their senior year. Even before high school the pair was close from its time together in junior high school and on the youth soccer fields of Clifton Park.

"We were always friends on the soccer field, but we had our different groups of friends because we were different ages. [we didn't really hang out.]" Jones said. When I made the varsity team in ninth grade and she was a sophomore – that's when we started spending a lot more time together."

"It got to a point where one summer we spent every single day together," Bartlett said.

Despite what you may be thinking though, the duo does have its differences. Bartlett, a fifth year senior majoring in Communications – is a year (and three days to be exact) older – plays on the right side of midfield and was born in Clifton Park while Jones, a BDR major with a concentration in photography, graphic design, computer art and business, plays on the left and lives in nearby Round Lake, N.Y.

In 1996 the duo, along with current Minutewoman Erin Lilly, a ninth grader at the time, helped lead Shenendehowa to the New York State final. Bartlett was eventually named MVP of the state tournament that year, a performance that helped her win a number of different scholarship offers from around the nation. In the end, after verbally committing to play at George Mason University, Bartlett made a quick U-turn and signed with head coach Jim Rudy and the Minutewomen.

She came on a recommendation from Betsy Drambour, a former national team player and All-American at George Mason who was a coach at Shenendehowa at the time," Rudy said. "When she recommended her I knew this kid had to be good."

That first year at UMass proved to be a success for Bartlett and her new teammates. Brooke started all 22 games in 1997, tallying a pair of goals and seven assists for 11 points as the squad rolled to a 17-5 record including a perfect 11-0 in the Atlantic 10, earning the Minutewomen a berth to the NCAA tournament. However, the Maroon and White fell to Harvard 2-0 in the first round of the tournament that year and have not been back since.

Bartlett's sophomore year looked to be full of promise long before it started. UMass was coming off its fifth straight A-10 championship and seventh straight NCAA tournament appearance. Also, joining her in the Pioneer Valley was her old friend.

Jones came in equally recommended by Drambour and the rest of the Shenendehowa coaching staff, but did not receive as much national recognition as her counterpart. After mulling over her decision for quite some time, Jones eventually chose to come UMass and suit up for the Minutewomen. However, due to the timing of her decision, she could not be offered a scholarship and was forced to walk on as a freshman, a decision made easier by the fact that Brooke was already here.

"I definitely looked places where my teammates already were because I knew that if they could play there I could play there," Jones said. "It was also nice knowing someone because it made the transition knowing somebody who was already at the school."

One of the first to know of Jones' decision to come to Amherst was her high school buddy Bartlett.

"I was really excited," Bartlett said. "It's really comfortable having that person from home just be there. We originally were going to be roommates but decided that it wasn't the best idea and I could introduce her to new people and she could introduce me to new people."

That year, however, turned out not to be the fairy tail reunion that the duo had hoped for as Bartlett broke a collar bone just four games into the season causing her to miss the team's final 17 matches and the Minutewomen slumped to their first losing record in school history, finishing 10-11.

One bright spot that year though was the play of Jones. She appeared in all but one of UMass' 21 games and finished fourth on the team in scoring with a goal and five assists for seven points. Her play that season helped earn her a scholarship, ensuring that the outside midfield would

Turn to POSE page 10

COURTESY BROOKE BARTLETT

Bartlett (second from left) and Jones (second from right) helped lead Shenendehowa High School to the 1996 New York State Final.

NCAA berth in New Jersey

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It's almost wintertime here in Amherst. It's almost time to pack up everything that won't protect you from sub-zero temperatures. It's almost time to pull out the parkas, wool hats and mittens, and holiday paraphernalia.

Almost.

Don't let the weather fool you. There are still sports from the fall season that aren't quite ready to call it a year just yet. The Massachusetts men's water polo team is one of those, and will attempt to slow down the clock and spend a few more moments in a warmer climate this weekend, when it heads to Princeton, N.J. to compete for the Eastern NCAA Championship.

A title this weekend would mean an automatic berth in the NCAA Championship tournament, which takes place two weeks from now in sunny California. But first, the Minutemen will have to pull out victories against their two top foes of this season.

Princeton, which captured the Southern Championship two weeks ago, handed UMass one of only three regular season losses in a tough overtime battle, and will be its first opponent, on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Looking at the matchup with the Tigers, Head Coach Russ Yarworth expects "a real struggle to start off with." Yarworth also highlighted the importance of containing Princeton's top three, senior Marshall Roslyn and juniors Kevin Foster and Robert Urquhart. Senior goaltender Mike Pharris has also starred for Princeton, but Yarworth is confident that the Minutemen will be victorious.

"We know we can win if we do what we have to do," Yarworth said.

If the Maroon and White prevails over the Tigers, it's most likely that they will see the Terriers of St. Francis.

Turn to WATER POLO page 11

Lasme signs letter of intent

The backcourt of the Massachusetts basketball team increased its depth yesterday when Mike Lasme, a 6-foot-1 combo-guard from the Ivory Coast, signed his national letter of intent to play for coach Steve Lappas and the Minutemen.

"I'm very excited to have him in the fold," said Lappas last night, in his first chance to comment on his new guard. "He's a very athletic kid and a very, very good scorer.

"He's going to be a nice addition to the program."

Lasme caught the attention of coaches' nationwide two summers ago when he came to America and played for Crispus Attucks in York, Pa. This season he will play for the Life Center Academy in Willingboro, N.J.

He is most recognized for his quickness, shooting ability, 6-foot-5-inch wingspan and 43-inch vertical.

"He jumps to the moon," Lappas said. "Plus he has long arms and is strong...and he's a real good shooter. He knocks them down."

Lasme will join freshman Kyle Wilson and Anthony Anderson next year on the UMass guard depth chart. All three can play both the point and off-guard positions which should solidify the UMass backcourt for the next few seasons.

"You throw those three in and Marcus Cox (sophomore transfer from UConn) and...you feel like you could have something," Lappas said.

Lasme verbally committed to UMass in mid-July, reneged on that pledge in late September, but recommitted soon after.

"He's got a lot of talent," Lappas said. "He hasn't been playing that long in this country so there's a lot of things he needs to learn but he's a great kid and he plays hard and he wants to learn."

Lasme selected UMass over interest from Stanford, Connecticut, Seton Hall, USC, Cincinnati, and St. John's.

Stephen Briggs, a 6-foot-9, 220-pound power forward from Westside High School in Houston, Texas, is expected to sign his letter of intent today. The Briggs signing will be key with the loss of big men Kitwana Rhymer and Eric Williams next year to graduation.

—Eric Soderstrom

Quest for Alumni Cup commences

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

So the journey for the Alumni Cup begins again.

After four years of anguish, as the lower of its season series with sister school UMass-Lowell, the Mass Attack is ready to rewrite the record books.

Always an emotional contest, the Minutemen-River Hawk rivalry is short but distinguished. Since the re-inception of the flagship program of Massachusetts, Lowell has had a decided advantage.

In 21 meetings, the River Hawks have won 13, a fact that does not sit well with the present Minutemen. Despite the lopsided history, this matchup between two state schools in the same commonwealth is always emotional.

"We realize this is a tense matchup," UMass headman Don Cahoon said. "But we have to be pitched emotionally."

The Minutemen are coming off a very disappointing split weekend with college hockey superpower Michigan State and Connecticut. Taking two points out of such a tough weekend is usually considered successful, but the way the Maroon and White played is nothing to write home about.

"They know we expect more out of them," Cahoon said. "It's not something we need to dwell on."

What the Minutemen do need to concentrate on is the suddenly stingy goaltending tandem of Cam McCormick and Jimi St. John. McCormick has yet to allow a goal this year while his partner has been effective as well with a 3.60 goals against average.

But despite the gaudy statistics that the River Hawks boast in net,

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Mike Johnson will likely getting the starting nod in the first game of a home-and-home series this weekend.

College hockey: it's a family affair

UMass frosh Vitek faces Lowell cousin

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Ice hockey is a family affair. Countless sons, brothers and cousins have been bound by the uniting force of ice, rubber and twine – that is until the puck drops between two bloodlines, and all bets are off.

"It's different playing against a family member because you want the bragging rights in the family," Tim Vitek argues. "It comes down to wanting to win."

Ontario natives Vitek and Jimi St. John grew up more than an hour apart in Dresden and Windsor, respectively, but the frozen ponds of the Great White North would springboard this pair along the same path.

Ten years ago, a family gathering likely had the two cousins engaged in some sort of intense hockey game. No matter the setting – road, pond or basement – the competition between family members was always heated.

Fast forward to this weekend, when the pair's respective squads will face off in a home-and-home

Turn to FAMILY AFFAIR page 14

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 50 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, November 16, 2001

Espada offers up wit and wisdom at Amherst College reading

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Poet and activist Martin Espada gave a reading of his poetry at Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday. Espada, who is currently a professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, also recounted his personal experiences in other jobs in a number of fields, and how they, as well as his Puerto Rican heritage, inspire his work.

Espada read approximately a dozen poems, describing the background and creative process of each before giving a dramatic reading.

Throughout his performance, he blended humor with more serious observations about Latino culture and its place in a white-dominated system. He used the issue of "Anglo-owned Mexican restaurants" to address the assimilation of Mexican food into American culture, while erasing its origins so it is "non-threatening" to WASPs. "I mean, what the hell is a wrap anyway? That's a damn tortilla," he exclaimed, to both laughter and nods of recognition from those gathered. He also read a poem titled, "For My Cousin Esteban Who Works at a Restaurant in Cambridge Massachusetts and is Forbidden to Wait Tables because he Wears Dreadlocks."

Several other poems focused on cultural issues with the same blend of seriousness and humor. Another popular selection with the audience was a poem about Espada's first Thanksgiving dinner with his wife's family.

"I hope this goes up on a calendar someday, though the odds are against it," he deadpanned. "My wife's family is from Rocky Hills, Conn. No rocks. No hills. Just a lot of white people and an increasing Puerto Rican population in Hartford that has become the Boogie Man, coming into their window to steal their VCR. Imagine their delight when she brought the Boogie Man home."

The poem, an anecdote about Espada's father-in-law's obsession with, and ownership of, a cannon, and a loud demonstration of it in the back yard, ends with the line, "When the first drunken Pilgrim dragged out the cannon at the first Thanksgiving, that's when the Indians left."

The audience seemed delighted with the poem, and especially with Espada's theatrical performance.

"I have a background in radio drama," he explained. "It helps when I want to do people's voices."

He added a special message to the Amherst College audience: "So when you're sitting in front of your family's Thanksgiving feast, think of this poem, and then laugh out of context."

Some poems, however, were more seriously delivered than others. There was no laughter during Espada's reading of "The Janitor's Garden," which concerned the almost 500 Puerto Rican people who died in the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center in New York.

"In every single office building in Manhattan, there's a shadow army that passes through and makes that building run," Espada said. "[Since the attacks] so many Puerto Rican dreams are dead and no one in the American media is paying attention to that."

Espada also worked commentary on the craft of writing into his per-

Turn to ESPADA page 2

TAKOA GRCZYC/COLLEGIAN

Martin Espada, a professor in the English department at UMass shared his experiences with the students of Amherst College.

UMass Asian Film Festival continues

By Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

The Asian Film Festival, a joint venture between the Asian Studies Program and Communication department, opened at the University of Massachusetts this week.

"This film festival is an extension of these efforts," said professor Anne Ciecko, who teaches Asian popular culture and contemporary world cinema. "And it's open to the public."

The festival started on Tuesday night with the film Nang-Nak in Herter Hall. The tale is a rendition of a Thai folk story by Nonsee Nimibutr.

The festival showcases various films from different Asian countries such as Japan, Korea, Singapore and India. Genres from horror to romance can be expected throughout the week.

These films demonstrate cinema that are not influenced by Western culture and are works that have been proved successful in Asia.

"People have a skewed perception of what's popular in Asia," Ciecko said. "I feel people's perception of Asian films

Turn to AFF page 2

Campus groups unite to fight world hunger

By Asha O'Rourke
Collegian Correspondent

Students and community members piled into the Earth Foods room in the Student Union to witness folk, rock, poetry and dance acts, and raising over a hundred dollars to fight hunger.

The event, which was part of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group's (MassPIRG) Hunger and Homelessness Week, raised donations of food and money for the Food Bank, which provides food for people in need in the area. In between performances by bands such as the Sharks and Cyclub, members of various hunger-related organizations spoke about how students can get involved in volunteering.

Members of Share, a student-run community service program, also turned out to recruit volunteers. Other speakers concentrated on the problem of hunger in local communities. Laura Kyser, a representative of MassPIRG, told the crowd that the incredible turnout for the event was a testament to the feasibility of a food salvage program at the University of Massachusetts.

"Dining Services doesn't believe that individual students can run a food salvage program," she said. "But we're not individual students. What you see here is an effort by all of these organizations like MassPIRG, Hillel House, Share, as well as individuals."

The event also featured music by The Tourists – Shawn, Mike and Jay Kerwin. Also showcased were acts such as spoken word artist Steve Bruckert and the UMass Dance Team.

"The dance team was great," commented one spectator, sophomore Biology major Nicole Potvin. "I really enjoyed them."

Over one hundred dollars was raised for the Food Bank. An estimated two hundred pounds of food was collected.

"I believe this event was successful," said Tom Tran, a MassPIRG volunteer, as he sorted through the donations at the end of the night. "Not only did we raise money and food, we raised awareness in our community."

Students lined up at the end of the night to sign banners and collect literature on volunteer opportunities.

MassPIRG will accept donations of food for the Food Bank today. Donations of canned goods and nonperishable food items can be made in the receptacle outside of the Student Union.

Health workers sent home

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

Management at Providence Hospital in Holyoke sent twelve health workers home after they refused to remove T-shirts bearing the message "Union Yes" followed by a check mark Tuesday afternoon.

The employees wore the shirts in support of a union campaign at Brightside for Families and Children, a mental health clinic in West Springfield, said Tim Scott, an organizer for the United Auto Workers (UAW) local 2322.

Three years ago, the union organized direct care and mental health counselors at Providence, which provides inpatient and outpatient psychiatry as well as substance abuse programs. Both Providence and Brightside are managed by the Sisters of Providence Health System.

Pro-union clothing politicizes the hospital and could disrupt patient care, according to a Providence press release. Management at the hospital refused to comment about the event.

Kelly Rosati was watching his adolescent wards prepare for bed at Providence's Acute Residential Treatment facility when a supervisor told him to remove his T-shirt within five minutes or leave. After consulting with two fellow mental health counselors, Rosati left the short-term care facility for home.

"They told me I was abandoning my post," Rosati said.

The hospital interviewed some of the employees today to determine if they left their shift, said Jody Pasquini, a mental health counselor at Providence. Pasquini, who has worn a T-shirt for the past week as a shop steward for the union, was not at the hospital when management sent the workers home.

For the past two-and-a-half years, Pasquini has asked Providence to stop sexual harassment by instituting a dress code.

"They used to say they can't do anything about the way a female dresses," Pasquini said. "But on Monday, they posted part of a policy in break rooms and the hallways forbidding us to wear pro-union T-shirts to work."

Employees at Providence have worn ripped pants and shirts featuring corporate and union logos, Scott said. Until this week, workers were allowed to wear clothing, such as the "united we bargain, divided we beg" T-shirt, in support of the union campaign.

The union filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) on Oct. 19 to unionize health workers at Brightside. The clinic runs health and child welfare programs, such as residential treatment for children from ages four to 17, substance abuse prevention and treatments for adolescents, schooling for children with emotional and behavioral problems, counseling, and adoption assistance.

Turn to GEO page 3

TAKOA GRCZYC/COLLEGIAN

Commuter love
Ape and man are united in holy matrimony after Ian Bedford's moving speech.

U.S. support key to Northern victories

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Operation Enduring Freedom's campaign in Afghanistan is not over, but the military pressure on the Taliban and al-Qaeda is increasing, the Pentagon said.

General Tommy Franks, commander-in-chief of U.S. Central Command, briefed reporters that gains by the opposition forces, aided by U.S. Special Forces and air strikes, have made significant impact on the Taliban.

The United States has been supplying advisors, weapons, food and air support to the Northern Alliance.

"It's been said that we are tightening the noose, and in fact that is the case," Gen. Franks said. "We're tightening the noose. It's a matter of time."

While the noose is tightening, Franks cautioned that the Taliban has not been eliminated.

"The Taliban is not destroyed as an effective fighting force from the level of one individual man carrying a weapon until that individual man puts down his weapon," Franks said. "And so there still is a capable – capable fighting force on the side of the Taliban. We'll continue to do our best to eliminate that force of the Taliban."

The threat, the general explained, is that the Taliban can drop their weapons and remain hidden.

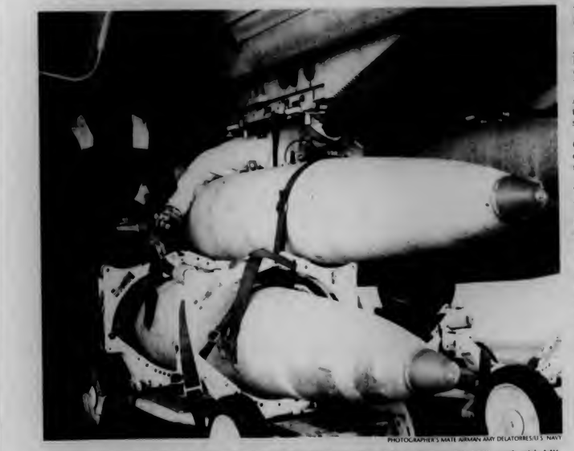
"I would say one other thing about the Taliban and the extent to which they're in disarray. If you think about the different ways they can behave: They can go across a border and wait and come back. They can drop their weapons and blend into the communities," Franks explained. "They can go up in the mountains in the caves and tunnels. They can defect – join the other side – change their mind, go back. So it is not possible to answer the question as to the circumstance of the Taliban."

However, the general said the people of Afghanistan are glad to be rid of the fundamentalist Islamic faction.

"If one looks at the reaction of the people in villages and city after city across that country where the Taliban have faded away or been destroyed or killed or defeated in battle, those people are happy people, for the most part, and they're pleased to be free of the Taliban," Franks said.

Even with recent victories, the bombing campaign will not stop, Franks said. On the contrary, it will be come more "focused."

"The bombing will become more and more and more focused as we continue through time. The targets that we have been after, as you know, have changed. Initially, we wanted to set conditions, so we bombed a lot of the tactical capability," Franks said. "As we had completed that work, essentially, we began to target the formations of the Taliban that were essentially propping up Mullah Omar and that regime."



Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld commented on other developments in the campaign. Heavy fighting around the city of Konduz is continuing, he said. The enemy there is largely affiliated with Osama bin Laden.

"It's heavily al-Qaeda, as – mixed in with probably a number of people from other countries, as well as some Taliban," Rumsfeld said. "But the fighting has been fierce, and it – and the last I checked, this morning, it was still continuing."

Gen. Franks confirmed this, adding that the terrorist and Taliban forces there number in the thousands and are very dedicated.

"I will tell you my appreciation right now is that that number may be 2,000 to 3,000, heavily infested, as the secretary said, with some of the more hard-core people," Franks said. "And so yes, that fight does continue in Konduz."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

PHOTOGRAPHER'S MATE 3 ADRIAN ARY DELATORRE/U.S. NAVY

Aviation Ordnancemen from the "Diamondbacks" of Fighter Squadron One Zero Two (VF-102) work with MK-83 bombs under the wing of one of the squadron's F-14 Tomcats aboard USS Theodore Roosevelt.

TOMMY SUTTON/AWIRE

Wag the dog

First lady Laura Bush and President George W. Bush arrive in Waco, Texas at the Texas State Technical College airport with their dogs Spotty, a English springer spaniel, and Barney, a Scottish terrier

■ AFF

continued from page 1

has western influence."

Ciecko said these films were a "natural extension" of Asian cinema and wants to make that more public through this event.

"One of the main goals has been to increase exposure to international films," Ciecko said. "Especially those which haven't been widely seen in the U.S."

James Hafner, who is the director of Asian Studies at UMass, also contributed to this event. He is also a part of the Five College Asian Pacific American faculty.

Tonight's films are co-sponsored by the UMass Korean Student Association called Foul King and Attack the Gas Station, which are both South Korean films. They will be shown in Herter 231 at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m.

These two comic films are an example of recent popular films in Korea.

Tomorrow's films, which also be shown in Herter 231, take on a different mood, with a short Japanese anime-style movie titled Blood: The Last Vampire at 7 p.m. followed by an Indian film called Kaho Naa...Pyaar Hai [Tell me You Love Me] at 8 p.m.

"Films like Kaho Naa...Pyaar Hai are favorites with diasporic audiences," Ciecko said. "In this case, South Asians around the globe."

The highlights of the festival are the conferences that are planned for the weekend with special guest speakers, which are co-sponsored by the Communication department's Center for the Study of Communication.

Discussions and guest speakers such as Peter Feng, Gina Marchetti, and filmmaker Kimi Takesue will speak and present films.

Feng will speak from on Saturday's conference, which is from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. in Herter 231.

He is an assistant professor of English and Women's Studies at the University of Delaware and is a renowned scholar of Asian cinema. Feng will present the film, A.K.A. Don Bonus, which portrays the story of a Cambodian immigrant in America.

He has two books that will soon be released. They are titled Screening Asian America and Identities in Motion: Asian American Film and Video.

"Feng is a famous scholar [on Asian cinema] and it's exciting to have him," Ciecko said.

Two other films titled History and Memory, which is a Japanese film, and Measures of Distance, an Indian film, will be shown on Sunday with other short films and a conference by Marchetti also to follow. This will be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Herter 231.

Marchetti, who has also produced work on Asian cinema, will lead a Five College faculty forum discussing the parallels of the Japanese internment experience in the U.S. and the current Arab circumstance.

She is an assistant professor of film studies at Ithaca College. She wrote the book Romance and the 'Yellow Peril': Race, Sex, and Discursive Strategy in Hollywood Fiction.

"It's exciting to raise exposure," Ciecko said.

Takesue, who is an independent filmmaker, has produced numerous works, will also present one of her films. She has worked both in the U.S. and Europe.

■ Espada

continued from page 1

formance. He dedicated one poem, "Poet in the Box," about a prison inmate who deliberately tries to be put in solitary confinement so that he can write "to the young poets here tonight and the poets who are thinking about how to dedicate themselves to writing poetry."

After he finished his reading, Espada opened the floor to discussion. Several audience members steered him toward contemporary political issues with their questions, particularly that of bilingualism and education.

"I worry about the educational reforms against English as a second language and bilingual education that are coming to Massachusetts," Espada commented. "I think they're narrow-minded, xenophobic and stupid."

Another student asked him how he started writing.

"I was a terrible student," Espada answered. But, he said, "In tenth grade I had a really good teacher, Mr. Valeca. He had a group of us make our own version of New Yorker Magazine. By the time the work had been divided up, a poem was the only thing left for me to do. I didn't want to fail English again, so I wrote my first poem then, at the age of 15."

He said that this experience was a pivotal one for him.

"I discovered that I loved words and I loved banging them into each other and watching them fly around the room, sometimes fly out the window," he said, adding that "I've essentially been writing on the same subjects, of social justice and culture, since the age of 15."

Espada also said that his audience plays an important role in his work to be both an artist and an activist with his poetry.

"[Social] change doesn't come from the White House," he said. "It comes from our house. It starts with imagination, with an act of political imagination. But I cannot imagine alone, so I ask you to imagine with me."

Boltwood volunteers hold music event

By Joanna Zeitlin
Collegian Staff

The Boltwood Project held an event for its volunteers on Nov. 3 featuring music from students of the Berkshire Music Academy in South Hadley.

Four students came from the Academy to share their musical abilities with the volunteers from the Boltwood Project. Their talents included singing, dancing and playing the saxophone. All of the students that came to play for the crowd had Williams' Syndrome.

The Berkshire Music Academy is a school for students who have extraordinary interest in expanding their musical talent, but they are unable to go to a regular school because of a disability. The school focuses on the abilities of the student, rather than the disabilities.

The school was formed in September of this year by parents of children who suffer from Williams Syndrome. This disorder makes it hard for people to do simple tasks, such as knowing their right from their left or tying their shoes.

However, this disorder does give them an innate sense of musical ability. The school was created because many people with disabilities have other gifts that they can still share with everyone else. It also uses the strengths of the students to work through their problems, and they do that with music. The school itself currently has 14 students attending with ages ranging from 18 to 50.

"When we work with them, we find out what their abilities are rather than their disabilities," said Sarah Reilly, the student supervisor of the Berkshire Music Academy group.

The Boltwood Project is also an organization committed to looking at individuals' abilities over their disabilities. The project gives the students of the University of Mass students give back to the community by going to shelters, group homes, schools and community centers. They have the opportunity to work with a wide variety of people ranging from the severely handicapped to the elderly.

Boltwood Project visits the Berkshire Music Academy every week. Because of some of their handicaps, the students of the Berkshire Academy do not get to live as independent a lifestyle as the average person does. The Boltwood Project tries to give them a taste of another lifestyle that they do not have the opportunity to experience. It gives both the participants and the volunteers a chance to meet with people that are quite different from them.

"It helps me learn more about you guys and helps you learn more about us," explained Victoria Ackley, one of the participants from the music school.

The volunteers at the Boltwood Program have an opportunity to make a positive impact the lives of other people. Colin Darge, another participant in the program said, "I love the Boltwood Program because we get friends that we never met before and do fun stuff."

Both the volunteers and the participants share a common bond of companionship and fun with one another. They all are able to take something really important out of their time together. Kelly Martin illustrates her fondness for the program by saying, "thank you for letting us share our music, abilities and friendship with you guys."

Supervisor Sarah Reilly believes that the program can really bring people together. The Berkshire Music Academy helps you "take time out of your busy schedule to make a difference and have some fun."

Stanford avoids full-time faculty cuts

By Deena Skolnick
The Stanford Daily (Stanford U.)

(U-WIRE) STANFORD, Calif. Although a recent survey by the U.S. Department of Education claimed colleges are cutting back their numbers of full-time faculty positions, Stanford University administrators report the University thus far is avoiding this trend.

"My sense is that all universities are affected by the general downturn in the national economy, but for some the effects are more severe," said Deborah Stipek, dean of the School of Education. "Stanford is doing some 'belt tightening,' but no freeze on hiring faculty has been proposed to my knowledge."

The department's report, conducted by the National Center for Education Statistics, looked at 960 institutions' policies and discovered 40 percent of these institutions had reduced the sizes of their full-time faculties since 1993. One-quarter did so by replacing full-time faculty members with part-time faculty members.

At Stanford, part-time faculty members account for only 34 of the University's 1,671 professors, or about two percent.

"Stanford has traditionally had a faculty based on the concept of a full-time faculty, committed full time to teaching and scholarship," said Kathryn Gillam, senior associate provost for faculty affairs and foundation relations. "I do not believe that the deans, the provost or the president would be very interested in changing this core concept."

Patricia Jones, vice provost for faculty development, cited Stanford's mission of hiring individuals who are the top scholars and teachers in their fields.

"It is very difficult for faculty who are not full-time to achieve and maintain true distinction in scholarship and at the same time sustain high quality teaching activities," she said.

According to Sharon Long, dean of the School of Humanities and Sciences, "Our faculty [members] typically teach graduate and undergraduate students; they pursue scholarship in their fields and play important roles in department and University governance. I believe that these multiple facets of faculty life mandate that faculty have full-time positions."

Stipek said there are advantages to having some part-time faculty members at Stanford.

"Part-time faculty can fill needs and sometimes they can provide wonderful opportunities for students," she said.

But, she cautioned, "We don't want to be in a situation where we depend substantially on part-time faculty because it is hard to maintain continuity and predictability in programs without a critical mass of regular faculty."

Provost John Etchemedy said he does not expect the number of new faculty hired this year to differ significantly from recent years. Stanford hired 140 new full-time faculty members in 1998-99 and 118 new members in 1999-2000.

According to Long, "If in any one year we face financial constraints, we might hire fewer people, but we would still be offering a full-time position to whomever we recruit."

Although Stanford generally can compete with peer institutions for top faculty members, the University is sometimes at a disadvantage because of the high cost of living in the Palo Alto, Calif., area.

Jones said for the past few years Stanford has been surveying faculty recruits who do not accept the positions offered to them at Stanford.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on income generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Term List Reports, the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1993. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzcyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Smiarski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

ZANNA has it.....Jeans
how LOW can you go?
MAVI "Serena"
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Campus Perspectives

By Tibora Girczyc-Blum

Which character on "The Simpsons" do you most relate to and why?

Mike Dechellis
Senior
Accounting
"Barney Gumble, because I act just like him in the bars. I can also burp like him."

Ted Allen
Senior
Computer Science
"I can relate to Lisa Simpson, because I am a genius in both music and academics. And I have a little screaming girl inside of me."

Tony Kim
Sophomore
School of Management
"I'm like Bart, because I'm a jackass"

Carly Elman
Sophomore
Wildlife Conservation
"Lisa, because I'm a big dork. Yeah, definitely a big dork."

Christina Ciampa
Senior
Biology
"Lisa, because it's tough being interested in things that people think are nerds. I'm always siding with her."

Alex Vasserman
Sophomore
Pre-med
"Snake, because he's being screwed by the system, man."

Rene Gonzalez
Graduate Student
Political Science
"Lisa, because she's the most normal. Everyone else is weird."

Tharsis Figueroa
Sophomore
Biology
"Maggie, because I'm like a little girl."

■ GEO

continued from page 1

When employees from the clinic and union supporters informed management that a majority of them want to unionize, Brightside agreed to hold an election on Nov. 1, Scott said.

However, management rescinded the agreement the evening before the vote. Scott said Brightside requested a NLRB hearing to challenge the makeup of the bargaining unit, the employees to join the union.

"The senior counselors were surprised to learn that Brightside considers them supervisors," Scott said. "All these years, they felt that they were under supervisors."

Once the NLRB decides if the senior counselors can join the bargaining unit, it will schedule an election date. Currently, the union consists of 3,000 automobile, aerospace and agricultural workers from 15 employers.

On the net: United Auto Workers local 2322: http://www.uaw2322.org/

If you want to write for News, come down to the Campus Center basement and talk to Catherine, Ken or Melissa.

UMass basketball
SEASON OPENER at the Mullins
TONIGHT
UMASS vs. ARKANSAS LITTLE ROCK
7:00 PM
SCHEDULE MAGNET NIGHT
EVERY FAN RECEIVES A UMASS BASKETBALL SCHEDULE MAGNET
THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA WITH HEAD COACH STEVE LAPPAS!
FREE STUDENT TICKETS!
For more information call 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS @ Mullins Center Campus Center Curry Hicks Cage

Life is hard without balance.
COLD COLD
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001
At Ernst & Young, we enable people to bring their professional goals into harmony with their personal inspirations. It's a work ethic we believe in. That's why we were named one of the 100 Best Companies to Work For three times in a row. Perhaps you'll want to join us as we go for four. Come on over and get a warm welcome.
ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Taliban is heading out; Our problems remain

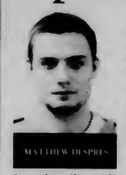
Now that the Northern Alliance has driven the Taliban out of many of Afghanistan's key cities, including the capital city of Kabul, there are those who would like to believe that the war on terrorism is now over. This belief is foolish for three reasons.

First, the threat of the Taliban has not been entirely eliminated. While they have surrendered a number of important battlegrounds in the past week, they have not given up, and few experts think that they are likely to do so.

If Afghanistan's war with Russia taught us anything, it was that Afghans are unwilling to admit defeat, no matter how dire their military situation may be. One supporter of the Taliban threatened to fight the Northern Alliance "anywhere", even in Afghanistan's mountains, if all of the major cities were lost. There is no reason to assume that the threat of the Taliban is over, no matter how decisive its recent defeats.

Second, even if the Northern Alliance does gain complete control of Afghanistan, there is no reason to think that their regime will be a pleasant one. It is generally agreed that the Northern Alliance's human rights record is "marginally better" than that of the Taliban, which is akin to saying that Saddam Hussein's moral character is slightly better than Hitler's. The Northern Alliance has, in some ways, been more oppressive to women than even the Taliban, and has been involved in countless immoral and oppressive acts, including torture, drug running, and persecution of ethnic groups.



Yes, there are many reasons to think that the Northern Alliance is the only realistic choice to govern Afghanistan. But the Northern Alliance is hardly the "ally" that America deserves in the region, and it must continue to be watched carefully by international human rights groups and multilateral organizations.

Third, even if the Northern Alliance comes to power, and does not engage in gross human rights violations, the war on terrorism will still be far from over. There is credible evidence that other nations, particularly Iraq, have alliances with bin Laden and his al-Qaeda network. A threat to the U.S. still remains in the Middle East and Central Asia, with or without the current government of Afghanistan in place. And even an overthrow of this government will not guarantee bin Laden's capture and extradition, or the capture and extradition of those closest to him. The men responsible for the Sept. 11 attacks are still at large, and likely to remain so, regardless of military victory. The Taliban, as heinous as its crimes may be, was not the terrorists who attacked the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on Sept. 11. The terrorists who overtook four American planes on that day were not even Afghan.

One of the only positive effects of the attacks on America has been an increased interest in international relations. One can only hope that this interest will persist even after the Taliban's fall, if such a fall is to take place. The Northern Alliance may be our new best friends, but knowledge of its past behavior should serve as a warning to us.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

I pledge my grievance to UMass

MATTHEW DESPRES

If the following sounds immature or juvenile in any way, well, I'm not apologizing. Sometimes it's healthy to get on the ground and do a little childish fidgeting. After all, if this University has no issue with dipping to impossibly low standards when dealing with its students, the little people, then I'm right where they've put me anyways; on the ground, yelling up to the Big Man intent on screwing us over. Let me know if any of this sounds familiar.

In the days immediately prior to pre-registration, I received a bill from the Bursar's office to the sweet tune of $810. It caught my interest. "What could it be," I thought, "that has been sitting in the dark annals of Whitmore, accumulating such sizeable charges?" I was interested enough, in fact, to take a trip to Oz itself and seek out the man behind the curtain who held the answer to my sudden state of debt.

What I met, of course, was simply the curtain, and half-expected a spanking for trying to peek behind. My query, I thought, was simple enough: "What's the $810 for?" If you've ever had to shell out close to a grand for anything, you'll understand my concern in determining the finer details of the transaction.

They, of course, would tell me nothing.

Well, that's actually a bit unfair. I was told the charges were for something, it seemed, but what specifically they couldn't tell me. "So," I said, "I have to pay a bill that the school itself can only explain in the vaguest of terms before I can register for a single class?"

Yes, of course. Makes all the sense in the world, right?

Needless to say, I did what has come naturally to me many times before: I curled up in the fetal position and called home. Dad made a call.

Well, folks, there must have been something magic in the air that cold, November morning, for lo and behold, he received a specific rundown of the bill. Great. Having physically stood in the office that my father called, I'm still puzzled and offended that my own business was withheld from me. And not just me, but the countless other students I've spoken with that have had their wrists slapped, their own affairs spit on by the personality devoid employees manning the desks, and been sent back out the door, feeling foolish for having asked. God forbid we know a little something about ourselves.

Knowing this, I can't help but feel like the bad guy, the immature college student who can't keep track of his own ass. Another faceless number the administration has no time for.

> "…this school makes an alarming number of mistakes each year and dodges the blame each time, leaving us to stay afloat in the disorienting wake. To find housing when they continually over enroll. To find $800 in the space of five days. To find space in classes we need to graduate."

Like new life from death, however, another problem rose from the ashes of this dilemma. The Bursars office says I've been billed all along, at least once a month since the beginning of the semester. It's not true. I haven't. Nor have other people I know. No, the first bill I had a chance to lay my eyes on came a few short days before pre-reg with the proclamation "Thou Shall Not Register."

Tell me, UMass, where the fairness in that is?

The charges and specifics of the bill I understand and accept; while far from thrilled that my parents have to come to bat for me unexpectedly, I realize, finally, the charges are legit. Trust me, UMass, this number will find a way to fill your sour belly. Giving us notice just before registration, however, and thus interfering heavily with one of our most important responsibilities as students is a painfully cheap way to practice your business. It's unfair and you damn well know it.

To my surprise and genuine gratitude, a kind professor of mine made a call and got the hold lifted, so that I could both register and head back to Whitmore to discuss the particulars. Which was wonderful until the hold fell from the sky once again, leaving me with a schedule in flux and feet firmly planted back on square one.

To whoever lifted that hold: if you weren't supposed to do it, you shouldn't have. I wasn't actively lobbying for it. To dangle it up and down over my head with zero explanation, and then do away with it as you please, unannounced, is complete B.S.

College is interesting enough without the administration actively trying to screw us to the walls. I'll be the first to admit my shortcomings and insecurities: it's taking me five years to graduate from this hole (that's right, UMass: I'll be keeping your heat on for at least one more year), this vacuum that carelessly shuffles our records, keeps our personal information to itself and squelches our voice when we try to raise genuine concerns. It goes beyond bills; this school makes an alarming number of mistakes each year and dodges the blame each time, leaving us to stay afloat in the disorienting wake. To find housing when they continually over enroll. To find $800 in the space of five days. To find space in classes we need to graduate. The list, as I'm sure most of you are familiar with, goes on. Perhaps what I should have been trying to find all this time was a new place to call home.

If any of you have encountered similar problems, however insignificant they may seem, pick up the phone and give 'em Hell. UMass needs to hear us. They need to know what we sound like, everyone, because the sound of us being dragged through their own crap is apparently not loud enough.

I'll pay your bills, UMass, but you can still kiss my pale, white ass. You play the game unfairly, and cheapen every last one of us in the process.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/Op: we're seeing Sonic Youth tonight.

Letter to the editor:
A response to "Supporting our War"

To the editor:

I carefully read Sam Wilkinson's op-ed piece, "Supporting our war." Frankly, I'm saddened by what I saw as the casual distortion of the peace movement. Wilkinson appears in line with the majority of the pro-war crowd, who seem to regard the war dissenters as some sort of liberal phenomenon, a whiny and stubborn group opposed to all things American "knuckleheads" ignorant of the facts and blind to most reason.

Certainly I can't speak for everyone who's against the bombing (statistically, plenty should be ultra-insane). I understand that my facts are only what I read; anyone out there can certainly glean more or different information and have a very different (perhaps better) viewpoint than I do. I humbly propose to bridge the gap between those that read The New York Times or The Wall Street Journal and Z magazine or independent media.org for their information.

Wilkinson writes, "there were actually people on this very campus that opposed an attack on a brutal dictatorship whose aggressive sexism made it one of the most oppressive regimes that the world has ever known." I should clarify, there are still students and faculty who are against the pointless slaughter of thousands, perhaps millions of innocent civilians in an effort to weed out a terrorist network developed by earlier-short-sighted American foreign policy and support a government with an equally bad human rights record, the Northern Alliance.

My main concern about the bombing isn't the Taliban, per se, but rather "the potential for a humanitarian crisis of massive proportions," according to the UN-World Food Program. U.S. bombings have destroyed roads and communications severely hindering international aid efforts. WFP figures state that there are 7.5 million desperately hungry people throughout Afghanistan, most of whom will starve to death within three months without substantial food aid. An Oxfam report says "we just don't know how many people may die if the bombing is not suspended and the aid effort assured." These people have very little connection with the Taliban or al Qaeda, but simply a desire to stay alive in a devastated country.

The fact of the matter is, the Taliban offered to turn bin Laden over to a neutral country to stand trial, potentially saving millions of lives and billions of dollars in military spending. As I see it, military action is only galvanizing anti-American opposition in the Islamic world, not lessening but increasing the risk of a future terrorist attack on Americans. The Washington Post reported, "there is a '100 percent' chance of an attack should the United States strike Afghanistan, according to sources familiar with the briefing." from a congressional leak.

As for the attack on a brutal dictatorship, the United States has treated this before by aiding and training the mujahedin, a large group of Islamic fundamentalists – including the now demonized Osama bin Laden and a considerable size of the present day Taliban – against the Soviet invasion in 1979. Supporting the rule of the oppressive Northern Alliance, whose record includes mass rape and civilian executions, persecution on the basis of religion and ethnicity and the recruitment of child soldiers, repeats the continuously flawed example in American foreign policy of supporting the lesser of two evils. I wonder if the if the United States was so serious about fighting "brutal dictatorships," why does it give away billions in military aid to the countries with the worst documented human rights records: Columbia and Turkey? Why did the United States give Saddam Hussein the weapons he so openly used against his own people?

I present these facts not to spite Sam or convince him to change colors, but rather to show him what some of us "left-leaners", as he likes to phrase it, are deeply concerned about.

As clear as it can sometimes seem, people rarely conform to labels such as left or right, liberal or conservative. Mostly, these terms simply generalize the arguments, preventing real debate.

No matter what side you take on the issue, you would probably agree that a unified, educated front against terrorism is considerably better than divided, intellectually closed and mutually hostile factions competing for different solutions to the problem. Honest and open dialogue is the only way to bridge the gap. I propose that the Collegian takes up the role as facilitator for a point-by-point dialogue as a solution to the crises enveloping our country. It's only by understanding that we can solve our problem.

Ryan Coughlin
UMass undergrad

Prepping for grad school

I am extremely fortunate that my roommate this year is a senior or I would be completely lost. She has been losing her mind studying for the GRE, attempting to go abroad and writing her senior thesis. A few weeks ago she returned from an information session that as a junior, I should have attended. This is something that nobody actually tells you. Well, luckily, she revealed the whole awful truth to me about how I need to prepare now or I'll be doomed come next May. I was glad that we had this conversation, because if we didn't, I would be a blind sheep for the rest of the year.

Apparently, I haven't been focusing my energy in enough directions. Lately, I've just been worried about pre-registration and the long term planning of graduating on time. However, that is not enough. I'm planning on attending graduate school at this point but never actually took the time to really consider what I needed to do to get there. My biggest concern when it came to graduate school was deciding what I'm going to study. There are so many options open to me, I just haven't had the time to really process what I want. This problem is petty compared to preparing for the GRE. I should have bought books in September so I could continuously study for the GRE to take next fall.

If I wasn't so caught up in life, it should have made perfect sense, like the way I started studying for the SATs junior year. I'm hoping and praying that the GREs are just a number and are not counted too heavily by graduate schools. I'm just not good at standardized tests.

Then there's the idea of going abroad. My parents said 'no' a long time ago so it's completely out of the question for me. Going abroad is something that is looked upon very favorably by graduate schools, which stinks for me but is great for you if you still have time to travel. I wish I even had enough guts to go abroad. The idea of completely uprooting myself from this campus to start over again for just a semester or year somewhere else is not very appealing to me. I would also worry about the sense of possible disappointment that might result in it. I've met many people who have gone abroad and then become very bitter about the fact that UMass is nothing like the exotic place they just came back from. These people tend to be pretty miserable and are not pleasant to talk to.

> "I wish I even had enough guts to go abroad. The idea of completely uprooting myself from this campus to start over again for just a semester or year somewhere else is not very appealing to me."

I think the icing on the cake, and the biggest mistake I could have possibly made this year, was when my roommate told me that I should be going to job fairs. I figured that since I was planning on attending graduate school I didn't need to go to job fairs to look for a job. Well, it's one thing to plan for graduate school but actually getting accepted is another story. The idea that I wouldn't be able to get into a graduate school never crossed my mind. I evaluated the application process to be similar to the undergraduate application system where you will apply to some tough schools and then to safety schools that you know will accept you. Nope. There is a chance that you will not get accepted into graduate school and that you will need to find a job. Selling yourself at job fairs is the best way to ensure that if all else fails, you will have a job.

That last one really scared me. I feel incredible sympathy for the seniors on this campus who are planning on graduate school but didn't think of all of this stuff during their junior year. Now that I'm aware, I have something new to be stressed out about. This weekend I'll have to go out and buy some GRE books and go online to research some graduate degree programs. I hope that this information was informative to someone out there, because much of it was news to me. And now I'm a whole semester closer to the fate of graduation, which means that an even harsher dose of reality is on its way.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass students show MTV how to party, play games

Students at Pierpont are transfixed by Microsoft's X-Box.

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

MTV invaded the University of Massachusetts campus on Wednesday and Thursday creating scenes comparable to those of the network's own "Real World."

In an effort to shoot footage for the pilot stages of MTV University, a channel specifically geared towards college students, a half-dozen crew members trekked from one hot spot to the next, both on campus and downtown, soaking up images of typical UMass weekdays.

Students awaited MTV's arrival with baited breath. An article published in the Collegian last week piqued interest as MTV received an overwhelming response and pleads from camera-ready students ready to strut their stuff for the network.

The University of Massachusetts was chosen as one of eight beta schools as a test for their new university initiative.

The Pioneer Valley university was chosen for its size, diversity, and geographic location. Before reaching UMass, MTV visited the campuses of the University of Connecticut, Rutgers University, Montclair State University, Pennsylvania State University and Fordham University. MTV will make its last two stops at the University of Georgia and the University of California-San Diego.

GARDNER GARNERS ATTENTION

Gardner Loolan, a California native, is serving as MTV University's first veejay. Gardner (who only goes by his first name) self-admittedly conned his way as MTVU's VJ. During the 2001 Video Music Awards, Gardner and a bunch of his buddies, concocted a sly plan in which they pretended to be MTV staff members who had backstage passes to give away to anxious fans. But after holding contests, Gardner and his friends admitted to MTV fanatics that they weren't even employed by the Viacom network. Gardner caught the entire plan on camera and sent it off to MTV. "MTV got a hold of me and instead of suing me they hired me." Gardner confidently stated.

Gardner, a lanky 19-year-old sophomore Anthropology major at Fordham University, claims success comes from "motivating yourself. Good things come from it," he said.

Gardner, who has become a quasi-celebrity as the appointed MTV University VJ, feels MTVU is a great idea. "I think that it's a good idea to replay the shows that college kids are into," he said. "If this network takes off I want it to be different than MTV. I think it's a good idea to cater to a group other than the teenybopper crowd. I want a network that reflects different aspects of college life; be more substantial, less fluff, less candy-coated, and more inclusive."

Gardner, dressed in jeans and a purple hooded fleece-jacket, feels that MTV University would provide a great outlet to fledgling college talent. "There's a lot of college talent but no outlet to bring it on," Gardner said. I think college is one of the best times in my life and I want something that reflects that."

MTV-YOU

Van Meter welcomed the network on Wednesday night for their weekly Koffe Haus. The Koffe Haus is a weekly event in the Van Meter basement sponsored by the House Council and led by Dave Miller, a senior Computer Science major. The goal of the Koffe Haus is to showcase the finest in music, poetry and performance art. Miller, like most students, sent MTV an email inviting the network to the weekly shindig. Over 100 starry-eyed students packed into the Koffe Haus in hopes of receiving a chance at stardom.

"We have some really good underground acts that we'd love to give exposure to," an enthused Miller stated. "I just hope it's these things that will get the proposed channel off the ground."

But before long, MTV was off to capture even more scintillating shots – and eventually create the biggest party UMass has experienced in recent memory.

The crew quickly fled to the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity house, located at 401 North Pleasant St. The brothers welcomed the MTV crew as they entered the packed frat as cameras captured shots of UMass-style partying. With screams louder than a veritable taping of "TRL," students ambushed the MTV crew as soon as cameras began rolling, proclaiming they want their MTVU.

"MTV wanted to know where to party and there's no better party to be had than at AEP," said oldest AEP frat brother David "Stoffinator" Stoff.

Rivaling scenes straight out of Spring Break, the MTV crew even captured footage of thirsty students drinking straight from an ice luge. "Once you get a camera and a microphone kids go crazy," Gardner exclaimed over the raucous music. "It went grand."

"It was the greatest experience of my life. We were begging MTV to be on TV and they granted us this wish," said a thrilled Megan Brown, a junior Psychology major also speaking on behalf of her other friends.

AEP bid farewell to the MTV crew as students gathered in a final group shot for a promo cut shouting "This is UMass and you're watching MTVU!"

But the fun wasn't over yet. MTV's cameras continued to catch Amherst nightlife as they ventured out to Atlantis, at 41 Boltwood Walk. An overwhelming amount of anticipation sent hundreds of students to the nightclub.

"Wednesday nights at Atlantis are really cool," said Jen Sammarco, a senior Communications major. "Atlantis is never crowded on Wednesday nights and tonight it is because MTV is here."

Those lucky enough to get in crowded around the cameras on the 21-plus night, showing their excitement for MTV's arrival. MTV's crew captured sizzling footage of drinking and dancing, not to mention friend introductions and shout-outs.

"You will never see that sh*t again," exclaimed Dave McIntosh, a senior Computer Networking major. "That was the bomb!"

MTVU TESTS XBOX AT UMASS

On Thursday, MTV visited the Pierpont dormitors per the wishes of roommates Jim Crook, an undeclared freshman, and Brian O'Sullivan, an SOM major. Along with Gardner, the roommates previewed the new (officially released yesterday) Microsoft-manufactured video game console, the "XBox."

After the students and Gardner tested five different games ranging from foxball to racing, Crook stated that the "XBox is "unbelievable. It's better than PlayStation 2."

A variety of campus activities showed MTV how unique and diverse the UMass community truly is. MTV also shot scenes of students at the Student Union, the W.E.B. DuBois Library, the Hangar, and a shot of marching band practice.

IT'S A WRAP!

Turn to MTV page 6

Alfie blazes Britpop's path into the future

By Ian Beck
Collegian Correspondent

ALFIE
If You Happy With You Need do Nothing
Twisted Nerve

Oh, to be from England. At random intervals, during random days, at capricious interludes I'm given to romanticizing how much I love music from the United Kingdom. I don't, however, relish for the whimsy of vocabulary style that Britons share with one another (especially those who I read to contextualize Alfie's If You Happy With You Need do Nothing), because I can't for the life of me understand what they're trying to get across.

Alfie could be most easily referred to as Badly Drawn Boy's disciples. For those of you who don't know who Badly Drawn Boy is, but yearn to learn, here's a quick history lesson. As we're in the U.S. and not BDB's home overseas, it's much harder to be a Brit-pop junkie without shelling out loads of cash for import magazines and CDs. Thus, like most bands from across the pond, it's quite rare for them to get either really good publicity or a large fan base. That being said, both Badly Drawn Boy and Alfie are two bands, two links on the great chain of Britpop/Space Rock/Indie, that if not already, will be as qualified as Travis, Belle and Sebastian, Radiohead, Sigur Ros, and the lesser known latest Icelandic export Mum. BDB's album is an hour-long trip through an art museum. No track is similar in any way, and I would like to argue that his instrumental interludes add a texture never-before seen on any indie or folk-rock album.

Back to the part about disciples, then; Alfie were signed to Badly Drawn Boy's record label soon after its conception, and were immediately whisked away on a world tour with their mentor. More than just his opening band on this tour, Alfie were his backup band too, allowing them qualifications that most protégé-type bands don't often get. For all you BDB fans then, here is a new treat if you haven't already gone and swiped yourself a copy. These blokes are supposed to be the leaders in England's new 'Acoustic Revolution,' and after listening to the album countless times, I'd say that they're a breath of fresh air to the Travis and Radiohead albums you're on the verge of wearing out.

Alfie's sound is definitely derived from BDB, the most prominent coming from "2 Up 2 Down," a song featuring the French Horn and Cello that sucked me into Hour of the Bewilderbeast. Also featured are some very simplistic, basic melodies reminiscent of Belle and Sebastian. There isn't really much else to compare Alfie to, just like Badly Drawn Boy the album is like walking through an of modern art, each song is a different painting to contemplate.

Alfie's album is rock solid, and if you're into the Britpop scene, it's a must-have. If you're not sure, head to the aforementioned website, and check out both BDB and Alfie. All the songs have obscene amounts of texture, and the albums are definitely solid alternatives to the Britpop acoustic genre.

www.dailycollegian.com
Write For The Daily Collegian
www.dailycollegian.com

Russian mobsters got nothing on KGB

By Esteban Arguello
Collegian Staff

THE KGB
The KGB
DreamWorks

I wish pop music would sound a lot more like this. Take away all the boy bands and Madonna-wannabe teen pop stars and replace it with California music like that of the KGB. Their self-titled second album is like a futuristic dream Brian Wilson might have had, except the Beach never had as much funk. The melody is alluring and the background vocals are superb, and in my view are what make the album. The tracks all have variety switching from ska to rock to funk, but all share a certain spunk that make this record a fun listen.

It starts off with "Fortune & Fame," a song about being famous. Although they're not quite famous yet, they sure seem to have the ego (for further references see the song "I'm a Player"). The outer space effects and glam-rock feel make one suppose that the song was a track left behind by Spacehog. The song is comprised of light, airy guitars, a funky base rhythm, and fun chorus hooks that define the album. There is a playful relationship between the background and main vocals that's reminiscent of Weezer's early work.

They switch it up with a drum machine on "Lover Undercover." The song is a little too poppy, but the Spanish trumpet during the interlude is an amusing mix, and they then switch it up with a little doo-wop, keeping it interesting. It's a modern take on a Temptations meets the Beach Boys feel. It only has a short chorus: "Last night I found a lover/ under cover/ in my sheets / didn't get out of bed for weeks/ Romeo's got nothing on me," but the funk keeps the song interesting.

The music stays on the same level until the disc gets to the song "I'm A Player," a party song that seems to be pulled out of an old dance hall routine. It's a bold song: "I'm a player/ and I know it," but singer/songwriter Toby (Eric Tobias) pulls it off in swagger. The song is now on my pre-game playlist; it'll get any listener pumped. It's easily the best song on the album.

Toby has a voice like that of ex-Sublime front man Bradley Nowell, and writes lyrics in a similar manner. The opening lines to "Once Upon A Time" make the comparison easy. "Once upon a time we used to plot crimes/ got busy in the summer time." Even the opening drum-machine rhythm allures to such a style that has been gone for a while.

The album returns with the same "I'm A Player" format for "LongShot." It's the only part of the CD that gets repetitive because you start to notice that every song is about a girl. The CD has plenty of variety in music that keeps things interesting. The songs are fun and different from the current pop hits in a way that most listeners won't mind.

The hardest song is "Plastic Soul" because they finally kick up the distortion on the guitars. Even with distorted guitars the KGB come off as trippy, slightly hallucinogenic, and even a bit reggae ("Hey little sister/ could you help me around/ all these cats that be bringing me down") as in the days when Sublime or Oasis played 'hard.' It's arguably more loud than hard, but this band doesn't need to be hard. It's more of a party band than a rock band, one that could easily enjoy radio success. The songs are written with catchy radio-friendly hooks, the double entendres hide any lewdness, and themes are clean enough for any mother. It's the kind of music you could listen to at a barbecue or at the beach without having any complaints. The constant switching of rhythm and tempo keeps everyone up and dancing.

COURTESY OF SARAH MCDOWELL

The KGB crafts Spacehog-esque pop tunes to die for.

The KGB is a fun, light album for anyone wanting a good listen on a sunny day. It never gets rough or hard, and even the slow songs are light and have bouncy synth music in the back. The band really makes no statements and only brings pop-music to the table trying to make friends with everyone. The average track length is 3 minutes, keeping songs new and fresh. The KGB is a noble second album from a fresh up and coming band.

Love is blind in Christine Lahti's My First Mister

Albert Brooks and Leelee Sobieski star in My First Mister.

By Anna S. Cohen-Cole
Collegian Correspondent

MY FIRST MISTER
Directed by Christine Lahti
Starring Leelee Sobieski and Albert Brooks
Playing at The Academy of Music

Getting my pad of paper and pen out just in time, I look up to the screen to see bloodstained pictures of who knows what, and to hear the deep raspy voice of Leelee Sobieski (Jennifer). Talking about death and her love of writing eulogies, Sobieski led me to think that perhaps I was in the wrong theater. This wasn't the comedy I had heard it was going to be. I felt depressed from minute one. I was further surprised to see the camera scan to show a very unfamiliar looking Sobieski. Instead of the blonde all-American Helen Hunt look-a-like, we see a heavily pierced jet-black hair pale main character that prefers to be called J.

The movie is yet another look at the coming of age story. J (Sobieski) doesn't fit in anywhere. Her graduation from a high school reminiscent of Clueless is not a joyous occasion, but instead another time to dismiss the ever-present efforts of her naively warm mother, Mrs. Benson (played by the ever high-pitched unique Carol Kane). Her desire to live with the Partridge Family is ironically reflected in her own mother's attitude toward life. Yet, the ever-present stepfather Bob, played by Michael McKean, as a distant non-talking football watcher breaks the ideal family mold ta far different role than the flamboyantly gay Pekinese owner in Best in Show).

Hope for Sobieski and the movie comes after a long day of the Pretty Woman routine of being turned away from "rich" stores because of how she looks. At a point when we think that J is about to give up, we see an exceptionally well-executed funny (yes, I actually said funny) scene in the store window of Rutherfords. This is when we are introduced to Randall, played by Albert Brooks, who amazingly was not initially known for his comic abilities but instead for his birth name, Albert Einstein (look it up, it's true). It is obvious to tell from the moment we see the two together that J and the soon-to-be-called R have a connection that is not fully explained until the end of the movie. It is this connection: employee-employer, friends, and perhaps even lovers that create the heart of the film.

I'm not sure if we were supposed to feel sorry for J from the beginning of the movie, but this feeling continues throughout pretty much the entire film. Instead of growing close to Sobieski, the audience was oddly removed by her character's distance. Yet through Christine Lahti's direction, Albert Brooks' wonderful performance and the excellent use of recognizable supporting characters (John Goodman, reminiscent of the Walter in The Big Lebowski and Mary Kay Place with her history of comic ingenuity in such shows as "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and "M*A*S*H"), the movie pulls through with an overall "good feeling." And perhaps, even, a "message," but that one you'll have to find out for yourself.

■ MTV

continued from page 5

Bill Bosco, a junior journalism major, who interned at MTV during the summer and helped develop the idea of MTV University, helped the network capture crisp shots. "We were impressed by the amount of school spirit," Bosco said. "We covered a lot of key areas which is great. Everything went well." In the end, even Bosco received his fifteen minutes of fame as he became a VJ.

"From all the schools we've been to no group of students has been more cooperative, inviting, or hospitable," MTV executive producer Morgan Hertzau said. Other schools have only 6 spots to fill.

MTV University, whose demographic will be targeted toward slightly older audience than MTV, will include documentaries, videos, classic MTV shows such as "Beavis and Butthead" and episodes of Spring Break. But most importantly, the network will provide an outlet for up-and-coming college-aged artists and bands ready for their big break.

Much of the coverage of MTV University will be catered to the likes of college students – sex, drugs, and nightlife to name a few.

So far the reaction garnered from the various universities has been positive, according to Hertzau. "We feel very confident that things are going well," he said. If all goes well, the new network will tentatively launch in Sept. 2002 and will air 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The UMass segment of MTV University is scheduled to air on Wed. Nov. 28 on Channel 9 of the Housing Services Cable Network Lineup from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

"We're excited about this opportunity," said Paul Cichanowisz, manager of Housing Cable. "We're real happy to have been contacted by them," pointing out that only five universities in the country have access to the pilot stages of MTV University. "We've heard a lot of buzz on campus that the university likes it," he said, while pointing out that 11,000 students are able to access the channel.

Students interested in offering feedback on the network after the pilot airs are welcome to email MTV at MTVUniversity@MTV.com.

MTV University is slated UMass this week.

McCartney true to form on Rain

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

PAUL MCCARTNEY
Driving Rain
Capitol Records

As the grounding element for George Harrison's driving, exotic rhythms and the lyrical ointment for the searing wit of John Lennon, Paul McCartney was the perfect musical tool in the mythical Beatle songwriting process. With his penchant for excess kept in check by his mates, he channeled his energy into what ultimately became some of the more remarkable songs in history, works that burst creatively in countless directions.

When that gig split some thirty years back, however, Paul was alone at the wheel, continuing to write potent songs but edging closer to material that proved to be too much of, well, Paul. Left to his own devices, what were once passing breezy moments on Beatles albums became full-fledged affairs; while Lennon tortured us with "My Mummy's Dead," Paul was noodling away in the wake of "Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey."

Enough of that past. In recent years, McCartney has come strikingly close to tapping the A game again; the first half of Flaming Pie was balanced enough to justify the album as a whole, while Run Devil Run was the cathartic, return to the roots trip he needed to take to see if, in fact, there was something left in the tank. Driving Rain, the latest from Sir Paul, could be the love child of the former couple; he turns it up, he bares his soul, and in between some utterly forgettable tracks, chips in with what could be some of the best and most diverse work of his career.

Paul McCartney has another solid solo bow under his belt with Driving Rain.

Album openers "Lonely Road" and "From a Lover to a Friend" are, from the titles down to the throbbing Hoffner bass, portraits of McCartney at his best. The former would have fit snugly on Flaming Pie, a chugging rock tune whose lyrics are run through his well-worn rock howl. The latter is textbook Paul, produced sparsely to overwhelming effect, and seems to simply "be" rather than enter and leave at definite points. Seldom in music is silence used to such great effect.

Musically speaking, McCartney upholds the promise of those two tracks, heading in some interesting directions with "She's Given Up Talking" and "Your Way." "Talking" is marked by a haunting, distant drumbeat, impossibly tasteful guitar work and the sound of McCartney's voice; toss away the lyrics and absorb it as another instrument one weaving in and out of the gaining backbeat. "Your Way," in turn, is both musically and lyrically simple, yet it persists. His voice remains honeyed after all these years, and is perfectly at home in this influenced track (the guitar and three-note bass swing into the verse are as good a set of directions into Neil Young country as you'll ever come across.)

Other influences abound. "Riding Into Jaipur" is a drive-by-Harrison, pseudo-Eastern piece that nonetheless is a joy to listen to. "Heather," the title-track of McCartney's current love, is a pleasant, harmony-colored jaunt that captures the innocence of the moment in which it was composed. "About You" succeeds in maintaining the aggressive tone it steps forward with, as do most of the songs collected here. Why, then, he doesn't spend more time with tunes like "Rinse the Raindrops," an ambitious and rocking closer, is a mystery. It pushes forward with terrific unpredictability and energy, a refreshing finale to an album that, from time to time, relies on old tricks to turn corners. Though few and far between, those paint-by-number tracks are exposed for what they are when placed by the real articles.

Having the opportunity to simply hear anything by McCartney some thirty years into his career would suffice for some, but on Driving Rain, he's offered a convincing argument for the rest of us to pay attention as well.

VALLEY
Furniture and Crafts
15% off
Bookcases
320 Avenue A, Turner's Falls
Call for Directions
Open Mon.-Sat. 10-5
(413) 863-8983

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHALLOW HAL (PG13) 1110 200 450 745 1025
LIFE AS A HOUSE (R) 1125 440 740 1030
HEIST (R) 1140 220 500 740 1015
MONSTERS INC (G) 1115 1145 145 230 400 430 630 715 900 945
DOMESTIC DISTUR: BANCE (PG13) 1150 240 500 720 950
THE ONE (R) 1200 215 465 710 930
K-PAX (PG13) 1120 210 500 750 1035
13 GHOSTS (R) 800 1020
FROM HELL (R) 1135 445 730 1010
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1105 205 505
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1255 740
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 400 1010
HARRY POTTER 1100 1130 215 315 545 700 915 1030
coming 11/21 BLACK KNIGHT SPY GAME OUT COLD
4 DAY ADVANCE TICKET SALES • NO PASSES NOT SUPERSAVER PS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Arts; We dream of Metal Gear Solid 2

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Interested in Business?
The Daily Collegian is looking for a new Assistant Business Manager for the spring semester. Great resume builder! Sophomores call 545-3500 or stop by The Daily Collegian, downstairs Campus Center

Goten
Cooking at your table
now accepting OCMP
On Rt 116 Sunderland / Call for reservations 413.665.3628

Minutemen head south to butt heads with Rams

David Sanger will try and punt his team to a win this weekend against Rhode Island.

Victory over A-10 foe could help salvage season

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts football team, going up against Rhode Island is like looking in a mirror. No, not a real mirror. More like one of those funhouse mirrors that makes something really hideous actually look attractive.

The Minutemen and the Rams share a very similar record. Similar in that UMass' seven losses are equal to URI's win total in nine games this year.

Just one season ago these two squads were on different ends of the spectrum – UMass was a preseason No. 1 or No. 2 pick in most national polls, while Rhode Island was slated as 10th or 11th in the Atlantic 10.

In just over a year, the distance between these two programs has grown even wider, except now the Rams are the team fighting for a playoff spot and the Maroon and White is the squad playing for pride.

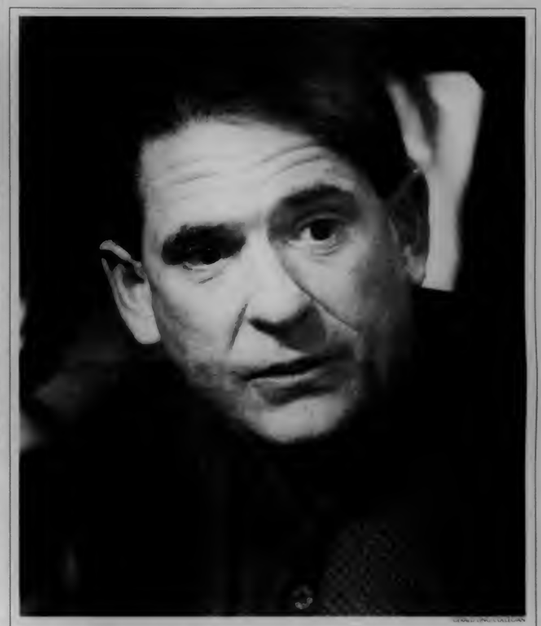
Last year's season-ending matchup between the two squads marked the end of an era for the Minutemen. Although Mark Whipple's squad came away victorious, so ended the superstar careers of tailback Marcel Shipp and defensive standouts Brian Smith and Kole Ayi.

With their respective departures, the Minutemen lost the catalyst for a very effective offense, and the emotion in a now porous defense.

UMass' loss is Rhody's gain. With new coach Tim Stowers, who happens to have won a National Championship while coaching Georgia Southern, implementing the new spread offense, Rhody went on a run last year that included a win over Division I-A Connecticut and a hard fought 29-21 loss to these Minutemen.

Despite last year's setback in Kingston, the Rams flashed a harbinger for this season's success. The spread offense was lethal in last year's matchup, as Stowers used his running attack to set up the rare but effective vertical passing game.

The Rams used their innovative spread set to reel off seven straight wins to start the 2001 campaign. But two recent setbacks against Maine and Richmond have dropped the once undefeated squad to a logjam at second place in the A-10.



In those two losses, Rhody has managed only 14 points, including a 28-0 shutout at the hands of the Spiders.

Despite URI's recent scoring woes, the game plan will likely stay the same.

"We haven't stopped the run very well," Whipple said. "And Rhode Island likes to run."

If the Minutemen are to have any chance in Saturday's McGuirk Alumni stadium showdown, UMass' linebackers will have to do something they have done very little of this year – show up.

"[URI] had a week off they're healthy, they're 7-2 coming in and they've got a realistic shot to go in the playoffs," Whipple said. "We've got to play very well. I think we can play well. I plan on playing well. I plan on playing hard. We plan on playing tough – the things we do at home. And if we do those things we'll win the game."

Looking toward the future

The Steve Lappas era and the 2001-02 season officially begin tonight when Arkansas-Little Rock comes to town.

Student tickets and a valid UMass ID are required for admission to UMass men's basketball games. Students may pick up tickets by presenting their student ID at the Mullins Center during normal business hours. Tickets can also be picked up at the Curry Hicks Cage Box Office or at the Campus Center athletic booth, located next to the information desk, from 10-4 every day throughout the season. Student tickets can also be picked up at the Mullins Center the night of each game at the Box Office or at the table located at the south end arena entrance.

Dupay continues to lace up shoes

By Jason Recker
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – About 15 minutes after Wednesday night's exhibition game between Indiana and Nike Elite, Ted Dupay scribbled his autograph on a ticket stub. It's not often exhibition players attract the spotlight.

But, Dupay's scenario is different.

Dupay is accustomed to the attention. He garnered a lot of it – on and off the court – while playing at Florida during the last three seasons.

But things are thrown out of whack for Dupay this fall. After being accused of gambling and being dismissed from coach Billy Donovan's Gator squad because of violating NCAA regulations – a charge that still doesn't sit well – Dupay has found himself playing his fiery, shoot-at-will style of basketball for Nike Elite. It's a change he didn't welcome, but one he's taken advantage of.

"I'm going to keep moving on," Dupay said. "I'm going to keep playing the rest of the year and get in top condition in time for the (NBA) draft."

A year ago, Dupay looked like a lock for the NBA. His 5-foot-10 frame isn't a NBA standard, but his shooting ability is. Dupay led Florida to the Final Four two seasons ago and was a steady contributor for three seasons.

Since joining Nike Elite (3-6), Dupay has assumed the point guard duties, a spot where he played during his first two seasons as a Gator and a position he expects to play at the next level. He said he isn't sure where he'll wind up between now and June, but he's been successful thus far on the Nike Elite tour, which concludes next week at Arizona. Dupay is averaging more than 10 points per game and leads the team with six assists per game.

Dupay dropped five three-pointers on IU Wednesday during the Hoosiers' 98-76 victory and scored a team-high 23 points in 37 minutes. His previous tour high was 14, and he's averaged more than 30 minutes per game in Nike Elite's 10 contests.

Dupay has struggled with his shooting (30.9 percent from three-point range), but has nestled in with coach Glenn Sergent's program.

"Nobody plays harder than Ted Dupay," Sergent said. "He pours out his heart every time on the floor. He's in tremendous shape and he's serious. He loves it that way."

Wednesday, he was impressive. Dupay went inside and out against a man-to-man defense. On several occasions, he pulled up from 22 feet to fire deep three-pointers and keep Nike Elite withing striking distance. He said the man-to-man defense is something he hasn't seen much of on the team's tour of the East Coast and Midwest.

Instead, team's have keyed on Dupay's shooting ability and trapped him near midcourt at every opportunity. Wednesday, Dupay appreciated IU's approach.

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!
THURSDAY
Top 40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
Disco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
Retro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Free sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
5 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Florence 3 bedrooms $747 includes heat avail Dec. 1. No pets or smokers. ldsaito@earthlink.net

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'89 Ford Taurus. Many new parts $600 413-330-3814

86 Oldsmobile runs, heat and radio work, engine and brakes recently replaced. NO OFFER TO LOW! 256-6267

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/mo. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

ROOMMATE WANTED

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5832

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-

You Ad Could Be Here!!!

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuREan.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Umass #1 Spring Break Company save $80 and free Hippodrome passes, book before Nov. 21 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/onlinemall/ Missing Cat $250 Reward PresidentialApts Photo at; http://surf.to/cat5 413-219-7895

545-3500 YOU HAVE OUR NUMBER!

ADVERTISE TODAY!!

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

9 = HSCN Bulletin Board
2 = CBS 3 Boston
3 = CBS 4 Boston
5 = ABC/38 Springfield
6 = PBS/57 Springfield
7 = HSCN Movie Channel
5 = UPN 30 Hartford
9 = HSCN New Movie Channel
10 = NBC 30 New Britain
11 = Fox/61 Hartford
12 = PBS/24 Hartford
13 = NBC/22 Springfield
17 = International Channel
15 = UMATV (Academic Channel)
19 = WB 56 New Haven
17 = MTN
18 = ESPN2
19 = UMTV (Student Channel)
20 = Weather Channel
21 = Cartoon Network
22 = C-Span
23 = CNN
24 = CNN Headline News
25 = Lifetime
26 = USA
27 = TBS
28 = TNT
29 = E!
30 = Sci-Fi
31 = Discovery
32 = Nickelodeon
33 = Cartoon Network
34 = Nick at Nite
35 = TV Land
36 = Comedy Central
37 = BET
38 = Univision
39 = Bloomberg Financial Network
40 = College TV Network
41 = MTV
42 = MTV2
43 = VH1
44 = The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 16, 2001

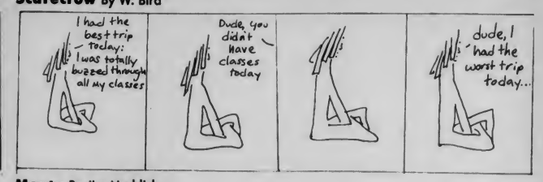
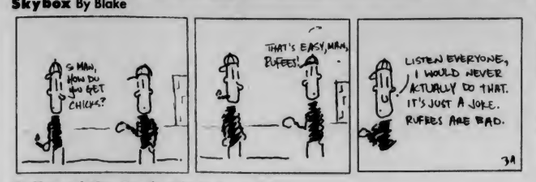
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Life 360 "Leaving Home" ⓒ		Nova "Ricsenor" (In Stereo) ⓒ
WFSB 3	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Funny Pubs	Ellen (N) ⓒ	That's a Life "Idiots" (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ 4	4	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Funny Pubs	Ellen (N) ⓒ	That's a Life "Idiots" (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB 5	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Charlie Brown	Winnie-Pooh	Thieves "Casino" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Barbara Walters (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI 6		Nanny ⓒ	Just Shoot Me	Friends ⓒ	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N) ⓒ	Raising Dad ⓒ	News ⓒ		Friends ⓒ	Raymond
WHDH 7	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra ⓒ	Providence "Rocky Road" ⓒ		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends ⓒ	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N) ⓒ	Raising Dad ⓒ	News		Just Shoot Me	Med Adt. You
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Hollywood	Providence "Rocky Road" ⓒ		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC 11	11	Simpsons ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Raymond	Dark Angel (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Pasadena "Puppy Love" (N) ⓒ		News		Seinfeld ⓒ	Raymond
WWLP 22	22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Providence "Rocky Road" ⓒ		Dateline (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY 57	6	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Life 360 "Leaving Home" ⓒ		Time Goes By Manor Born		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB 40	20	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Charlie Brown	Winnie-Pooh	Thieves "Casino" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Barbara Walters (In Stereo) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK 38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	News	Frasier ⓒ	Buffy the Vampire Slayer ⓒ		Iron Chef USA. Showdown		Ent. Tonight	Frasier ⓒ	5th Wheel ⓒ	Shipmates ⓒ
WTBS 72		Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Friends ⓒ	★★½ "Mr.Destiny" (1987, Drama)		Clint Eastwood.		★★★★ "The Untouchables" (1987, Drama)		Kevin Costner.
A&E 33		Night Court	Newsradio ⓒ	Law & Order "Survivor" ⓒ		Biography: Harrison Ford		Billy Joel: In His Own Words ⓒ				Law & Order "Aria" ⓒ
CNN 10	23	Moneyline (N) ⓒ		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire ⓒ	The Point (N) ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ		Newsnight		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM 35	36	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Kevin James: Sweat		Premium	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Sat. Night Live
DISC 49		Wild Discovery: Dragonflies		Wild Discovery: Creatures		Hall of America (N)		World's Mightiest Bank		Secrets of the U.S. Mint (N)		Justice Files
ESPN 31		Sportscenter ⓒ		College Basketball: Preseason NIT – Teams TBA				College Basketball: Cincinnati at Oklahoma State. (Live) ⓒ				Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE 32		Figure Skating: ISU Grand Prix Series – Skate Canada. ⓒ				Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★½ "Love, Lies and Murder" (1991, Drama) Clancy Brown, John Ashton. ⓒ
MTV 53		(3:30) MTV Europe Music Awards (In Stereo)			Making-Video	Music Videos (In Stereo)		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		Charts	Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK 55		Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Spongeb	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Kablam!	Cheers ⓒ	Cheers ⓒ	Family Ties ⓒ	Family Ties ⓒ
SCIFI 59		Star Trek ⓒ		Chronicle (In Stereo) ⓒ		Invisible Man "Insensate" ⓒ		★★ "The Langoliers" (1995, Suspense) Patricia Wettig. ⓒ				Invisible Men "Insensate" ⓒ
TLC 56	28	War and Civilization		Secrets of Forensic Science		Police Force		Storm of the Century		Ultimate Ten Survival Stories		Police Force
TNT 54		NYPD Blue "Oh Golly Goh" ⓒ		Pretender "Indy Snow" ⓒ		★★ "Home Fries" (1998, Comedy)		Drew Barrymore. ⓒ		"When Innocence Is Lost" (1997, Drama) Jill Clayburgh.
USA 52		Walker, Texas Ranger "Lucky"		JAG "With Intent to Die" ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Bear Trap" ⓒ		★½ "Billy Madison" (1995, Comedy) Adam Sandler. (In Stereo) ⓒ		★½ "Billy Madison" (1995) ⓒ
HBO 93		(5:00) "American Flyers" (1985)		Inside the NFL (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★★ "Gladiator" (2000, Action) Russell Crowe, Joaquin Phoenix. (In Stereo) (N) ⓒ				Real Sex 28: Bedroom Tricks		Curb-Entham
MAX 91		(4:45)		★★ "In the Army Now" (1994) Pauly Shore. PG		★★ "The Art of War" (2000, Action) Wesley Snipes. R ⓒ				★½ "Money Train" (1995, Suspense) Wesley Snipes. R ⓒ
SHOW 95		★★½ "Home for the Holidays" (1995) Holly Hunter. PG-13 ⓒ				★★★ "Wonder Boys" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Michael Douglas. R ⓒ				Stargate SG-1		Going to California "Blowing Free" ⓒ

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Skybox By Blake

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"It's not my fault I'm so irresistible; I blame my parents"

- Jess May

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 59 LOW: 46	HIGH: 48 LOW: 27	HIGH: 57 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Your ideas will challenge those around you today, and it may take time before you persuade someone to lend financial support. Call Ed McMahon, he'll help you out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be unusually demanding and express your desires too aggressively today. Take care not to become an intimidator. But be the Terminator.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your fulfillment today may depend more on the actions of others than you would like, but you can negotiate for better odds if you're careful.

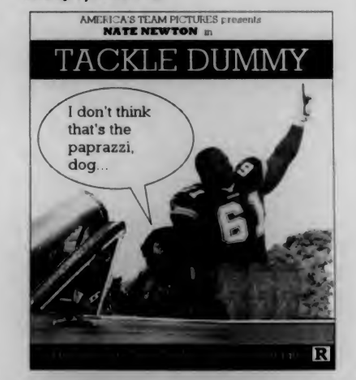
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Do not hesitate to share your emotions with your closest friends today. You have no reason to be secretive about anything.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You must use caution when dealing with youngsters today. You will want to encourage and guide, but you should not step in and do it all.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can adopt a more liberal attitude today without threatening you reputation. Moderation and compromise can work for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Focus on details today and virtually everything you do will pay off and bring you more satisfaction than you bargained for. Just like those pants you bought at the Gap; sure they fit well, but they're just not your color.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You will be in the mood for a little more excitement than you've been getting lately. Follow your instincts and explore.



CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your mysterious nature will create some drama today. Others will try to figure you out and may be quite surprised.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – If you try to run from yourself today, you'll only end up more frustrated and disappointed. It will be time to break some bad habits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You will not be in the mood for anything that is too esoteric or clinical today. See if you can find something that appeals to your instincts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You will experience something unforgettable today unless someone you know well pulls you in a different direction.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Roast Turkey

Quiche Lorraine

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Onion Quiche (vegetarian)

DINNER

Shrimp & Scallop Creole

Veal Madeline

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Garden Chili (vegan)

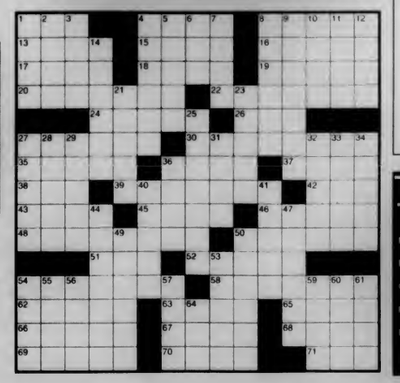
FAT TRAX

a snowboard shop

E. HAMPTON 413 586 8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413 781 5142

ACROSS

1 — foo yung
4 Wrestling type
8 Stockholm native
13 Buckle as lumber
15 Mouse catcher
16 Committee
17 Constantly
18 Efficient
19 Romantic interlude
20 Yacht race
22 Breakfast foods
24 Teen age
26 Beatty of "Superman II"
27 Electrical unit
30 Store owner
35 Looks intently
36 Have supper
37 Wordster Webster
38 Magazine fillers
39 Eloquent speakers
42 Golf teacher
43 Paddy crop
45 Sums for CPA's
46 Fashion
48 Exhaust part
50 Frothy dessert
51 Consume
52 Fetes
54 Meals
58 Some computers
62 Eastwood
63 Brickmaker's oven
65 Send forth
66 Trivial
67 Old barge canal
68 Gambler's need
69 Polar explorer
70 Garden intruder
71 Beat softly



DOWN

1 Washstand item
2 Yielded
3 Cyclist LeMond
4 Marble figure
5 Not rural
6 Bad, for Pierre
7 Oil org.
8 Flowery shrub
9 Began energetically
10 "Paint the Sky with Stars" singer
11 Wooded valley
12 Bends
14 Kind of rug or beads
21 Sculpture, perhaps
23 Key in data
25 — one's teeth
27 Separate
28 Newspeople, collectively
29 "Home Alone" Joe
31 Baseballer Cabell
32 Unhurried gaits
33 Deserves
34 — Island Red
36 Moist
40 Country singer Bonnie
41 Tread heavily
44 Movie dancer Powell
47 Oxidized, as iron
49 Sweet roll
50 Sighed loudly
53 Dragon of puppetry
54 Sgt. Preston's group
55 Nobelist Wiesel
56 — colada
57 Distort, as data
59 Leave out
60 Type option
61 Type of ladder
64 Negative emotion

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	D	M	I	T		W	I	G	S		G	N	P
I	R	E	N	E		H	A	L	E		V	I	O	L
D	A	R	E	D		A	G	U	E		E	N	V	Y
E	M	I	R	A		B	O	O	T	T	E	R
	A	T	T	I	R	E		O	N	S	A	L	E
		I	N	U	R	E	D		D	E	B	U	T
A	W	A	I	T		L	E	S		S	O	R	T
P	R	E		T	A	L	E	N	T	S		V	I	A
O	P	A	L		L	A	C		R	A	T	E	D
P	A	R	E	S		S	T	O	O	L	S
S	Y	S	T	E	M		O	B	T	U	S	E
		S	C	U	F	F	L	E		N	A	V	E
R	A	N	G		S	I	L	O		T	A	X	E	D
O	R	E	O		S	C	A	N		A	M	O	N	G
B	E	E		Y	A	N	G		M	I	N	T	Y

11-22-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Ken Campbell
Photo Technician — Tiburo Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — Matt Brady
Production Supervisor — Adi D. Huseinovic
Production Staff — Meray Hydray, Alicia Upano

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Let the games begin

Arkansas-Little Rock first opponent for hoops; Lappas era begins as Trojans charge into town

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

For the last 253 days, life in Amherst has been rather undemanding for Steve Lappas. Sure, there's that whole blending into a new setting process, the building relationships with his new players routine and the recruiting kids for next season procedure. But there's one thing he just hasn't been expected to do.

And that's win a basketball game that matters.

On March 26, 2001, Lappas was introduced by athletic director Bob Marcum as the 19th head coach of the Massachusetts men's basketball team. Since then, the only games his Minutemen have played were ones against Greek national teams and work-for-hire exhibition-only squads.

But the honeymoon is now over.

Tonight the Lappas era officially begins in the Valley as Arkansas-Little Rock comes to the Mullins Center for a 7 p.m. regular season opener.

"Twenty years ago I was married and I went on and had a great honeymoon and when that honeymoon ended, boy, it was terrible. I felt so bad," said Lappas in jest Wednesday afternoon at the UMass weekly Sports Luncheon. "I think I'm going to feel a lot worse this Friday night when my honeymoon ends."

UMass won both of its Nov. 4 and Nov. 12 exhibition games by a combined score of 170-117, but the victories came against teams made up of former college players way past their time.

"I've been very, very happy with ours kids so far in the way they played in our two exhibition games," said Lappas, whose first game in the Mullins Center tonight will also be UMass' 100th in that building. "But you have to take into account in all exhibition games just how good the other team you played was. I don't think either team was very good – not really in good condition, not really guarding us that hard.

"It's going to be completely different Friday night. We're playing against a very well coached team."

Coach Porter Moser's Arkansas-Little Rock team also swept its exhibition slate, and enters 2001-02 looking to improve on its 18-11 record from last season, the 19th largest single-season turnaround in NCAA history. Two years ago, the Trojans went 4-24.

Last year, Little Rock won most of its games playing major time in the half court set, a style Lappas expects to see tonight. He said he has also prepared his team for the 1-3-1 defense which the Trojans, made up of only one senior, should throw on the table.

"We're certainly very concerned," said Lappas, whose schedule is ranked as the 17th-toughest by CollegeRPI.com. "They're a very good team. They play very well together and they play hard."

UMass will definitely look to run the ball on Little Rock and will most likely play man-to-man defense for the majority. With the ball, Lappas' motion offense will be in effect.

"With so many new, young players on the team, playing a game like this (against Massachusetts) on the road will be a huge test," said Moser in a released statement. "And UMass is a nationally-recognized program."

Freshman Kyle Wilson will start at point guard for the Minutemen and senior Shannon Crooks will join him the backcourt. Sophomore Willie Jenkins will get his first career start at small forward (a position that Lappas says is up for grabs), while junior Micah Brand and senior Kitwana Rhymer will fill out down low. Freshman Anthony Anderson will probably be the sixth man off the bench and will see a lot of time with Wilson and Crooks. Seniors Ronell Blizzard, Eric Williams and sophomore Raheim Lamb should also see some action.

Senior Jackie Rogers remains questionable with a hamstring problem, and there have been rumors that he might sit out this season as a medical redshirt.

"If it's going to be a nagging thing, then yeah, [we'll redshirt him]," said Lappas of his power forward. "I don't envision that right now, but I'm not going to rule it out."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Kitwana Rymer goes up for the dunk, slams it through, and then comes back down. The senior center will lead his team into action tonight when the Minutemen take on Arkansas-Little Rock at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

Minutewomen embark on Crusade

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Just about every team has high expectations going into its first game of the season.

For the Massachusetts women's basketball team it is no different, as the Minutewomen feel they will be one of the top squads in the Atlantic 10 conference this year. Tonight, however, UMass will not only have to talk the talk but will also have to back it up, as it competes against Holy Cross to open up the 2001-02 season.

Last year, the Maroon and White struggled to a 12-17 record after getting off to a fairly sluggish start, and Head Coach Joanie O'Brien knows that the outset of this season will be pivotal in deciding just how far her team can go.

"This is huge for us," the eleventh year coach said. "We have struggled at the beginning the past couple of years, but now we are in pretty good shape. For our own peace of mind we need to get off to a good start, so it's going to be a big one."

Taking the floor for the Minutewomen to begin the season will be newcomer Katie Nelson at the point, sophomore Cleo Foster at the two, junior Amber Sneed at small forward, junior Siiri Liivandi at power forward and junior Jen Butler at center.

According to O'Brien, this lineup knows that the number one priority will be getting the ball inside.

"If you look at our four kids (Butler, Liivandi, Nekole Smith and Caroline Nehls) in the post, they are our anchors," the UMass coach said. "They have to be our first option every time down the floor in the post... because we are going to win a lot more games with shots close to the basket."

When Holy Cross doubles and triple teams inside, however, the Maroon and White have outside threats that can make the opposition pay. Against the NWBL USA Elite Travel Team in an exhibition game on Nov. 2, the freshman Nelson was 4-for-4 from behind the arc and finished the contest with 14 points. Paige Harris also displayed smooth form, going 2-for-3 from downtown in only 13 minutes of play.

On the other side of the ball, UMass will have to contend with a potent Crusader attack that is returning its top four scorers from a year ago. Senior point guard Jeanette Paukert leads the team, as she scored 12.5 points a game and led Holy Cross in assists and three-point shooting in 2000-01.

"She is their best three-point shooter and a tough competitor," O'Brien said about Paukert. "We have to compete as hard as we can and we can't let her have one of those monster games where she goes 4-for-6 or 5-for-7 from behind the arc. We have to make her earn what she gets."

Senior Amanda Abraham and junior Katie O'Keefe will also be active on the offensive end, as they averaged 11.3 and 10.8 ppg respectively last season. O'Keefe was also a force on the glass, hauling down a team-high 6.8 rebounds per contest.

It is not only the veterans that the Minutewomen will have to contend with, however, but also the Crusader rookies. In Holy Cross' 69-53 exhibition win over the Nor'Easter Storm, freshman guard Maggie Fontana poured in 19 points, and will most likely be a dangerous compliment to Paukert in the backcourt.

"We will probably play mostly man-to-man but we are also going to throw in some matchup zone to confuse them," O'Brien said. "We throw different things at people because we don't want to get caught doing the same things over and over again."

In recent years the Crusaders have been a highly successful program, as they attempt to get back to the NCAA tournament for the fifth straight year. This run of four straight tourney appearances makes them the first basketball team (men's or women's) from the Patriot League to ever accomplish this.

Despite its recent success, however, Holy Cross has had some trouble with the Minutewomen. Last year, the Maroon and White interrupted a 21-9 season by overcoming 23 Paukert points to pull out the 62-57 overtime win.

In that game, UMass pounded the ball inside, as Jen Butler (12 points, 12 rebounds) and Caroline Nehls (16 points, 11 rebounds) were both able to total double-doubles in a very hard fought contest.

This year, O'Brien expects more of the same from two squads that both look to put up impressive numbers on the season.

"They execute their stuff very well and they set good screens," O'Brien said. "For years we have had great games with them, and my biggest worry of all is the experience they have coming back."

Tip off is slated for 7 p.m. at the Hart Center in Worcester.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Jen Butler will try to get the ball in the post an awful lot when her team travels across the state to challenge Holy Cross.

Sonic Youth played Northampton this weekend. Check out the review in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Micah Brand's 23 points led UMass to an opening night victory Friday night. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 51 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, November 19, 2001

Massachusetts students help New Jersey Democrat win race

Congressman meets with U-Dems

By Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

Several University of Massachusetts students traveled to East Brunswick, N.J. recently to help Democrat Jim McGreevey win his campaign for governor.

The University Democrats joined other college Democrats from Mount Holyoke, Smith, Brandeis, Wellesly Brand and senior Kitwana Rhymer will fill out down and Harvard. Once the students got to New Jersey, they went throughout the township in an attempt to "Get-Out-The-Vote."

"We went door to door to registered Democratic voters reminding them that they need to get out and vote," said Linsonjude Naval, Public Relations Officer for the group. "We also helped to put up road signs for McGreevey."

"We wanted to participate in the democratic process and receive first-hand experience of how a campaign is actually run," added Naval.

The gubernatorial race between Jim McGreevey and his opponent Bret Shundler, "was one of the three most important races that occurred this fall," said Naval.

"Our Vice President Dave Mason, contacted the McGreevey group and they really needed our help," Naval said. "Mason is also part of the executive board for the College Democrats of Massachusetts, which we are a part of."

In addition to helping McGreevey because of a connection made by Dave Mason, they also support McGreevey because he ran on the platform of trying to improve public schools, provide more accountability, end sprawl and ease traffic congestion, take on high property taxes and reform auto insurance. McGreevey is pro-choice and supports strict gun control.

While in East Brunswick, the University Democrats met with some important people. They spoke with Mayor of East Brunswick William Neary and U.S. Congressman Robert Menedez.

The University Democrats are a Registered Student Organization on campus that supports Democratic candidates for office.

On their website it states that they are, "A Democratic group for UMass-Amherst students that is dedicated to electing Democratic representatives, investigating Democratic issues, and beating the Republican Club in the annual softball game."

In addition, they are part of the College Democrats of Massachusetts. This group in turn is part of the College Democrats of America, which is the student arm of the Democratic National Party. UMass-Amherst is one of 13 chapters in this state.

COURTESY LINSONJUDE NAVAL

University of Massachusetts Democrats traveled to New Jersey recently, where they met U.S. Representative Robert Menendez.

Magnus speaks on Arab-Israeli conflict

By Marcella Gajek
Collegian Correspondent

The Hillel House hosted a talk by Eric Magnus entitled, "The Arab-Israeli Conflict" on Nov. 14.

Magnus, a member of American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), began his talk by acknowledging the many pro-Palestinian groups on campus.

"This is an academic environment," he said of the groups. "Both sides of the story should be heard."

His particular speech, however, was delivered from an Israeli point of view. He started by saying the American war against terrorism has changed the entire dynamic of the Middle East. Magnus claims that the Bush administration pushes the idea that there is no middle ground in the war against terrorism, paramilitary groups from Palestine have had to change the way they operate.

"The U.S. may favor Palestine's goal, but it certainly does not favor methods of violence and terrorism to achieve that goal," Magnus said. Because of this, Magnus claims, Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestinian group Intifada, has had to resort to low key acts of terrorism such as slaying settlers in order to avoid raising international press interest. One of the problems with this, according to Magnus, is that Arafat believes that there can be violence and a peace process whereas Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon refuses to compromise as long as there is still violence.

At Camp David last year, Israel offered the Gaza Strip and West Bank to Palestine and promised to withdraw from all settlements, allow the return of many Lebanese refugees, and give every Palestinian neighborhood to Palestine. Arafat rejected the offer, opting instead to renew carnage in the Middle East with a new campaign of terror.

Magnus believes Palestinians want an unconditional return of four million refugees to Israel, a move which, according to Magnus, would destroy Israel. He does not believe that allowing the return of refugees would lead to a two-state solution.

"Israel was meant to be a Jewish state," he said. "The return of four million refugees to Israel would destroy the Jewish character of Israel."

Magnus believes that Arafat does not represent the majority of Palestinians. He claims that there are two different groups of people on the side of Palestine. Magnus believes there are revolutionaries and non-revolutionaries. He places Arafat in the revolutionary group.

However, even with two different mentalities existing on the other side, Magnus feels that the Palestinian government might still ruin the efforts for peace. He cites anti-Semitic propaganda distributed to the people as evidence of a Palestinian government bent on destroying Israel. He claims that the Palestinian government airs commercials that tell children to put down their dolls and throw rocks at Jews. He also claims that Palestinian children have been educated to hate because they are taught with textbooks and maps that deny the existence of Israel.

He went on to blame Europe for the criticism that Israel gets in the press because European papers portray Palestine as "David being occupied by Israel's Goliath."

Magnus believes that most people in Israel do no want to occupy the Gaza strip, but that it is necessary until Israel can be assured of its security. He also complained that what are supposed to be human rights conferences, such as the Geneva Convention, more often than not turn into Israel-bashing festivals.

The talk stirred up a mixed response from the crowd. One man questioned how Magnus could know the details of the offer made to Palestine at Camp David. Magnus responded by denying that the actual details of how much of the Gaza Strip was offered were unimportant. The main point was that the offer was made and rejected by Palestine in favor of violence, which did more than just set things back.

"It destroyed the peace process as we know it," said Magnus.

Another emotional observer railed against Arabs in general as being anti-Semitic hypocrites, to which Magnus said, "I hate to defend the other side, but in this case I have to."

He then described how some Arab nations, such as Egypt and Jordan, have held up to the military obligations of the peace agreement. He also stated that it was not the fault of Arab countries that the peace process collapsed; it was, in

Turn to MAGNUS, page 3

GERALD LING / COLLEGIAN

Up, up and away...
The hot air drifts away to make way for the cold front that is already making its presence known.

Bookstore hosts first time novelist

By Elizabeth Parisseau
Collegian Staff

Author Sparrow Patterson read from her first published novel at Food For Thought Books in Amherst last Thursday.

The book, Synthetic Bi Products, follows the strange travels of a sixteen-year-old bisexual girl, Orleigh, on a cross-country quest for identity.

According to a review by fellow author Kate Christiansen, Patterson's book depicts "a Midwestern suburban wasteland of Gen-Y anomie, dead-end jobs, petty crime, sex and drugs, until [Orleigh] is saved by the transformative power of love."

Christiansen also called it "an affecting, fresh first novel."

Patterson said that though she is nearly 30, she set out to capture the experiences of twenty-somethings in her novel, and has tried to keep the readings she has done all over the country youthful and fun.

"Usually we play games. We'll hold mock auctions of weird Polaroids," she said. "But tonight I have to be 'a serious author'."

Still, those gathered at Food For Thought received free T-shirts, bumper stickers, and autographs from the author. One of the T-shirts had "failure" printed on its black background in stark white letters. Patterson said she thought the T-shirt captured the irreverence of the so-called "Generation Y" as well as its redefinition of cultural norms.

"It's perfect, isn't it?" she said. "Very smart-assed."

Joan Barberich, Publicity Coordinator for Food For Thought, said she felt that Patterson's book was one of the first to capture the most recent generation of youth.

Another Food For Thought co-owner, Shana, said she agreed.

"Twenty pages into it, I was like, okay, that's me and that's my best friend. I think it's representative of the generation which has just come to pass — like a weird indulgent journey into my own past."

Before reading a short passage, Patterson said that the process of publishing the book had been "terribly difficult."

"In the beginning I still wasn't very serious about sending out a lot of copies because I didn't expect it to be published," she explained. "There's a lot of sex in it and it's very ripe sex. I can be very graphic, and I was worried the publishers wouldn't want it because of some of its content."

Patterson said that she found out about publisher Akashic Books "one day when I was reading Jane magazine on

Turn to BOOKS, page 3

Bisexual identity explored

By Elizabeth Parisseau
Collegian Staff

A talk by Kristen Esterberg, an associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Massachusetts – Lowell, drew a large audience to the latest installment of the Stonewall Center lecture series on Nov. 15.

Her lecture, entitled "The Bisexual Menace, or, Will the Real Bisexuals Please Stand Up?" explored the difficulty of analyzing sexual categories.

The lecture drew audience members from other Five College courses and from diverse fields of study. At least one student from Smith, speaking on condition of anonymity, was in attendance yesterday. She said that the lecture's subject had drawn her to the UMass campus. According to the student, the lecture would be useful in writing a paper on bisexuality for a course at Smith on "Sex and Gender in American Society."

She said she supported the goal of the lecture series to raise support for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender studies at colleges and universities. "GLBT studies, although dealt with [at colleges and universities] by other departments, don't necessarily fall into those departments, and I think they're important enough to warrant their own study outside of women's studies or feminist studies, and things like that," she said.

Another student from UMass said that she and a number of her fellow students from a sociology course had attended the lecture as a supplement to their class.

Junior BDIC and Spanish major Senofer Stead said that she regularly comes to the lectures to be better educated. She said she felt that yesterday's lecture was particularly popular because Esterberg, "is a professor at UMass-Lowell so it's probably been really well advertised in the UMass community."

Regular attendee Joseph Derosier, a sophomore French and STPEC major, said that bisexuality was "a hot topic."

"I think there's a lot of discussion around the inclusion or exclusion of bisexual people within different communities," Derosier said. "Things are divided into heterosexual and homosexual so much that it leaves bisexual people out

Turn to LGBT page 3

International Briefs

By Arjun Mahalingam and Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

Indonesia – Irian Jaya's Pro-Independence movement leader, Theys Eluay, 64, was found dead last Sunday at the bottom of a ravine as a result of asphyxiation, according to an autopsy. His funeral was held Saturday in Sentani and is buried in Papuan Heroes cemetery.

Police said that the death was unnatural, and they are still looking for Eluay's driver who is missing.

Eluay and four other members of the Papua Presidium were tried for treason, but Eluay was on bail at the time of his death. All were charged because of their attempts to set West Papua as an independent state.

Eluay had refused to accept just a portion of autonomy, which the Indonesia government was willing to give and wanted full independence, which was not an option.

The government planned to give Irian Jaya more revenues from the rich mineral resources next month.

According to Eluay's sister, the Indonesia's military faces accusations from locals who believe they were behind the death since he fought for full autonomy for the province.

"I feel a great loss because the land of Papua has lost its leader," said Irian Jaya citizen, Thinca Okowally. "Who else will lead Papua?"

Israel – A top-level European Union (EU) delegation is currently touring the Middle East region to encourage peace talks between Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

The EU set $80 million to help the Palestinians deal with the blockade from Israel.

Sharon has recently asked the delegation to stop funding money to the Palestinian Authority and instead fund Palestinian infrastructures and industry.

"I can only recommend you do not transfer your funds to the Palestinian Authority as your money will then be used to purchase weapons and firearms," Sharon said. "Weapons, which will be directed against the state of Israel."

Palestinians said that Sharon wants to continue undermining the Palestinian Authority.

"Aims with this [request is] to destroy the Palestinian Authority and continue his aggression, and kill any international initiatives," chief negotiator Saeb Erakat said in response.

Javier Solana, foreign policy chief, said that they do not have new plans for the situation, but instead wants to execute initiatives that were made in the past.

U.S. Secretary of State, Colin Powell, also agreed saying he did not have new initiatives for Monday, where he will speak on the Middle East.

"I am not introducing a new plan," Powell told Fox News. "We have a plan, it's a solid plan." Powell said. "It's called the Mitchell committee report."

The Mitchell plan includes seven days of calm, but Sharon said a reduction of violence was not enough.

Bahamas – One hundred and twenty-seven illegal Haitian immigrants were apprehended on their way to the Bahamas, according to an Associated Press report. One hundred and six men and 21 women were on board. The boat they were traveling in was found west of Exuma Cays, a part of the Bahamian Archipelago, although their actual point of destination though has not yet been revealed.

The Associated Press also stated that the Bahamian authorities repatriated more than 6000 Haitians this year, compared to 4,879 last year.

Currently, according to recent reports, there are 163 Haitians detained in the Bahamas, 65 of which were held in Nassau, the island capital of the Bahamas on Nov. 4. The next day, Hurricane Michelle struck Cuba and the Bahamas, and 63 Haitians were detained in Long island (Bahamas).

In other news in the Bahamas, Governor General Sir Orville Turnquest stepped down after nearly seven years in office. His son, Tommy Turnquest, will be running for the Prime Ministerial Post in 2002. The Ex-Governor General announced earlier this year that he would resign from his post to avoid the possibility that he and his son would hold the highest government posts in the Bahamas.

Sir Turnquest has been replaced by Ivy Dumont, the first woman Governor General of the Bahamas. She will hold the post until a permanent appointment is made by the Bahamian Authorities.

Vietnam – Authorities want to implement a new law banning technology that reads the sex of a baby during pregnancy due to the high abortion rate.

Vietnam reportedly has one of the highest abortion rates, and the country has faced pressure for parents to have males so that they can carry the family's lineage. Women currently can have two abortions in her lifetime.

Senior officials said they want to deter the abortion of female babies because they are worried about the imbalance, which could potentially get worse.

There is also the potential issue for males to get violent fighting over partners. The national assembly will determine the approval of the new law and it is open for debate before it is sent.

Rulers also want people to be aware of family size as a responsibility to society. Their population is currently 80 million.

Families of Vietnam are under a two-child policy and those who exceed the limit can face confiscation of their land and expulsion from the Communist Party.

Sources say that the high rate of abortions is encouraged by current urban lifestyles and people are more liberal about sex.

The National Committee for Population and Family Planning supports the new law and presently helping with preparations to pass the law.

Macedonia – Albanian Rebels clashed with Macedonian Security forces at a checkpoint near Prejlubiste, according to Reuters. Macedonian Police claimed that the Rebels used machine guns and grenade launchers. An anonymous interior ministry official revealed that the security forces did return fire. No Casualties have been reported.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) forces patrolled the streets of Tetovo after the incident, which occurred after a newly formed militant group, calling itself the Albanian National army, called for a new revolution.

The Albanian National army had "started the war for the liberation of all Albanian territories in former Yugoslavia," according to its spokesperson Alban Berisha. Although the group has only around 50 members, they had "more than enough to wage a Guerilla War In Macedonia," said Berisha.

"All predominantly tethnic) Albanian areas [are] restricted for Macedonian forces," the army said in an earlier statement. "All such forces will be attacked without warning if they try to enter."

Ministry Defense Ministry Spokesman Marjan Gjurovski admitted that the group was a threat to national security.

The recently disbanded National Liberation army threatened to turn Macedonia into a Civil War battleground earlier this year. That matter was resolved in a peace agreement where more rights were given to ethnic Albanian minorities.

Three policemen were killed in another bout of violence in the Balkan country earlier last week.

"With this, Macedonia has been attacked one more time, and we have to fight back fiercely. We are in the second half now," the Interior Minister Ljube Boskovski said. "Macedonia is a sovereign state and we cannot have the attitude of a protectorate."

President Boris Trajkovski declared total amnesty for those rebels not indicted by the U.N. War Crimes tribunal. He also cautioned against the rebels.

"We see remnants of certain armed groups," Trajkovski said at a reception on Saturday. "[With reforms ratified,] they can have no more cause to claim they are fighters for human rights rather than fighters for occupation of territory."

Edward Joseph, Macedonia analyst for the International Crisis Group think tank, said that the key was to prevent groups from using reforms programs as a reason to use military action against the government.

Prime Minister Ljubco Georgievski said he was worried about the security situation in Macedonia, after the incident near Prejlubiste.

"But the reasons for terrorism are gone now. Nobody can say that state institutions are to blame because our human rights are not up to snuff – everything requested of us was fulfilled yesterday."

Belgium – European Union (EU) Justice and Interior ministers met in the current EU headquarters in Brussels to formulate anti-terrorism plans before the Dec. 6 meeting where these plans would be finalized.

One of the proposals was to replace the extradition process between member countries of the EU with a search and arrest warrant applicable in all member countries. The definition of terrorism was also discussed, as well as the penalties to be borne if one is guilty of terrorist acts.

Representatives of the member countries have been meeting regularly in Brussels since Sept. 11 to discuss the measures to be taken in the current situation. The proposals also include a 60-day time limit for an extradition process to take place.

European Commission President Romano Prodi said that constant measures taken by the EU ever since the terrorist attacks proved its ability to unite globally.

The EU was pleased with the latest developments in Afghanistan.

"The events of the last few days, especially the capture of Mazar-I-Sharif and of Kabul, have demonstrated how the Taliban-regime and its allies are losing control over Afghanistan," a statement issued by the EU Presidency stated. "These events are a new step to reach the goals of the international coalition: the capture of Bin Laden and his accomplices and the destruction of terrorist networks."

The EU also wanted the United Nations to help the Afghans establish a stable government in the troubled region.

"The Union intends to support every plan of the UN to that purpose," a EU press release stated. "It asks the Northern Alliance to contribute without restraint in that effort."

It also stated that a new government in Afghanistan must represent all it's ethnic groups, and also support human rights. The Presidents of the European Council and the European Commission are traveling to Indian and Pakistan on Nov. 23 and 24.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

University Productions and Concerts
Presents

THE SLIP

Date; November 20, 2001
Time; 8:30 pm
Price; 3 dollars
Where; Student Union Ballroom
Cash Bar

■ books

continued from page 1

the subway." She said that the magazine told of another Akashic publication, The F— Up, by Arthur Nersesian.

"I thought, well, if they'd publish that, then maybe they'd look at mine," Patterson said. "I sent them the first 25 pages, and they got back to me and said, 'if the rest of it is as good as that, then we want it.' I'm lucky I read about them."

Still, Patterson said, being accepted by a publisher was far from the finish line.

"Let just say this if you look at the back of the book, I was 28 when they began working with me on it, and now I'm almost 30, and it's just now coming out," she said.

Now that the book has been released, Patterson said she has mixed feelings about reading it in front of an audience.

"Before I do a reading, I usually ask, do you want sex, drugs, or rock and roll?" she said, adding that her book has plenty of all three. "People tend to like the sex, so I always read the sex.

"Oh, no, I'm blushing," she joked after reading a graphic scene in which Orleigh is seduced by both a man and a woman. "It's hard to read sometimes. Sometimes it's boring — like, okay, here we go again — or sometimes it's hard to even get the words out because it's very personal."

Patterson said that the main character of the book was personally based, but said she didn't want to discuss whether all of the experiences she has are autobiographical.

"I did write the book for myself, as a healing process," she said. "But I get annoyed with journalists asking the same questions. Who cares if she's me?"

Some familiar questions were still asked of Patterson, including what her parents and childhood were like. Patterson said that the first six or seven years of her life "were lived in the back of a VW bus while my parents followed the [Grateful] Dead around."

After that phase ended, Patterson said that her family settled briefly in San Francisco and Colorado before finally establishing a more permanent residence in a suburb of Chicago. This last, Patterson said, was the inspiration for the novel's Geneva, Ill., which she called "more crap in the middle of a cornfield."

Patterson will be undertaking her own cross-country journey to promote the book.

"Like Orleigh, I'm flighty," she joked.

Ultimately, Patterson said, she wants the audience of her book to concentrate on the more tender, serious aspects of the book rather than its somewhat unorthodox plot.

"It's not all smut," she said. "It does have its moments, but it's got a story to it — a sad story."

■ LGBT

continued from page 1

of discussion. I think it's good to be including as many people as possible."

Esterberg prefaced her lecture by saying that the events of Sept. 11 had altered her perspective on her research.

"I don't know if people are really talking about sexuality as much in popular discourse anymore," Esterberg said. "The 'bisexual menace' has paled in comparison to other menaces."

Before Sept. 11, bisexuality was "newly chic," Esterberg said. A debate raged over whether bisexual people were to be reviled or commended.

"Some people thought of bisexuals as hopelessly confused fence sitters," Esterberg explained. "Or they were lauded as postmodern, chic, and truly queer in an historical moment that seemed to celebrate uncertainty, flux and the flouting of tradition."

The debate over bisexuality and the nature of research into its nature have highlighted the patterns of Western thought, Esterberg said.

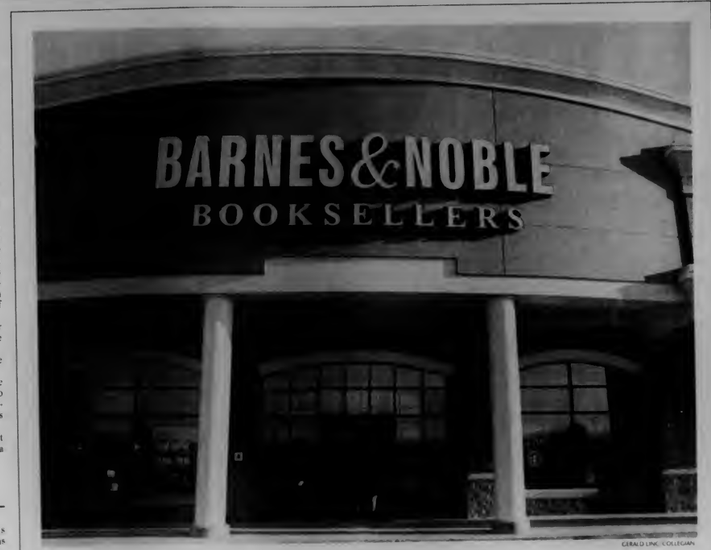
"We tend to see things in binaries of male and female, heterosexual and homosexual, black and white, dominant and dominated," she said. "Moreover, we interpret these things from the perspective of a dominant culture."

Monosexism, Esterberg said, can come from the gay and lesbian community as well as the straight community. Esterberg added that this prejudice is rooted in fear.

"This ambiguity raises fears about the understanding of ourselves that are rooted in a sense of separation," she said. "It also comes from the ethnic model of sexual identity, which relies on firm boundaries around different groups to strengthen the claims that these communities are in need of civil rights protection."

A question raised by the study of bisexuality, according to Esterberg, was "are we at the brink of the collapse of the sexual divide?

"Bisexuality brings into question the value of identity at all," she said. "It may be that the border wars will eventually destroy the borders themselves."



Though the collapse of sexual categories is possible through bisexuality, Esterberg said that in her opinion, it was not plausible.

"I have extensive experience in observing the societal institutions and the stranglehold they have on people's thinking," she said. "I don't think that the collapse of boundaries will happen, but maybe at best we can rethink our categories."

She said that relatively uncomplicated studies of bisexuality, using mainly behavioral and empirical models of analysis, have highlighted only "the way we put people into boxes."

"It's like trying to nail Jell-O to a wall. Identity and sexuality are more complicated and more fluid than that," Esterberg said. "We need to focus on individuals and their ideas of themselves as bisexual in order to define this category in any meaningful way at all."

On the Net: The Stonewall Center: http//www.umass.edu/stonewall

GERALD LINK, COLLEGIAN

Books, anyone?

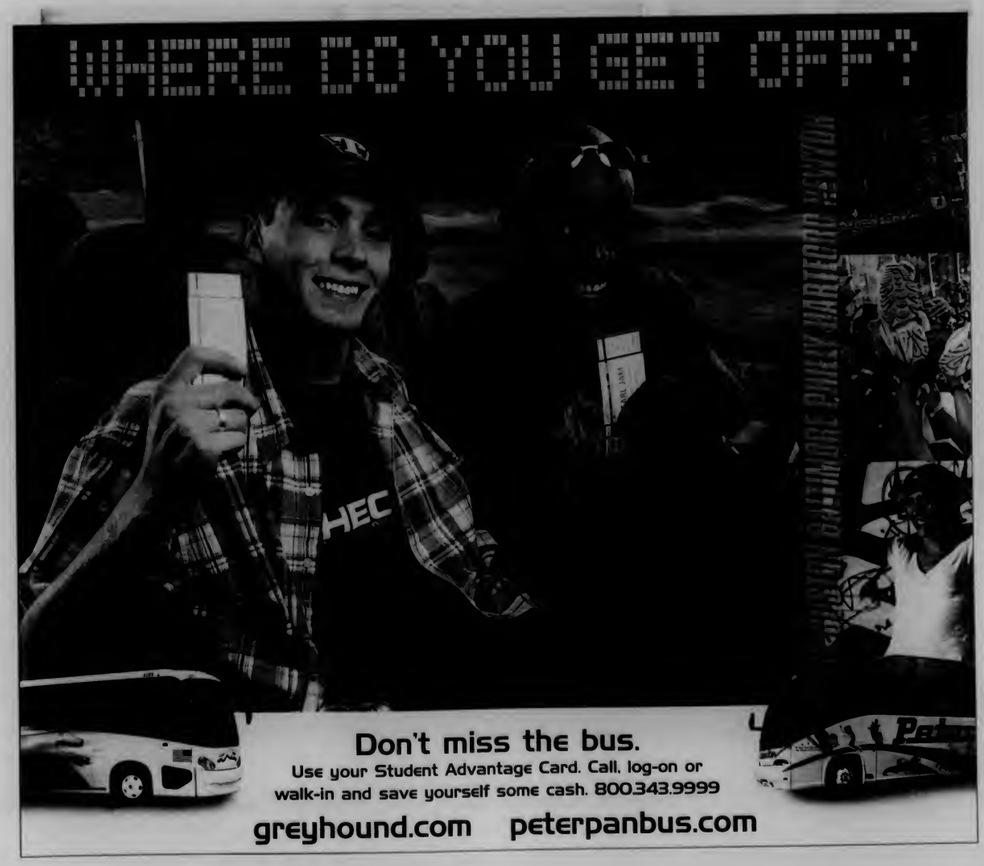
The Barnes and Noble's bookstore in Hadley opened its doors last week and is already drawing many patrons.

■ Magnus

continued from page 1

Magnus's opinion, Arafat's determination alone.

Still, some students were not satisfied that Magnus had retained objectivity throughout his speech.



"I think a lot of his facts and analysis are of base," said Uri Strauss, a member of the Five College Palestine Action Coalition. "I agree with some of what he says, but obviously I see it from another perspective."

Ryska Bar Zohar, another student, described the speech as "racist stereotyping."

"One of the things that really struck me were the generalizations of Palestinians as violent and hateful," Bar Zohar said.

Others denied that Magnus had been biased.

"I thought it was really powerful and for a partisan group, he did a good job of being fair to both sides," Kari Phillips said, a Hillel staff member.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

It takes a tragedy to inspire patriotism

There is a lot more patriotism in this country than there was a few months ago. Want proof? Look no further than college basketball arena's around the country.

Instead of a team's customary absence from the playing of the National Anthem, the players and coaches now stand, along with the fans in attendance, for the Star Spangled Banner.

But why is it that tragedy is needed to bring out the patriotism in our country? Why do we need acts of terror, like the ones committed on September 11, to perform a duty so simple as being present and standing for the national anthem?

UMass head basketball coach Steve Lappas tried to defend the customary actions of college basketball teams around the country. But his defense fell on deaf ears at the weekly UMass alumni sports luncheon.

Lappas talked about the controversial issue of forcing players to stand for the anthem. He presented many realistic problems for coaches, like players not wanting to, or not believing in it. Issues such as those can put a coach in a difficult position.

It's understandable that coaches and athletic directors cannot force players to stand for the national anthem, but the NCAA's solution for this problem is not to address it, it is to run from it.

Instead of facing the issue head on, the governing body of college athletics has decided that it would be better for the teams to be in the locker room while the Star Spangled Banner is playing, instead of out on the floor.

But in the wake of Sept. 11, the mentality of the country and the NCAA has changed. Now teams line up at mid court, head bowed in honor, as Francis Scott Key's production plays through the arena speakers.

The attitude has changed. There is now a feeling of patriotism that runs through most, if not all of the thousands of student athletes in the United States.

What was once an issue of debate, has now become a symbol of unification. The cries of inappropriateness and denial of rights have been quenched. The athletes now stand with their peers in the stands and in the media, as they honor America.

But why does it take a national tragedy to bring out the pride in people, not to mention the toughness and fortitude of the NCAA?

Controversial issues are a constant in the realm of college athletics and the NCAA, as it always has, takes a zero tolerance stand on issues such as Title IX and academic eligibility.

But when it comes to constitutional issues, such as the right to do what one pleases during the national anthem, the NCAA effectively sticks its head in the sand.

Now though, the national consciousness has provided ample backup for the NCAA to throw its support behind teams that present themselves before the flag, as the anthem plays in the background.

On Friday night, over 6,300 fans at UMass' home opening basketball game stood for the national anthem. As did the players and coaches on the Minutemen and their opponents from Arkansas – Little Rock.

It's just too bad it took a national tragedy to finally get them out there.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Pass the thank-you's please

I apologize in advance for what, to some of you, may seem the ranting of a nostalgic and pathetic senior.

There comes a time in everyone's life when they think about what they're thankful for. Specifically, it's the third Thursday of November. Yeah. Thanksgiving is coming up, and it's time for the inevitable flood of "I'm so thankful" columns. So sit down, shut up, and read my freaking column.

As I look back on the first semester of my probable last year at the University of Massachusetts, it's viewed through the film of multicolored gelatinous cubes infused with the finest of cheap vodkas. It's a kaleidoscope of places, mixed together with laughter. It's solving a mystery of history in the Amherst Jones' Library. It's learning about things that I'm interested in, and working at a newspaper that has become almost an obsession.

I'm thankful for a lot of things in my life. With the recent events that changed our world forever, I'm sure all of us are a bit more thankful.

It's sad to think that it takes the sudden death of thousands for us to become more appreciative of what we have. Thanksgiving this year is guaranteed to be more than just turkey and stuffing. It's more than just a few days break from class. It's more than an excuse to skip class Wednesday. This year, more than any other, is really going to be a time for everyone to count his or her blessings. We're thankful just to be alive.

We're thankful that we've been able to see the sun rise. We're thankful that we can hear somebody say 'I love you' and really mean it. We're thankful for every little thing that happens, because at least it's happening.

First of all, without a doubt, I'm thankful to be alive. That's saying a lot. Secondly, I'm thankful that some other people are alive. Namely, my friends and family. The order of that is important. With family, you're obliged to care about them. They're blood. But you get to choose your friends. You get to decide who you spend your time with in college. Who you hang out, chill, kick back, visit, be with is your own choice. That's really cool, and I'm thankful for the options. I'm thankful for the friends I have, and I'm wishing that some were actually related – make the bond between some of us that much closer. There are friends of mine, people I've known for years, who might as well be family. I trust them more than some of my family members, and they're usually the first ones I go to for advice. My friends may be closer than family. They're great, as I'm sure your friends are. So that's the first assignment: tell your friends how good they make your life.

> "First, tell your family that you love them, and that you're glad that they're around. Secondly, if you've found someone who makes you happy, damn it, tell them."

My family's next. I'm glad we're still together, and we'll actually be expanding when my Uncle Rich weds his girlfriend on Saturday. I'm thankful that he's found someone who makes him happy. This leads me to the second and third assignments, class. First, tell your family that you love them, and that you're glad that they're around. Secondly, if you've found someone who makes you happy, damn it, tell them.

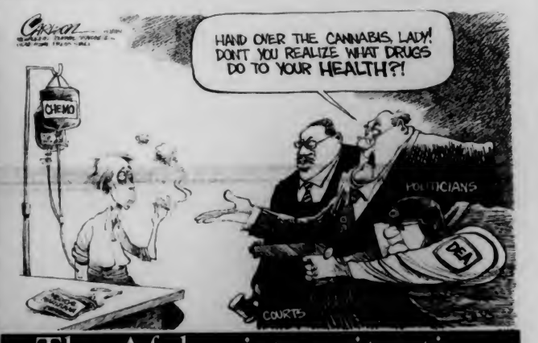
It's no good to have someone in your life that makes you feel invincible, whose very breath you envy, because it gets to be with them in such a close way. All y'all who have some one know what I'm talking about – someone who not just rocks your world, they are your world. Their very presence could make Hell pleasant. Tell them so, you moron.

Moving on, I'm thankful that I get to work for the largest college daily in the Northeast. I get to see my name in the papers everyday. How cool is that? I get to put nationally syndicated columnist on my resume, because I've been picked up by the wire. I'm thankful because I have a really cool job – I get to decide what's important for you to know. I can control the information. Insert the evil laughter here.

What it really boils down to, though, in the words of Nelly: I'm thankful that I can make a living off my brain instead of caine now. After decades of Campbell folk breaking their backs for a dime, I can write a few words and get paid mad cash. Well, not from the Collegian, but other papers have paid me. I'm incredibly thankful that I can write and feed myself.

And finally, I'm thankful for the feedback I get, good and bad. I like hearing people tell me my columns influence them. Hatred, amusement, I don't care. I think it's cool just being able to write something and have someone have a reaction to it. One of the greatest things that has happened this semester is to have one of my friends tell me that whenever she's feeling blue, she reads my "Hangover Paranoia" column and it always makes her laugh. I'm thankful I can make people laugh.

So to all you folks out there, making plans for the upcoming break: make sure that you reflect on what you are thankful for. If it's a person, tell them how important they are. If it's a thing, treasure it. But somewhere between the turkey and the after Thanksgiving sales, think about how lucky you are to be alive in such a world, and how cool it is to hear someone laugh at one of your jokes.



Pass the cranberry sauce, please.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Write for Ed/op!

(Because yelling at your T.V. during the news makes everyone uncomfortable.)

It's a Man, baby:

Steps to becoming a manly man

Everyone knows the song "The Boys Are Back in Town." Well, guess what bucky, it isn't true anymore. Nope. According to CNN, "The Manly Men are Back in Town." Hide the children and lock up the women folk, there has been a social shift.

For the better part of 30-40 years, the "manly man" has been getting crapped on royally. We are the dumb guys they show in television ads staring mindlessly into a television set. We are the people who get made fun of in this very paper for having a "love affair" with our cars. We are also the people that keep the bus service running, the plumbing working and the grounds on campus looking so prim and proper.

According to a sociologist that appeared on CNN, the manly man is now, after the tragedies, being looked upon with more respect and honor than they have been since World War II. The policemen, firemen and tradesmen that keep the infrastructure of the world moving and do the jobs that most college educated, lilly-white handed males do not want, are finally getting their day in the sun. So you ask, how do I become a manly man? Fear not reader, I'm here to help.

Step one: Drive a vehicle that is louder, larger, older and more powerful than most of the other stuff on the road. If you drive something that is big enough to drive over other stuff on the road, you get bonus points. If you take gas mileage into consideration when picking a vehicle, you are in trouble.

Step two: Learn to fix stuff. So those hands of yours are more comfortable wrapped around a double latte than a three-quarter inch crescent wrench? Grease washes off, scars are cool, and chicks dig a guy who can do a brake job in front of his apartment at 10:30 at night, in the dark.

Step three: Swear almost constantly. Many of the manly men that I encounter on a daily basis can curse like Picasso could paint, seriously beautiful stuff. Insert profanity into just about every sentence, even if it is totally unwarranted.

Step four: Take an inventory of how many pairs of shoes you own. If you have more than four pairs and one of them isn't a set or logging or work boots, build a sacrificial fire and burn them...quickly. Nothing says man like a big honkin' set of steel toed, knobby soled, over the ankle work boots.

Step 5: Use fire at any time you can. Taming fire is one of the most manly things done in the history of, well, man. But where can I use fire in every day life Brian? Grill something. Burn that huge stack of leaves in your yard (after getting a burning permit from the fire department). Buy a set of torches. Yeah baby, it is the best of all worlds. You can cut metal, cook a burger in literally seconds, and did I mention that you can cut metal?

Step 6: Help someone. One of the keys to the return of the manly man is the recognition that manly men are useful in society. We help people. Plain and simple. An added bonus may be that you can help someone six feet tall, blonde and single. A man can dream right? If you see someone stranded stop and give them a hand. Change a tire; if you don't know how, at least let the stranded person use your cell phone. Then make an excuse as to why you can't change the tire and try to retain the little shred of self-respect you have left.

Step 7: Get a damn job. Do not become a whining snivel-ing grad student. This is the antithesis of what we are looking for. We are the worker ants of this world. We don't push papers, sit in cubicles, or go eat hummus for lunch. Nope. We dig, we weld, we sweat and we work for every penny we have. We leave work spent, dirty and with a sense of accomplishment that we actually achieved something in the last eight hours. Then we usually go and drink beer ...sweet, sweet, beer.

Step 8: Learn to love red meat in all of its glorious forms. I ate Bison last week. Sounds so good I want to say it again. I ate Bison last week. Hell, dive into the grey meat family if you have to. Grey meats are Sea Gull, Pigeon and Swallow. As long as you catch it yourself, all bets are off.

I guarantee that if you follow the guidelines above you will be well on your way to becoming the model manly man. Maybe I could have made this a lot shorter by simply warning you not to become a whining, sniveling, latte sucking, jobless, weenie of a grad student. Unless you are studying Building Materials and Wood Technology; in that case, you become a hero to us all.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

The Afghanistan situation

So I read an article about the fighting in Afghanistan this week. What a surprise! The author strongly supported American action because the U.S. forces were there to end oppression and fight for freedom. Yeah right. Get real! Many people should not even use the word oppression because they don't know what it means. What is oppression to the average American? How can the average American define oppression if they have never experienced it? Imagine someone who has lived in the north pole all there life trying to describe what its like to have hot weather. Or someone who has never consumed alcohol try to describe what it is like to be drunk. Both of these are impossible just as it is impossible for most Americans to understand oppression.

The problem with accepting U.S. aggression in Afghanistan because we feel we are "liberating" the oppressed is that we use our moral standards to govern our actions and the actions of other countries instead of law. Lets assume that all the terrible stuff we hear about the Taliban is true. We have absolutely no right to judge them based on our own moral convictions. Each and every person has the right to hold his/her own morals and we should not persecute them for that. What we should persecute them for, though, is violation of law. Law is supreme over morals because there can be no discrepancy in written law.

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

Also, we must try to understand what it is that we really know about the "Taliban." Very little of the information that is portrayed by the media about the Taliban is correct or can be proven correct. For instance, MSNBC has been repeatedly airing a special about the Taliban. The special is a collection of several instances taped with a professional camera in Afghanistan. Several times the camera crew gets close up shots with people they allege to be members of the Taliban. The special also points out some "facts" about the Talibin, one of which is that television broadcasts are not allowed in Afghanistan. Does any of this not make sense to someone else? Here we have a professional camera crew, videotaping supposed Taliban members with hi-tech video equipment. Now, if this terrible Taliban really doesn't allow television broadcasts in Afghanistan, does MSNBC really want me to believe they are going to let their camera crew in to watch public executions? How dumb to they expect me to be? I already know they want to make the Taliban look as bad as possible but damn it, I'm not that stupid.

So what is this terrible Taliban regime that rules with an "iron hand." The "Taliban," an Arabic word that means "students," is a movement that had taken power in central Afghanistan, and is an offshoot of the Wahabi movement in Saudi Arabia. (But why don't we condemn the Saudi Wahabis for there morals and send troops to fight over there? Maybe its because we need the oil.) They believe in actively enforcing Islamic law as it is outlined in Islamic History and the Qura'an, just as the American government enforces the Constitution. The Taliban is made up of Ethnic Pashtun Muslims who are the majority in Afghanistan.

Now that Kabul and Jalalabad have fallen to the Northern Alliance Forces what is next? Where do we go from here? Is it over now that the Taliban has gone away? Well, first off, the military campaign in Afghanistan in the past few months has accomplished several things. One, it has killed innocent civilians. Two, it has uprooted a government, and three, it has further destroyed a country that was just starting to recover after 20 years of war. Notice none of the accomplishments achieved were capturing anyone responsible for Sept. 11, 6,000 civilians died in vein because more civilians are dying and still there is not definite culprit and no evidence leading to their arrest. The U.S. marched into Afghanistan demanding them to turn over Osama bin Laden. Well, the Taliban asked for proof of Osama bin Laden's involvement in the crimes. Wow, why in hell would they do that, where on earth could the possible have got this idea of innocent till proven guilty. Asking for proof of an accused person's guilt, damn, now that's what I call radical! But hey it doesn't matter, who needs proof when we have a bigger army. Speak softly and carry a big stick. George W. Bush probably carries a photo of Theodore Roosevelt in his wallet and asks it for advice before he addresses the nation, we all now he isn't that good of a public speaker all by himself.

The article I had referred to in the beginning suggested that absolutely no blame lay on America for any of the problems that happen worldwide especially what's going on in Afghanistan. In fact many countries like China, Turkey and Russia are standing firm behind America on this one. But thinking logically why wouldn't they, they all need support for there own aggressive genocides in Tibet, against the Kurds and against the Chechnyans, respectively.

And another funny thing is how we here all are lead to believe that The U.S.A. plays and active role in the international community. Yeah, that is true to an extent, there is an American representative In the United Nations, even though the U.S.A. has the greatest outstanding debt to the U.N. because they have refused to pay their dues unlike all other countries. Its ridiculous that one of the founding nations of the U.N. refuses to financially support it and has never financially supported It since is birth in the 1950s.

So what's next? Well most probably another article by someone who could care less about what is really happening in the world. But ideally on an international level there should be a new government established by the Pashtun (the majority) people of Afghanistan and the Northern Alliance (the minority mostly comprised of Tajiks and Uzbeks) should settle in the background. But more realistically what will probably happen is the country of Afghanistan will be divided into different countries, much like what happened in the former Yugoslavia and what will probably end up happening In Iraq. But hey, that's the beauty of capitalistic imperialism..

Yousef Munayyer is a UMass student.

Catharsis through rock: Sonic Youth in Northampton

Sonic Youth rocked the Calvin Theater this weekend.

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

Sonic Youth with J. Mascis and the flaherty/corsano duo
Calvin Theater
November 16

There was a moment during "nyc ghosts & flowers," the liberating finale to Sonic Youth's Friday evening show at the Calvin, when the outside world halted and everything abruptly made sense. As Lee Renaldo sang "I hear your voice, I speak your name / among the NYC ghosts and flowers / will we meet? to run again? / thru NYC ghosts and flowers," the music swelled, fiercely rising through the theater's old canopy and escaped into the chilled night air, carrying with it our own insecurities and frustrations of the last two months. Moments later the band was gone, the house lights lazily stirred, but the instant of nirvana had already been tapped, continuing to boil from the stage as the building emptied.

Much of the evening leading to this followed a similar path; more than a rundown of the "hits," a Sonic Youth show is an experience, from the first beat to the last note gorgeously exorcised from Thurston Moore's guitar. Everything is something; nothing is wasted.

It hardly matters, then, whether you prescribe to their brand of rock music or not; the talent collected in Moore, Kim Gordon, Renaldo, Steve Shelley and "newcomer" Jim O'Rourke remains striking some twenty years on. They're writing songs you can feel, speaking their own language, giving voice to a distinct dialect that grabs your conscious and shakes it from its lazy foundation.

A number of new, in-progress tunes were worked out; songs carved into succinct rock conventions that still explored the limitless possibilities of those often-accepted boundaries. Where most bands are content to go straight, Sonic Youth head east and west, up and down; they'd rather paw furiously at the ground beneath their feet than stand still.

One of these newborns was "Celtic Frost," a beautiful, melodic song fueled by Gordon's grinding bass and colored fantastically by Shelley's expert cymbal work. The song was fully realized, though, when Renaldo and Moore stepped forward with their unexpected, Dickey Betts influenced soloing, using the distinct phrasing to kick the song into the next gear. Capped by a Townshendian, Who's Next-era outro, the song was nine minutes of pure energy.

"The Empty Page," another song still in its infancy, captured that vibe in about half the time. As straightahead a rock tune as this band will compose, the harmonizing between guitars matured into an extended closing jam that tied off neatly at the end. "Magick Chord" (tagged, in this case, with its NoHo appropriate '...of Sylvia' dedication) set forth with a gritty, droning rhythm scheme onto which Moore chiseled a haunting four-note melody, effectively stirring it with his vibrato bar. Nearing ten minutes, it was perhaps the most eclectic of the new tunes; Shelley's drumming and O'Rourke's lively bass lines, however, kept it grounded and moving forward.

Exciting as the new songs were, particularly "Disconnection Notice" with its catchy intro and midtempo, melodic groove, the band dazzled with select favorites as well. They blew the top off with "Bull in the Heather," the night's first encore, a momentary release in a night of building tension. Moore's eerie work in the high register threads the song together, while the brief moment of reprieve before Gordon wails into the title track line is as effective a musical device as any. "Nevermind (what was it anyway)" plays much better on stage than album; a pleasant if repetitious song, by the time Gordon insists that "boys go to Jupiter to get more stupider / girls go to mars, become rock stars" the tune has freed itself a bit and there, before you, she's every bit the star, without having had to travel an inch. "Schizophrenia" and the pulsing "Tom Violence" was a pair of aces played to the delight of the crowd; the arsenal was full on this night and they pulled from it wisely.

Taking time between songs at one point, Moore proclaimed himself a "devout non-musician." It's a career move that's sustained him for twenty years now. If the rest of his band mates continue to maintain that philosophy of songwriting as well, there'll be plenty of reasons to keep listening – again and again.

As openers, the flaherty/corsano duo was a captivating act; with avant-jazz sax blown over some brilliant drumming, the brief set was a breath-taking release. J. Mascis of Dinosaur Jr. fame was exceptional. From his stool, he did more with his guitar, pedal and voice then most bands accomplish together. The primers were spot-on choices for the main event.

Ballet Hispanico a celebration of life

Pedro Ruiz and Rochelle Aytes, dancers in Ballet Hispanico.

By Melissa Ladd
Collegian Correspondent

Ballet Hispanico
Fine Arts Center
November 14

Great choreographers, artistic directors or companies are usually recognized because they have created something new and different. In this way, Ballet Hispanico, founded in 1970, is undoubtedly recognizable. Their artistic ingenuity and images of life were danced on the Concert Hall stage of the Fine Arts Center Wednesday night.

The style is a fusion of ballet and Latin dance, and was performed in three different pieces each with different choreographers. In the opening piece, "Guajira," dancers portrayed rural life in the Cuban countryside. Choreographer Pedro Ruiz used his own experience and his grandfather's stories to put the events of daily toil in the fields into comprehensive and stimulated movement. For the average audience member, the upper body is the main point of focus, and Ruiz took full advantage of that. His use of epaulment, upper body and arm gestures, gave a fluid and melting effect. Ruiz combined a lot of dramatic back bends and extended developes, where the leg goes from lower positions below the knee to above the waist. His varied dancers kept the quality of a continuous flow throughout the four sections of the piece.

Slow, calculated movement set to high-energy music in the second section of "Guajira," held the viewer's interest. The contrast merged nicely with the other dynamics of the piece. His diversity of movement was displayed in the third section where props were introduced. Using baskets and white cloths with sounds of water, the dancers presented the task of washing. What gave this part its beauty and hypnotic effect was the use of a cannon, where the steps of the dancers are identical, but done on different counts. Consistently in this choreography, the dancers' attention and inclination was less audience driven and more focused on each other as a group, keeping the relationship more intimate. Ruiz used energy and paid close attention to how it flows in and around his steps as opposed to how the energy flows to the audience, the latter being typical of most choreography. This was seen mostly in the romantically inclined section that depicts the merry activities after the day's work, and it the audience a feeling of privilege to be allowed into their world.

The second piece was set to dramatic colors of rich purples and reds in Willa Kim's costumes, and an eerie green color on screens that were integrated into the dancing. Named "Eyes of the Soul," the dance was inspired by the life and set to the music of Spanish composer, Joaquin Rodrigo, who went blind at the age of three. Ramon Oller's movement told the audience of the intense, real-life character. Last December the New York Times described this piece as having "expressions of high emotion." The focal character, Rodrigo, danced by Pedro Ruiz, seems lost to the world around him, always searching for an outlet, and way to articulate himself.

Jennifer DePalo danced the part of Rodrigo's wife, Victoria Kamhi. She offers Rodrigo devotion and guidance. Their duet that surrounds a chair reveals the strong bond between the two characters. It begins with Ruiz seated in the chair, with movements of despair and frustration, and DePalo protectively circles him. She reaches out to him and coaxes him out of his closed world and out of his chair. They do a series of lifts and handstands on the chair, showing the characters' trust in each other.

One thing that sets this piece apart is the dancing that molds around the props. The chair, small round tables and the green screens become part of the choreography at times. The angles and the placement of them are literally connected to the dancing. The screens are folded, unfolded, and moved about on stage to give the piece its transformations from one mood to the next. The tables become extensions of the dancers' lines, whether they are standing on them, curled around them or tilting on the edges, seeming to defy the force of gravity as they manipulate the props. The third movement of this piece has an energetic couple on mats, costumed in white underwear contrasting the slow and subtle movement of Ruiz and DePalo who wear dark colors. It is a vivacious duet using shapes of the body typical of a more modern dance than a ballet. The final moments of the piece are with DePalo carrying Ruiz off stage as he is wrapped around her waist in a fetal position, showing the courage in their relationship, his ability to relinquish his tormented fight with creative expression, and her strength to hold him up.

The final piece, "Somethin' from Nothin'," mixed in a little bit of acting. In the question and answer session following the show, artistic director, Tina Ramirez, stated that the scene for this piece was a dance hall party in Hispanic New York City. The feeling was one of free expression, and the theme was, "Tonight you get to dance with anyone you want!" The dancing was joyful, lively and far from that of classical ballet.

Ballet Hispanico is a relief from the constraints of classical ballet. The company energy is strong and combined with great technique they have grasped an intense artistic illustration of life – life as it is lived in rural Cuba, the life led by Joaquin Rodrigo, and life as it Is expressed in the Latin culture.

Local art gallery holds retrospective of Amherst artist

By Martha Olivo
Collegian Staff

The Nacul Center gallery, in the old Amherst Wesleyan Church building, is not the easiest place to find. At 592 Main St. it is hidden behind trees and marked only with a small sign advertising the architecture firm that shares the building. But it is well worth the hunt.

Architecturally remarkable, the old church is bright and spacious inside with a large atrium room that forms the main space of the gallery, which continues downstairs. Currently, every bit of wall space and a great deal of floor space are covered by the works of Richard Hooke, a painter, sculptor, print-maker, and long time resident of Amherst.

The show consists of oil paintings, pastels, a few watercolors, woodcarvings, puppets, prints, and a wooden airplane or two. Certainly, the exhibition would benefit from some serious editing. The airplanes should go and most of the oil paintings. The watercolors, too, and maybe the prints. These items are not all unworthy of show – the prints, in particular, are quite lovely – but there is too much to take in and nothing unifies the show except the artist. Nothing, one may argue, is a stronger tie-together than a common creator, but I would counter that even retrospective exhibitions are well served by a theme.

In all fairness, though, a thematically consistent presentation is not the goal of this exhibit. Richard Hooke has died and his works at the Nacul Center are being sold by his family.

The works are both artistically and fiscally accessible. The first point reflects Hooke's life as a teacher. He engages the viewer with familiar scenarios – a bustling market place, a day at the beach – and personality-focused portraits. A panel in the small room into which are packed numerous pastel portraits of children and elderly men and women, reveals a bit of Hooke's portrait strategy: "I'll make up stories about the kind of individual I'm looking at and then search for a way to communicate the personality I imagine. In this process, I seem to have a dialogue with the person, almost as if we were talking with each other."

The second area of accessibility – financial accessibility – is reflected in the red and white stickers next to nearly every work, regardless of genre. These stickers mark the items that have already been sold 6 days into a nearly 4-week long show. Nothing is priced over $200 and the works are stimulating and appealing.

The best works are the portraits. As Hooke's quotation above suggests, his strength is in getting at the nature of the person depicted, and thus he does not fuss over the minutiae of his subjects' features. Particularly striking is an old woman in a black hat (few of the works are labeled with formal titles). She looks at the viewer, her face tilted slightly and her features a bit askew. She is kind and has not lost her sense of humor.

This and other works reveal Hooke's keen sense of the elderly face. His portraits are tilted and twisted and distorted lovingly and just so to perfectly grasp the wearing out and resolve of old age. The people he depicts are somehow familiar, their wear and tear recognizable as that of one's grandmother or grandfather. Even in his wood busts, Hooke successfully conveys aged skin. In one particularly striking example, he has carved the work such that the grain of the wood serves as the lines on the skin, outlining the face's features in the manner of wrinkles, drawing it down and quieting its expression.

The single regret the show inspires is not one that should turn anyone away. Upon taking in the compassionate and humanly insightful works on display at the Nacul Center, one laments only that Richard Hooke is not still alive and working here, enriching the community of Amherst.

The show will be on view through November 30.

Hal lacks humor, sincerity

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

SHALLOW HAL
Directed by The Farrelly Brothers. Starring Gwyneth Paltrow and Jack Black

Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

When is our society going to drop the "buts" and the "even thoughs?" Think back to conversations that you've had, and you can recall friends saying, "she's beautiful, even though she's big." Why is our society so shallow? Why do there have to be the qualifiers – as if someone who's not super skinny could never be beautiful.

And why can't Hollywood let go of these "buts" and "even thoughs" for just two hours, and finally make a movie that truly embraces a person's beauty and inner spirit? Shallow Hal makes a pathetic attempt at finding the beauty inside a person. The film gets credit for at least trying – however, the film makes no splash in the ankle-deep tidal pool of Hollywood altruism, as the movie is just one fat joke after another.

Hal (Jack Black), scarred for life from his father's last words, is a shallow man, who ends up sparking the shallowness in all of us. The audiences laughs as he dances with beautiful women, and gasps as he's rude to those he considers beneath him. These reactions are our own judgements on his appearance – and whether they are caused by his lack of depth and sensitivity or our own shallow hang-ups – we still judge him by his looks.

Hal is given a "gift" by a television healer/inspirational speaker, who gives him the power to see the beauty inside the woman. And this is where a movie that's trying to do good goes horribly wrong. Hal dances in a club with three "gorgeous" women who all work with the blind...but only Hal can see their beauty; his friend sees their "hideous" exteriors. The film goes the extra mile to make all "beautiful" people the Hollywood size-2 version... and all "ugly" people plus-sized or bug-eyed. The film does not take into consideration that beauty comes in all heights, width, facial features and color. It is apparent that the only beauty that flies is Hollywood is a thin, white woman with long hair – i.e. Gwyneth Paltrow and the hordes of size-2 women that Hal goes after.

When Hal meets Rosemary (Gwyneth Paltrow) he falls in love at first site. But the beauty he sees is her kind heart. When we finally get to see the real Rosemary, the Farrelly Brothers go the extra mile to make her as unattractive as possible – putting her in clothes that are not well cut, and lipstick that looks terrible with her skin tone. It is offensive, as there are so many gorgeous plus-sized women, like Camryn Manheim and Emme.

The film is filled with one chair after another snapping beneath Rosemary, with her eating either half the cake or half the menu, and with the car sagging beneath her every time she sits in it. On the part of the Farrelly Brothers, it is lazy work, relying on the easy laugh and jokes, which in a movie that attempts sincerity, fall miserably flat.

But the biggest insult of all is that Hal finally accepts Rosemary, "fat and all." He doesn't love all of her – he loves her for her inside, and settles for her outside. That is not love. That is Hal martyring himself, and looking "past her image." It's insulting, and it is selfish because Rosemary deserves to be loved for who she is, as a whole person. That's what everyone deserves. When judging Shallow Hal as a whole movie, one definitely sees the truth inside the self-proclaimed altruistic shell – it's just another vehicle to continue unfair stereotypes and unnecessary mocking of heavy men and women. At least the title doesn't lie – Shallow Hal lacks any emotional depth, and hopefully ticket sales will stay shallow as well.

Gwyneth Paltrow, Jack Black, and Tony Robbins star in Shallow Hal.

ALL PHOTOS COURTESY GLENN WATSON

Rip-off this great chance to make serious $ and go to Florida next Spring . . .

Be in on the ground-floor of a Great New Business Opportunity
Your friends, more than ever, are getting into their music. In this crazy world it's one thing you can really experience -- If you have the gear!
Problem is: Most people don't, and it costs them too much to get.
Sell them better gear -- in a unique way -- and get $50-$100 per sale
A great line of high quality speakers & matched components. Buy them on-line and they get shipped right to your room.
Your Job: Simply pass the word & printed materials to your friends that are great deals at:
www.michaura.com
MICHAURA L.L.C.
10 Ferry Wharf
Newburyport, MA 01950
Tel: (978) 462-3329
Fax: (978) 465-7925
To join us contact Denton Hunter, V.P. Sales at sales.michaura.com <---------- or call him
Do it today & make real $ tomorrow
Make a Sound Decision ™

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

Aesthetics Skin & Body Care for Men & Women
34 Main St., Suite 1, Amherst, MA
253-9879
Healthy Skin begins with a deep pore cleansing facial.
Also hair waxing
-brazilian bikini wax
-whole legs
-brow shaping
-arms
Therapeutic Massage

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-467-4233
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHALLOW HAL (PG13) 1110 200 450 745 1020*
LIFE AS A HOUSE (R) 1125 445 740 1030*
HEIST (R) 1140 220 500 740 1010*
MONSTERS INC (G) 1110 1145 145 230 400 430 630 715 900 945*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1150 240 500 720 950
THE ONE (R) 1200 215 450 710 930
K-PAX (PG13) 1120 215 500 750 1035
13 GHOSTS (R) 800 1020
FROM HELL (R) 1135 445 730 1010
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1105 205 505
CONKY ROMANO (PG13) 1255 740
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 400 1010
HARRY POTTER 1100 1130 215 315 545 700 815 1030*
coming 11/21 BLACK KNIGHT SPY GAME OUT COLD
NO PASSES/COUPONS/VOUCHERS
cinemark.com

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
10 Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

North Shore's Miss Saigon falls flat

By Adam R. Perlman
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. – Of all the British mega-musicals that threatened to close on Broadway in recent years, the one that moved towards its closing with the least fanfare was Miss Saigon. Quietly disappearing last January on Super Bowl Sunday, the show has had its rights released, allowing regional audiences to see why it sold so many tickets for so long.

However, apart from a few catchy tunes, one memorable character and a helicopter sequence too frequently mocked to deride anymore, audiences also see why the show inspired so few fans to fight its closing: Trite, simplistic lyrics, undeveloped characters and a weak narrative structure make for a startlingly dull night of theater. The current production at North Shore Music Theatre unfortunately does very little to compensate for the play's inherent weaknesses and somehow manages to exacerbate its ineffectiveness with a clumsy and distracting physical production. The only distinguishing element of the production is the central performance of Kevin Gray, who is so good as the Engineer that, when he's not embarrassing the show around him with his tremendous skill, he almost elevates the evening to enjoyability with the sheer strength of his portrayal.

The plot of Miss Saigon is well known. That familiarity should function as an asset, but instead the creators use it as a crutch, never bothering to flesh out details or develop characters that seem human, let alone worthy of care. Adapted from the opera Madame Butterfly, Miss Saigon follows the plight of a young Vietnamese woman, who takes up residence with an American G.I., only to be separated two weeks later when Saigon falls. The aftermath of their brief time together, including the future of the child she bears him, form what the show calls its plot.

Audiences are expected mainly just to embrace the show's score, which vacillates between drippy pop arias and tempo-racing recitatives with some pseudo-Oriental music thrown in for good measure. Coming around to such material requires that the cast and crew go above and beyond the call of duty, and such an effort isn't apparent in this production.

North Shore is a theater in the round. From the opening number, it is clear that the production struggles to deal with the problems of such a venue. While one character has a particularly personal moment center stage, her performance is obscured for much of the audience by actors placed all around the edge of the stage who don't need to be there, and could certainly be lower and out of the line of sight. In the next scene, the bed has a high back, which cuts off the visibility of the characters on stage for many. Similar problems persist throughout the performance.

However, even more troubling are the screens suspended throughout the theater, displaying slides to accompany the action on stage. The images on the screens do not serve a constant purpose – sometimes they provide a physical background and at other times they comment on the scene's meaning. The only consistent aspect of the slides is that they never advance the production; the images are bizarrely stylized, artistically lacking and more distracting than anything else. At one point, a heavily pixilated fade is repeatedly used that had me staring at a screen and recalling the effects on my first Apple IIe computer, rather than noticing the actors in the scene. The worst use of the screen, though, is reserved for the musical's show-stopping eleventh hour number, "The American Dream." As the Engineer sings of that prized notion, a $100 bill appears behind him-an image that is obvious but not too imposing. However, as the song continues, coins gradually fade into the picture, covering Ben Franklin with the richness of quarters. The effect is laughable.

Unfortunately, ill-advised screen usage and poor sightlines are not all that plague this production. Awkward staging also sinks a number of scenes, including all those in which guns figured prominently. Every scene that features a character holding a gun and threatening another is unbelievable and loses its dramatic build, both because of the way the actors hold their weapons and the way they react to the situations. And among the more curiously flawed scenes is the second act opener, "Bui Doi," which occasionally feels like a Sally Struthers commercial and at other times like a revival meeting. The staging is unclear, the setting unknown and entire scene disconcerting for the wrong reasons (and the faces of abandoned children broadcast on the screens don't help any).

Most of the principals fare better than the physical production. However, though they are generally adequate, few transcend the limiting material. Brian Noonan's Chris, the American soldier, seems lost on stage most of the time. And while the character is weak (apart from being weakly sketched), there needs to be enough substance to him that two strong women would fall so deeply in love with him. Noonan's performance is also hampered by the fact that his voice, while a powerful instrument, appears largely untrained. His forced vibrato and difficulty with held notes detract from what should be lovely singing.

As Kim, his lover, Rona Figueroa enjoys more success. Her voice is clear and her line-readings are appropriate for the character. Nevertheless, Figueroa's performance is so full of wide-eyed innocence, especially late in the play, that Kim appears less sympathetic than foolish. Skie Ocasio, as Thuy, the husband Kim's parents arranged for her prior to their deaths, offers a performance unrivaled among the supporting cast. Ocasio shines with a powerful presence and robust singing voice. Though he must appear in a painfully bad second act flashback, he handles even that sequence with skill.

The true treat of the night, though, remains Gray's Engineer. From the first moment he appears on stage, he is in absolute command. Gray deftly uses his steely and expressive baritone to give life to a character who is desire incarnate. Strutting, preening, cajoling, even begging, he radiates charisma, as well as a sad sort of desperation that the character is unaware he possesses. A lesser actor might be inclined to soften the character and play him as a pimp with a heart of gold. Gray, though, avoids all of the character's traps, forging ahead with a portrayal that embraces greed in such a visceral sense that one cannot help but embrace him and eagerly follow wherever he leads.

It's interesting to note that the Engineer is the only character in the show with depth. Though he is meant to represent a cultural phenomenon, he manages in his unrepentant lustfulness to emerge as truly human and sympathetic. Consequently, in his depth and in his function of occasionally delivering commentary, he doesn't seem to fit in the show. It is also noteworthy, then, that he is the only character that the show's authors conjured without relying on the source material. Their achievement with this creation leaves one to ponder how successful they might have been if, freed from Butterfly, they had pursued the character of the Engineer or worked to devise other new characters. Such reflections, though tantalizing, do nothing to alter or elevate the present work that is on exhibition at North Shore Music Theatre. And yet, in spite of all its numerous shortcomings, this production is worth seeing, if only for Gray's indelibly mesmerizing turn.

Illuminating Islam through history book

By Clare Lochary
The Hoya (Georgetown U.)

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – Islam: A Short History is a miracle of compression. British religious scholar Karen Armstrong has crammed 1,400 years of history and theology into 187 pages of text, resulting in a dense but accessible presentation of Islam. The book's preface contends that each religious tradition "encourages the faithful to focus their attention on an earthly symbol that is particularly its own, and to teach themselves to see the divine in it."

In Islam, Muslims have looked for their God in history." The book emphasizes Islam's aspiration to create a compassionate world that encourages unity between men in order to achieve unity with Allah, a vision that demands a combination of religion and politics. Westerners, raised on a steady diet of secularism and the separation of church and state, may balk at this unlikely synthesis, but its merits become apparent to readers of Islam: A Short History.

After experiencing a series of divine revelations beginning in 610 B.C., Mohammed began preaching to the Arab community, which responded to the beauty of the Koran and its message of communal responsibility and compassion. This message developed into a theory of a religiously inspired political life, which was carried out with varied degrees of success over the next 1,400 years. Most interestingly, the author contends that Mohammed's religion was a reaction to the increasing wealth of his own tribe, the Quraysh. The abandonment of tribal values in favor of individual material gain provides a fascinating comparison to the socioeconomic conflict between American capitalism and Islamic Fundamentalism in the 21st century.

Much of the book is a litany of the major religious and political leaders that shaped the story of Islam. It would be impossible to summarize this history any more succinctly than Armstrong already has, so I will not attempt to do so. Islam: A Short History is not light reading, but it would be excellent way to keep your mind sharp over Christmas break. Not a sentence is wasted. Armstrong does not resort to diverting anecdotes or fanciful historical conjecture to sustain her readers' attention. She takes their interest in Islam for granted, and eschews any great effort to woo them with extraneous information. In truth, a more detailed exploration of the fantastic artistic and scientific accomplishments of the Muslim community would have added much to the book, but Armstrong chooses to focus more narrowly upon political and theological history. This approach has its merits, too. Islam: A Short History reads like a textbook — smooth, straightforward and devoid of any flowery embellishments. The result is dense and sometimes dry, but always informative and on track.

There are two points which potential readers should know before delving into Islam: A Short History. First, it is clearly written for a nonacademic audience that identifies with secularism and capitalism. Islamic scholars will find little new information here, but for those unfamiliar with the faith, this bare bones timeline provides an excellent starting point for intercultural understanding. The book includes a chronology, a glossary of Arabic terms, a list of key figures of Islam, maps and suggestions for further reading as well.

Secondly, Islam: A Short History was originally published in 2000, well before this year's terrorist attacks. The book does not address the events of Sept. 11, though its last chapter discusses the 20th century rise of Islamic Fundamentalism. Armstrong explains that "the current extremism in some quarters of the Islamic world is alien to the Muslim spirit and will not last. Islam is a religion of peace." She also contends that the responsibility for halting the expansion of fundamentalism lies with the West, "which must learn to recognize the Muslims' right to live their religion and, if they choose, to incorporate the Islamic ideal in their polity."

Armstrong grows preachy by the last section of the book, but she deftly illustrates the difficult task at hand for Muslims who apply their divine belief system to the messy business of human affairs. Those readers who relegate religion to the ivory tower of private life will hopefully come to appreciate of the beauty and wisdom of Islam though Islam: A Short History.

COURTESY MARIANNE THESPINA CONNOLLY

"Sea of Tranquility"

Marianne Thespina Connolly's "Sea of Fertility." Her collages will be on display at Northampton Center for the Arts until Nov. 29.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Bacon'n'Cheese Skins 8.99 4.79 1/2 PRICE!
Fried Shrimp Tempura 7.99 3.99
Sweet Potato Fries 6.99 3.99
Judies
10% OFF WELCOME HOME
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
511 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

UMass weekend runs on empty

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

LOWELL – "Disappointed. I'm really disappointed."

No words could better sum up the weekend than those of Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon on Saturday night. The Minutemen (4-6-0, 2-3-0 Hockey East) went 0-2 in a pair of games against conference rival UMass-Lowell despite outplaying their counterparts in both games.

Lowell	3
UMass	2
Lowell	1
UMass	0

Saturday night, the Maroon and White fell 3-2 to the No. 10 River Hawks (7-2-0, 5-2-0 HE) at the Mullins Center despite outshooting its rival by a 24-15 margin. Lowell posted three goals in the first 12:49 of the game.

"We just didn't bear down for the first ten minutes," said sophomore forward Thomas Pöck, who posted an assist in the loss. "It's hard to make it up in our league. I think it's our biggest goal just to get ready and play for 60 minutes straight at the same pace and then we can definitely beat anybody."

Lowell got on the board just 18 seconds into the game, as Frenchman Laurent Meunier fluttered a weak, wobbling shot that caught UMass netminder Mike Johnson off guard and slipped between his pads. It was the second time in two nights that Lowell scored on its first shot.

"It was a weak goal," Johnson said. "It's one I'd definitely love to have back right now. That's a soft shot that should be saved 10 out of 10 times."

Just over nine minutes later, with junior Kelly Sickavish in the box because of a cross-checking penalty, Meunier skated to the front of the net and slipped a pass to fellow countryman Yorick Treille just to Johnson's right and Treille put the biscuit through Johnson's pads for a 2-0 lead.

On its second power play of the evening, the River Hawks struck again, this time with Steve Slonina poking in a rebound of a Mark Concannon shot at the 12:49 mark. Junior Ed McGrane drew the defense to him, then dished to Concannon, who skated to the front of the net. Johnson saved the initial point blank shot, but Slonina was just to his right to put home the third goal of the night.

"I thought we established our game in the first period and then totally got out of it the last two periods," Lowell coach Blaise MacDonald said. "We didn't really do that last night."

But just as Cahoon's squad seemed headed for the sewer, the Minutemen showed up and dismembered their counterparts for the final 47:11.

On its second man advantage of the contest, the Maroon and White power play unit kicked into gear. Senior Martin Miljko took a pass from Thomas Pöck up top and delivered the rubber to Tim Turner on the doorstep. Turner spun around and put the puck past senior Lowell stopper Cam McCormick, breaking the goalie's school record 209:25 shutout streak.

In the second period, the Minutemen continued their dominance, attempting 25 shots and having 13 find their way to the net. Unfortunately, McCormick was up to the task, turning aside all 13.

"As a team we have to bury our chances," Pöck said. "We got plenty of them tonight, we just didn't use them."

Just 1:39 into the final frame, UMass pulled within one of the 10th-ranked River Hawks, as freshman Peter Trovato knocked home a rebound following a blast from the point by Sickavish. But that was all the Minutemen could muster as the initial deficit proved too great a mountain for the Maroon and White to climb.

"We can't sleepwalk for 10 minutes and then decide to play, especially when we haven't proven to be an offensively gifted team," Cahoon said. "We have to play the grind from the drop of the puck right through 60 minutes. I'd rather play well and lose any day of the week than simply not play well. But I hate losing and I don't think those kids like losing."

On Friday, the Minutemen traveled to Tsongas Arena in a game that was rather similar to that of the following night. The Minutemen came out flat in the first period, allowing an early power play goal, and McCormick made that stand up, making 24 saves in his second consecutive 1-0 victory.

"The positives clearly were determination, dogged effort in our D-zone coverage – we showed poise with the puck," MacDonald said. "To get it done the way we got it done – we should really be able to access that experience in the future."

The shutout was McCormick's third consecutive to start the season, setting the all-time school mark for consecutive shutout minutes, breaking Dana Demole's previous record of 177:08.

"Records are fine individual accomplishments, McCormick said. "But the big thing is that we got the 'W' tonight and that's all that matters right now."

MacDonald, however, downplayed his goaltender's accomplishments following the game.

"I think shutouts are overrated," he said in jest. "That's his job. There's just one puck out there, he's just got to get in front of it."

Once again, the Minutemen were plagued by early sloppiness, but came on strong for the final 55 minutes of the contest. But it was yet again missed opportunities – including two breakaways – that were the thorn in UMass' side.

"We played much better in the third period than in the two games last weekend," Cahoon said. "I'm happy with the effort, but the bottom line is, you have to find a way to get the job done."

A big part of Lowell's success was certainly its defense. Senior co-captain Chris Gustafson single-handedly broke up several scoring chances, including a brilliant play lifting freshman Tim Vitek's stick on a breakaway. Likewise, sophomore sensation Jerramie Domish used a combination of speed and coordination to defuse several attempts, many times using the backcheck to perfection.

"They cleared well enough that we couldn't get to any of the rebounds. It's amazing what a year will do because last year [McCormick] didn't play with that poise and that composure," said Cahoon, in reference to the lone game McCormick played against the Minutemen last season, where he allowed four goals on four shots.

"I thought the kids played hard enough most of the weekend to deserve a better fate," Cahoon added. "But it doesn't matter what I think. The fact is that we came up empty in two pretty good efforts."

GERALD LING-COLLEGIAN

Thomas Pock (No. 18) and Martin Miljko (No. 19) were clearly two of the best players on the ice in UMass' 3-2 loss to Lowell.

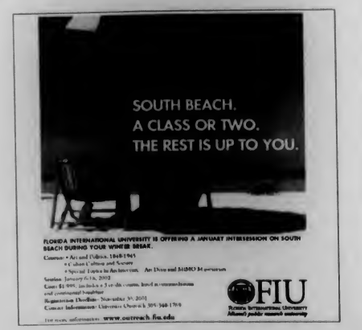
COUSINS MARKET
11 E Pleasant Street
(Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International
OCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

Cut out this great deal and send it home for Christmas . . .

Send your College Student Comfort & Warmth

Your son or daughter, more than ever, is seeking the comfort & campanionship of music. It is something they can control. Michaura offers you a special way to enhance that experience.

A great line of high quality speakers & matched components you order on our secure WEB site and send directly to your student's room. Buy direct and you get more to give . . .



Better quality, good prices, hassle-free . . . for both of you

Better value!

Make a Sound Decision ™

MICHAURA L.L.C.
10 Ferry Wharf
Newburyport, MA 01950
Tel: (978) 462-3329
Fax: (978) 465-7925

www.michaura.com

FLORIDA INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY IS OFFERING A JANUARY INTERSESSION ON SOUTH BEACH DURING YOUR WINTER BREAK.

Courses • Art and Culture, 1840-1945
• Cuban Culture and Society
• Special Topics in Architecture: Art Deco and MiMO Movement

Session: January 6-16, 2002
Cost: $1,995, includes 3 credits, land accommodations and continental breakfast
Registration Deadline: November 30, 2001
Contact Information: University Outreach 305-348-1709

For more information: www.outreach.fiu.edu

FIU
Florida International University
Miami's public research university

GERALD LING-COLLEGIAN

Micah Brand scored UMass' first eight points Friday in its openerwith Arkansas-Little Rock

■ hoop

continued from page 12

The rejection also served as certain boost for Rhymer's teammates and the Maroon and White faithful.

"At the beginning of the second half, Kit made a big block and the crowd really got into it and that got us into it so everybody just picked it up a notch," said Anderson, who hit a key trey with 5:03 left in the game to cut the Trojan lead to one (54-53).

Anderson also drilled two free throws with 1:28 left to bring the score to 60-57. But that lead was shot down after Mark Green nailed a three-pointer on the next trip down the court, right before Rhymer unleashed his deciding baby hook.

The game started with eight straight points from Brand, who tied his career high with 23, shooting 11-for-14 in the process. The junior gave UMass its first lead of the second half at the 4:01 mark when he accepted a pass from Crooks on the left side and calmly sank a turnaround jumper to give his team the 55-54 lead.

Crooks added 16 points for the Minutemen, including two key three-pointers at 10:28 and 3:10 in the final half, the latter giving UMass the 58-57 advantage. He also played the second half with three fouls, failing to ever pick up his fourth.

Anderson, who played 37 minutes at the point, scored 10 points, eight of which came in the final half. Playing in his first collegiate contest, Anderson became the first UMass player to win the A-10 Rookie of the Week since Monty Mack did in 1998.

Nick Zachery led Little-Rock with 17 points and Damion Ninkovic added 14. The two combined for seven of the Trojans 10 three-pointers, which came from 30 long-range attempts.

■ Brand

continued from page 12

on the scoresheet for the Minutemen but, because of Brand's hot hand, UMass was able to stay close to the Trojans, never trailing by more than four until the final seconds of the first half.

"They were worried so much about our low-post size and strength they were sloughing off and not worrying about the high post," Brand said. "Coach Lappas said if we're open and they play off us that much, shoot the ball."

Despite making all four of his field goal attempts in the first four minutes of the game, Brand was reluctant to keep taking the open shot and took just three more attempts the rest of the half, much to the chagrin of his coach.

"He wouldn't shoot the ball every time," Lappas said. "So I told the rest of the guys to throw two or three passes away from the post area and then throw it in that way he'll feel comfortable to shoot the ball. We were trying to trick him into feeling better about shooting it."

The trickery seemed to work as the junior power forward added another 10 points in the second half as UMass erased a seven point halftime deficit to comeback for the six point victory. Brand put up another seven shots in the second stanza, making five including three from outside the paint.

"I do it a lot in practice," Brand said of his offensive outburst. "But I'm not used to taking that many shots in a game."

In the end the Minutemen are lucky that Brand did take each and every one of those 14 shots, as they probably would not have been in a position to make their comeback had he not.

"We did what we could to try and contain him," Nick Zachary, UAL R's leading scorer with 17 points on the night said. "But he, and the whole team, made championship plays."

Now the only question for Lappas and his staff is, can he do it for the remainder of the year?

Women's hoop falls hard in season opener

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER – Barring overtime, a college basketball game is 40 minutes long.

But this one was over in just 16.

With 3:40 left in the first half, Holy Cross' Mary Campbell sunk her first of a pair of free throws. The basket made the score 31-12 and marked the end of a 19-0 run that all but clinched the game for the Crusaders, who won the contest easily, 68-42.

Holy Cross	68
UMass	42

The run, which spanned nearly 10 minutes between a Jen Butler layup and a Nekole Smith basket, broke up the fourth and final tie score of the contest, one in which the Massachusetts women's basketball team led just once – on the first basket of the game, a layup by junior forward Siiri Liivandi that came right off the tip-off.

The Holy Cross pressing defense had the Minutewomen looking like deer in headlights. Coach Joanie O'Brien's premier ball handlers – sophomore Cleo Foster, and freshman classmates Katie Nelson and Monique Govan – showed their collective lack of experience by committing 13 turnovers as a unit, while only dishing out two assists (both credited to Nelson).

The young trio couldn't find a way to break the press, continually working the ball to the right side where the Crusaders were waiting to trap, using the sideline as an extra teammate. Govan was able to break the press a few times in her 13 minutes of play with some spectacular dribbling moves, but little came from the effort.

When UMass was able to get the ball past the press, the collapsing defense run by HC put tremendous pressure on the post players, keeping the ball out of the hands of Liivandi, Smith, and Butler and double and triple teaming Butler every time she touched the ball.

Butler's presence in the middle (10 points, 13 rebounds) could be considered a bright spot to the opener, but not according to O'Brien.

"There are no positives you can take from a game like this," the eleventh year coach said after the contest.

The Minutewoman defense had trouble finding favorable matchups in the first half. Facing a starting lineup that consisted of 5-foot-10-inch senior Jeannette Paukert as its shortest player – UMass trotted out a backcourt consisting of two players listed at 5-foot-8-inches (Nelson and Foster) – the Crusaders were able to shoot over the Maroon and White defenders to the tune of 5-for-12 in the first half. No matter what style of defense they were playing, the Minutewomen were unable to get a hand in the face of the opposing shooters.

The UMass defense played with pride in the second half, allowing just six points in the first 10 minutes of the second frame and the team was outscored by just five points (29-24) while the Crusaders were more than happy to use the clock to their advantage.

In her first regular season game, HC freshman guard Maggie Fontana put on a show for the 1,600 in attendance at the Hart Center. The 5-foot-11-inch guard didn't force any shots and was solid from the charity stripe (5-for-6), leading to a game-high 17-point performance on 5-for-7 from the field.

UMass forward Amber Sneed scored seven points, grabbed six rebounds, and dished out five assists on the night.

The Minutewomen shot 17-52 from the field. They scored less than 42 points just twice last year.

The loss drops O'Brien's record against Holy Cross to 4-2. UMass has beaten HC just once on the road (December 9, 1998).

UMass is now 15-19 in season openers. The Crusaders are 17-11 in season opener, 14-9 in home openers.

The Maroon and White will play its first home game tomorrow when it hosts St. Peter's at the Mullins Center at 7:00 p.m.

GERALD LING-COLLEGIAN

David Jamison (No. 6) was the most effective RB in the A-10 until he met the suddenly stingy UMass defense.

■ football

continued from page 12

return in the third and threw a 19-yard to strike to Adonis Kinsey with 3:52 left in the that quarter to put the game out of Ram reach at 24-7.

UMass got on the scoreboard first with 9:40 left in the first quarter when Guice dumped the ball to senior Omari Howard in the middle of the field for what turned into a 23-yard touchdown reception.

The Rams had one scoring chance late in the first quarter, but Shane Laisle missed his field goal try from 21 yards out to keep the score at 7-0, Minutemen.

With 12:40 left in the second quarter, and URI backed up on its own 8-yard-line, freshman L.A. Love broke through the Ram line, got in between Nedimyer's pitch to senior David Jamison, knocked it down and recovered the football on the Ram 1-yard-line. On the next play, with Seibert lined up wide right, senior wide receiver DeShon Hardy took the snap, rolled left and dove to paydirt to give UMass the 14-0 lead.

The Maroon and White extended its lead to 17-0 on a 30-yard field goal by Doug White with 4:28 left in the first half. The score was set up by a 43-yard Kinsey reception.

The Rams scored their only points of the half with 2:16 remaining when Jamison busted up the middle for a 16-yard score to cap a 2:12, 6-play 73-yard drive. Rhode Island got the ball back on the next play when its kicker recovered his own onside kick at the Minuteman 43-yard-line, but the UMass defense held and URI was forced to punt, leaving the Maroon and White with a 17-7 advantage midway.

You earn one, two, or three credits during January Winter Break.

CIS 125-1	Internet Literacy, 1 cr,	weekdays, Jan. 7-11
DAN 101-1	Introduction to Dance, 3 cr,	weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan. 3-23
ENG 101-1	English Comp. I: Expository Writing, 3 cr,	weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
ENG 112-1	English Comp. II: Exploring Literature, 3 cr,	weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
HIS 105-10	History of the American People to 1865,	Saturday & Sunday, 12:30-6 p.m.
MAT 142-1	Mathematical Modeling, 3 cr,	weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23 and Feb 8-10
PSY 101-1	Principles of Psychology, 3 cr,	weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23
SPA 111-1	Spanish Skills Practice I, 2 cr,	weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPA 112-1	Spanish Skills Practice II, 2 cr,	weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPE 101-1	Oral Communication: Public Speaking, 3 cr,	weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23

Registration is now in progress through January 2, 2002
Call (413) 775-1803 for more information. Visit our website: www.gcc.mass.edu

GREENFIELD Community College

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sigma Kappa would like to welcome its newest sisters: Anne, Cara, Christina, Jackie, Jenn, Kara, Kelly, Kim, Lauren B., Lauren C., Lauren C., Lindsay, Meredith, Michelle, Nicole, Stacie, Sophal, Tara, and Vanna! Congratulations Ladies!!

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1. 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Two Bedroom Apartment; porch, backyard, new floors, and appliances, January availability 413-374-5961

Florence 3 bedrooms $747 includes heat avail Dec. 1. No pets or smokers. ldsaito@earthlink.net

AUTO FOR RENT

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

92' Mitsubishi Eclipse – Standard two-door hatchback - $1,650 – great car, never had any major problems, never any accident – excellent in the snow b/c of front wheel drive, top of the line stereo system will stay in, solid shape inside and out – 136K –Erica 413-221-5683

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

AUTO FOR SALE

'89 Ford Taurus. Many new parts $600 413-330-3814

86 Oldsmobile runs, heat and radio work, engine and brakes recently replaced. NO OFFER TOO LOW! 256-6267

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Pharmaceutical Company seeking chemistry graduates (BS, MS, Post Doc) also plant technicians – non degree send resume & cover letter to chemist123@hotmail.com or call 978-973-2015

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy Birthday Ashley Turner Lov ya Bye Casey

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

LOST AND FOUND

Lost Ring: Amber ring in WMNS Bathroom on Machmer ground floor. Please call if found. Erin 549-5379

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 549-5832

HOUSE FOR RENT

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sunscoastvacations.com

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

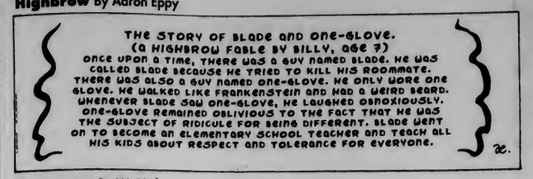
Umass #1 Spring Break Company save $80 and free Hippodrome passes, book before Nov. 21 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK



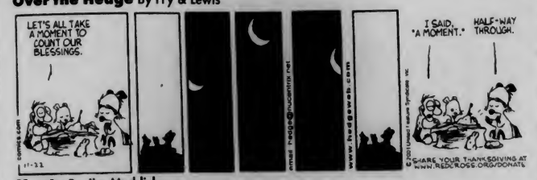
Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"You can't tell where writers are going to be, but it is very unlikely that one is going to be in the English Department"

–Kurt Vonnegut

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 45	HIGH: 56 LOW: 29	HIGH: 40 LOW: 22

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – With that "someone special" by your side – literally or figuratively – you can surely do what must be done, as difficult as it may appear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're going to have to pay attention to every little thing today if you're to get where you're going on schedule. Don't be sidetracked!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your sympathy for someone in need will lead you to a decision that may involve something of a self-sacrifice before the day is out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Even the most mundane concerns will far more important to you now than in the past. You'll have no trouble inspiring others to act.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Go slowly today, and be patient with those who aren't as well equipped to deal with the kinds of obstacles you will face. Help them out!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – "If" can save the day for you. There's no need to push an issue to the point of argument if you only accept that there's another option.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Practice may not make perfect today, but it will get you closer to your ideal than you may have ever been before. Be patient; you'll get there!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – This is a good day to do something special and unexpected for a loved one. Yes, you may even be forgiven for a past indiscretion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may be bringing this current pain on yourself – and needlessly! Tell yourself to "snap out of it" and get on with the things that matter.

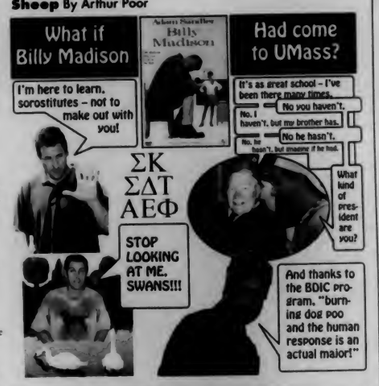
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You mustn't interpret a group failure as being your own fault. Everyone plays a part, which affects the outcome. Don't be too hard on yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Avoid putting yourself too much "in the spotlight" today; you were best to remain in the background, supporting someone else's "bid for stardom."

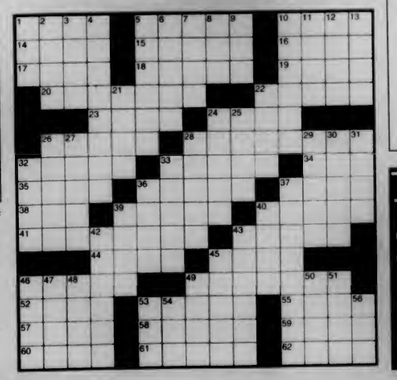
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Busywork is the name of the game today. Take care that you don't leave any details unaddressed. You can't afford to "miss a step" at this time.

Graphics: Where the party's at!

ACROSS
1 Pony's gal
5 Story
10 Cookbook direction
14 Shrill
15 Not in a whisper
16 Ripped
17 Olden times
18 Wooden shoes
19 66 and I-80
20 Wire-haired pooch
22 Clues
23 Ballyache
24 Diva's solo
26 Woolen outerwear
28 Stocky
32 Glass bottles
33 Take a rain —
34 Beer container
35 Purposes
36 Kermit's comment
37 Graceful wraparound
38 Golfer Woosnam
39 Squash
40 Theme
41 Most of the air
43 Skirmish
44 Throw a party
45 Toupee cousins
46 Plunged
49 Bubble machine
52 Wading bird
53 Wisdom tooth
55 Concept
57 PC list
58 Theater cheer
59 Fossil fuel
60 Ballet marks
61 Daisy Mae's friend
62 Goofs up



DOWN
1 Quaker word
2 Kind of squad
3 Man-eating giant
4 Long johns
5 Mudpack
6 Funny Steve
7 Oaf
8 Carry wearily
9 Sullivan and Murrow
10 Run of luck
11 Scintilla
12 A Flintstone
13 Kinski role
21 Pries the cans
22 Dampen a stamp
24 Winning
25 Bogie role
26 Red Sea peninsula
27 Lacked
28 Rose feature
29 Go to the rink
30 Like a haunted house
31 Pre-weekend shout
32 Ore deposit
33 Vinegar jar
36 Machine teeth
37 Winter's start
39 Yummy
40 Part of MHz
42 Lab monkey
43 Bathroom feature
45 Use a loom
46 Two nickels
47 Wild mountain goat
48 Honeysuckle, e.g.
49 Comedian King
50 Smell
51 Be a parent
53 CEO's degree
54 Planet, poetically
56 Heir and Gore



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Y	E	S		C	R	O	W		B	A	R	K
A	L	O	E		C	H	I	N	A		E	V	I	L
P	L	O	D		R	U	D	E	R		N	O	M	E
S	A	N	D	B	A	G	S		P	E	E	W	E	E
		Y	E	N	S		T	A	C	T
R	E	C	I	T	E		P	I	T	H		M	A	O
A	L	A	N	S		M	A	C	H	O		E	L	F
T	A	N	G		E	L	K		B	R	I	T
E	T	A		Y	O	W	L	S		M	A	Y	B	E
D	E	L		O	D	E	S		M	U	S	L	I	N
		F	U	D	D		N	E	D	S
A	D	V	E	R	T		C	A	S	S	O	C	K	S
P	O	E	T		A	R	O	M	A		O	R	A	L
E	D	I	E		L	O	V	E	S		N	I	N	A
S	O	L	D		L	I	E	S		B	E	G

12-3-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Nuggets

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Orange Garlic Tofu Chili with Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

Moroccan Lamb Stew

Chicken Margharita

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan) (W Basics)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hommel
Photo Technician: Gerald Ling
Copy Editor: Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor: Jarrett Brimmer
Production Staff: Shannon Farrington, Pete Preston

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Hitting Final Four waters

Water polo to play for national title

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen are headed to the Final Four.

After missing the Tournament last year, the 13th-ranked Massachusetts men's water polo team has reached the NCAA tourney after rolling through the Eastern Championship this weekend at Princeton, NJ.

UMass	8
Queens	4

With big output from all ends, the Minutemen captured the title after beating familiar foe Queens in the final game, 8-4.

UMass jumped out to an early lead in the first quarter, and used a stifling defense that has been the hallmark this season, as well as the usual solid goaltending of senior J.R. VanderWall to hold the Knights to four goals on fourteen shots.

It was an all-senior affair, with Greg Trayer leading the Maroon and White in scoring, earning a hat trick in the victory. Seniors Carlos Ramos and Mike Foley also tallied a pair each, and seniors Adam Moore and Evan Lutz finalized the win for the Minutemen with one goal apiece. Junior Chad Arnold rounded out the scoring with one goal, and Ramos also contributed two assists to the effort.

Yesterday's victory was the culmination of an impressive weekend by UMass, that beat Princeton and St. Francis on Saturday.

In the first game, UMass defeated Princeton by a score of 10-7, on goals from Trayer, Foley, and Ramos. Trayer, with four tallies, also had two assists. Foley, who has been superb in the attacking zone all year, netted a hat trick, and Ramos scored two more in the victory.

In the second game of the day, UMass dominated St. Francis, winning 8-3. The Maroon and White jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first quarter, and that was all it would need, with VanderWall living up to the second half of his surname, stopping 12 of 15 Terrier shots.

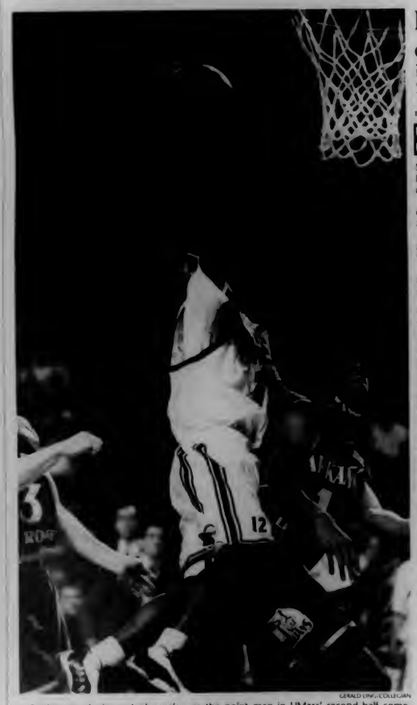
Trayer was also named the tournament M.V.P. for his contributions in the three games.

In winning the Eastern title, Massachusetts now sets its sights on the highest goal of all: the NCAA Championship, to be held on the first weekend in December, in Palo Alto, Calif. The Minutemen earned third place honors in 1999 at the tournament, and then missed it altogether in 2000. This year, however, has shown that the UMass team is one that could seriously challenge the western powerhouses of collegiate water polo, like the University of California-Berkeley, and Southern California.

The Minutemen proved to be among the best in the Collegiate Water Polo Association this year, with few speed bumps on the way to earning the second-best national ranking out of that conference. Trailing only Navy in rankings among eastern teams, UMass dispatched most opponents without difficulty, but lost three times in the regular season, including an epic and emotional battle with Princeton in late October.

UMass also played well in the postseason, winning the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship before being upset by Harvard in the CWPA Northern Division final.

Now the Minutemen will be able to enjoy a two-week layoff, while the representatives from the western divisions are sorted out. The format for the Championship is as follows, according to the NCAA Water Polo website: "The championship features a four-team, single-elimination format. One team each from the Collegiate Water Polo Association, Mountain Pacific Sports Federation and the Western Water Polo Association automatically qualify. The remaining team is selected at large without geographical restriction."



Once again, the Minutemen have found a way to win the games they needed to win, and the "to be continued..." tagline remains a part of the UMass season.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior Adam Moore and the UMass men's water polo team will play for the national title two weeks in Palo Alto, Calif.

UMass rocks in opener

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Anthony Anderson's was the point man in UMass' second half comeback Friday night.

Lappas and Minutemen complete late comeback

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The Steve Lappas era began Friday night with a finish that animated the Mullins Center with a sound that hasn't been heard around these parts in some time.

UMass	66
UALR	60

Surmounting a 10-point second half deficit, the Massachusetts men's basketball team topped Arkansas-Little Rock 66-60, with the help from a home crowd that proved hostile at each credit of a UMass clutch feat.

Still, the new Minuteman skipper would have been perfectly content if the 6,277 UMass fans left the building in less of a frenzy.

"I'd rather have a blowout, to be honest," said Lappas, after guiding UMass to a victory in its 100th game at the Mullins Center.

"Don't get me wrong, this is good for the confidence...it's a good character game, a good game to point to, but I'd rather have a blowout."

Tied at 60 with 41 seconds to play, senior Kitwana Rhymer connected on a jump hook deep in the lane to give UMass the 62-60 advantage.

During Little-Rock's next possession, sophomore Willie Jenkins knocked the ball away from the Trojans' Mark Green at midcourt, recovered the loose ball, and got the rock to sophomore Anthony Anderson. The ball then swung around the perimeter to Jenkins who ended up getting fouled and was sent to the line.

Despite going 0-for-5 during the previous 39 minutes of play, Jenkins connected on both of his free throws to give his Minutemen the four-point advantage.

"Coach Lappas knew they were going run that play so he told us to push every string," said Jenkins, who made his first career start earlier in the night. "A man went up and picked for Micah (Brand), but the other guy forgot to come pick for me, so I just bullied over the pick and ended up getting my hands on the ball.

"Then I saw it on the floor, and I knew I had to get it in order for us to win, so I just dove on it."

"I give Willie Jenkins a lot of credit," said Lappas, whose Minutemen drew more fans Friday night than James "Bruiser" Flint's did last year versus Top 25 Xavier on Valentine's Day. "He struggled in the first half, but he jumped right out to make that defensive play and I think they were surprised by it.

After Jenkins' two from the charity stripe, UMass forced another Trojan turnover in traffic and senior Shannon Crooks dribbled the length of the court for the game's final tally.

UMass began the second half down ten points, after Little-Rock's Rory Green nailed a three-pointer from the top of the arc at the first half's buzzer, but the Minutemen quickly cut into that lead early in the final stanza, thanks in part to the solid defense and shot-blocking of Rhymer.

With 17:24 remaining, Rhymer grabbed a rebound and threw the ball away on his outlet pass. Seconds later, Trojan Green drove to the right side of the glass, but Rhymer recovered quickly and swatted the attempt off the backboard. The block resulted in a Crooks lay-in at the other end to cut the Little-Rock lead to 39-34.

Turn to HOOP, page 9

A Brand new day for Lappas' bud on the blocks

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The biggest question for Steve Lappas and the Massachusetts men's basketball coaching staff heading into Friday night's season opener with the University of Arkansas-Little Rock was who would replace Monty Mack and his scoring prowess.

Mack, the second leading scorer in UMass history, graduated last May and took his 19.5 points per game from last season with him. If the Minutemen were to be successful on Friday night and the rest of the season they would need somebody to pick up the slack at the offensive end.

Micah Brand was that man on Friday night.

He dropped 25 points on the Trojans, matching a career high, en route to leading UMass to a 66-60 victory. Brand scored the Maroon and White's first eight points and made 11 of 14 field goals, many of which were 14-foot jumpers from the high post.

"We wanted to make Brand hit that shot, and he did," UALR coach Porter Moser said. "He showed why I think he's going to be a premier player in the Atlantic 10."

"They flat-out dared him to shoot the ball," Lappas added.

In coach Lappas' new motion offense, Brand should be seeing quite a bit of the ball in the high post and he will likely take more than the seven shots per game that he averaged last season. Last year Brand would often disappear at the offensive end of the floor if he struggled in the early going and that is why it was so important for him to start off so hot on Friday.

"I saw how they were playing off me and I just took the shot," he said. "It gave me a lot of confidence [to make the first one,] it was big."

It took more than five minutes for somebody other than big No. 40 to get

Turn to BRAND, page 9

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Steve Lappas won his first game as head coach of UMass, thanks in part to Micah Brand.

Rhode to playoffs stops in Amherst

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Adonis Kinsey dives for UMass' final touchdown in a 24-7 romp of Rhode Island Saturday.

Minutemen dominate No. 15 Rams

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

On Oct. 20, the Massachusetts football team topped James Madison for its first win of the season, setting its record at 1-6. That same day, Rhode Island squeaked out a win against New Hampshire to remain undefeated at 7-0.

UMass	24
URI	7

But since then, the fates of the Minutemen and Rams have taken somewhat of a reversal, a fact highlighted by UMass' 24-7 whipping of Rhode Island Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

With the Minutemen (3-7, 3-5 Atlantic 10) handing URI its third straight loss, the 15th-ranked Rams (7-3, 5-3 A-10) – once ranked fourth in the nation – have in all probability been knocked out of postseason contention.

"The old Rhody Ram football team that disappointed people for a few seasons showed up today," said Rhode Island coach Tim Stowers, whose Rams are one of just seven URI teams to win seven games. "With all due credit to UMass and coach (Mark) Whipple...this was one of the most embarrassing games I've ever coached.

"Our guys showed up today like they were ready to go Christmas shopping."

The Minutemen, however, are more in tune to home-shopping networks, as they have won their last three games in Amherst, and are looking to end the season with their fourth straight against Richmond on Friday in a make-up of the original Sept. 15 date.

In fact, the 2001-02 campaign has seen two different Maroon and White rosters.

The Minutemen have been horrific in five winless visitor outings, and have been outscored 204-53 in those games. In UMass' five home games, it has outnumbered its opponent 118-103, going 3-2 in that span.

Saturday, UMass jumped out to an early 17-0 lead with 4:28 left in the first half and cruised to a 24-7 victory.

"The Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde continued," said Whipple after his 103rd career victory. "So I'm just glad we were at home. We just did not look like the same team I coached last week."

The Minuteman defense was exceptional, outputting easily its best performance of the season. It made 21 tackles behind the Rhode Island line of scrimmage, and shut out URI in the final two stanzas of play.

"Our defensive line played their best game of the year certainly," Whipple said.

Sophomore defense end Valdamar Brower led the UMass line with 10 tackles (six for loss) including three sacks of Ram quarterback Vince Nedimyer.

"We were just rocking and rolling out there, we felt like we were in the zone," said Brower, whose season sack total climbed to 10. "I just don't think they could handle our speed up front."

Redshirt-freshman Matt Guice lead the UMass offense, completing 14-of-25 passes for 175 yards and two touchdowns en route to his second A-10 Rookie of the Week award. His performance came after a week in which he hardly practiced because of an illness, losing 12 pounds in the process.

Senior signal caller Kelly Seibert started the second quarter (which Whipple said was a predetermined decision) but Guice felt that he could

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 52 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, November 20, 2001

UM police busy with vandalism

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department reported that a handful of routine traffic stops resulted in four arrests in the past week, a period which also included vandalism, assault and battery and fraud incidents.

A police officer observed a vehicle entering Lot 33 at 1:47 a.m. on Sunday, Nov. 18 at a speed high enough the car began to skid, said UMPD Spokesman Jim Lyons. Upon questioning, the driver, Carlos Hernandez, a 19-year-old from Dorchester, Mass., claimed he did not have his driver's license at the time and gave the police officer an incorrect social security number.

Additional officers arrived on the scene, two of whom received minor injuries for the resistive arrest. The car was turned over to the passenger and Hernandez was charged with resisting arrest, operating a motor vehicle with a revoked license, refusal to identify self and speeding. The police report also notes that Hernandez has an outstanding warrant in another town. Incidents such as resisting arrest, Lyons said, are unusual.

Tanya Esposito of Hanover, NJ, Seth Hall of Westford, Mass., and Jared Jordan of Hopkinton, Mass., were arrested for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license. Esposito was stopped by police on Friday, Nov. 16 for an equipment violation. Hall stopped on Sunday, Nov. 11 for a one-way violation and Jordan on the same day for speeding.

A John Quincy Adams Dormitory Resident Assistant reported at 8:22 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 17 that several large windows had been broken on floor 10 of the building. While the responding officer was surveying the floor for further damage, he witnessed 20-year-old Marc Capone of Somerville, Mass. allegedly kicking a bathroom door with his boot, causing the door to dent and fall off its hinges. Capone was charged with disorderly conduct and destruction of property greater than $250. The broken windows are still under investigation.

The UMPD received a call on Thursday, Nov. 15 reporting that a person was possibly stealing bikes near Kennedy dormitory. Lyons encourages citizens to report this kind of activity because, "although we didn't find the suspect, we were able to interrupt the crime while it was going on and recover the bikes." A black roadmaster and Huffy 10 speed were found at different locations.

The same day, a person went to the station to report that her credit card number was being used to make fraudulent purchases. Lyons said that fraud reports are fairly frequent "especially on college campuses with all the marketing ... people will sign somebody up [for a credit card] and have the bills sent to their address." The current report is still under investigation.

A pizza delivery driver, who drove on the sidewalk in the Southwest Residential Area on Friday, Nov. 9, was assaulted by two male pedestrians. The driver claimed he was hit in the chest and stomach. The police are still investigating the identifications of the pedestrians.

"[Delivery drivers] shouldn't be driving on the sidewalk but that doesn't mean they should be assaulted," Lyons said.

During the week, the UMPD were also called on to investigate breaking and entering and burglary reports and suspicious person/activity often involving reports of physical fights or intoxicated individuals who were subsequently brought into protective custody. Other incidents such as intoxicated individuals jumping on cars, recovering stolen vehicles and vehicle vandalization also occupied police time.

Faculty Senate to review Athletic Department

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Athletic Council presented its annual report for the 2000-2001 academic year to the Faculty Senate on Thursday, Nov. 15.

Nelson Lacey and Rodney Warnick, representatives of the Athletic Council, presented the Faculty Senate with the council's finished report on the University of Massachusetts at Amherst's Athletic Department, its budget, successes, failures, and needs for the future. In addition, Lacey and Warnick addressed the motion from the Rules Committee to authorize a review by the Program and Budget Council of certain issues presented in the Athletic Council's annual report.

The Rules Committee's motion asked that the Faculty Senate sanction a review, by the Program and Budget Council, of the UMass Athletic Department's expenditures compared to its athletic peers, the relationship and balance between athletics and academics, and the financial responsibilities associated with the proposal to move the football program to Division I-A. The Rules Committee requested that the Program and Budget Council complete this task and report its findings to the Faculty Senate during the Spring 2002 Semester.

Lacey and Warnick reported that the major topics reviewed by the Athletic Council during the past year have been: the proposal of the Football program moving to Division I-A and its proposed market feasibility; the McGuirk Stadium Renovation Proposal; and the construction of a campus recreation and wellness facility. The council also reviewed the financial performance, academic performance of student athletes, and general perception raised about the Athletic Department's programs compared to those at peer athletic institutions.

According to the Athletic Council's report, and testified by Lacey and Warnick, a review of the Athletic Department by the Faculty Senate will be critical. The Athletic Department and Council are asking the Faculty Senate "to provide a benchmark or strategic review of the programs offered." The report discusses concerns expressed by the Faculty Senate over the funding of the department and its programs.

Due to the concerns from the Faculty Senate and administration the Athletic Council has focused on whether the Athletic Department offers a reasonable return on the University's and the Commonwealth's investment?

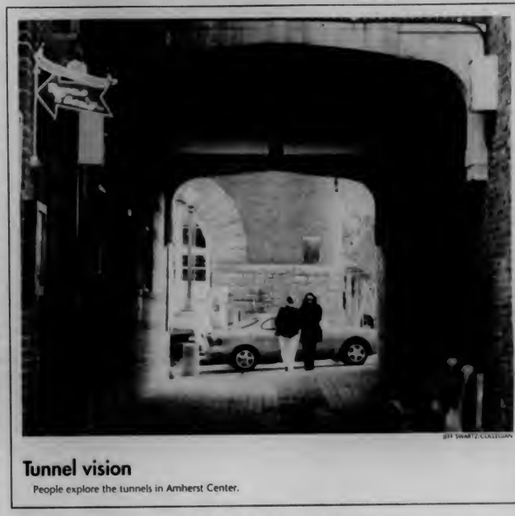
UMass Athletics offers twenty-nine intercollegiate sports on an estimated budget of $17 million. The proposal to move the football program to Division I-A stems from the idea of establishing a program that could eventually stimulate enough revenue to assist the funding of the rest of the athletic programs offered. UMass Athletics does not have a program that produces enough revenue to cover its own costs as well as assist with that of other programs. Lacey and Warnick reported that an example of this type of revenue producing program working is the University of Florida's football program.

According to the council's report over the past decade UMass has made a "strategic commitment to high visibility programs and potential revenue-producing sports such as men's basketball, women's basketball and the reinstatement of men's ice hockey in the early 1990's."

Evidence of this lies in the establishment of the Mullins Center. However, the report says that these sports have thus far been unable to assist in the Athletic Department's spending due to a decline in the success of the men's basketball program, which has coincided with a decline in revenues from ticket sales, and athletic fund losses.

According to the report the University administration has directed the Athletic Department to prepare an eight hundred thousand dollar budget cut for the 2002 fiscal year, and again cut this amount in the 2003 fiscal year. After reviewing their programs, the Athletic Department believes it has developed a plan that may result in the suspension of several programs, and increase the athletic fee by $125. However, according to the report the university's administration and Board of Trustees have no plans to cut any sports programs or change the level of competition.

"This goes to the heart of the mission of UMass Intercollegiate Athletics. If our mission is to compete on the national level, then comparable investments and stability in funding are needed," the report stated. "If some other competitive level is sought, then the Athletic Department needs that direction."



The report continues to say that the general sentiment of the Athletic Council is as follows: "It is the position of the Athletic Council that the University's central administration and the Board of Trustees must clearly define the strategic mission of the UMass Athletic Program. That mission will enable the Athletic Department to initiate a realistic budget along with a program of funding mechanisms that will bring stability to the department."

In addition to the proposal for Division I-A football, the Athletic Council reports plans to renovate and expand McGuirk Stadium, and create a campus recreation facility which either renovates or expands the use of the Boyden Complex and create additional facilities for campus use such as an indoor track, indoor pool complex, indoor practice facility and the campus fitness complex.

"There is one point that we want to make clear, that the Amherst campus, the University at large, and the Commonwealth are receiving great value from UMass athletics. By value we speak of what we get (output) versus what we spend (input). Ask any of the coaches of our 29 sports to comment on how our program compares with respect to facilities, to scholarships offered, and to team budgets, and the answer you'll most likely receive will be 'not very well.' But here's the good news. Not only will these coaches not complain, but they'll tell you why you should be proud of what is accomplished despite these inequities," concluded Lacey.

Following Lacey and Warnick's presentation, the Faculty Senate discussed the consequences of putting more funding into the university's ath-

Turn to SENATE, page 3

JEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Tunnel vision
People explore the tunnels in Amherst Center.

Taliban brutality alleged by report

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The U.S. State Department spotlighted the Taliban's treatment of women in a report released over the weekend.

The fundamentalist Islamic faction has ruled Afghanistan since 1996. Officials claim that thousands of women have been living in poverty since then.

"As many as 50,000 women, who had lost husbands and other male relatives during Afghanistan's long civil war, had no source of income," the report stated. "Many were reduced to selling all of their possessions and begging in the streets, or worse, to feed their families."

The State Department also said that the Taliban conducted a "war on women."

"The Taliban perpetrated egregious acts of violence against women, including rape, abduction, and forced marriage," the report alleged. "Some families resorted to sending their daughters to Pakistan or Iran to protect them."

Girls over the age of eight are not allowed to attend school. Women's enrollment in Kabul University was prohibited. The U.S. government claims that by denying education, the Taliban have made sure that women will not be able to advance themselves.

"As a result of these measures, the Taliban was ensuring that women would continue to sink deeper into poverty and deprivation, thereby guaranteeing that tomorrow's women would have none of the skills needed to function in a modern society," the report stated.

The report included statements from Afghan women and Taliban officials.

"The Taliban has clamped down on knowledge and ignorance is ruling instead," Sadriqa, a 22-year-old woman from Kabul said.

Taliban Minister of Education Syed Ghaisuddin is quoted as saying why he thinks women should be confined in the home.

"It's like having a flower, or a rose. You water it and keep it at home for yourself, to look at it and smell it," Ghaisuddin said. "It [a woman] is not supposed to be taken out of the house to be smelled."

The United States is keenly interested in the role of women in a post-Taliban Afghanistan, according to State Department officials.

"The United States government, which has been the largest individual national donor to Afghan humanitarian assistance efforts, believes the Taliban's oppression of women must come to an end," the report

Turn to TALIBAN, page 3

ZOHRA RASEKH/PHYSICIANS FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

In urban areas, the Taliban's dress code required women to be covered under a burqa — a voluminous, tent-like full-body outer garment that covers them from head to toe.

PERI welcomes new researchers to UMass

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts's Political Economy Research Institute (PERI) has welcomed three additional faculty researchers into the program.

Assistant director and assistant research professor Elissa Braunstein and assistant research professors Mark David Brenner and James Heintz are the latest inductees into the institute.

Co-directed and founded by Robert Pollin and Gerald Epstein in 1998, PERI is an affiliate to the University's Economics department. PERI is actively engaged in research, dissemination, policy advising, and graduate student education, and sponsors conferences and other public events in areas of research focus.

Some of PERI's aims include addressing basic issues of human and ecological well being through research written for the general public, policy makers, and academic audiences. Three main focuses of research for the institute are globalization and macroeconomics, labor markets and living wages, and development, peace building and the environment.

"We are very fortunate to have three such talented economists as our first research faculty members," Gerald Epstein, professor of economics and director of the Institute, said. "When we first planned PERI, my co-director Robert Pollin and I felt that having first-rate, young research professors would be critical to the institute's ability to produce a significant amount of excellent research and to affect the debate on economic policy here and abroad."

With a doctorate and master's degree in economics from UMass-Amherst, Braunstein received her bachelor's degree from Cornell University in 1983 and earned a master's in Pacific International Affairs from the University of California at San Diego in 1992. Braunstein is a staff economist with the University's Center for Popular Economics. She specializes in gender, macroeconomics, and the economics of the household with special concentration on the role of foreign direct investment in development and how globalization has affected women's market and non-market work in East Asia.

James Heintz also received his economics doctorate from the University of Massachusetts in 2001 and a master's from the University of Minnesota in 1992 and a bachelor's from Cornell two years prior. Dealing with a broad horizon of economic issues, Heintz has written on topics such as job creation, egalitarian macroeconomic strategies and investment behavior. Between 1996 and 1998, he worked as an economist at the National Labour and Economic Development Institute in Johannesburg, South Africa and is the co-author of The Ultimate Field Guide to the US Economy. He presently works on focusing on global labor standards and inequalities, "jobless growth" which has appeared in developing countries and the impact of distribution and social conflict on investment and labor demand.

Farming his doctorate in 2001 and master's degree in economics from the University of California-Riverside in 1997, Mark David Brenner is the other addition to the institute's faculty. With a bachelor's degree in economics and history from Wake Forest University in 1991, he went on to earn his master's in international development from American University in 1994. Brenner's specialty is development and labor economics with concentration in income distribution, poverty and low-wage labor markets. A Fulbright Scholar in 1998, he did work in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire as a consultant for the United Nations Development Program and the International Labor Organization. Institutional factors revolving around rising wage inequality in the United States is the focus of his most recent work, which also addresses the economic impacts of living wage proposals in several cities such as Los Angeles and New Orleans.

National Briefs

Indiana

By Jason McFarley
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. - A University of Notre Dame student will appear in St. Joseph County Superior Court next month to enter a plea in connection with charges that he manufactured and owned false identification.

Sophomore Andrew Murren made an initial court appearance Friday with counsel, South Bend attorney Anthony Zappia. Judge John Marnocha ordered Murren back in court Dec. 20 to indicate whether he will plead guilty to the charges or proceed with a trial.

Murren, 20, of Camp Hill, Pa., was arrested Nov. 2 after authorities linked him with possession of a phony driver's license and distribution of fake IDs to other Notre Dame students. He faces one felony count of forgery, eight misdemeanor counts of furnishing false identification and a citation for owning a bogus ID.

Murren is out on $1,000 bond.

Charges against him stem from a Notre Dame Security/Police investigation triggered by an August incident involving an underage female Notre Dame student caught in Albion, Mich., trying to use a fake ID to buy alcohol, according to court records.

The woman met with NDSP in late August and led officials to investigate more than a half-dozen other female students who had purchased fake identification on campus in the spring.

Each woman reported paying $50 each for a counterfeit driver's license from the state of Maine.

In a Sept. 14 meeting between NDSP Sgt. Patrick Cottrell and Murren in the student's Knott Hall room, Murren admitted he produced the women's IDs and surrendered a false one he had made for himself; the records showed. He told Cottrell he had obtained information about making the licenses on the Internet and had used a laminator to create them.

The misdemeanor counts Murren faces charge that he distributed the IDs with intent to violate state liquor law, furnishing false identification, a Class C count, carries a maximum penalty of 60 days in jail and as much as a $500 fine.

More serious for Murren is the Class C felony forgery count. It carries up to a four-year sentence and $10,000 fine.

But Marnocha, the chief superior court judge, could let Murren walk on that charge.

Marnocha in a Nov. 7 letter to County Prosecutor Chris Toth expressed concern about Deputy Prosecutor David Szumski's pursuit of the forgery count against Murren.

Prosecution of Murren for forgery violates the superior court rule aimed at ending "forum shopping," Marnocha told Toth in the letter. The recently instated rule is meant to bar lawyers from "shopping" for judges to hear cases.

Szumski submitted the case for Marnocha's consideration in late October. The judge found no probable cause for the felony charge and rejected that count.

The deputy prosecutor re-submitted the case Oct. 31 to Judge William Means, who signed off on all the counts and issued the warrant for Murren's arrest.

"The resubmission to Judge Means is a direct violation of our ... local rule," Marnocha wrote.

The rule is seemingly explicit: "In the event that any charging instrument, search warrant, subpoena or other document, the issuance of which requires the finding of probable cause, shall be submitted to a judge and that judge finds that no probable cause exists ... any resubmission shall be made to the original judge, unless the original judge agrees that it may be submitted to another judge ..."

Marnocha told Toth he would deal with the alleged rule violation at one of Murren's future court dates.

The judge urged Toth to ensure that his staff was aware of the rule so that similar problems wouldn't occur in the future.

District of Columbia

By Trevor Martin
The GW Hatchet (George Washington U.)

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON - George Washington University students crowded religious events last weekend to mark the end of what organizers called the best Religion Week in recent years. The week of events was dedicated to "make religion seem cool."

Events included Christian, Hindu, Islamic and Jewish experts speaking about holy wars, a "Discover Sikhism" dinner, an interfaith celebration in the Marvin Center and a Filipino cultural celebration.

Junior Arezoo Riahi said the events were aimed to promote unity among religions on campus in a "chill" atmosphere.

"We are trying to make religion seem cool," said Riahi, who helped organize events as Program Board's multicultural affairs chair.

She said everyone has a "one-dimensional" view of religion, and the week was trying to show students all the different religions on campus.

Riahi also said it is important to focus on unity and religion in the wake of Sept. 11.

"There are definitely a lot of differences from last year," she said.

Riahi said PB did most of the programming this year, instead of letting the individual religious societies and organizations plan their own events, to integrate the organizations.

Food for 300 people disappeared in one hour Friday afternoon as more than 500 students crowded Kogan Plaza for barbecue and to talk to representatives from campus religious organizations. Student organizations such as the Hindu Buddhist Ministry, Muslim Student Association and South Asian Society took part.

Riahi, who organized the event with sophomore Neerali Shah and junior Juhi Shukla, said the Kogan Plaza event was a culmination of an "outstanding week."

The Indian Student Association hosted a dinner for 400 and a dance party Friday night to celebrate the religious holiday of Diwali, a festival of light.

The event included a sit-down dinner and transformed J Street into a stage for a 15-act dancing and singing program.

Students performing were sequined dresses, veils and other costumes in dance sequences with music. Tradition mixed with modern music as some performances included candles to signify the festival. Sophomore Ankur Rastogi's Michael Jackson performance entertained students at the end of the event.

ISA president Rishi Desai said the holidays has become "more of a cultural thing" in recent years with more emphasis being placed on the social aspects of the event.

Desai said it was an honor to take such a major role in this year's Religion Week.

Desai, a senior, said it was the best Religion Week he has experienced at GW.

"This is the big thing we do this semester, and we have been planning since the beginning of the year," Desai said.

Students said Religion Week was a success because events like the ISA Festival of Lights were well attended.

"The event on Friday made me think people took something from Religion Week," junior Divya Menon said. "Unless you show that (religion) is something interesting, people won't be interested in it."

Others agreed.

"I really enjoyed it," freshman Nisha Kapadia said. "I think it brings diversity and other perspectives to students living in the GW community."

Ohio

By Joanna Hammer
The BG News (Bowling Green State U.)

(U-WIRE) BOWLING GREEN, Ohio - The popularity of the synthetic, psychoactive drug ecstasy continues to grow, despite the growing risks of the drug to primary brain functions.

According to a report by The Ohio Substance Abuse Monitoring Network, in June 2000, when the drug first appeared at dance clubs, it was popular among white, suburban youths. A report completed this year by The Ohio Department of Alcohol and Drug Addiction Services stated that Ecstasy use has increased dramatically, leading to considerable health concerns.

Teenagers and young adults are the main users of ecstasy. The National Institute on Drug Abuse, study shows a dramatic increase in Ecstasy use among 18 to 26 year olds in the past four years. For this group, lifetime ecstasy use increases four-fold, from an average of 2.4 percent in 1996 to 8.2 percent in 2000.

Ecstasy users experience a loss of inhibition, a feeling of excitement, euphoria, and a sudden rush of energy. Ecstasy encourages people to feel closer, more open and empathetic towards the people they are with, according to Ecstasy.org. This is why ecstasy is commonly referred to as the "Love Drug" or "Lover's Speed."

The problem is that once ecstasy is taken, it can cause serious side effects. Lucille Fleming, director of ODADAS, said, "An ecstasy pill looks small and harmless. It may have cartoon characters or butterflies or doves on it, but it is a highly dangerous drug. You don't know what you're getting, and you don't know how you body will react to it. A lethal dose looks exactly the same as any dose that can induce extremely high body temperatures, convulsions and brain damages or death."

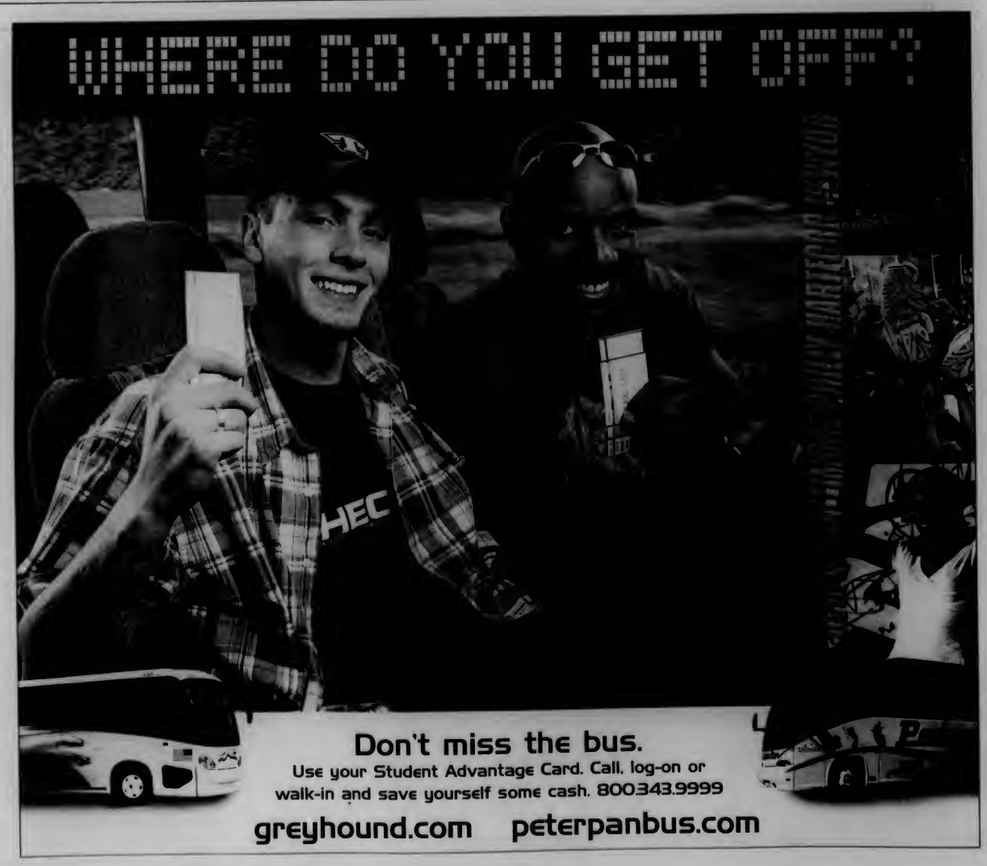
Ecstasy is neurotoxic and can cause permanent damage to the brain after the first dose, especially the brain's critical thought and memory sections. High dosages can lead to kidney failure, cardiovascular system failure, heart attacks, strokes, and seizures.

The drug's effects usually start a half an hour after taking the drug. First time users often experience confusion or anxiety. The effects normally last three to six hours. However, confusion, depression, sleeping problems, anxiety, and paranoia can occur weeks after the drug is taken.

According to data obtained by the National Drug Abuse Warning Network, the number of emergency visits resulting from an ecstasy overdose has increased dramatically since the mid-90s. In 1994 there were 250 ecstasy-related emergency visits compared to 3,000 reported in 1999.

Users do not normally fear negative affects when using the drug. Natalie Mason, a sophomore at Bowling Green State University said, "The first time I did ecstasy was at a movie called The Rocky Horror Picture Show. I was 16 at the time and it was amazing. I felt tired the next morning, but no major side effects. All together, I've done ecstasy seven times. With each time I've felt a little more depressed and worn out."

Most continuous users experience feelings of depression. Clinical studies have proven that Ecstasy use has a dramatic effect on the amount of serotonin that the body can produce. Serotonin enables the body to feel hungry, tired, and emotionally stable. When a person's seratonin level drops they also experience depression, sexual side effects and sensitivity to pain.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signman 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiberra Grecco, Bluni Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simiuwski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Police Log

by Alicia Upano

November 9

Domestic Disturbance
Brett Resident reported that roommate made a verbal threat of physical assault at 12:50 a.m. Issue turned over to Housing.

Assault and Battery
A pizza delivery driver reported from the John Quincy Adams Dormitory at 1:56 a.m. that a couple of male pedestrians hit him in the chest and stomach. Identification of pedestrians still under investigation.

November 10

Suspicious Person/Activity
Five Individuals – three white males and two white females – were reported to be jumping on vehicles in Lot 49 on Windmill Lane at 1:31 a.m. Reporting person said individuals appeared to be intoxicated but there was no activity when the police appeared on the scene. Police did find evidence of a dented car roof.

November 11

Traffic Stops
Two routine traffic stops, one for a one-way violation at 12:16 a.m. and another for speeding at 2:04 a.m., resulted in arrests for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Person reported that a male was lying on top of a car in Lot 32 E at 4:55 a.m. and had not moved in half an hour. Police found suspect intoxicated and placed him in protective custody.

November 14

Recovered Stolen Motor Vehicle
Motor vehicle from Springfield recovered and owner notified.

Vandalism
A vehicle in Lot 26 was vandalized: rear driver vent window and dashboard smashed, stereo, speakers and compact discs also stolen. There are no suspects.

November 15

Suspicious Person/Activity
Report of person possibly stealing bikes in front of Kennedy Dormitory at 2:55 p.m. When police arrived on scene, there was no suspect but two bikes were recovered at different locations.

Vandalism
Vehicle in the Campus Center Garage was vandalized, damage estimated at $100. Owner claims car was damaged by skateboarders.

Drug Law Offenses
Brown Dormitory resident assistant reported seeing drug paraphenelia in a resident's room. Police investigated the call and has since handed the issue over to Housing.

Fraud
Johnson resident reported that her credit card was being used to make fradulent purchases.

Annoying Behavior
Minuteman editor reported from the Lederle Research Lowrise at 10:21 p.m. that many copies of the publication were being stolen and thrown away.

November 16

Disturbance
Two white males reportedly throwing beer bottles at each other in front of Baker Dormitory at 3:43 a.m. Upon arrival, there were neither suspects nor witnesses.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Person reported an unaffiliated individual following young women and giving them cassette tapes. Incident investigated and cassettes confiscated.

Disturbance
Mackimmie Dormitory resident reported at 10:54 p.m. that intoxicated individuals were trying to gain entry to room.

November 17

Annoying Behavior
Report from the Student Union at 2 p.m. that Minuteman newspapers were being thrown into recycle bins.

Vandalism/Disorderly Conduct/Property Damage
Several large windows smashed on floor 10 of John Quincy Adams Dormitory. Reported at 8:22 p.m., responding officer surveyed floor and resulted in an arrest of disorderly conduct and destruction of property over $250.

Breaking and Entering/Burglary
Caller reported possible break-in to Sylvan Snack Bar at 9:30 a.m., doors found damaged.

November 18

Traffic Stop
Driver pulled over for speeding in Lot 33 at 1:47 a.m., arrested for operating a vehicle with a revoked license, refusal to identify self, speeding, and furnishing a false name and social security number.

Breaking and Entering/Burglary
Call received at 12:47 p.m., person said UCard, credit card, and cell phone was stolen during an alarm evacuation in McNamara.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

The wanderer
A traveling musician passes through Amherst in search of that "Great Gig in the Sky."

Taliban

continued from page 1

stated. "The U.S. government supports a broad-based government representative of all the Afghan people and which includes women in post-Taliban Afghanistan.

"Only Afghans can determine the future government of their country," the report continued. "And Afghan women should have the opportunity to play a role in that future."

"Because of the Taliban, Afghanistan has become a jail for women. We haven't got any human rights," Faranos Nazir, 34-year-old woman in Kabul said. "We haven't the right to go outside, to go to work, to look after our children."

But while the Taliban retains power in some areas of Afghanistan, women will still be repressed, the report asserts.

"Islam is a religion that respects women and humanity," the report stated. "The Taliban respects neither."

On the Net: The State Department: http://www.state.gov senate

continued from page 1

letic programs, and possibly moving to Division I-A football.

"We need a vision," agreed Faculty Senate Secretary Ernest May, opening up the floor for comments and questions.

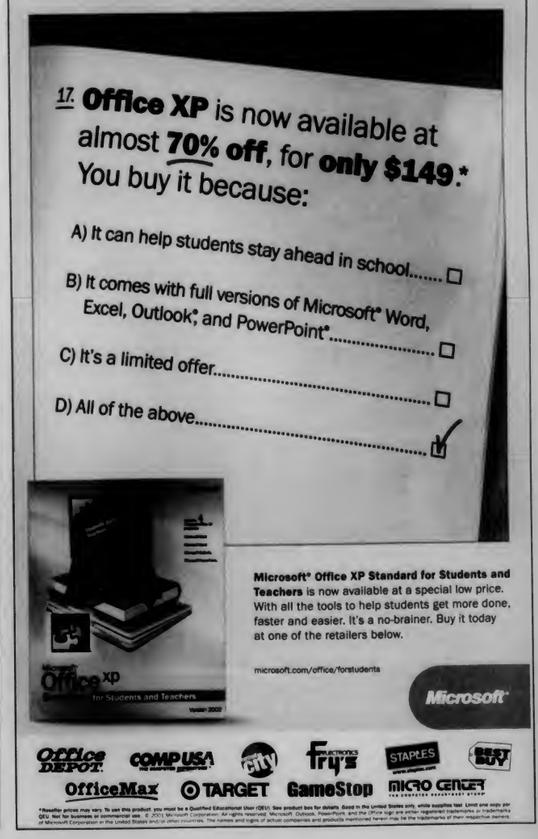
"We seem to be hogtied by Title IX. God forbid we cut a team, it seems to me that Title IX has become an excuse not to cut athletic programs," Senator Brian O'Conner said. "In the past ten years on campus, the athletic department is the only department that has seen growth."

Faculty Senate members argued the idea of whether the Athletic Department and Council were right to seek out goals according to what their athletic peers are accomplishing.

Several members questioned whether Athletics should seek their own standards and goals instead of focusing on competing with peer athletic programs.

"We shouldn't be like other peer groups," Senator Richard Bogartz said.

"I agree; the hell with peers, let's just have a mission," O'Conner said.



During the senate's discussion period, Program and Budget Council Chair Craig Moore took the opportunity to address the senate informally on what he foresaw as the issues concerning their review. Moore, along with colleagues commented on the lack of funding overall for the University's programs, especially academic ones, and his concern that while other departments were being cut or restructured the Athletic Department was continuing to grow. Moore compared the budget to a pie, saying that the larger the slice Athletics took the less was left for everyone else, and that "the pie is shrinking."

Despite concern from Moore and members of the Program and Budget Council that their review could not garner the results the Athletic Council and Faculty Senate desired, the motion was passed to create the review.

"How did the Faculty Senate take our presentation?" Lacey wondered after the meeting.

"Hard to say, we heard from more than a few people during the meeting that seemed to want Athletics to take some cuts."

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Safety on campus:
be thankful we've got it

Some things are just shocking. Most of you probably missed it because it did not happen on this campus, but over the weekend there was one heck a brawl. Normally a brawl at Syracuse University would not be a big deal on the University of Massachusetts campus.

This one does.

On Friday night in Syracuse, a fraternity feud between two rival brotherhoods at the University went way beyond the realm of comprehension. Ongoing bad blood between Zeta Psi and Alpha Chi Rho fraternities led to a horrific street fight, leaving one student with severe head injuries requiring brain surgery.

Fights aren't anything out of the ordinary, really. Many would even argue that they are an ordinary part of life and that there is no reason to sweat them. This is not that kind of fight. Derek Fishbach, 21, lies in serious condition following the surgery he needed to relieve swelling on his brain.

Where did the swelling on the brain come from? Fishbach got hit in the head with a billiard ball inside a sock. Someone felt the need to swing a pool ball like a weapon, Hanes-style. That's not roughhousing or good ol' college fun. That's assault with a deadly weapon.

Alpha Chi Rho's Evan Hanahoe, 21, was arrested and charged with felony assault and misdemeanor criminal possession of a weapon. That weapon was his purple No. 4 billiard ball. In addition to hitting Fishbach, at least one other student was treated for injuries related to Hanahoe's sock-n-ball weapon. That's not an accident. That's an angry criminal-to-be on a warpath.

UMass' fraternities aren't completely innocent places on this campus by any stretch of the imagination. It's time to be thankful for what our fraternities are not, however. Violence is not a commonplace event between our fraternities or anywhere else on campus, for that matter. They're not the prettiest places, but they're safe enough to visit. They do some good things on this campus, and for all that's wrong with them, they shouldn't get just a bad rap.

The rest of the campus is much the same. As a rule, crazy things happen here, but they do not get that ugly. Even during the "riots" in Southwest, no one got hurt. It's a credit to the students on our campus that our police log does not mirror Syracuse University's, which in the last few weeks has had a violent riot and last weekend's fraternity rumble.

Obviously, things aren't perfect here at the University of Massachusetts. Fraternities in particular can be an intimidating place for the little freshmen in the world. Overall, though, our campus life is a safe and happy thing. With Thanksgiving on Thursday, it's just one more thing to be thankful for.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

Is Bush really a great man?

SIMON PONGRATZ

One of the most disturbing effects of "America's Mission" is the newfound admiration for President Bush. Even Geraldo Rivera spoke on his show about his new love for the man. What has the president done to merit this? For the past few weeks he has played Caesar, and he is actively (or passively, whichever) working for a serious curtail of civil liberties. Yet his approval ratings have been the longest sustained of any president. One of the recurring themes of late in the media has been Bush's transformation into a great leader.

What makes a great man? Sometimes, it seems, great men are simply marginal men who happen to be in the right place at the right time.

But that cannot be the only explanation. Consider Lincoln, roundly proclaimed to be our greatest president. He was the object, it seems, of a personality cult that would have made Stalin jealous, complete with a center for pilgrimage in Washington, a sacred temple to the fallen god.

Lincoln certainly was in the right place at the right time. It's interesting that, early in his life, he lamented about the lack of purpose felt by himself and, it seemed, the whole country. There was no challenge, he thought, that would force the country to rise to the occasion and be great, as it had during the Revolution. Perhaps, while sitting in the White House and fearing a Confederate invasion of the Union, Lincoln may have wondered what he had gotten himself into.

Lincoln had tremendous courage, and he rose to the occasion well. Nonetheless, he successfully sought to suspend Habeas Corpus and institute martial law, claiming that the situation warranted such action. Perhaps he was correct. However, war in 1865 was something totally different than our current war on terror, and while a cessation of hostilities then was fairly cut and dry, today we are constantly reminded that the war may be a secret one that goes on for years. Bush and his cronies, if they end up successfully implementing all of their plans, can argue for keeping them enforced indefinitely, as Hitler thought when he imagined a never-ending guerilla war in the Ural and Caucasus mountains that kept the German Empire in a constant state of mobilization for war.

Great men work for the greater good, instead of serving the narrow interests of the group to which they belong. Great men cannot be manufactured – however some do try to manufacture them, and when this occurs you get someone like President Kennedy: all image, no integrity. A great man would not have taken the steps Kennedy did in bringing the US into the Vietnam War, expanding enormously the size of the nuclear arsenal, acting dishonestly in the 1960 elections, and so forth. Kennedy tried to create the very thing he spoke vehemently against: A Pax Americana, enforced upon the world by American weapons of war.

Robert E. Lee was a great man. The Confederate General in the Civil War was not eager to go to war against his brothers in the army, and not very vocal concerning the main causes of the war, slavery and states' rights. He simply saw his duty to fight for his home, Virginia. Before that, during the Mexican War, Lee quickly rose through the ranks of the army, eventually becoming General Winfield Scott's right-hand man. Lee was soft-spoken, of slight manner, and always honest, especially to himself. He always did the right thing, even if it meant hatred and resentment in the army and country that he loved dearly.

The plans that the Bush administration has in store to combat terrorism include, according to The New York Times, "proposals to establish military tribunals to try foreigners accused of terrorism; to track down and question thousands of immigrants who have entered the United States in recent years, mostly from Middle Eastern countries; and to monitor conversations between some people in federal custody and their lawyers." It's comforting that such controversies are common topics of discussion and criticism, but The New York Times has the wrong motive. What to The Times seem to be decisions that "[reflect] a powerful conviction in the Bush administration that it is fighting acts of war, not mere crimes, on American soil" may in reality be simply the natural inclination of the executive to grab power when he is able to.

"The terrorist attacks were the best thing that could have happened to Bush. He already had a failing economy, and now he has the automatic approval that comes with a successful war."

The terrorist attacks were the best thing that could have happened to Bush. He already had a failing economy, and now he has the automatic approval that comes with a successful war. He and the justice department have correctly calculated, at least so far, that very few of their radical initiatives will be opposed. After all, this is a war. Perhaps Bush will even be re-elected now, a prospect that seemed unthinkable before Sept. 11.

In the days following the attacks, the justice department began secretly drafting what would be called the "tribunal document," which allows "the use of military tribunals in terrorist cases." It also "gives the government the power to try, sentence – and even execute – suspected foreign terrorists in secrecy, under special rules that would deny them constitutional rights and allow them no chance to appeal." What's more, President Bush immediately stipulated that only he could decide who is called a "terrorist," and whom these kangaroo courts will try.

The Patriot Act, which President Bush signed into law last month, contains a paragraph that has so far escaped criticism. It describes "a provision that allows for the government collection of a person's DNA for 'qualifying Federal offenses, as determined by the Attorney General.'" Taken individually, the new laws may seem only mildly draconian, but together, they are dangerous precedents.

While it's true that the terrorist attacks were acts of war, if the object of the attacks was, among other things, the destruction of American institutions, then the attacks will succeed in our government's curtailing of liberties. If Sept. 11 is to have lasting effects, the event should force us to re-examine our relationship with the world, and to end the thinly veiled imperialism practiced in the Middle East and elsewhere. Our unique identity as a society and a country, founded on the pillars of the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence, and so many other great things and people too numerous to name, must be defended, or even in victory we will perish.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

Information from pnewswire.com and drudgereport.com was used in this article.

MAREK DUTSCHKE

Don't forget about the people in this war

So we've been at war for a little while. So what? We don't care anymore. We have moved on with our lives. I can say without a doubt that there are people on this campus who forgot that there is a war going on in their name. Do people realize that many of the cluster bombs we drop on Afghanistan, fail to explode on impact? No, who cares if these left over cluster bombs are in essence land mines for some kid to trip over and blow up on. A minority of students might think, "Hey, that's not cool." They believe that human suffering is a bad thing and that the whole UMass community should fight this.

The only thing that mobilizes the students of UMass is if the Yankees won or lost the World Series. It's the only issue that has enough pull to spontaneously gather a large group of demonstrators. More incredible is that the demonstrators are courageous and determined about their professional sports. They are willing to break the law without fear of prosecution by making bonfires out of their lounge furniture. It's not a one-time deal. It's perennial.

On the other hand, our government waging a war that is punishing the impoverished population of Afghanistan, while the Taliban and terrorist leaders continue to live unharmed is not worth burning furniture against, even if there is a possibility of using more ground troops and escalating the war to include Iraq. It wouldn't even matter if you believe, like I do, that violence (war) can never be the solution to a problem. The fact that once the Northern Alliance wins this war (if they win this war) its revenge and persecution will be as bad or worse than what the Taliban had to offer. The group's human rights record is atrocious. All of this does not matter here because the majority of the students are not willing to take a stand on or care about any matter more important than baseball.

There are some people on this campus who will ask, "Why do you criticize America?" Then they will go on to say that in times of crisis we need to stand united and be patriotic. They believe that everything will be fine as long we keep buying Abercrombie and Fitch clothes to get the economy out of the recession. They will remind others, "Let's not forget that those evil-doer Muslims attacked us first."

Do these people know that the United States has the capacity to put a sufficient military force anywhere on the globe in order to forcefully push their interests through two and a half times over? Our government can and sometimes does kick another country's behind in order to sustain our standard of living. A good example is the effort to keep oil prices low. I'm sure these countries we intimidate and manipulate are not too happy with the policies of our country.

I was in Berlin, Germany on Sept. 11. Yeah, I missed the first two and half weeks of school, but that is another story. The German reaction was incredible. There were people crying in the streets. I was shocked and saddened like everyone else because of the loss of life. Yet, I was not emotional about it. I was worried about how it would change world order.

The reactions of emotional outbursts and patriotism didn't set in for me. The German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer said, "Patriotism is the lack of individual characteristics to be proud of."

I would tend to agree that if someone is lacking a distinctive personality, they are more readily willing to accept the mistakes and foolish acts of their country. If we are blinded and willingly ignore the big picture, we are driven by cries of revenge. That is not the reaction of a morally superior society. I can't help but be ashamed when I see polls of seventy percent of the population approving the military actions in Afghanistan and seeing President Bush's approval rating soar. There's nothing like a good war for him to use his serious-and-thinking face. It's a mere deception; we all know President Bush lacks the ability to think.

The Bush administration has manipulated us with notions of patriotism and human rights. An article appeared the other day in The Collegian that proves my case and point. The article contended that this "appropriate" war has inspired the age of enlightenment in Afghanistan.

The article could have been a press release or propaganda of the Bush administration. In trying to portray the government of the United States as the pioneer of democracy and human rights, you reach the pinnacle of hypocrisy. You need only to look at history: the systematical destruction of the native Americans, slavery, Japanese holding camps during WWII, the leftist persecution during McCarthyism, Vietnam, Nicaragua, Panama, and, as far as I'm concerned, the Gulf War. The government of the United States is not about human rights. If you contend otherwise, you would be insulting the many memories of humans that died at the hands of the government of the United States.

I know few people care about foreign policy because it does not play a role in our daily lives. There are people on campus, like the aforementioned columnist, who tell us we are being adequately represented by the Bush administration. We see Dan Rather every night and coverage on CNN and we think things are being taken care of just fine. Well, I don't think that it is that easy. Everything our government does is not kosher. If you don't care about what is going on, maybe you should. A war is being fought and people are dieing on our behalf, so you might want to take a step back and think critically about certain things.

Marek Dutschke is a UMass student.

Things I'm thankful for

MELODY ZAGAMI

Kids. Turkey Day is upon us once again.

It seems like only one year ago mom was basting the Butterball and Grandma was putting in her best dentures to ready for the feast, I'd like to use my little space this week to bring you a column that many have written before me, the obligatory "Things I'm thankful for" column.

Thank god for the holidays because I'm fresh out of ideas. Starting now, each one of my writings will revolve around some given holiday. Just you wait for the Winter Solstice column.

One word: fun.

In all seriousness, though, there are so many things I'm thankful for. I don't even know where to begin my little journey into gratitude.

I was once an orphan. Actually, just this past summer I was an orphan, abandoned, eating gruel, and speaking with a fake English accent. All right, it wasn't that bad, but due to some unfortunate circumstances which I brought on myself last spring, I was going to be homeless this semester.

I get along with pretty much anyone, so I thought to myself, "Self, no biggie, how hard could it be to find a place to live in Amherst?" Well, around rolled July, and I still didn't have a place to live. All of a sudden, I started to have nightmares of me living on a bench outside the Dubois, with my own crappy columns as my only source of warmth.

At first people would feel bad because I lived on a bench, but eventually other students, faculty and physical plant employees would wave to me, maybe come to me for tidbits of wisdom, and bring me a sandwich every once in awhile. We all know I am tidbit-less, so the romantic bench dweller image transformed to me being kicked off the bench the first week of school.

With that plan quashed, I realized I really did have to find some poor group of souls that would want to be stuck with me for an entire year. I went to Spain for the month of July, where I literally spent four weeks making puppy dog eyes to people while I asked them if they had a spot for me in their Puffton or Brandywine villa. No one did, which lead me to excessive abuse of tequila and helado. So, there I was drunk and sad, for I had nowhere to call home. Then I found out that one of my friends on the trip had an extra spot in her house. It is now four months later, and I live in the best house on campus with the best people I've ever met. They have made me feel more welcome than I ever could have imagined.

The moral of the story (and pay attention because I rarely tell stories with morals) is this: You must be grateful for the people in your life. They would go great lengths for you, and now is the perfect time to show gratitude. I don't mean to sound like a cheap fortune cookie or get emotional on you, but it's true.

Come to think of it, I could have been just another psycho. My adopters didn't have a clue what kind of person I was, or whether or not I had proper hygiene. Granted, they needed someone to pay part of the rent, but I assure you they had many roommate options. Our house is awesome, and anyone would be honored to live in it. Instead, though, out of the goodness of their hearts they took me in, fed me, and gave me a bowl of milk and a new box. They could never know in a bajillion years how grateful I am for their kindness.

With our current world situation you have probably been reevaluating you have probably been reevaluating the importance of people in your life. When you go home this week and you're with your family, your friends from high school, your pets, and your gay uncle, think about how much they mean to you. I shouldn't have to do this, but I'll save you some trouble and devise a list of the things that we have to be grateful for this holiday season.

Harry Potter: A little English nerdling with a pet owl rakes in $93 million. Now kids don't have to read the book and can spend that time buying H.P. merchandise, aiding the failing economy.

The failing economy: Now, when I graduate I definitely won't get a job. This cuts my work down considerably. I don't even have to waste time looking if nobody's hiring.

American flag merchandise: No one will ever have to buy anything to prepare for the Fourth again. In July, this leaves us more time to drink and barbecue.

Charlie's: There are so many reasons I don't even know where to begin.

The silly people of the happy Pioneer Valley: As long as they exist I will always have something to fill my space with.

Gas prices: Gas is extremely cheap right now, it's like $1.15 a gallon. You can now get a gallon by rummaging around in the couch cushions.

Finals: Weeks of knowledge come down to an 8 o'clock Saturday exam, but you will never have to go to that class again.

Brad Pitt: He's in not only one, but two movies this coming holiday season. I get to spend almost twenty dollars on Brad this year.

Heightened airport security: If you hear anyone complaining about their job at Thanksgiving dinner, just tell them it could be worse: they could work for the F.A.A.

J. Lo's clothing line: Finally, it's at a mall near you. Your great Aunt Edith is going to look pretty hot in a pair of J. Lo rise jeans with metal rivets. Throw in a pair of hoops too, for authenticity.

There are countless other things to be grateful for this holiday season and every day of the year. Have a happy, happy Turkey Day. Eat some turkey, eat some pie, and pass out in front of the television. Do your part in a great American tradition.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY STEPHANIE SIEGMUND

Garbage's new release leaves something wanting. Seems Shirley's getting soft in her old age. Let's just get back to the knee-high boots, shall we?

Garbage... It's beautiful!

By Clare Chadburn
Collegian Correspondent

GARBAGE
Beautiful Garbage
Interscope

"There's no going back on this one," announces Shirley Manson on the last track of Garbage's new album Beautiful Garbage. For the band who confidently led the post-grunge generation in knee-high boots and dyed pink hair, this confession is too honest to ignore.

Beginning their career in 1995 with the self-titled Garbage and following that up in 1998 with Version 2.0 in 2001, Manson is still rocking out for Scotland and for women. But this time the hair is a little shorter and I'm not entirely sure Manson quite knows where she's going with this one.

Admittedly, with Garbage it's always easy to convert lyrics into critical sound bites, and this album has some beauties. "This is where our story ends," she concludes in "Cup of Coffee." It's true, Garbage is still smoking cigarettes, staring blankly at walls and breaking silence, but do we still want to know about it?

I suppose Garbage never claimed to be anything profound. If Manson was angry with a stupid girl we all knew about it. Garbage was actually valued for being direct as long as they delivered it with passion. In an interview with NME after Version 2.0, she told the magazine she wanted to 'bleed' in her songs. The pleasure was always in the art of Garbage rather than the artifice. Unfortunately, I think Beautiful Garbage struggles to perform in either of these categories.

The album does begin promisingly. It blasts out with "Shut Your Mouth" before languishing into the depths of "Androgyny" in true Garbage style. Then a beast starts to emerge and even suggests a theme. But rather than developing into anything, it experiences a kind of musical identity crisis and becomes a mass of too many ideas too quickly.

These ideas come in a series of fits and starts that just fizzle and bust. They pop up as sleigh bells in "Can't Cry These Tears" which desperately wants to be a Christmas anthem. They manifest themselves as 80's munchkins in "Cherry Lips (Go Baby Go)." And they sound like they're taking a ghostly fairground ride in "Cup of Coffee." It's all quite amusing and potentially experimental until Manson starts 'Livin' La Vida Loca' in "Untouchable," the only Latin disco tune on the album.

The underside does occasionally rear its head and we do get reminded that it's still the same old Garbage, though. "Till the Day that I Die" and "Silence is broken" come down an octave or two and comforts us with some reliably repetitive chords. The ballad "Drive you home" then slows everything to a halt and reminds us that melancholy is still a saleable commodity. "I never said I was perfect, but I can drive you home" Manson purrs as she tries to convince us an imperfect world is still a good place to be.

Sadly, I think her perception of the world may have gone a little crazy and I'm not sure if it's safe to take her advice any more. This third album may prove to be one too many for the aging Garbage. I think that I'd prefer to remember Manson when she wore her black boots and was slightly more musically stable.

Jonathan Richman's HM APPY MUSIC

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

JONATHAN RICHMAN
Her Majesty Not of High Heels and Eye Shadow
Vapor Records

Many people know who Jonathan Richman is, although they may be unable to put their finger on it. He got his biggest exposure in the movie There's Something About Mary, where he, on guitar, and Tommy Larkins, on snare drum, performed the brief musical interludes between scenes. There was something about Richman that I was particularly fond of, so when his latest CD, Her Majesty Not of High Heels and Eye Shadow came out, I jumped at the chance to review it.

What is it that's so likeable about Jonathan Richman's songs? They are short, they're simple, and they're easy to remember. Part of the reason why Richman's songs are so catchy is because he often uses only variations of the same thematic melody for all the tunes on each CD. Musical artists nowadays are scrambling to find ways to make all of their songs sound different from each other, but Richman reminds us that there is nothing wrong with songs that are similarly built.

Look at music in general, and you'll see that it is most easily classified according to the decade that was popular for a certain sound; the 1930s had doo-wop, the 70s had disco, and the 80s had a particular rock n' roll flavor. So while Richman's songs may bear striking resemblances to each other, it is not a flaw, but rather proof of the singer's understanding of working with popular sounds.

Even so, Richman's music is vastly different from the existing pop scene of late. Her Majesty Not of High Heels and Eye Shadow frequently employs Latin-flavored rhythms. The final four songs, inspired by Latin beats, bear Spanish titles like "Yo Tengo Una Novia" and "Vampiresa Mujer." They are quirky little tunes, and since Richman oftentimes displays very dry humor in his songs, it makes one wish they spoke Spanish, to understand the clever wit that is surely there.

Yet Richman's comic side does shine through in these songs, despite the language barrier, as the songs are the last thing you'd expect to hear when compared to the majority of the tracks on the CD being sung in English. Also, the titles, when translated, are so straightforward that they are funny. Take "Yo Tengo Una Novia," which means "I Have A Girlfriend." Let's be honest here, it's not a very creative title. But the bland straightforwardness somehow makes it mildly amusing, and ironically, all the more memorable.

Richman's voice gives all of his songs extra flavor. Sometimes he sticks to a breathy "speak-song" style which works just as well as when he sings. At other times he fully uses his easy-going, soothing vocals to croon a song. Yet the Bostonian's delivery of certain words and lyrics just make them so appealing. He always sounds laid back and relaxed, and you can't help but think that he must be one cool dude. Richman is not your average pop musical artist, instead he comes through the speakers as a down-to-earth guy who could be living next door – and that's very refreshing.

Besides the rhythms and Richman's unique voice, the most delightful element to the CD is a quality that can only be referred to as "happy music." The title track, as well as "Springtime In New York" and "Me and Her Got A Good Thing, Baby" have the inexplicable ability to make you smile and feel better. The combination of ingredients of the bouncy melodies mixed with Richman's characteristic delivery of amusing lyrics is a recipe that has a tasty result.

COURTESY ROB MCEWAN

Snow Bound

Hmmm... snowboards, slopes, slackers... and a blond that rides one of those bucking rodeo horse contraptions that they always seem to have in non-New England bars. Sounds Oscarific to us! Out Cold opens this week.

Gov't Mule kicks some...

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

GOV'T MULE
The Deep End Volume 1.
ATO Records

To call this album near perfect, to deem it a heartbreaking work of genius, to say that it surpasses every peak it set out to reach would be, well, entirely appropriate.

When Allen Woody passed away unexpectedly in August of 2000, Gov't Mule lost a thundering third of its hard rock/blues driven sound; his bass fueled the engine that drove the Mule into the heart of the jam band community. Rather than retreat into silence, singer/guitarist Warren Haynes and drummer Matt Abts instead stepped forward with rekindled purpose, carrying at their side 25 of the most respected and important musicians working today. The result, The Deep End Volume 1., is a masterwork, teeming with gritty blues, straightahead rock and jazzed-up funk, a mixture few albums can support alone.

"Fool's Moon" blows the disc wide open, with the bass of Jack Bruce making confidently at the helm. Bruce maneuvers around some decidedly Cream-like twists – particularly the bit coming out of the verse (his vocals here are compelling). The tune is kicked by a heavy end; it's tough, and is stung in all the right places by Hayne's piercing guitar.

"Life on the Outside" and "Same Price" play like companion pieces, though "Life" comes out miles ahead of its partner. While "Life" is an explosive showcase for Larry Graham (an exceptional vocal turn), organist Eddie Harsch and guitarist Audley Freed, "Price" succumbs to a mere paint-by-the-numbers mode, hiding away the otherwise considerable talent of Who bassist John Entwhistle. The same could be said for "Down and Out in New York City," a James Brown cover that, despite the presence of Flea, comes off too clean. A few spins on stage should allow for the appropriate amount of wear and tear to settle in here.

There is little of that excess fat hanging around, though. "Banks of the Deep End" boasts an arresting Neil Young intro and verses greased by the pumping interplay of Haynes and Phish bassist Mike Gordon, whose contributions to this song are evident and entirely welcome. It's a slow epic in the works with just enough kick to keep you sweating, and, as it directly references the fallen bass man for which the album was recorded, checks in emotionally as well. Play close attention to the organ/wurlitzer work of Danny Louis; the piece that his organ break gives birth to is especially wonderful.

"Soulshine" and "Worried Down with the Blues" are textbook Haynes-era Allman Brother songs. "Soulshine" has been batted around stage for a number of years, finally getting the studio treatment here with an impossibly passionate vocal turn by Little Milton. The organ intro tagged on by Mule regular Chuck Leavell suitably carries the tune. As good a southern blues, pain-driven ballad as you'll find. "Worried Down," then, is another in the best of the ABB tradition. The few, heavy measures leading to the verse is all Mule; the Allmans show up soon thereafter. With both Haynes and Gregg Allman trading vocals, it persists, achingly beautiful.

As comfortable as they are in it, Gov't Mule is just as potent when they jump out of the blues-rock scheme and into new waters. Deep Purple bassist Roger Glover tackles his own "Maybe I'm a Leo," taking it for quite a ride. In every sense of the cliché, Haynes roars on this one, augmenting his voice with some devastating guitar. "Soo-Mule" is the refreshing, exciting result of past relations with guitarist John Scofield. Chris Wood (Medeski, Martin and Wood) takes over smoothly here, while Bernie Worrel cashes in with some great, funked out organ riffs. The energy here, as they say, is created on the spot.

While other tunes are spot on (Stefan Lessard does wonders with "Beautifully Broken," one of the album's more delicate tracks, while Haynes did a perfect casting job on the Creedence cover "Effigy" by enlisting Mike Watt and Jerry Cantrell) it is "Sin's a Good Man's Brother," the last track recorded by Woody with his band, that haunts. He is everywhere on this Grand Funk Railroad track, hammering away a brutal foundation that Haynes and Abts build powerfully on. It's everything the Mule, as it existed before, was: raw, sometimes unpolished, but always perfect to those who held them dear.

Near the end of "Banks," just as the mournful track honoring Woody begins to round its final bend, Haynes tells us "You couldn't hire twenty-five men to do what the man could do / Just the sound of his walking could split the whole damn town in two." Ignoring his own advice, he did go out and hire the whole gang. In the end, his own word is true: as stunning as this disc is at times, Woody is forever why we listened in the first place.

Boo yeah!

Memphis' Gangsta Boo's 2001 album Both Worlds "s9 won't be in the running for most year-end 'best-of' lists. But catch her sometimes-partners-in-crime Three 6 Mafia in their first feature film Choices, starring Shauna Billings.

Columbia goes to Hollywood Parade

By Neda Simeonova
The Columbia Chronicle (Columbia College)

(U-WIRE) CHICAGO – In a unique collegiate promotional effort, Columbia College will spend more than $25,000 to sponsor a float in the upcoming celebrity-studded Hollywood Christmas Parade.

Hosted by Grand Marshal Peter Fonda, best known for his role as a motorcycle-driving rebel in "Easy Rider," the Hollywood Christmas Parade is the largest celebrity parade in the nation.

"What Columbia is trying to do is get national exposure and increase the national visibility of the school," said Aaron Vanek, Columbia's West Coast alumni coordinator.

The 70th annual parade will take place Nov. 25 from 6 to 8 p.m. PST. It will be broadcast live on KCOP, channel 13, in Los Angeles and carried by the UPN network to more than 155 cities nationally and internationally. The parade will be aired in Chicago on WCIU, channel 26, on Dec. 2 at 1 p.m.

According to Vanek, Columbia is taking part in the parade because the administration wants to make the Hollywood community aware of the school's presence in Los Angeles and focus on the more than 1,000 alumni in the area.

The parade cost includes an entrance fee of $8,500 and the $12,000 cost of the float, said Iersl Levin, director of Columbia's Alumni Program. Another $4,500 will be spent on limousine service, refreshments and a parting gift for All-4-One, the band that will play on the float, but the group is not being compensated for its appearance.

"This is a noncommercial event and all celebrities are donating their time," Vanek said.

All-4-One began its career as an overnight sensation in 1994 with the release of its first single, "So Much in Love," which went gold and hit the top five in the pop charts. The float will appear in the parade for 45 minutes as the procession winds around Sunset and Hollywood boulevards.

"It is a really good marketing investment for Columbia," Levin said. "It is a marketing tool and a publicity tool to get Columbia's message out."

Levin said the purpose of the parade is not to advertise the college's program in Los Angeles alone but to advertise the entire school and benefit the college on a national level.

Paul Chiaravalle, Columbia's associate vice president and chief of staff, said there are several advantages to participating in the parade.

"This is a really good market and it is creating an outreach for our alumni [in the area]," he said.

Chiaravalle said the publicity will add credibility to the college and "the fact that we're able to compete out there."

According to Chiaravalle, the cost of the event is low, considering the exposure the parade will bring to the college.

"We did a good job utilizing our contacts to keep the cost low," he said.

Bob Enrietto, coordinator for Columbia's Semester in L.A. Program, agreed the parade will bring exposure to the college on a national level.

"It is the event that all of America will see," he said. "It is at least one minute of exposure on national TV; it is really inexpensive publicity."

In addition to the parade, the college will throw a reception on the second floor in the Oscar Room of the Roosevelt Hotel on Hollywood Boulevard, overlooking the start of the parade.

It is "very much the best seat in the house," Vanek said.

About 200 invitations to the reception were sent out to alumni and their families, Vanek said. He said he expects at least 100 guests to attend the event.

According to Levin, there are more than 2,000 alumni in California.

"We're using this event to reach out to all of them," she said. "We have a lot of successful alumni. We are now starting to reach out and bring them back to the college community. This will pay back not only in terms of donations, but also in terms of internships."

Present at the event will be Columbia Executive Vice President Bert Gall and Woody White, vice president of institutional advancement. Levin and West Coast representatives.

Chiaravalle said Columbia plans to participate regularly in the parade in the future.

"We plan to do this again, but we need to make sure that we get the benefit that we expect. I can assure you that we will," Chiaravalle said.

The first Hollywood Christmas Parade was in 1928. The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce came up with the idea in an effort to attract shoppers and their families during the holiday season. It consisted of only one actress, Jeanette Loff, and Santa Claus. This year's Christmas parade will feature nearly 100 celebrities.

University Productions and Concerts Presents

THE SLIP

Date; November 20, 2001
Time; 8:30 pm
Price; 3 dollars
Where; Student Union Ballroom
Cash Bar

DeShon Hardy is in his comfort zone when the ball is in his hands.

The number one guy

One catch takes wideout from obscurity to big time

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It's fourth down, the living room of the clutch. The scoreboard reads romp, 28-17 Marshall. Twenty-three yards from the endzone and 18 seconds from embarrassment, UMass needs a miracle. Matt Guice answers the call, drops back and hurls a 22-yard rookie mistake – high, over the middle and into coverage. DeShon Hardy goes after the spiraling ball as just another flanker. He comes down with the mother of number one receiver – not to mention the ball.

Hardy has been making believers out of people his entire career.

"I've always felt like I had something to prove," he exclaims.

His sophomore year of high school at Neptune (N.J.) Senior, Hardy had to prove to coach John Amabile that he could be the man at quarterback for a defending state championship team.

When he came to UMass in the fall of 1998 Hardy had to show the NCAA that he could boost his grades enough to be eligible the following year.

And even after persevering through his academic requirements, he was left with the challenge of breaking onto a team that won a Division I-AA championship the year prior.

The proof is in Hardy's resume. A Class 4 state title in his third year at the helm of his Neptune squad says a lot. So does his skyrocketing grade point average in his first year in Amherst, and his team-leading 261 punt return yards in his first season of eligibility.

Entering spring camp, Hardy felt he had something else to prove, although this time it was his own inner doubts that begged to be quelled.

"I knew I was capable of being the number one receiver," he says. "I just had to prove it to myself that I could be the go-to-guy."

Hardy's 41 catches in 10 games this year tell a story that began in Huntington.

"When I made that catch it really boosted my confidence," he says. "That was the first time I really felt like the number one guy."

Hardy had his doubters then, too.

When he met the Marshall Stadium turf in full extension, the Herd defenders that wrecking-balled him just milliseconds earlier, had their own doubts about the feat he just performed.

"The Marshall guys were like 'you didn't catch that,'" he recalls.

"I said 'yeah I caught it, first down!'"

Hardy won a duel with common knowledge as he went up to snatch that ball from opposing clutches. The book on him reads like a manual on lethargy and lack of dedication.

"His work ethic is really where he has made a major improvement," says UMass head coach Mark Whipple. "He is more disciplined, motivated and he is holding himself more accountable for his actions."

Starting with "the catch," Hardy has personally rewritten the pages of perception.

"That catch was a starting point for him," Whipple muses. "He went up and got the ball and did things we've seen him do in practice."

Now he's checked out a new book. A volume that includes an all out effort in practice and sacrificing flesh to catch, as he has with any inaccurate passes thrown his way.

The old Hards maybe would have pulled up for a ball not headed for the numbers. But the new Hardy thinks his out instead of let up, as there is no sacrifice not worth making for the good of the catch.

While the Marshall game (four catches, 90 yards, 1 TD and a new attitude) was the hinge on the doorway to success, Hardy began moving his personal chains at the halfway point of last season.

On Nov. 7, 2000, the Minutemen stood at 2-2 with a road game against upstart Northeastern on the horizon. After the Huskies Andy Alsup returned the opening kickoff to paydirt, the negativity snowballed soon after, as superstar wideout Adrian Zullo collapsed to the Parsons Field turf with a season ending injury.

As the door slammed shut on one star's season, the window of opportunity opened wide for a budding flanker just waiting for a chance.

Hardy answered the call, dusting the Huskies for six receptions and 49 yards in a 21-16 UMass victory. He ended the year as the team's leading receiver with 27 catches, a far cry from the trio of balls he grabbed in his first year.

"All the injuries we had were bad," Hardy remembers. "But it gave me a chance to step in and show people what I could do."

Not content with his explosive performance, Hardy set his sights even higher – somewhere near the best receiver in the Atlantic 10.

His rigorous summer workouts and his spring session relationship with projected starting quarterback, redshirt freshman Matt Guice, were a testament to his innovative quest.

"He worked extremely hard in the summer," Whipple remembers.

"Matt and I have been working together for awhile," Hardy says. "We stayed up here over the summer and we worked on our routes and our timing."

Thanks to their maturing relationship as QB and receiver, the Guice-Hardy hook up has been one of the few bright spots as the Minutemen have struggled to a 3-7 record with only one game remaining.

At times this year he has been the only option for a young QB still growing into his role – well, that suits Hardy just fine.

"I knew I had to step up this year and make some plays," Hardy says. "I always tell Matt to look for me because I can keep the chains moving."

If not for Hardy, the chains would have fallen dormant for a struggling UMass offense. He has accounted for over a third of the Minutemen's wide receiver production (41 of 122), not to mention his 95 yards on punt returns – but his breakout season began with a poorly thrown pass.

"That play that he made at Marshall, going up for the ball between two defenders like that, it was just unbelievable," Guice remembers. "From that point on he's just been making plays."

Hardy has been Whipple's own personal pocketknife this year. Whenever he is looking for a big gain on a special play, he calls on number 9.

"Coach gave me number 9 because," Hardy says, "I do a lot of different things, like Peter Warrick."

Warrick, a do it all flanker of Seminole fame has nothing on Hardy in terms of versatility. The Bengals star receiver was lethal returning punts and catching TD's at FSU, but the similarities end there – just ask Rhode Island.

The 15th ranked Rams marched into McGuirk with playoff aspirations on Nov. 17, but Whipple effectively crushed those dreams with a Lucifer inspired play call.

On first and goal, with the Minutemen up 7-0, Whipple split backup quarterback Kelly Seibert wide right and dropped (former high school QB) No. 9 behind center. Hardy took the snap, faked the pitch, and cut hard to paydirt.

A quarterback he is not, but a playmaker he most certainly is. Hardy returns, runs and catches, but his effect can't be measured by stats. It is much more visible in the game plan.

"Coach always told me I'm better with the ball in my hands," Hardy says. "I can make plays when I've got the rock, so he tries to get me the ball as much as possible."

With the mantra of go-to-guy clearly placed on his shoulders he has effectively shed his middle tier status and his comparisons to other players. Hardy is a special case. He is a gamebreaker with multi pronged talents and a hunger to be number one. He isn't like Peter Warrick, he isn't like anybody.

"I'm the real DeShon Hardy."

soccer

continued from page 10

Most Outstanding Player. Pouncey and Morales were both plagued by injury in the closing games of the regular season, but Pouncey was able to bounce back in time to play Dayton and Richmond in the postseason. The three captains – Deren, Pouncey and goalie Bryan O'Quinn – were all named to the All-Tournament team.

O'Quinn, the senior net minder, has had a stellar season with the Minutemen to close out his career. O'Quinn tied the school record held by Sam Ginzburg (1985-88) for career shutouts at 15 games, while single-handedly posting 10 saves in the tourney game against Richmond. O'Quinn was able to keep the opponent from scoring in five games this season, which was a season high for the Agawam native.

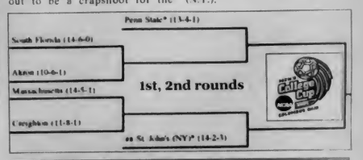
"It's a great honor," head coach Sam Koch said. "I'm very pleased."

Senior John Lytton was no stranger to the field this season, helping rocket the Minutemen to the NCAA tournament by scoring the winning goal in the shootout against the Spiders. Lytton moved up to midfield this season after earlier seasons as a back. The senior was able to pull strong for the team several times this season and proved his spot as an offensive player.

"He's been a solid contributor this year," Koch said.

The NCAA tournament could turn out to be a crapshoot for the Minutemen, as it comes down to the wire on who is healthy to play and who will be sitting on the sidelines. The team was stunned with injuries in the closing days of the regular season and that continued into the A-10 tournament, but everyone is looking to ante up for the momentous NCAA challenge.

"The bottom line is we need to take care of ourselves," Koch said.



Pouncey, noted by Koch to be "the biggest physical presence on the field" has been out with a broken toe but is expected to play in the upcoming game. Meanwhile, sophomore midfielder Dan Colwell has been on the bench with a stress fracture in his foot.

"A lot will depend on injuries," Koch said. "If we're 100 percent we can play with anybody."

In the weeks off the Minutemen have been working on supporting the ball from behind, and moving quicker up the field. Coach Koch said that the team could surprise anyone, and joked that as long as they weren't looking to face the Brazilian National team, then they were ready.

"We're excited, we're definitely ready to play," Koch said.

The Minutemen will open up their first NCAA match on Friday in Jamaica, N.Y. The winner of that game will advance to the second round Sunday and take on St. John's (N.Y.).

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA

Pelham Auto Service
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
253-9302
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY • 256-0011
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-3 a.m.
Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out Expires 5/31/02
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHALLOW HAL (PG13) 1110 200 486 745 1020*
LIFE AS A HOUSE (R) 1125 440 740 1030*
HEIST (R) 1140 220 800 740 1015*
MONSTERS INC (G) 1110 1145 145 230 400 630 930 715 800 945*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1150 240 500 720 950
THE ONE (R) 1200 215 455 710 930
K-PAX (PG13) 1130 210 500 750 1035
13 GHOSTS (R) 800 1020
FROM HELL (R) 1135 445 730 1010
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1105 205 505
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1255 740
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 400 1010
HARRY POTTER 1100 1130 215 315 545 700 915 1030*
coming 11/21 BLACK KNIGHT SPY GAME OUT COLD
cinemark.com

McMurphy's
positive id
no cover
tuesday's:
10-1

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublet in Sunderland. Furnished. Negotiable. Call 253-5066 start immediately.

Two Bedroom Apartment; porch, backyard, new floors, and appliances, January availability 413-374-5961

Florence 3 bedrooms $747 includes heat avail Dec. 1. No pets or smokers. ldsaito@earthlink.net

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

'89 Ford Taurus. Many new parts $600 413-330-3814

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment - Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more information. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

EMPLOYMENT

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

Pharmaceutical Company seeking chemistry graduates (BS, MS, Post Doc) also plant technicians – non degree send resume & cover letter to chemist123@hotmail.com or call 978-973-2015

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

www.Fluid Visions.com

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.ed

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 374-5832

SERVICES

Check out www.askdoclove.com to get relationship tips

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance.

This Could Have Been Your Ad!!!

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Umass #1 Spring Break Company save $80 and free Hippodrome passes, book before Nov. 21 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

What are you waiting for??

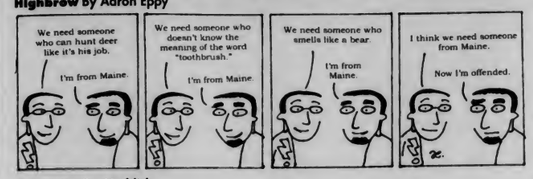
Advertise today!!

Call 545-3500

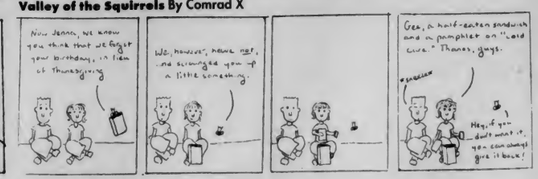
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Monty By Jim Meddick

Monty By Jim Meddick

Quote of the Day

"This place smells more like wet dog than it does feet."

–Overheard at the hockey game

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 23	HIGH: 42 LOW: 23	HIGH: 47 LOW: 27

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Today you'll come closer than ever before to understanding the meaning of a very personal riddle. Love is truly in the air today!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – See that you don't let an emotional situation get out of hand at home. Lay down the law and insist on discipline when things get hectic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone is likely to give you an opportunity you've been waiting for – and today, the likelihood that you will succeed is sure to increase.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – What you do today is likely to have tremendous lasting consequences and effect on more than just your "inner circle." Use great care!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You mustn't let the expectations of others dictate what you will or will not do today. Follow your instincts and be true to yourself.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – As the clock ticks away, you're going to have to judge your progress with great care today. Start too fast or too slow, and you're out of sync.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone may be trying to unfairly get "in line" ahead of you. Keep your eyes open and your wits about you all day long.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Something in your environment may be affecting your health and well-being. It may be time for a house cleaning. It's a bad day for allergies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The chance that you will fall in love all over again is quite high today – as a result of feeling even closer to that "special someone."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be short-changing yourself in some way. Be sure that you get exactly what you really deserve – and accept nothing less.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You'll find that your physical and emotional limits are extended further than usual today. You'll be able to do much more than expected.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You'll have to work harder today to reach even the most routine goals – but it's no one's fault but your own. Don't try to blame others!

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-3626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Ragout

Potato Pancakes

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan)

Pasta Bar: Meat Lasagna

Grill Station: Texas Grilled Cheese & Bacon Sandwich

International: Vegetable Stir Fry (W only)

DINNER

Chicken Pot Pie

Baked Cod

California Quiche (vegetarian)

Vegetable Stir Fry with Tofu (vegan)

Pasta Bar: Meat Lasagna

Grill Station: Texas Grilled Cheese & Bacon Sandwich

International: Julienne Pork Meat with Vegetable Stir Fry (W only)

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!
*1/2 price munchies
9pm-close
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition

ACROSS

1 Yellow jackets
6 On the horizon
10 Blueprint
14 Former teen
15 Peril at sea
16 Melodrama VIP
17 Kayak's kin
18 Cupid
19 Higher than 20 Half-shell item
22 Ray of lunar light
24 Chop off
26 Thrashes
27 Griddle or cager
31 By means of 32 Tier
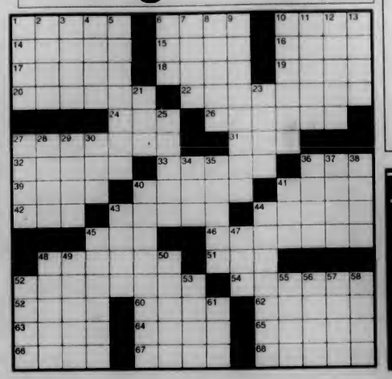
33 Wooden rod
36 Experiment room
39 Funny Bombeck
40 Hurried
41 Big Island port
42 Swindle
43 "48 Hours" lead
44 Writer Sontag
45 Evergreen
46 Poncho
48 Stockpiles
51 Worthless corn
52 Hammering
54 Kampala's nation
59 Zwieback toast
60 Scruggs or Hines
62 Sparkle
63 — meridiem
64 Omit
65 Rousseau novel
66 Consumer gds
67 Mo. neighbor
68 San wearers

DOWN



1 Texas town
2 "Let's call it —"
3 Beaks
4 Author's need
5 Pittsburgh NFLer
6 Census info
7 Raise corn
8 Cool in manner
9 Decided
10 Deep-rooted fear
11 Fret
12 Regions
13 Average
21 Compost
23 Fasten boards
25 Ride a bike
27 Knighted Guinness
28 Luau staple
29 Choir song

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

T	R	O	T		F	A	B	L	E		S	I	F	T
H	I	G	H		A	L	O	U	D		T	O	R	E
Y	O	R	E		C	L	O	G	S		R	T	E	S
	T	E	R	R	I	E	R		L	E	A	D	S
		M	O	A	N		A	R	I	A
	S	H	A	W	L		T	H	I	C	K	S	E	T
V	I	A	L	S		C	H	E	C	K		K	E	G
E	N	D	S		C	R	O	A	K		S	A	R	I
I	A	N		G	O	U	R	D		M	O	T	I	F
N	I	T	R	O	G	E	N		M	E	L	E	E
		H	O	S	T		W	I	G	S
D	I	V	E	D		A	E	R	A	T	O	R
I	B	I	S		M	O	L	A	R		I	D	E	A
M	E	N	U		B	R	A	V	O		C	O	A	L
E	X	E	S		A	B	N	E	R		E	R	R	S

12-4-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

30 Pasture
34 Fall mo.
35 Calendar units
36 Not speak clearly
37 Jai —
38 Rhine port
40 Most disorderly
41 Warm greeting
43 Oddball
44 Tighter
45 Union soldier
47 Chit
48 Keep after
49 Deposes
50 Serpent
52 Wheels for baby
53 Toothy smile
55 Gluck of opera
56 Hen's refusal
57 "Tuna-Fishing" painter
58 Iowa city
61 RN assistant

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician: Jeff Swarts
Copy Editor: Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Jess May, Cara Horowitz

Minutemen will Jay-walk

National runner-up ahead for UMass in NCAA tourney

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

For the first time in the history of the Massachusetts men's soccer program the NCAA tournament awaits the Minutemen. And after fighting through the Atlantic 10 Championship and coming home with the title, UMass is ready to throw down with the best 48 teams in the nation.

The NCAA announced the brackets for its tournament late yesterday afternoon, and it has been decided that UMass will play Creighton in the opening round Friday. The Jesuit school hails straight out of Nebraska and posted a record of 11-6-1 this fall. Creighton is part of the Missouri Valley Conference and heads into the tourney on an at-large bid after losing in a four-overtime duel to Southern Methodist University in the conference finals. This will be the ninth consecutive season that the Jays have made it to the post-season, just last year losing to Connecticut in the Final Four.

The Minutemen stormed through October tying the school record with nine straight wins. UMass dominated top teams in the A-10 Conference and only fell at the end to Xavier and Dayton. All was not lost though, as the Minutemen swept through the conference tourney by returning Dayton the favor and knocking them down 4-2. In the second round, UMass got past conference rival Richmond in a thrilling 4-3 shootout victory, earning an automatic bid to the NCAA Championship.

UMass forward Jeff Deren was named A-10 Offensive Player of the Year after rocking the scoreboard this season. Deren posted the most goals by any player in the A-10 this season, putting 14 in the net. The senior captain earned his A-10 kingship while sweeper J.R. Pouncey and forward Yuri Morales were listed on the conference team.

Pouncey, the senior captain, was also named the A-10 Tournament

Turn to SOCCER page 7

Jeff Deren will likely be a marked man this weekend against Creighton.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Mullins no Hen house for St. Peter's

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Before the year began, the Massachusetts women's basketball team's Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said that she thought her team could crack the top 10 in the country in rebounding.

Today, however, the Minutewomen will be attempting a different type of rebound, when they try to bounce back from last Friday's 68-42 drubbing at the hands of Holy Cross in their season opener.

In the game against the Crusaders, the Maroon and White (0-1, 0-0 Atlantic 10) were outplayed in all facets of the game, and it hopes to avoid a similar performance when St. Peter's comes to the William D. Mullins for a 7 p.m. tip off.

All signs point to another very difficult game for UMass, which will begin the 2001-02 campaign playing a high level of competition in the season's first few contests.

"I think this year's team will be better than last year's," said O'Brien about a Peahen squad that went 17-11 a year ago. "The thing they don't do as well as they would like is shoot the ball, but they are a penetrating team, play hard and they get to the free throw line. This might be a team we will zone up a bit."

St. Peter's did lose three starters from last season's team, including leading-scorer Courtney Wicks (14.6 points per game), second-leading scorer Beth Ann Dickinson (12.6 ppg) and leading post player Leah Cromer (.519 field goal percentage), but that does not mean that it is short of firepower.

Leading three-point shooter Sue Porter returns for her senior year at the one for the Peahens, as does fellow senior guard Felicia Harris. In St. Peters' first contest of the year against No. 22 Arizona State, Harris and sophomore Lindsay Gonzalez both dropped 15 points, while freshman banger Tyiana Sears picked up an impressive 13 points and nine boards in her first collegiate contest.

The Peahens ended up dropping the game 72-69, but in the process showed that they could play with just about any team in the nation.

UMass, on the other hand, needs to regain its composure after a disastrous outing in Worcester. The young guard trio of Cleo Foster, Katie Nelson and Monique Govan especially struggled, committing 13 turnovers in comparison to only a pair of assists.

If the Maroon and White plan on winning tonight's contest, then improvement will need to come from the backcourt.

"Leadership comes in many different ways," O'Brien said. "I expect those three (Govan, Nelson and Foster) to handle this basketball team better than they did against Holy Cross. If they lose their minds, everybody loses their minds, but if they are calm and under control then everybody else will be that way."

Size seemed like it would play an important role against the Crusaders, as the Minutewomen were short on height at almost every position. This time around, the roles will be reversed, as the Maroon and White seem to have the advantage down low against the Peahens.

According to O'Brien, however, size had nothing to do with Friday's 26-point UMass defeat.

"I don't think it had anything to do with size," the eleventh year coach said. "Obviously they were a little bit bigger than us, but they didn't post us up or rebound over us. What they did is that they were able to take us off the dribble and it really ended up costing us very early in the game."

Siiri Liivandi and the UMass women's hoop team are looking to bounce back against St. Peter's.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Cahoon: 'I hate losing'

Mass Attack leader has had enough

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Thankfully, disappointment lasts only during the time between defeat and victory. Because after two very disappointing losses to Lowell (1-0, 3-2) in which the Minutemen outplayed the River Hawks for the better portion of both games, coach Don Cahoon and his troops are eager to get back out there.

"That's the beautiful thing about our sport," Cahoon said. "You get thrown back into it."

On two consecutive nights UMass allowed an early deficit. And in both games it could not surmount the setbacks with an admirable finishing effort.

"They didn't get what they deserved this weekend," said Lowell head coach Blaise MacDonald after his team narrowly escaped the home and home series with a pair of one goal wins.

Maybe the Minutemen didn't deserve to go into tonight's game against Vermont with zero points from the weekend, but they may be a better team for it.

"They have to embrace the concept of continuing to work hard," Cahoon said. "Even after a setback."

Positives were few, because as Cahoon so eloquently put it, "I hate losing."

But a pleasant sight for UMass fans on Saturday evening was the play of sophomore forward Thomas Pock.

The 6-foot-1-inch Austrian was omnipresent on the sheet. He only recorded one assist, but he made a bid for the equalizer with a one timer from the slot in the second period and a pinpoint pass to Jimmy Callahan in the third.

Despite UMass' one goal loss, Pock was clearly the best player on the ice. His vicious body checking and defensive accountability just added to the completeness of his game.

Pock's top notch effort is hopefully, for the Mass Attack faithful, a harbinger for the rest of the season. Pock will certainly have to duplicate that performance if the Minutemen hope to make a good impression tonight at the Springfield Civic Center.

One of Cahoon's many creeds when he took this job in the summer of 2000 was to tap into the slumbering hockey culture in Western Massachusetts.

Last Sunday night's game against UConn at the Civic Center was a direct product of that promise, but it did not have the effect he so desired. Less than 1500 fans showed up to watch the Minutemen defeat their archrival Huskies 6-5. And unless Cahoon can receive some kind of guarantee for a crowd, tonight's game will likely be the last Mass Attack appearance in Springfield, for a long while.

"I was misled," Cahoon said. "I think we'll be playing our home games in the Mullins Center for awhile."

It's doubtful that a Vermont team will draw more than the border war last Sunday, but at least the Catamounts are from a power conference. The Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference has long competed with Hockey East of regional supremacy, and tonight's game will likely be a microcosm of that intensity.

Sami Jalkanen has been the most offensive oriented defenseman for the Minutemen this season.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Hey, check this guy out: Beaver Nelson. Paddle yourself over to Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 8

Women's Basketball lost a tough overtime battle last night. Read about it in Sports.

Volume CVIII Issue 53 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 21, 2001

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Fill-a-bus is parked outside of the Student Union collecting donations for the needy.

Fill-A-Bus drives for holiday help

Every year as the leaves fall off the trees and winter's cold begins to creep in, people are drawn to each other and their families to share in the harvest and the season of joy. However, for many Americans, including folks in the Pioneer Valley, November and December mark the beginning of a different season; the season of hunger. Fortunately, there are programs around the area that are set up to help people in need. The Amherst Survival Center is one of many that provides food, clothing and hot meals for families and individuals. Now is the time for the campus community to pitch in and do its part to help the less fortunate.

The Fill-A-Bus, an annual University event, has already been stationed in front of the Student Union this week, but will be returning from Nov. 26 to Nov. 29 to be filled with non-perishable food items, new toys, clothing, household goods and toiletries to donate to the Amherst Survival Center on Nov. 30.

Students, faculty and staff are encouraged to participate by donating individually or by organizing collections in dorms, classes, offices, or anywhere on campus. All members of the community are invited to drop off donations at the PVTA bus.

The Amherst Survival Center hopes to receive all the items on its wish list during the event. Coats, sweaters, boots, backpacks, quilts, blankets, hangers, tents and sleeping bags in good condition are included on the list, but the Center is also looking for unopened personal items such as toothpaste, toothbrushes, shampoo, razors, shaving cream and feminine products. As for food, the Center is hoping to gather items such as coffee, tea, powdered milk, white sugar, canned and bottled juices, ground cumin and fresh garlic. They also need kitchen items such as forks, potato peelers and can openers.

Volunteers are needed to help staff the bus and to deliver the donations to the Center. Please contact Alissa Daniels of Alpha Phi Omega at 545-2068 or the UMass Office of Community Service Learning. Both agencies are co-sponsoring the event.

Catherine Turner

Rumsfeld: forces take no prisoners

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld will visit Fort Bragg, North Carolina to congratulate the U.S. Special Forces today.

"I plan to go visit Fort Bragg... to salute the quick, resourceful, and powerful part of our campaign," Rumsfeld said. "All of us at DoD [Department of Defense] are proud of this multi-service force.

"They have gathered information on enemy troop movements. They've found targets for U.S. aircraft. They've blockaded roads in search of fleeing Taliban leaders and al Qaeda leaders," Rumsfeld added. "And last week, as you know, they – with the help of some folks in the Northern Alliance – Special Operations forces flew to safety some eight detainees that had been held for the past three months."

Special Forces have been on the ground in Afghanistan advising Northern Alliance rebels and conducting support missions as part of Operation Enduring Freedom, the United States led war on global terrorism.

"For the most part, the Special Ops have been doing – making assessments and interdicting roads and looking for supplies moving north or south or east or west, attempting to prevent people that ought not to be going places from going places," Rumsfeld said.

The United States will not negotiate or accept surrenders, according to the Pentagon. Citing a lack of suitable jails and insufficient numbers, Defense officials told reporters that troops will not accept surrenders.

"The United States is not inclined to negotiate surrenders," Rumsfeld said. "Nor are we in a position, with relatively small numbers of forces on the ground, to accept prisoners. We have only handfuls of people there. We don't have jails, we don't have guards, we don't have people who – we're not in a position to have people surrender to us."

However, Rumsfeld assured that people who try to surrender to U.S. troops will not be killed. Rather, soldiers will simply refuse the surrender.

"If people try to, we are declining. That is not what we're there to do, is to begin accepting prisoners and impounding them in some way or making judgments," Rumsfeld added. "That's for the Northern Alliance and that's for the tribes in the South to make their own judgments on that."

The United States is not currently negotiating with anyone, Rumsfeld said. When asked to comment on reports of several Taliban leaders offering terms near Khandahar and Konduz, Rumsfeld explained that while U.S. troops are

Turn to RUMSFELD page 3

COURTESY UWIRE.COM

U.S. Special Forces troops patrolled on horseback as the assault on Afghanistan continued yesterday.

Amherst author wins prize for Civil War book

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Amherst College History and Black Studies Professor David W. Blight was recently awarded with the Frederick Douglass Book Prize of $25,000 for his latest book, Race and Reunion: The Civil War in American Memory.

The award, given by the 1994-founded Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History and the Center for the Study of Slavery, Abolition, and Resistance at Yale University, marks Blight's second award-winning book, his first being Frederick Douglass's Civil War, published in 1989.

According to a recent press release, Race and Reunion is a historical study of how Americans of both European and African descent from both the North and South "made sense of America's most wrenching war."

The Harvard University Press website described the book as a "perilous path of remembering and forgetting" in which Blight explains the Civil War's effects on American race relations.

"Blight delves deeply into the shifting meanings of death and sacrifice, Reconstruction, the romanticized South of literature, soldiers' reminiscences of battle, the idea of the Lost Cause, and the ritual of Memorial Day," the Harvard University Press website continued. "He resurrects the variety of African-American voices and memories of the war and the efforts to preserve the emancipationist legacy in the midst of a culture built on its denial."

The website also quoted Mark Dunkelman of the Providence Sunday Journal as calling Race and Reunion a story of "mammoth and tragic sweep, with consequences that are very much alive in present-day America."

Dunkelman continued to describe Blight's writing style with adjectives of passionate and soulful but mainly hailed his piece for its wide range of sources.

The Frederick Douglass Book Prize is awarded annually. Its inaugural prize was shared between Ira Berlin for Many Thousands Gone: The First Two Centuries of Slavery and Philip D. Morgan for Slave Counterpoint: Black Culture in the Eighteenth-Century Chesapeake and Lowcountry.

More information on Race and Reunion can be found at http://www.hup.harvard.edu/catalog/BLIRAC.html.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Your coach awaits.

Second star to the right and straight on till morning, the Peter Pan bus lines will wisk you away to your Thanksgiving Never Never Land

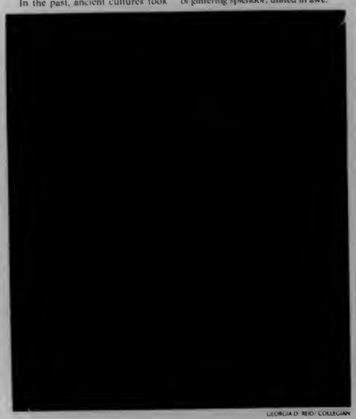
Leonids meteor shower lights up night

By Georgia D. Reid
Collegian Correspondent

The people of Earth stare at the skies every November, fulfilling ancient traditions, participating in a worldwide ritual of quiet observation and peaceful respect for the beauty of a shooting star. Last Sunday between 3a.m. and 6a.m., many were lucky enough to make more than one wish on a shooting star.

In those pre-dawn hours, a group of University of Massachusetts undergraduate and graduate students saw two to three thousand meteors in the Leonids shower. The Amnah Hill observatory in Windsor, MA, is 2,000 feet above sea level and away from the busy streets and lights of civilization. A remote location, it provides a perfect location for observing the annual Leonids meteor shower. But this year was even more special than usual.

"You won't see this again in your lifetime," one astronomer said as he sipped a cup of hot water, reminiscing over what he had seen, the sun just breaking the darkness of night. "Not in your lifetime. This won't happen again – not with these conditions."



The gathering of students, friends and teachers had stayed up the entire night; outside in the freezing cold, their only comforts a tiny cabin on the hill with a wood stove. What they saw that night was extraordinary, and, as many stated, well worth the trip.

"You see, you might have the moon out, or clouds," said a graduate student of Astronomy at UMass. This would have dimmed or obscured the falling stars, reducing the number of meteors to see. This year, the meteors of the Leonid shower were especially numerous. This, on top of perfect conditions, made for a once in a lifetime event. The Leonid shower had not been as spectacular as it was Sunday morning since 33 years ago.

A meteor is an object from outer space that hits the earth's atmosphere, causing it to burn up and leave a streak on the sky. In fact, the objects are "dust" particles, sometimes giant rocks, left behind by a comet. These actually make up the tail of the comet. When the earth passes through the tail, shooting stars appear.

This shower is called the Leonids because the meteors appear to originate from the direction on the constellation of Leo, part of the group of mythological zodiac constellations. Some of the meteors seen over the weekend were so big and bright; they exploded when they hit the atmosphere. It was compared to lightning. People's faces lit up in awe, and several "oohs" and "ahhs" were heard among the crowd.

In the past, ancient cultures took these showers as omens, both negative and positive. Rituals were held either in celebration, or sacrifices were made to the gods, who were clearly giving their followers a sign. The Greeks thought meteors were made of gas that rose from the earth, while some early modern scientists thought it was a kind of lightning. In November of 1833, people thought the world was ending when they saw the Leonids. Today, and last weekend, no one thought of what the shooting stars meant. People of this planet were, during those flashes of light of glittering splendor, united in awe.

GEORGIA D. REID/COLLEGIAN

The Leonids meteor shower was a spectacle of the night early moday.

U.S. drug war comes under fire

By Stephanie Caligal
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - The War on Drugs is benefiting the U.S. government and business and hurting democracy at home and abroad, said Al Giordano, a former political reporter for the Boston Phoenix and editor of the Narco News Bulletin.

Giordano, speaking at Morse Auditorium, also presented guest speaker Catherine Austin Fitts, who spoke about how the government is being controlled by drug money, which contributes to 50 percent of their political campaigns.

Fitts used the example of two boats, one containing a shipment of sugar from South America and the other containing a shipment of drugs. The sugar on the first boat would be sold for $100,000, while the drugs on the second one would be sold for $25 million. The money from the sale of the drugs would be invested in the stock market, allowing drug dealers to buy up American companies.

"The government pays major companies to launder drug money," she said. "The War on Drugs is not being run by drug lords; it is being run by the U.S. government."

Giordano mentioned how the U.S. is preventing democracy abroad specifically, in Latin America by supporting governments that support their "War on Drugs." These governments support their favored drug dealers and stamp out competition from poor farmers who want to grow the coca plant, from which cocaine and crack come from, for the purpose of feeding their families, he said.

"When it comes to terrorism, the U.S. is the largest exporter," he said. Giordano spoke about "Plan Colombia," in which he said the U.S. invested $500,000 to stop illegal drug trafficking because the Colombian government refused to invest its money into the American stock market.

He also mentioned Sept. 11, 1973, when he said that more people died from orders given by the U.S. government than on Sept. 11, 2001. He said that the U.S. government under President Richard Nixon conspired with a far-right wing military in Chile to overthrow its then-democratic government. The coup ended in the murder of thousands of innocent people, he said.

"The war on drugs is making billions for some. It protects the people on top, and punishes those on the bottom," said Giordano, who favors the legalization of drugs.

Some found this news about the drug war interesting and shocking.

"I thought it was really eye-opening. I wonder if it could all be that simple. In some ways I wouldn't be surprised if it was all true," said Sue Curry, a junior in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"I thought the connection between Wall Street and the drug world was really intense," said Dan Feder, a Boston University Professors senior, who organized the event on behalf of the Student Underground.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Got Pizza?

This ironic pizza delivery car was parked behind the lill-a-bus

Does anyone know why Thanksgiving is a week early this year?

If you know the answer, stop by Collegian Graphics an I tell us.

State halts Western Kentucky U.'s use of radioactive materials

By Joseph Lord
College Heights Herald (Western Kentucky U.)

(U-WIRE) BOWLING GREEN, Ky. - Western Kentucky University's Applied Physics Institute is under a state and university investigation after possibly violating state regulations regarding the use of radioactive materials.

The Radioactive Health and Toxic Agents Branch of the state Department for Public Health issued a cease and desist order to the university on Nov. 9.

That order required Western to "immediately cease all activities involving the use of neutron generators" and to secure all radioactive materials in the physics department until the investigation is finished.

According to a notice of violation sent Nov. 13 by Ed Lohr, supervisor of the Radioactive Materials Section for Radioactive Health and Toxic Agents Branch, the violation involved the use of a neutron generator Nov. 6 in the parking lot of the Applied Physics Institute annex on Nashville Road.

George Vourvopoulos, director of the Applied Physics Institute, would not comment on specifics of what happened because of the investigation. He did say the piece of equipment in question is used as part of a project the Institute has been working on for seven years.

"A neutron generator is a device that produces neutrons when you turn it on," he said.

It is being used at Western for a federally funded research project that detects explosives and illicit drugs, Vourvopoulos said.

He said a neutron generator emits radiation when it's running, and — like all other radiation-emitting devices - can foster unsafe conditions if used improperly.

Lohr said that is why the state specifies the location where the neutron generator can be activated.

"All radiation-producing equipment is regulated by where it can be used, whether it's an X-ray machine in a dentist's office or nuclear medicine in a hospital," he said.

Lohr said sites are chosen based on the potential risk of radiation exposure to the public, workers and the environment.

While the license given to Western for using the neutron generator states the device can be used at the Applied Physics Institute annex, the notice of violation contends that such permission does not exist for the facility's parking lot.

"The question is, was it okay to use that location for an experiment," said Gene Tice, vice president of Student Affairs and Campus Services.

According to the cease and desist order, Western had asked the state for permission to use neutron generators in the Applied Physics Institute annex parking lot on July 16. That request was denied by the state Oct. 17, "based on the potential for exposure to the general public and lack of physical shielding and barriers."

Tice said he doesn't perceive any public danger from the incident, but added that the committee won't be certain until after the investigation is finished.

"I don't think anyone has been put in jeopardy," he said.

According to the license, the other locations where neutron generators can be used are Thompson Complex, Science and Technology Hall, Applied Physics Institute, University Farm and Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

The investigation into the incident is being conducted by Western's Radiation Safety Committee, said Tice, the committee's chairman. The committee is required to respond to the state within 15 working days after receiving the notice of violation.

While the Applied Physics Institute can't use the equipment now, there may also be a more serious problem if the contention made by the state turns out to be true.

The penalty levied if a violation occurs could range from suspending the radioactive materials license to revoking it, Lohr said.

"Those are all options based on the outcome of the investigation and the severity of the violation," he said.

Until the investigation is finished, Western faculty and administrators will wait on stand-by.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Become the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broad-sheet publication since January 1988. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500. Deadlines are: noon for display ads, 2:30 p.m. for classified ads, and 3:30 p.m. for Arts & Living.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siminski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

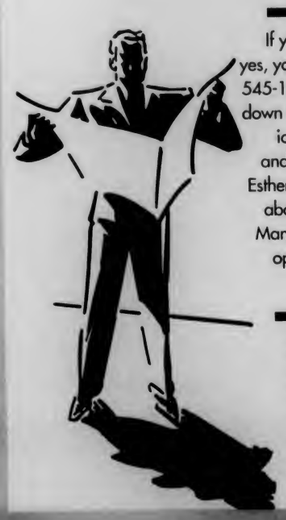
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF NURSING IN NEW YORK CITY

Study in a world class city at a world class academic center with world class students

Earn a second bachelors degree and an MS specialty in 30 months

WE OFFER 12 MS SPECIALITIES:



- Advanced Clinical Management
- Informatics
- Acute Care Nurse Practitioner
- Adult Nurse Practitioner
- Family Nurse Practitioner
- Geriatric Nurse Practitioner
- Nurse Anesthesia
- Nurse Midwifery
- Oncology Nurse Practitioner
- Pediatric Nurse Practitioner
- Psychiatric Mental Health Nurse Practitioner
- Women's Health Nurse Practitioner

IMPORTANT NURSE PRACTITIONER FACTS:

- You can become a nurse practitioner with a Master's Degree in 30 months
- Nurse practitioners can earn $70,000 in the first year of employment
- Nurse practitioners can practice autonomously or in a collaborative practice
- As a nurse practitioner, you can have a meaningful job for the rest of your life, anywhere!

For more information contact Amy at: ad2011@columbia.edu or 212-305-2701,
And visit our website: www.nursing.hs.columbia.edu

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

AAA: more travelers to hit the road this Thanksgiving

By Marcy Gotterbarn
The Informer (U. Hartford)

(U-WIRE) WEST HARTFORD, Conn. - Year in and year out it is known that Thanksgiving is the most traveled day of the year. This year with the tragedies of Sept. 11, it was predicted that the amount of people traveling would largely decrease.

However, gauging by the number of tickets purchased, organizations like AAA have made their predictions on the amount of traveling being done this holiday season.

AAA predicts that Thanksgiving travel will only decrease by six percent.

"With all the recent doom and gloom in the travel industry a six percent drop is a definite improvement from the double-digit declines of the last two months," Sarah Hughes, travel vice president of AAA, said.

The main effect that Sept. 11 will have on traveling is that more people will be hitting the roads this year. This year the prediction is that 87 percent of those traveling will do so by automobile, the highest percentage ever, up four percent from last year.

More people will also be taking the train. The ridership on the Acela train is up 35 percent. In addition, most of the Amtrak trains between Boston and Washington, D.C., are now full for that weekend.

It is also predicted that people will be staying closer to home this year. Last year 36.8 percent of the people traveling were 50 miles or more away from home. This year AAA predicts that only 34.6 percent will travel this far.

The largest strike that Sept 11 will cause in travel this Thanksgiving is via air. Last year 6.3 million people traveled somewhere by plane for the holiday. This year the prediction is 4.6 million people will be flying, a 27 percent decline.

Because of the decreasing numbers of people flying, the airlines are trying to attract more travelers. This year they have made the airfare cheaper, hoping to fill the abundance of empty seats.

"Every Thanksgiving I go home to Florida, but this year I'm waiting until break. I'd rather wait a little longer and spend time with my family in New York this Thanksgiving," University of Hartford junior Eric Schwarzer said.

According to AAA, the attacks of Sept. 11 are making this November and December the most "volatile and unpredictable November and December in recent memory, arguably in the last 60 years."

■ Rumsfeld

continued from page 1

advising the Northern Alliance, they are not in control of them.

"The negotiations that are taking place are, for the most part, taking place with the opposition forces and elements that are putting pressure onto the various cities you've mentioned, whether it's Kunduz or Kandahar or whichever," Rumsfeld said. "That means that those discussions are taking place.

"Needless to say, we have some ongoing discussions with those forces, and it's our hope that they will not engage in negotiations that would provide for the release of al Qaeda forces; that would provide for the release of foreign nationals, non-Afghans, leaving the country and destabilizing neighboring countries, which is not your first choice either," Rumsfeld added. "The idea that they would keep their weapons is not a happy one from our standpoint, either. So, we are able to provide input into that process, but we're not in a position of determining it or controlling it."

The troops fighting the Northern Alliance around those cities are not just Taliban regulars, the Pentagon said.

"The fierceness of the fight up there suggests that they are, for the most part, not Afghans – that they are al Qaeda or people from other countries that have been supporting Taliban or al Qaeda," Rumsfeld explained. "The idea of their getting out of the country and going off to make their mischief somewhere else is not a happy prospect. So my hope is that they will either be killed or taken prisoner."

Military action will continue in Afghanistan, Rumsfeld said. U.S. planes are targeting the networks of tunnels and caves in the mountains of Afghanistan.

"We have been targeting caves and tunnels and closing them up, and getting a lot of secondary explosions, in some cases, when they were used for ammunition storage," Rumsfeld said. "We have been targeting command-and-control and leadership activities where we can see – where we get information that leads us to believe that al Qaeda and Taliban leaders are gathered. And we have been targeting those facilities."

All of this is designed to restrict the movement of Taliban leaders and al Qaeda terrorists. Rumsfeld hopes that the actions will prevent the escape of individuals.

"Well, one would hope they did not get let go into another country or even free in that country," Rumsfeld said. "They ought to be impounded. I mean, they're people who have done terrible things."

Rumsfeld stressed that while victories by the Northern Alliance and reports of Taliban surrenders are heartening, the war is far from over.

"The war on terrorism is still in its early stages. Perseverance and will and patience and sacrifice is going to be required in the months ahead, and while the nature of what's taking place is changing, it is going to be no less difficult," Rumsfeld said. "We will not be able to fight an antiseptic war. The cause we're engaged in – if you're going to put people's lives at risk, you better have a darn good reason. And we do. This terrorist problem is an enormously dangerous one for our country and for the world.

"Lives are at risks, and lives will be lost," Rumsfeld added. "Any anyone who thinks that you can have an antiseptic war is wrong."

However, Rumsfeld said Operation Enduring Freedom's cause is clear. It will not be an easy task, he cautioned.

"Our goal, of course, is to stop terrorists from attacking the United States and our deployed forces and our friends and allies," Rumsfeld said. "And there undoubtedly are sleepers out there who will continue to engage in terrorist activities, so even if we did feel that we had dealt with the al Qaeda network, there undoubtedly will be al Qaeda people still out there because they're spread across the globe."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

These empty streets

Wasting no time, the Thanksgiving exodus got a kick-start Tuesday night.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

549-RENT

- Cars • Mini Vans
- Trucks • SUV's
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
- MHIC Rates

(On bus route)

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Tickets & Directions @ cinemark.com

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?

YANKEE

-DISCOUNT OIL-

NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888

• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Congratulations!

Omicron Alpha Pi Chapter of Kappa Omicron National Honor Society of Consumer Studies congratulates the following new members for their outstanding academic performance and thanks their families who attended the initiation ceremony on November 17, 2001 in Skinner Hall.

Nicole Canizio	Apparel Marketing
Lauren Chesler	Apparel Marketing
Jennifer Chilson	Apparel Marketing
Lori Kline	Apparel Marketing
Konstantin Makarov	Apparel Marketing
Stephanie Manners	Apparel Marketing
Sarah Marotte	Apparel Marketing
Anne Reagan	Apparel Marketing
Colleen Scannell	Family & Consumer Sciences
Kathleen Schultz	Apparel Marketing
Marie Superski	Apparel Marketing
Jessica Swindlehurst	Apparel Marketing
Tina Torkington	Apparel Marketing
Jill Tuczynski	Apparel Marketing

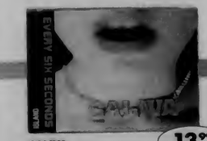
Best Wishes for Great Holidays from Therese Roeder, President; Lauren Bianchetto, Vice President; Michele Miller, Secretary; and Dr. M. J. Alhabeeb, Faculty Advisor

SLIGHTLY DIFFERENT MUSIC for SLIGHTLY DIFFERENT TASTES.

SYSTEMATIC
Somewhere In Between
9.99

NOOBASTANK
Noobestank
10.99

SEVENDUST
Animosity
(Limited Edition also available)
12.99



SHELBY LYNNE
Love, Shelby
13.99

CYBERFEST 2001
Various Artists
13.99

REMY ZERO
The Golden Hum
13.99

SALIVA
Every Six Seconds
13.99

SHALLOW HAL
Soundtrack
15.99

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore

For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Sale ends December 1 2001
Cassettes available on select titles

www.mediaplay.com
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
816781 10420

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Holiday Season
time to reflect

The last of us go home (or elsewhere) today, off to enjoy a brief reprieve before the dizzying homestretch is upon us.

This year, more so than any other we as students have experienced, carries heavier lessons and morals as to why we should be thankful – those of us, at least, that have managed to get through the majority of the year without serious consequence.

Even those marked in some way by tragedy this year – particularly any individual intimate with the events of Sept. 11 – will take the Thanksgiving holiday as time to reflect and appreciate what has endured. Our homes to return to, our friends to visit, our buses and planes to catch – life as usual goes on, albeit slightly faster than usual. With that, then, a simple list to keep in mind over the holiday.

Tell your friends, family and others what they mean to you. Simple.

Take advantage of every day. A cliché? Absolutely. It is, however, a reality that more people have been latching onto, with uncertainty flooding our lives. Take chances. Don't dwell on uncertainties. Live life the way you choose to – not recklessly, but with meaning and a unique sense of purpose. Each second counts like never before.

Go out and do something for somebody else.

Remember those not able to take part in the festivities this year. As mentioned before, the effects of Sept. 11 reach far beyond the areas first devastated. Families everywhere have lost someone. Empty seats at the dinner table will be recognized all over this country. Just yesterday, the killings of four journalists in Afghanistan were confirmed. The fallout continues, and those in the way are more often not than simply doing their jobs. Remember these people.

Find a way to be "home," whether it be with your family or an adopted group of friends in another city. Even if just for a night or few hours, find a place to rest.

Each one of us has been through a tremendous amount this semester, personally, academically or otherwise. It's a testament to this student body – and similar groups everywhere – that we've pulled through, not beaten, but together and ultimately stronger. We've exhausted not only ourselves, but many of our resources and options as well.

Let's take this brief holiday then as time for ourselves – a moment to recover, relax, and rediscover the reasons we're fighting so passionately to stay alive. It won't take long to realize those reasons, those motivations, are close by, in the faces of friends and family.

We at the Collegian wish everyone a Happy Thanksgiving.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Give the elves a break:
A closer look at your wish list

BILL LARKIN

Is all the laundry folded and tucked into your Burberry suitcase? Are all the unread books crammed into your messenger bag? Did you unplug the mini-fridge and throw away the leftover China Dynasty? Good, take a seat on the futon before you shut off the lights and lock the door. Your parents drove two hours to get here; they can spare a few minutes more.

See that Ethernet jack hidden underneath your desk? The cable modem lying on the floor? It's probably connected to a computer that's struggling to download the new Michael Jackson album. Unplug it, the King of Pop can wait a week. Besides, your parents' sport utility vehicle doesn't have a CD player anyway. If you can define conscience without consulting a dictionary, you may want that computer at home.

Many of you will be traveling back to Boston, New York, and New Jersey this afternoon. Please, enjoy the holiday weekend, we could all use a break. Cheer your high school football team – even if loses to the hated cross-town rival for the fifth consecutive year. Devour that poultry feast sizzling in your dining room without concern for your waistline. Call your hometown friends and plan a reunion at your favorite bar.

I know the morning after the depression, tryptophan, and alcohol has settled you into sleep, you will awake eager to begin your Christmas shopping. Sure, the lines at Macy's, Filene's, and Banana Republic will be shorter this Friday at home than next Sundas at the Holyoke Mall, but you have some research to do. So unpack that laptop. Remember, you could be at the library researching biochemistry for your term paper. And it definitely doesn't have invincible there.

The Internet is a staple in the homes of most college students. AOL/Time Warner is the largest communications company in the country, and about 180 million North Americans are connected to the World Wide Web. If you don't have access to the Internet, take advantage of this time of solidarity. Surely, someone within walking distance of your house is online.

Have you unfolded that shopping list yet? Perhaps you wanted to help your unhip younger brother fit in at school by buying him a GAP sweatshirt for Christmas. But did you know the cotton for that $48 sweatshirt is harvested by 12-year-old Uzbekistan laborers who work nine-hour shifts? That South Korean textile workers process, spin, and weave the cotton for less than

See that Ethernet jack hidden underneath your desk? The cable modem lying on the floor? It's probably connected to a computer that's struggling to download the new Michael Jackson album. Unplug it, the King of Pop can wait a week.

$4 an hour? Or that it is cut and sewn by Russian seamstresses who earn $39-$69 a month?

The GAP is not alone. According to the Council on Economic Priorities, many of the clothes produced by our malls' most preminent companies drip with the invisible sweat of abused laborers. Polo Ralph Lauren has sold clothes made in internationally illegal conditions under loose Chinese labor laws. Warnaco, which produces Calvin Klein, was sued in 1999 for employing indentured labor on the island of Saipan, failure to pay overtime, and intolerable working conditions. And L Crew has employed 15-year-old girls to work $21 a six-day-week at the same Honduras factory that produced Kathie Lee Gilford clothing under sweatshop conditions.

So, what can a socially aware consumer do? To start, visit "http://www.responsibleshopper.org/." From there you can evaluate many of the brands found on racks across the country. And yes, some American companies do operate under fair working conditions. For example, Liz Claiborne, maker of Claiborne, DKNY and Liz & Co., received high grades for membership in the Apparel Industry Partnership, a coalition of apparel companies, consumer groups, and labor and human rights organizations.

Now, you have changed your Christmas list to reflect more humane, socially responsible choices. But your potential to fight corrupt labor practices does not fade when the tinsel is thrown out with the tree on Jan. 6.

As a New Year's resolution, bookmark "http://www.greenpages.org/" and dedicate yourself to frequenting the web site. Some of the clothes you will find here may not suit your tastes; many of the brands feature alternative styles, such as hemp patterns and silk strands. Others, such as those sold on "http://www.coolnotcruel.com/," substitute marketing for fair labor standards without sacrificing current fashion trends. Next year, try to buy some clothes from such companies. Certainly, I want your 2002 Christmas list to contain only clothes produced under fair labor conditions. If the capitalist economists are correct, and enough people flock to sweat-free garments, then you might help discourage the human rights abuses prevalent in overseas clothing factories. As more and more consumers buy clean clothes, then a sweat-free niche might nudge into the market. Such efforts have worked in the textile and fishing industries; environmental and animal-rights groups have encouraged recyclable paper and dolphin-free tuna.

Now collect your things and pile into the Explorer. Your father has to prepare the stuffing, and your grandmother has to go to the bathroom. And whatever you do, don't ask to turn on the radio. You'll regret it. Just sit back and watch the Valley foliage fade into the Interstate concrete, dreaming of how you will give instead of take this Christmas. An ideal everyone can be thankful for.

Information from The Nation was used in this column.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

ED/OP: save a little of that dinner and feed our sour belly when you get back.

3 Arizona Republic. Dist. by UFS Inc.

Enjoying the working world

REGAN MCKENDRY

My older sister recently left. I didn't want her to leave originally as we had only gotten to know each other for four months. At least I'll be able to visit at her new home. However, I didn't want her to leave because I know things won't be the same. I'm going to miss the hugs, the talks we had about everything and anything. If there is one consolation I can take in her leaving, it is that it was with a good reason. After all, she has started dating my big brother.

Now before you get some weird ideas about incest and start making judgments about my family, I should explain a few things. Krista and Michael are not related, nor are they biologically part of my family. Rather, they are, or in Krista's case was, two of my fellow managers in the family that is the employees of Gap Stores Rockingham.

I've over forty months now I've been an employee at Gap #2200. I started back on July 12th, 1998 as just another sales associate. Now I am a member of the management staff as a sales supervisor and hopefully soon maybe an assistant manager. Over these three years I've worked with many different managers, let alone the scores of sales associates who come and go each season. In fact, totaling it up, I've worked with 38 other managers over that time period, including those who still work at my store right now. I could try counting associates, but after a while it becomes a pointless task. I could probably fill a whole paragraph just with the number of Kristen's and Lindsey's.

In my time there, I have met many people that I won't forget, for better or for worse. I've also seen people come and go in less time than it takes me to drive from here to Springfield and back. Even with this constant turnover, a fact that anyone who works in retail quickly learns to accept, I still consider my store to be a home and the employees to be members of my large extended family.

A family must start at the top with a matriarch and I have the best boss in the world. Lisa has been the general manager of my store for just over two years now, and they have been the best times I've ever had at any job in my life. Lisa is not only a mother in the terms of this analogy of a family, she literally is like a second mother to me. She allows me to come home any weekend I want and work, whether it's three weekends in a row or when there's a five-week gap (pun intended) between working weekends. She also was the one who pushed me in the direction of becoming a supervisor and has supported me at every moment. Even if everybody who is supposed to be at work is there, I'm always welcome to come in and help out.

Trying to describe why Lisa is such an awesome boss and an equally wonderful person is a hard task. I hope everyone at some point in his or her life has been blessed with the perfect boss, for it is a truly beautiful thing. Lisa and I email each other when I'm away at school to keep updated with what's going on. We value each other's opinion on almost everything (Politics is the one thing we avoid, as we are usually at the opposite end of the spectrum).

If Lisa is my mother, than Michael most certainly is my older brother. Michael and I have known each other since my 2000 Spring Break, when I came in three days that week at 5 a.m. to help with the arrival of our new spring line. From the moment I met him, I knew that his energy, work ethic, and especially his off-beat sense of humor would be characteristics to help form a bond. Michael from day one has given me a hard time about everything, not the least of which is my penchant for pop music (I've tried to convince him that one can only listen to Pearl Jam for so long, but he doesn't seem to get it).

Michael also was the first person to help me on the journey towards being a more well-rounded employee. Over the summer of 2000, under Michael's guidance, I became a merchandising specialist. Things went so well that my district manager gave me a coveted Gap Service Excellence Pin for my hard work merchandising all summer. Even now as a supervisor, to this day I'm only a certified specialist in one area: merchandising.

Now I don't want people to get the idea that the only people that I'm close to at work are managers. It's actually quite the opposite. I've worked with numerous people over the years who I'd be proud to call friends. There's my buddy Rich who I can talk to about everything and anything.

Marina is another pal who I gossip with all the time. Julie absolutely seems to idolize me and is absolutely ecstatic when we are working together. Some of my friends are away at college like myself (Jen F., Lauren). Others, like Nato, are fairly new there. Still there are those who used to be sales associates and are now managers like myself (John, Scott, Mikey G.). Even the people that I know will never be back to touch my heart. I'll never, ever forget Jared.

I expect a majority of sales associates to come and go with some frequency. Even managers get shuffled around. Each time that happens I simply pray that I get to keep my favorite managers. This time though, Krista had to leave. Krista had only been with us for a few months, but in that time she brought more organization and sanity to the way we as a store run the sales floor than we had seen in all my time at Rockingham. More than all that though, was the cheerful mood that she was always in which helped make more work that much more fun. As I have lost my pop culture companion, there will definitely be a void at work without our Backstreet Boys vs. NSYNC discussions.

Now as much as I'm going to miss Krista, that was not the reason I started writing this. Her departure was just another example of how much my work does feel like a family. I've had other jobs before, but it wasn't the same. I could call my co-workers at WMLA a family, but that would only be the kind of family that makes appearances on the Jerry Springer Show. My past three years at the mall have been amazing time of self-discovery. I had my first true crush. I've learned where my strengths and weaknesses lie in working with others. And perhaps most importantly, I've learned that more than almost anything else, for a great job you must not only enjoy what you do, but you must love the people you work with.

I can only wish that each of you has a work that is such a wonderful and supportive place. I hope I enjoy every job I have throughout my life as much as I enjoy my current place of employment. As much as I hate to think about it, there will be some day when I will leave the Gap behind. It will be a sad day I'm sure, but I always have memories like this to look back on:

One year after being given a surprise birthday card that was signed by all employees present that day in our store, I was once again found myself working on my birthday. As it became time for my break, I proceeded into our back room to find the two other managers on that day as well as a former manager who now works at a different location. In the center of all of them though, was Lisa, standing there with a box full of cupcakes, a beanie bear, and another employee-signed card. I seriously thought I was going to cry as I walked over and hugged Lisa. I wonder what I've done to deserve birthday surprises two years in a row. It doesn't matter really. For like my own family, I know that my co-workers love me with all their hearts.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian staff member.

Justice League premieres

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

Cartoon Network, whose new batch of original cartoons like Samurai Jack and Dexter's Laboratory has ushered in a new renaissance of animation, has unveiled its newest series. While those unfamiliar with comics might see this series as an updated Superfriends, Justice League is actually DC Comics' most popular franchise outside of Batman and Superman. Animator Bruce Timm uses many of the elements of the comic book, along with his own take on things. The result is an exciting, dynamic action show that is head and shoulders over other action-adventure cartoons.

One of the major deviations from the Hanna Barbara's Superfriends formula of the early Eighties is the range of personalities among the all-star team. Made up of the most iconic action heroes, comic book writers have recently rejuvenated JLA (Justice League America) into one of the best-selling comics by stressing the differences between teammates. Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, Flash and others existed uneasily, tension always brewing due to their different approaches and personalities in contrast to Superfriends' almost soulless representations of the characters.

Timm applies this element to the cartoon. Batman, as in the comic, retains his arrogant, standoffish demeanor. Martian Manhunter is still the sage tactician. And while this idea of clashing egos is maintained, some characters have been changed for various reasons. Wonder Woman is more of a snobbish newbie while the John Stewart incarnation of Green Lantern (who is an African-American) replaces the white, 20-something Kyle Rayner.

The story of "Secret Origin," the pilot episode, is typical alien invasion fare. A space expedition finally lands on Mars and makes a startling discovery: alien structures. Years later, the astronaut who discovered the structure and the strange phenomenon behind it is now a U.S. Senator and is pushing unilateral nuclear disarmament, pushing for Superman's watchful eye to be the alternative to mutual assured destruction. Batman's investigations into a government facility soon bring the two heroes together as their subplots begin to interweave. Soon, they stumble upon Martian Manhunter, who brings the rest of the heroes together telepathically to halt the invaders who had destroyed his Martian civilization centuries before. As one might expect, intense action with the fate of the world at stake soon follows.

The otherworldly threat contrasts with the squeaky-clean appearance of the heroes, with mucous membranes dripping off of newly hatched alien war machines that resemble the Martian invaders from War of the Worlds. There is also a nice X-Files touch to the show as Batman, with flashlight in hand, stumbles upon people being stored into pods in dark, abandoned government facilities. I almost expected him to bump into Mulder and Scully! Drawing from sources outside comic books adds a nice sense of texture to the show. The action is intense and highly dynamic due, in large part, to the masterful animation.

But while it is better than the average cartoon out there, it falls short of Bruce Timm's Batman and Superman Adventures. Those two series focused on single protagonists, but Justice League has the burden of showcasing seven principle characters. As a result, some characters (most notably Hawkgirl) get little screen time or development. The music is also distracting because It sounds like something from a Nintendo game; Batman and Superman Adventures had a full orchestra to support it while this series does not.

Some of the characters feel a bit off as well. Superman seemed to be somewhat dull-witted through the whole episode. He also seemed to get his butt handed to him constantly, coming off as the Wile E. Coyote of the team rather than the premiere superhero. I am a huge Superman fan and It bothered me to see him portrayed as being so useless. The Flash, who is displayed as a levelheaded everyman in his outstanding comic series, is also reduced to an obnoxious jester in the series, making him almost completely unlikable.

These bugs, however, were few and far between and might just work themselves out over time. When all is said and done, this is a highly entertaining show with a fresh take on 60-year-old characters, while still retaining the elements that make them so familiar and successful.

Chris Kenny is a Collegian columnist.

Beaver's pain, Allstars squander their skill

COURTESY BEAVERNELSON.COM

Beaver Nelson's still trying for fame.

COURTESY JOHN QUINN

The guys from Long Beach Dub All Stars.

BEAVER NELSON
Undisturbed
Black Dog Records

Beaver Nelson wants you to know how much it all hurts.

On Undisturbed, the Oklahoma-bred singer/songwriter's third full-length effort, the ol' Beav composes a soundtrack of crippling pity wrapped in music so tight and, at times poppy, that you hardly know whether to dance or cry.

With a voice that stands in direct opposition to his haunting features, Nelson croons his way through 12 tunes that, while stamped with his own unique brand of folk/country/blues, bear the heavy influence of the Dylan and Van Zandt forefathers he has unabashedly praised.

"Experiments in Love" is a standout, stripped down to great effect. The gravel in his voice tumbles at all the right moments, rolling slowly over the simple background lit by his guitar. "I Wanted Too Much" jumps out with a fresh, bluesy shuffle before stopping completely to shift gears. It's reborn, then, as a crawling plea that sounds as hurt and worn down as the lyrics suggest.

"What Is That To Me?" begins appropriately enough before augmenting the basic guitar/vocals foundation with a stock guitar riff that weighs the bit down, proving the faded transition into "When We Were Friends," a run-of-the-mill rocking back tune, a tired one. "Trash Like This" suffers a similar fate, sounding a bit too much like that one song you've heard but can't quite pin down a title or artist for. It's an Everysong, and appears on this album more than once. His talent is evident throughout, though. Within the genre he's well-versed in a number of tricks that keep his songs turning corners and sounding fresh.

There's an audience somewhere out there for Beaver Nelson; he's spent 11 years trying to pin it down. On Undisturbed he throws out a handful of the new, a taste of the old, and hopes they come running to his side. With some more work like this, the chances are good they will, whoever they may be. (Matt Despres)

LONG BEACH DUB ALLSTARS
Wanders of the World
Skunk Records

Any album with a guest turn from Jeff "Skunk" Baxter will get a glance from me. His strong behind the scenes work, most notably with Steely Dan, takes to heart the maxim of music for music's sake. It's odd, then, that his considerable talent is wasted here, placed in a dull "hit single" whose "been here, heard that" vibe speaks for much of the album that follows.

Not to say that it's all bad. It is, however, something we've heard from this collective of musicians before... many, many times. The lethargic "Listen to DJ's" opens with a few measures of possibility and intrigue before stumbling headlong into a bag of tricks admired by the pseudo-reggae adoring crowd. "Sunny Hours" (and it's equally expendable "Reprise") take similar, boredom-inducing steps – the only hours here are the ones spent napping after this tune quietly helps you drift away.

significant others

To be fair, there are, in fact, some interesting moments. "Luke" is jumpstarted by an infectious, funked-up groove that saves a vocally bland performance. "Life Goes On" is suitably laid back and marked nicely by a number of guest mic appearances. It's catchy and piques your interest, something that the majority of this disc can't be bothered with.

For every moment that shines through, though, there is a "Grass Cloud," a song filled with effects and studio trickery for the sake of, well, effects and studio trickery. And for every musically damaging moment, there's a lyrical equal. "Talkin' the Truth" tries to be a socially conscious track that merely ends up droning. The truth hurts indeed.

As musicians, there's hardly a doubt that the All Stars have considerable skill. What's frustrating, then, is their reluctance to do anything new with it. Fans will look to this disc as a welcome addition; don't expect it to convert the rest. (Matt Despres)

Best of albums from Green Day and Barenaked Ladies

By Amanda Leigh Ross
The Lantern (Ohio State U.)

(U-WIRE) COLUMBUS, Ohio – Two popular but very different bands released "best of" albums this month, just in time for holiday shopping and gift giving.

Green Day's International Superhits! and Barenaked Ladies Disc One 1991-2001 both contain all the hit singles from the radio, two new songs each and are from the same label, Reprise Records. Green Day's album has two more songs than Barenaked Ladies' 19.

Green Day's sordid history dates all the way back to 1994 when Dookie, Green Day's third album, was released and the band was skyrocketed to fame with songs like "Longview," "Welcome to Paradise," "Basket Case," "When I Come Around" and "She", which are tracks three through seven on the album. Track eight, "J.A.R (Jason Andrew Relva)," was released on the Angus soundtrack and is not as widely known as most of the other songs on the album.

The rest of the songs on the album are from three other releases Insomniac, Nimrod and the recently released Warning.

"Barenaked Ladies first entered the public eye after entering and winning CFNY's Modern Music Search Contest," wrote Canadian editor of "Billboard" Larry LeBlanc in Barenaked Ladies, A History. The contest prize money helped finance Gordon, the band's first release, and since then Barenaked Ladies has produced five albums of original content and one live album Rock Spectacle, which could be seen as the band's first greatest hits album.

Disc One 1991-2001 contains all the American radio hits such as "One Week," "If I Had a $1,000,000" and "Pinch Me," but it also has songs from the albums that made Barenaked Ladies popular in Canada before American audiences really caught on.

The differences between the two albums has a lot to do with the differences between the bands. Barenaked Ladies has been around longer and has more work under its belt. Green Day has the distinguishment of being the first pop-punk band with a major record deal.

Though other bands, like Blink 182 and Sum 41, have filled the airwaves with the same basic sound and image as Green Day, Billie Joe, Mike Dirnt and Tre' Cool are the old fogies of the pop-punk movement and International Superhits! proves It, since no other band in its genre can put together a greatest hits album.

Barenaked Ladies has a sound and look that are pretty much its own, probably because nobody else wants it. Listeners either love 'em or hate 'em. Barenaked Ladies utilizes quirky, humorous lyrics and a large variety of instruments in its sound. Disc One 1991-2001 showcases this beautifully.

Green Day's album is for fans who like what they hear on the radio, with the exception of the two new songs and a few songs that have not been met with the same popularity as most of the band's work. For the most part, the album contains songs most of the radio-listening public already knows. Usually true fans already own these songs and probably think other songs on the albums are better anyway. These people should not bother buying this compilation.

Green Day's music is highly enjoyable, catchy and fun. This album is definitely for those who have, as of yet, not purchased a Green Day album but do enjoy its sound. It is always fun to pop in a CD and know almost all the words right away and this album can grant that pleasure.

Barenaked Ladies' CD would be a good buy for anyone who even slightly likes the band. Most fans, except for diehards, still do not own most of the bands six albums, and probably have not heard even the best of the songs from these early attempts.

Also, unlike Green Day's album, Barenaked Ladies' is packed with personal takes on everything from the band's first 10 years to singer and songwriter Steven Page's comments on each song in the album. Also, even though these songs are not already committed to memory, it will not take too long until it happens.

COURTESY OF SHORR BROTHERS

Green Day just releases a best-of album.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublet in Sunderland. Furnished. Negotiable. Call 253-5066 start immediately.

Florence 3 bedrooms $747 includes heat avail Dec. 1. No pets or smokers. ldsaito@earthlink.net

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

'89 Ford Taurus. Many new parts $600 413-330-3814

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment - Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more information. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

ROOMMATE WANTED

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 374-5832

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

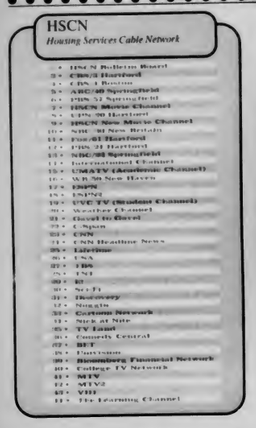
Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500



You Have Our Number!!!

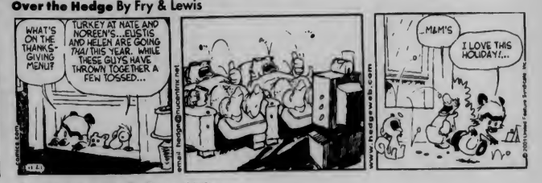
Advertise Today!!!

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Monty By Jim Meddick

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

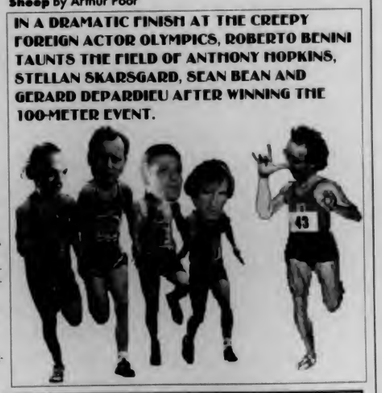
Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"You're not helping! Here I am drowning, and you're describing the water!"

-Jack Nicholson
As Good As It Gets



Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 44 LOW: 26	HIGH: 50 LOW: 27	HIGH: 51 LOW: 31

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Now is the time for you to reach a little further and move a little faster than usual. What you achieve today can become a long-term personal gain.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Put yourself in the lead today and you can keep it for some time. Miss this opportunity, and you'll be fighting to keep up!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Would you rather be an honest good guy, or a dishonest bad guy? The choice is up to you, particularly where romance is concerned.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You can learn an important lesson today by watching someone less fortunate than yourself a major obstacle. If he can do it, so can you!
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You own innocence may be threatened today, but the fact is that you will benefit from the acquisition of a little more practical knowledge.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your own sex appeal will serve you well today, but you must remember that there are those whose hearts are more in it – and you must take care!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your sense of the exotic is sure to serve you well today, particularly after dark, when options multiply and the need to please is greater.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A long-term visitor may appear on your doorstep today. If so, you must be sure to lay down the ground rules right.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't let someone else lead you in the wrong direction today. Be conservative where money is concerned. Discipline at home can save the day.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – How you feel is likely to be closely connected today with how you look. Confidence results from a carefully honed public image at this time.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It's important that you take pains to increase the safety level in all personal activities. One careless mistake can cost you today.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Now is the time for you to reach a little further and move a little faster than usual. What you achieve today can become a long-term personal gain.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

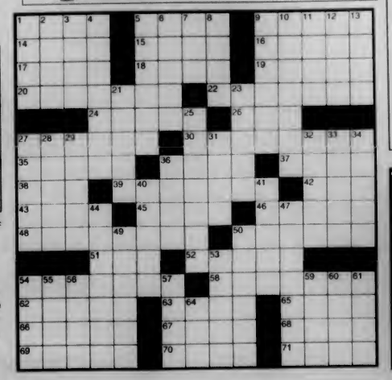
LUNCH

Jamaican Pulled Pork
Chef's Choice
Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)
Pasta Bar
Spaghetti with Sauces
Grill Station
Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
Hamburgers
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
International
Caesar Salad with Shrimp
Hampshire & Worcester close at 2:00 P.M. for Thanksgiving Break.

DINNER

Chef's Choice
Thai Seitan (vegan)
Pasta Bar
Spaghetti with Sauces
Grill Station
Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
Hamburgers
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Franklin & Berkshire close at 6:30 P.M. for Thanksgiving Break.

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 Turn over
5 Pats on
9 Sky-high
14 Floppy filler
15 Jane Austen novel
16 Contributor
17 Hair curler
18 Doe's offspring
19 Color of lapis lazuli
20 Wine servers
22 Absorbs
24 Glide
26 Rickey ingredient
27 Concur
30 3-D photograph
35 Exude moisture
36 Not any
37 Lie up
38 Apple seed
39 Sound systems
42 Comedian Conway
43 Bearded flower
45 Depot info
46 Tenet
48 Nonsense
50 Really listings
51 Rocker part
52 Wish for 54 Papyrus
58 Inhale
62 Ouzo flavor
63 "Fernando" group
65 Banshee's cry
66 Climbs the ladder
67 Garden implements
68 Smashing serves
69 Hit the trail
70 Tacks on
71 Luke Skywalker's guru

DOWN
1 Bank watchdog org.
2 Pasternak heroine
3 "Take — leave"
4 Remedy
5 Overcome
6 Gather together
7 Luxury car
8 Grit
9 Ballet duet
10 Cough drop
11 Disagreeable task
12 Safe refuge
13 Uno y dos
21 Typeface choices
23 Ice hut
25 Treatment
27 Savory jelly
28 Eddy
29 Cuttlefish genus
31 Minerals
32 Hourly fees
33 Put — save
34 Written reminders
36 Catherine — -Jones
40 Semesters
41 Cross the goal line
44 Less crowded
47 Escape
49 Most loyal
50 Nag at 53 Receded
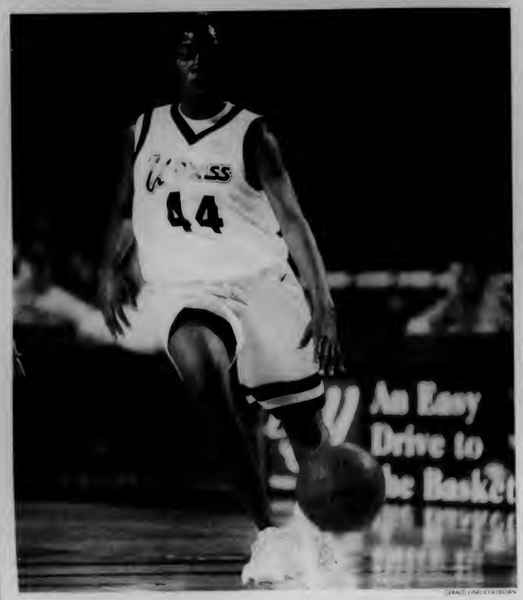
54 Officer's stripes
55 Apartment
56 Actress Bonet
57 Joka response
59 Burrito cousin
60 Sped off
61 Move lioness
64 Stingy physique

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

G	O	N	G			L	E	I		S	W	A	P
A	L	E	R	T		S	O	O	N		L	A	T	H
F	I	B	E	R		T	O	S	S		A	L	S	O
F	O	R	G	I	V	E	N		P	I	G	L	E	T
			V	I	M		R	I	M		S	A	O
S	O	F	T	E	N		W	A	R	P	S
S	K	E	E	T		M	A	R	E	S	H	I	F	T
T	R	E	E		D	I	C	E	D		O	L	E	O
S	A	L	T	L	I	C	K	S		S	P	E	L	L
			H	E	N	R	Y		T	U	S	S	L	E
M	A	N		N	E	O		Q	U	E
C	R	A	V	A	T		O	U	T	D	A	T	E	D
C	O	D	E		T	U	B	A		E	L	A	T	E
O	M	E	N		E	N	I	D		S	P	I	R	E
Y	A	R	D		S	E	E		S	L	E	D

12-5-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff



Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Esther Danzig
Production Staff	Mike Kulak, Andea Mangini

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, November 21, 2001 | 8

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Cleo Foster (4 points, 4 assists) and the rest of the women's hoop team suffered a devastating overtime defeat last night at the hands of St. Peter's.

Amherst heartbreaker

Minutewomen pecked away by Peahen squad

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

So far on the season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has lost two completely different games.

In the first contest, the Minutewomen suffered through complete humiliation, getting blown out by Holy Cross, 68-42. Last night at the William D. Mullins Center, however, UMass looked like it had the game under control, only to watch it slip just out of reach, as St. Peter's took home the 56-52 overtime victory.

St Peter's	56
UMass	52

With the loss, the Maroon and White dropped to 0-2 (0-0 Atlantic 10) on the year, with tough out-of-conference contests against Rice and Clemson looming on the horizon over Thanksgiving break.

"We played very hard," frustrated UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We just missed too many easy shots and didn't do a lot of little things. When you don't make your free throws (6-for-13) and when you turn the ball over (25 times on the night), you're not going to win.

"We were rattled," the eleventh-year coach added. "The team is still learning how to compose itself."

At the 9:24 mark of the second half, freshman point guard Katie Nelson fired a nifty pass to Nekole Smith in the lane for the bucket and the foul. This gave the Minutewomen a 40-31 lead, and at this point it looked like they would be able to get into the win column.

From that point on, however, freshman forward Tyiana Sears took the game over for the Peahens, with nine of her team-high 13 points coming over the final eight minutes.

"We had a couple of breakdowns on defense," O'Brien said. "And that Spears kid hit a couple of big shots. You have got to give her credit – she's a freshman and she wasn't afraid to step up."

A Sears bank shot gave St. Peter's the 47-45 lead with only 31 seconds left, but UMass center Ien Butler was able to answer with only 10.6 ticks on the clock, backing down her defender and drilling the right-handed layup to send the game into OT.

Butler was solid all night for the Maroon and White, despite missing a few easy shots down the stretch, totaling 18 points and nine rebounds.

"We set out to try and stop Butler by doubling down low," Peahen coach Mike Granelli said. "But we weren't overly effective."

In the extra session, the Minutewomen took a short-lived lead on a Cleo Foster 17-foot jump shot from the right wing, but Felicia Harris was able to answer for St. Peter's with a hard drive to the hoop. It was only Harris' third field goal of the night, however, as the normally reliable scorer struggled to a 3-for-15 shooting performance for a mere six points.

The Peahens took the lead for good when Sue Porter hit a pair from the line with 2:22 remaining, and from that point on, UMass would fail to score for the rest of the contest.

Down by three with seven seconds left, the Maroon and White watched its last hopes slip away when a Nelson three rimmed out.

Midway through the first frame, the Minutewomen fell behind 20-14 after a Harris score. From that point on, though, the Peahens would not score for the next 8:34, and would watch as UMass used a 10-0 run over that stretch to turn the game around.

At the half, the teams went into the locker room with the score 24-22 in the Maroon and White's favor.

"We knew we had to come out and make a run," UMass forward Amber Sneed said, who totaled 12 points on the night. "We just couldn't sit back on our heels."

Throughout the contest, both teams struggled offensively, as St. Peter's could only manage a paltry 36.1 shooting percentage. In contrast, the Minutewomen shot the ball better (42 percent), but killed themselves by committing 25 turnovers for the second straight game.

It was an improvement over the Holy Cross debacle, though, and O'Brien felt that her team could get to where it wants to be if only a few corrections are made.

"We need to improve our shot selection and handling the basketball," she said. "And obviously our free throw shooting. Once these things happen, it will mend everything."

UMass next gets the chance to turn things around on Friday night against Rice at the Mullins Center.

Turnovers prove to be name-of-the-game for UMass thus far

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

A squad can't turn the ball over and expect to win many games in college basketball.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (0-2) has been a prime example of this in its first two games of the 2001-02 campaign, committing 50 turnovers in the two losses.

Game two for this year's squad against St. Peter's was as tough turnover-wise as Friday's 26-point loss to Holy Cross. Each game saw the Minutewomen commit 25 turnovers, with 11 coming in yesterday's second half, as the Maroon and White blew a nine point lead with nine minutes remaining.

After Holy Cross caused problems for UMass with a trapping full court press, St. Peter's played a similar style defense with similar results against Head Coach Joanie O'Brien's team.

Not that pressing is anything out of the ordinary for the Peahens this year.

"We press a lot," St. Peter's Head Coach Mike Granelli said. "Sometimes just to energize [the team]. We did cause a good amount of turnovers. We have tried to gamble a little bit to compensate for not being the strongest offensive team."

The dice rolling paid off in the end for the New Jersey squad. The Peahens scored 11 points off turnovers on the evening. If not for the team's horrific .22-for-61 shooting performance, it could have been much, much worse.

Granelli pointed out that the defense saved the game for his squad, which shot just 36 percent from the floor.

"We played reasonably good defense," the 30-year head coaching veteran said. "We struggled, but we kept ourselves in the game with our defense.

"I wasn't overly pleased with what some of us were doing, but they are giving us the effort," Granelli added. His team made 14 steals in the contest.

O'Brien expects to see more and more pressing from future opponents until her squad can consistently break the press – which she sees coming in the near future.

"If we keep turning it over [we'll see the press from everyone]," O'Brien said. "We just have to be able to handle the ball better with a little more discipline."

After a lackluster turnover-to-assist ratio against the Crusaders (13-to-21), the UMass backcourt improved the ratio (13-to-8) but not the total number of turnovers.

The number of turnovers credited to the guards in yesterday's game was somewhat inflated, however, due to some post players' inability to move to the pass. This allowed the Peahen defender a chance to tip the ball away — thus giving the turnover to the passer, not the player that really made the mistake.

The Minutewomen will face two quality opponents this weekend, Rice and Clemson. In order to have any chance in either game, they will have to cut their average turnovers-per-game in half. Both the Owls and the Lady Tigers will likely take greater advantage of the mistakes made by the Maroon and White than St. Peter's managed to yesterday.

Hockey scratches out Catamounts Sends UVM back north with loss

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Sometimes you can play really well for most of the game and still come out on the losing end, as UMass learned in its two previous games, both one-goal losses to Lowell.

UMass	2
Vermont	0

In last night's game against Vermont at the Springfield Civic Center, the Minutemen were on the other end of that same lesson, as the Catamounts leveled the ice, but still came out losers, after UMass put home two goals in the first period and held on for a 2-0 win.

"I thought we played pretty well in the first period," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "But I thought we were too soft up the middle and on defense until the third period."

Tim Turner put the Minutemen on the board just 1:11 into the opening frame. UMass' leading scorer with nine points coming into the game, Turner picked off a pass deep in the Vermont zone, skated in on goal, deked to his backhand and slid the puck underneath a sprawling Shawn Conschafter.

Senior Martin Miljko made the score 2-0 less than five minutes later, with a power play tally. As UMass' five on three power play expired, Miljko fired a pass from Toni Soderholm past Conschafter's glove and into the back of the net.

"We made two big mistakes," Vermont coach Mike Gilligan said. "It was tough fighting back from that."

The second period of play saw a goaltending exhibition from both keepers. Conschafter and UMass tender Mike Johnson made ten saves each in the middle frame.

The UVM keeper turned back numerous chances on a UMass power play to begin the period, including a left circle one-timer from Thomas Pock and a goal-mouth chance by Greg Mauldin.

After the Maroon and White extra man opportunity, it was Mike Johnson's turn to stone the opposition. Johnson made three consecutive goal-crease stops on a UVM power play, before sniffing out a five on three for the Catamounts.

Kelly Sickavish caused the initial opportunity with a holding penalty at 5:15, while Darcy King made it a two-man disadvantage with a slashing call just 27 seconds later.

Johnson ended up out-dueling his counterpart in net, as he recorded his fourth career shutout and his first in two seasons, with 26 saves on 26 shots. His last shutout came on January 22, 2000 in a 0-0 tie with Hockey East foe Merrimack.

"I wasn't happy with my performance last game," said Johnson of the 3-2 loss to Lowell. "This was a chance to reestablish myself as the go-to-guy in net."

Turner's goal, which turned out to be the game-winner, is his fifth on the year and makes him the first Minuteman to reach double digits in points with 11.

Miljko, on the other hand, recorded his third tally of the season, all of which have come at the Springfield Civic Center.

With the out-of-conference win, the Minutemen move within one victory of the .500 mark at 5-6. UMass has already eclipsed its non-conference success from last season with its third victory away from Hockey East.

"We really struggled out of league last season," Cahoon said. "For whatever reason we've had some success this year."

Vermont, on the other hand, falls to 1-6-1 on the young season.

The Minutemen's next contest comes after Thanksgiving when the Mass Attack travels to Dartmouth to take on the Big Green in another non-conference match-up.

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Scott Horvath and the UMass hockey team celebrated Thanksgiving two days early with a 2-0 win over Vermont at the Springfield Civic Center.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 54 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, November 26, 2001

Dylan was at the Fleet Center. Check out our review in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The UMass men's hoop team is now 2-0. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Second Columbine averted, police say

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Three students were arrested over the weekend for plotting a Columbine-like assault on New Bedford High School.

The students, two of whom were juveniles and 17-year-old Eric McKeehan were arrested when a custodial worker working for New Bedford High School found a letter Tuesday detailing a plot to set off mass explosives at the school and shoot and kill fellow students.

Police in a televised statement explained that the three had planned for the attack to be "bigger than Columbine" and that it was supposed to conclude will all three ending their own lives.

The letter specified that the attack would occur on a Monday but did not give a date.

Area police first began to look into the case when a student warned them on Oct. 17 that McKeehan and some of his friends had been making references to possibly blowing up the school or harming other students. Police later found materials that could be used to make a bomb, but lacked evidence to arrest any of the three.

When the letter was discovered police entered and seized materials used to make bombs, shells used in shotguns and photographs of the three holding weapons from their homes.

Thirty-eight police officers brought in five bomb-sniffing dogs yesterday to look for explosives within the school but found nothing. Police declared the school safe for students to return to.

The high school students now face charges of conspiracy to commit murder, conspiracy to commit assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, and possession of ammunition. They will be arraigned today. McKeehan is being held on $10,000 bail, while the other two youths are being held at $5,000 respectively.

The police have also been in touch with two other students whom they believed were assisting McKeehan and others in their attempts. They have not yet been brought into custody and police maintain that they are not a threat.

The police are also continuing to interview additional individuals that may or may not be involved in the attempt. Police will not comment on the number of potential conspirators only to say that the number is relatively low.

The school has an enrollment of 3,300 students in the approximately 100,000 city of New Bedford. It explains in its mission statement that both administrators and educators alike are committed to providing students with a safe environment in which to learn.

"To this end, the administration, faculty, and staff provide a safe and secure environment in which all students can learn," the mission statement said. "The school staff, parents, and the community share the mission of helping students become responsible and well rounded citizens."

The attempted attack on the school is being compared to the incident that occurred in 1999 in Littleton, Colo. Two students, Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris entered Columbine High School armed and wearing black trench coats and opened fire on the student body. More than 20 people were injured and the body count totaled 15, including both alleged killers.

Following that incident has been a rash of other school shooting all over the country. Seven months after Columbine a 12-year-old boy from Deming, N.M. shot and killed a female classmate during lunch recess. He allegedly fired a single shot from a .22 caliber handgun.

A month later, a 13-year-old boy from Fort Gibson, Okla. arrived at his school and opened fire on his classmates using his father's handgun. Five students were injured in the altercation.

A more recent shooting occurred on March 5 of this year when a 15-year-old boy opened fire on his classmates with a revolver at his high school in Santee, Calif. The student killed two of his classmates and injured 13 others.

Information from Boston.com was used in this story.

COURTESY NBHS

Police say New Bedford averted a tragedy when three students who planned to blow up their high school were arrested. The Whaling City school has an enrollment of over 3,000 students.

Professor studies salmon

By Emily Quirk
Collegian Correspondent

Paul Barten, an associate professor of forest resource conservation at the University of Massachusetts, will participate in a National Research Council (NRC) study on Atlantic salmon populations in Maine.

Barten's responsibilities will include two years participation on a multidisciplinary committee, which focuses on several causes of the decline of salmon population, in rivers located in down east Maine.

"Paul Barten is nationally known as an outstanding forest hydrologist with years of experience both in research and in problem solving," said William McComb, head of the department of natural resources conservation. "Clearly, his experience and national reputation led to his appointment to the NRC committee."

Barten said that the range of potential threats to this endangered species varies from commercial farming withdrawal of irrigation-water away from these rivers, to the intermingling of commercial fish (that escape from aquaculture farms) and the wild salmon. Interbreeding increases the potentiality for disease transmission between the two species. What's more, Barten says, is that these rivers have been "over fished for years."

"[There are] a dozen interrelated causes regarding the decline of wild salmon," Barten said. "The difficulty is untangling these problems to find several integrated solutions."

The commercial blueberry farms take water from numerous rivers, creating less space within the waterway, therefore affecting the temperature and the amount of oxygen in the rivers.

"The little things start to add up," Barten explained, making it necessary for groups such as NRC, the state of Maine, Atlantic Salmon Unlimited and

Turn to BARTEN page 3

National Science Foundaton awards two research grants

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has been spotlighted for its science and technology prowess among research institutions. Two separate teams of researchers have received grants from the National Science Foundation for furthering the progress and study of nanotechnology.

Nanotechnology involves the creation of new materials or devices with highly specialized properties or uses by controlling the assembly of building blocks as small as a billionth of a meter, according to a UMass press release.

The two teams will be studying different aspects of this groundbreaking technology. One group will be looking at developing arrays of nanowires that could eventually lead to ultra fine resolutions on computer screens. The other will be studying the formation of materials with pores of molecular dimensions, which are currently used in chemical processes such as catalysis and gas separation.

"A year and a half ago, people in the NSF and other federal agencies realized that they're all sorts of neat things being invented with nanotechnology," Mark Tuominen, a physics professor and lead Principle Investigator for one of the teams, said. "The US should support more research to keep the US ahead in the world."

Joining Tuominen on his team are Thomas Russel from the Polymer Science department, Jaques Penelle and Tom McCarthy of the science and engineering department, and Vince Rotello from the Chemistry department. Six graduate students from different science fields who have yet to be chosen also will assist them.

These particular scientists have been working together for the last three years. They had a similar grant from the NSF that started the project. "The new team grant allows us to take it to the next level," Tuominen said.

Tuominen's team will focus on nanofabricaton-the science of developing structures so small that they can only be seen with high-magnification electron microscopes. They hope to make nanostructures by self-assembly that form arrays of magnetic nanowires patterned together to make a stencil. Those stencils will then be used for many purposes, such as the storage of computer data.

"By using [self-assembly], we're mimicking what nature does, like how a cell membrane is put together," Tuominen said. "The way data is stored on a computer is magnetically. We'll have an array [of nanomagnets], up to one trillion on every square inch, which may allow more data on a disk."

The arrays can be to create extremely concentrated storage of data, such as the storing of 25 full-length, DVD-quality movies on a disc the size of a quarter. The team hopes that with more development, the technology will be ready within five to 10 years.

"We use that same polymer stencil to grow wires to be used for field emission display property," Tuominen said. "The display will be thin as paper, cheaper to make than today's laptops. [It's only] five to 10 years in the future. We're trying to invent ways to bring about production like this."

The other research team is lead by Peter Monson and Michael Tsapatsis of the chemical engineering department and Scott Auerbach of the chemistry department. They are working in conjunction with Dionisios Vlachos and Raul Lobo from the University of Delaware. Other UMass team members include Efrosini Kokkoli and Jorn Sherman of chemical engineering and Murugappan Muthukumar of polymer science and engineering.

This group will rely on laboratory experiments and theory to study nonporous solids, according to the press release. Nanoporous solids are materials with regular, perfectly sized pores that serve as precise filters, allowing some molecules to pass through, while screening others out. The team plans to explore how tiny building blocks assemble to form crystalline solids and they can be used to form new materials with advanced properties.

This technology holds the potential

Turn to GRANTS page 3

Pentagon: Marines not on ground, but Globe Hawk in air

SGT. JOSEPH R. CHENELLY/USMC

Commandant of the Marine Corps General James L. Jones addresses the 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable). The brigade is embarked on three ships supporting Operation Enduring Freedom.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The war in Afghanistan continued while many Americans were celebrating the Thanksgiving holiday.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld traveled to Fort Bragg, N.C., to visit with Special Forces troops. Rumsfeld spoke to reporters on Wednesday, and said that while there are Marines in the area of operations, he would not comment on their deployment to Afghanistan.

"I have absolutely nothing to say on that. We don't discuss plans or potentials about what we might or might not due," Rumsfeld said. "Just to make it clear as to what's going on, what's going on is that we continue to work towards our three goals of dealing with the al Qaeda completely, dealing with the leadership of Taliban, and seeing that Afghanistan is not a haven for terrorists."

There are currently Marine Expeditionary Units deployed on three Navy ships that are Special Operations capable. If activated in a combat role, the Marines would add significant firepower to the war.

"Marines are very good at fighting," General Peter Pace, the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said. "And if [field commander] General [Tommy] Franks wants fighters on the ground and he puts his Marines in, he will have what he wants."

Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz explained how these troops operate.

"They are Special Operations capable units, but there's a differentiation between the very specialized capabilities of our Special Operations Command and the types of capabilities that your Marines bring to the battlefield," Wolfowitz said. "Marines would be more in an area coverage and they would be capable of providing not only terminal guidance to our aircraft but, in fact, on closing with and killing the enemy."

While Northern Alliance troops, aided by U.S. Special Forces, have made significant gains in territory, Rumsfeld cautions that the cities where the Taliban is holed up aren't the only areas to worry about.

"They are in a couple of enclaves right now, large enclaves in Kundus and in Kandahar," Rumsfeld said. "They are also in a number of smaller enclaves spotted all around the country, and there are certainly individuals, we are sure, hiding in caves and tunnels and we intend to pursue them."

Pace explained that the military had a specific way of dealing with caves.

"Our specialized approach to caves and tunnels is to put 500-pound bombs in the entrance," Pace said.

Reports that a new reconnaissance vehicle has made its battlefield debut have been verified. The Global Hawk, an unmanned flying vehicle, is being used to supplement the Predator reconnaissance vehicle.

Changes in the weather have resulted in several lost Predators. Officials hope the Global Hawk will prove itself in the Afghanistan winter.

"We now have Global Hawk, which is a new element, and helpful because of winter weather coming and the difficulties the Predator has," Rumsfeld said.

"With regard to Global Hawk, yes, it is in theater; it is flying. It is still very

Turn to WAR page 3

COURTESY DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Global Hawk, the Department of Defense's newest reconnaissance aircraft, flies over Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., on Feb. 28, 1998, during its first flight.

International Briefs

By Jennifer Eastwood and S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Switzerland – The Crossair plane crash of flight 3597 left flames, 24 casualties, and nine survivors (two still in critical condition) on Saturday, marking the third Swiss tragedy in recent months.

Police are unsure of the cause of the five-person crew, 28-passenger plane crash. However, it was reported that the plane, on flight from Berlin, Germany to Zurich International airport, went down in severe weather conditions and had been coming in low over the forest treetops. Officials do not suspect the plane had been attacked.

Airport officials reported no abnormalities in communication with the flight crew until the plane attempted landing on a runway without a fully automated landing guidance system and used only for night flights (so as to adhere to an agreement limiting flight noise over Germany). At that moment, the plane abruptly vanished on their radar screens, and the crash followed.

"I was walking the dog when I saw the plane. It appeared to be flying low," local government official Franz Brunner recently reported on state television. "Then the sky turned bright orange, as if there was a sudden ball of fire."

Upon impact, the plane's tail end separated from the rest of the plane, allowing for an escape route for the survivors. Rescue workers recovered ten of the bodies shortly after the 97-seat plane went down, while the remaining 14 dead were only affirmed so after an extensive search.

"It was like a horror film, a nightmare," survivor Myriam Wettstein reported to Tele24 afterwards. "I had no time to be scared. I was just very cold. I thought, 'I have to get out of here. The plane can explode'."

Currently, officials have ceased all nighttime use of the plane's runway, while rescue workers have reported finding the flight recorder in the wreckage. Crossair officials said flight 3597 marks the first crash of a four-engine Jumbino Avro RJ-100 built by the British company, BAE Systems.

"It's a horrible scene and my feelings are indescribable," Crossair Chief Executive Officer Andre Dose told reporters after visiting the crash site, noting that the plane was last inspected on Nov. 16 and plans for a "thorough maintenance operation" this coming January were underway.

However, this crash is the second plane wreckage for Crossair in the past two years, the other being a smaller plane, a Saab340, which left all ten people on board dead.

The pilot, who had over 20 years of flying experience, co-pilot, and Coca-Cola voice-over advertiser and dual German-United States citizen Melanie Thornton, all perished in flight 3597 crash.

Ten citizens of Switzerland, 13 Germans, three Israelis, and citizens from the countries of Spain, Austria, Ghana, Canada, Sweden were all aboard the plan.

"We are absolutely speechless after being dragged from one catastrophe to the next," Switzerland's President Moritz Leuenberger said. "Our grief is mixed with bitterness because it never seems to end."

Other tragedies to hit Switzerland in recent months have included a Zug resident's shooting spree in September, leaving 15 people dead, and a head-on truck Gotthard tunnel collision, leaving 11 people dead, which resulted in the closing of a major connecting route between northern and southern Europe.

Japan – Japanese royals and economists are eagerly awaiting the birth of Crown Princess Masako's first child. Economists are hoping that the birth will boost national moral and, in turn, the economy. The royals are praying for a son, since a male heir has not been born into the dynasty since 1965, when the current Emperor's youngest son was born.

Princess Masako's first pregnancy ended in a miscarriage in 1999 after being highly publicized by the media. Both the royals and the media have kept this pregnancy surprisingly quiet respecting the royal couple's privacy. The quiet will end, however, with the birth of the child. Media publications across Japan plan to have non-stop coverage of the child, especially if it is a male heir.

The Japanese dynasty is the world's oldest monarchy and maintains strict patriarchal laws, allowing only males to inherit the throne. If Princess Masako's child is male he will be second in line to the Chrysanthemum Throne, after his father the Crown Prince Naruhito.

Since there have been no male heirs in recent years the debate over whether to change the patriarchal laws, and allow a female sovereign. Japan is one of the few monarchs left that does not accept female heirs as possible sovereigns.

To ensure the Princes' comfort furniture from the Togu palace has been moved to the hospital sweet. In addition the palace reports that medical staff are already on hand twenty-four hours a day in case of emergency.

Once the child is born celebration will begin and his or her Grandfather will name it. Upon arrival the child will face a serious of rituals and traditions. These traditions begin with the presentation of the ceremonial samurai sword from the emperor, the baby's grandfather.

The following week the baby will be bathed in a cedar tub by a courtier while classic Chinese texts wishing the child good health and prosperity are read aloud. On the same day, the emperor will announce the child's name.

Economists are looking at the positive news to span an upward trend in spending, and a dramatic rise in the value of baby related shares and anything else royal. The Japanese stock market has suffered recently and experts are looking at every possible way to improve the economy.

South Africa – The Pretoria High Court in Johannesburg is set today to review the testimony of Bunisiwe Maqungo, whose daughter, Nomazizi, died at nine months old due to an infection of the HIV virus, while AIDS activists and pediatricians of the Treatment Action Center sue the country's government in hopes to push it to dispense the drug nevirapine, given to avert transmission of the HIV virus from mother to child during labor, to all HIV-positive women.

Manqungo, age 29 and now an AIDS activist herself, testified that nevirapine, administered during labor, could have saved her daughter's life. Instead, she said, her daughter died of AIDS after spending the majority of her short life in hospitals seeking treatment.

"I was not open about my [HIV-positive] status, but after she [Nomazizi] died, I decided to say something... to save other children from experiencing the same thing she did. I'm very angry. It's very hard to look at an HIV-positive child getting sick and dying," Manqungo said. "These babies could have been saved by our own government."

Thus far, the government has refused to distribute nevirapine, regardless of statistics showing that the country is reported to have 200 babies born with the HIV virus each day. Nevirapine studies have show that number can be reduced by almost half if the drug were to be administered to all HIV-positive women during labor.

Furthermore, Boehringer Ingelheim, a German pharmaceutical company, has made the offer to the South African government to distribute the drug for free.

However, the government has not currently accepted this offer because, according to director-general of South Africa's Health Department Ayanda Ntsalub, it is first dispensing the drug through a small pilot program and monitoring its effects.

This has brought the South African government under much criticism by AIDS activists and doctors, including the Treatment Action Center which is suing the government, who have accused them of not being aggressive enough in dealing with a virus infects 11 percent of the country's population and was reported as the leading cause of death for

Turn to BRIEFS, page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargiulo Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Sinsawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Dunzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

Please join us this holiday season for our Faculty & Staff Appreciation Event to thank you for all your hard work and support throughout the year.
For this special event, we are pleased to offer you an additional 10% discount, on all regular and sale-priced merchandise.
Bring this invitation to receive your special discount. Choose holiday gifts for everyone on your list!
Enjoy complimentary refreshments while you shop.
*excluding textbooks, software, and professional reference where applicable.

When: November 27 & November 28, 2001, 8:30 a.m.–5:00 p.m.
Where: University Store and Textbook Annex, Campus Center

■ grants

continued from page 1

for future development of extremely precise lasers, sensitive sensors, and small-scale optical and electronic devices. It also has possible implications in the petrochemical industry, which relies on nanoporous solids for catalysis and separation.

The two grants will give approximately $2,250,00 to the teams. Tuominen's team will receive $1,250,000 over five years, whereas Monson's team will receive $1 million over four years. Many schools vied for the NSF's attention, but it was the science going on at UMass that finally brought the money in.

"Many other groups tried, but our university got the grants," Tuominen said. "That says a lot about the work that's going on here at UMass Amherst."

Every other week, the Nanoscale Interdisciplinary Research Team (NIRT) meets to discuss the progress and learn about what the other departments do. According to Tuominen, having team members from different science departments in the university brings experiences and perspectives to the project that help everyone learn more about it.

"You basically need all these things to be integrated to be able to make it," Tuominen said. "It makes sense, it's exactly what goes on in a company-bring people together to solve problems as a system. It's essential to bring people together."

Both projects not only bring together faculty from diverse backgrounds, they also have substantial educational components. They create new graduate courses, industrial internships for graduate and postdoctoral students, and engaging undergraduates in the research process.

"We're trying to go further to create useful things," Tuominen said. "Invent stuff here at UMass and then teach other about it so it can really be used.

"There's a lot of learning going on, but that's what research is all about."

■ Barten

continued from page 1

the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, to aid the dangerously low populace.

Barten has helped establish the Watershed Exchange and Technology Program at UMass. According to McComb, this course, works alongside the Forest Service, and is an outreach project that brings information to managers of public watersheds throughout the Northeast.

Before moving to UMass in 1997, Paul Barten taught at Yale University for nine years. He has written extensively on land use impact and forest/wetland hydrology, along with forest management in municipal watersheds, and more specifically in water quality and quantity.

■ war

continued from page 1

much in the research and development phase of its development," Pace said. "But in fact, this theater now provides us a tremendous laboratory in which to use it, so it is flying and it will be part of our ability to collect information and intelligence."

Since it is still in the test stages, Rumsfeld explained that it would not be heavily used.

"It will not be flying every day," Rumsfeld said. "It will have to be managed as a demonstration model."

The Pentagon also confirmed reports that a U.S. helicopter suffered a "hard landing."

U.S. Central Command released the news on Nov. 21 that the helicopter had suffered damage but that it was not brought down by enemy fire.

Four crewmembers were injured in the incident, which is being called an accident by U.S. Central Command. None of the injuries are life threatening, Secretary Rumsfeld said.

"It was a small helicopter and I believe we had a broken arm and a broken leg and a couple of back sprains or strains, and they were lifted out relatively promptly by a C-130," Rumsfeld said.

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

SGT. JOSEPH R. CHENELLY/USMC

A deck handler with the 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable) directs a AV-8B Harrier pilot at the beginning of the USS Peleliu's runway just before the jet takes off for a mission over Afghanistan supporting Operation Enduring Freedom, Nov. 2, 2001.

■ briefs

continued from page 2

adults last year.

Ntsaluba reported that the government's plan is simply a "more cautious" approach than the Treatment Action Center and other activists wish to see.

The center's lawsuit against the government asserts that the government is in fact prohibiting women and children from the constitutional rights to health care owed them by rejecting to supply nevirapine.

Pholokgolo Ramothwala, a spokesperson of the Treatment Action Center, told reporters that Ntsaluba's claim to a "more cautious" approach is not unneeded due the to fact that tests have already been done on the drug and found to indeed prevent the virus transfer during labor.

"[The South African Health Ministry] has been influenced by [President Thabo] Mbeki's thinking on HIV-AIDS, trying to write it off as nothing," Ramothwala said, further explaining that Mbeki has previously expressed doubts on the link between the HIV virus and AIDS disease by stressing how poverty and malnutrition could also add to the disease's spreading.

"The government has options," Ramothwala said. "It just does not want to use them."

Sierra Leone – United Nations (U.N.) military officials report that Sierra Leonean rebels and militia are stalling a disarmament program by the U.N. in an effort to fill their own pockets with vast quantities of the regions diamonds.

The diamond rich region has been involved in a bitter ten-year civil war in part because of the wealth their fields have the possibility to yield.

In addition to stalling by rebels, U.N. peacekeepers are slowing the process by trying to take home as many diamonds for themselves as possible.

A senior U.N. military official reported to CNN on Saturday that "political demands by local rebel commanders were a ploy to delay handing over control of the territory to government force under the peace process."

Disarmament in the diamond town of Tongo Field is due to begin on Monday.

"The fact of the matter is that the RUF [Rebel Revolutionary United Front] in Tongo Field has carried out extensive illicit diamond mining and they are delaying the disarmament process," reported the official to CNN reporters.

Members of the Civil Defense Forces militia have also been disrupting disarmament in order to continue the mining of their regions diamonds.

At the same time the U.N. has succeeded in disarming over 35,000 civil war fighters, 4,000 of which were children, to date this year. U.N. officials plan on the process being complete by December.

In response, rebel leaders in Tongo have said they will not disarm until Foday Sankoh and other senior rebels are set free. So far the U.N. has hidden the whereabouts of Sankoh and what they plan to do with him. It has been proposed that they will hold onto him until an international court is set up to hear war crime charges.

Ignoring recent disagreements the latest disarmament program has gone further than any previous attempt to halt the Civil War in Sierra Leone. If disarmament does succeed it will offer the former British colony its most secure chance for lasting peace in over a decade.

Nepal – A weekend uprising by Maoists in Nepal has left four more police and their driver dead, moving the death toll to more than forty.

The weekend attacks brought a four-month cease-fire to an end and have triggered an emergency meeting of the government to coordinate a response.

The latest ambush took place in the village of Kalidamar in the Surkhet district, approximately three hundred miles west of Katmandu. The Deputy Inspector General of Police, Amar Singh Shah, said that five men were killed instantly when the police car hit a landmine and was then intercepted by rebels.

In the truck were 46 people. Most were police members of the new Armed Police Force, a paramilitary unit set up specifically to fight Maoist rebels like those responsible for the attack.

The rebels a day earlier had launched attacks in over a dozen of Nepal's districts, killing over 40 people, including 23 policemen, 14 soldiers, and three civilians. The worst attacks were in the Dang and Syangja districts. Minister Khum Bahadur Khadka said Saturday he believed seventy to eighty rebels were killed in these attacks.

Khadka believed the rebel's weapons were looted from the army, while rebels also took more than two million in cash and jewelry from local banks in Dang and Syangja.

The Nepalenese government, led by Prime Minister Sher Bahadur Deuba held an emergency meeting Sunday to rule on whether to declare the Maoists "terrorists," which would allow emergency rule in some of the worst affected districts.

The meeting did not come to a conclusion, and will continue on Monday. However, spokesman Arjun Narsingh reported to CNN that the party had given the government a directive "to do as necessary, remaining within the bounds of the constitution" to fight the rebels.

The Defense Ministry said late Saturday that it has ordered the army to deploy in the Dang district, one of those hardest hit by the rebel's attacks.

The Maoist rebellion has been ongoing since 1996, since then over 1,800 people have been killed in the rebellions.

Briefs were compiled from CNN News.

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

You earn one, two, or three credits during January Winter Break.

CIS 125-1	Internet Literacy, 1 cr, weekdays, Jan. 7-11
DAN 101-1	Introduction to Dance, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan. 3-23
ENG 101-1	English Comp. I: Expository Writing, 3 cr, weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
ENG 112-1	English Comp. II: Exploring Literature, 3 cr, weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
HIS 105-10	History of the American People to 1865, Saturday & Sunday, 12:30-6 p.m.
MAT 142-1	Mathematical Modeling, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23 and Feb 8-10
PSY 101-1	Principles of Psychology, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23
SPA 111-1	Spanish Skills Practice I, 2 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPA 112-1	Spanish Skills Practice II, 2 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPE 101-1	Oral Communication: Public Speaking, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23

Registration is now in progress through January 2, 2002
Call (413) 775-1803 for more information. Visit our website: www.gcc.mass.edu

GREENFIELD Community College

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Show some pride

UMass a great school

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is the flagship institution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and it is time people started realizing that.

Anybody who hails from outside the Bay State knows that the in-state perception of UMass as a safety school is wrong. It is near sickening to listen to what some Mass. Natives have to say about their school, but it comes as no surprise.

UMass lies in the American hot bed of private institutions. Just within the Commonwealth borders one can find schools with prestigious reputations such as Harvard, Boston College, Tufts and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It also lies right in the heart of the Ivy League region where schools such as Princeton and Yale reign supreme.

Granted these institutions are truly great places to get an education, but there are opportunities available at UMass that cannot be found anywhere else.

The state school that everyone loves to forget about is annually ranked as one of the top public universities in the country and it offers programs and a faculty that are second to none.

Talk to people from outside the Commonwealth about UMass and the reaction you will receive will likely be somewhere along the lines of "that's a great school," or "what a nice place to go to college."

But when conversing with Bay state natives, many times you will find negativity. It's understandable that UMass' reputation is not on par with that of Harvard's or Tufts, especially when it is significantly easier for in-state students to be accepted, but that takes nothing away from the quality of the education.

Take a look at state schools around the country such as Ohio State, Georgia and Mississippi and you see a student body that revels in the opportunities offered by its public university. These are schools that can barely compare to what UMass has to offer yet Amherst is the place where the bad-mouthing surfaces.

The school pride here is very discouraging. It is visible not only in the empty seats at most Minuteman sporting events, but also in the casual conversations of the dining commons and the intense discussions of the lecture halls.

Pride is a missing ingredient in the UMass experience and there is no excuse for it. Midwestern state schools pack their arenas for games, even when their teams are terrible. In California, local students gladly accept an in-state education with the knowledge that public university schooling is comparable to that of many private schools.

You would be hard pressed to find a better school for the money anywhere in the country. In-state students pay under 10,000 dollars a year to attend one of the best public universities in the country. But for the most part they are the ones complaining, they are the ones who perceive UMass as a safety school.

It is saddening to watch perception drag down what could be one of the nation's best schools. People from all over the country know how great a place UMass is and can be, it is just too bad that droves of Massachusetts kids don't know what they have sitting right under their noses.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

I got your Captain Hook right here

Eat it, Peter Pan.

The bus people that is.

Or, more appropriately, the transportation demons of the lower realms, the product of Stephen King's nightmares with diesel engines, those ticket selling wolves in sheep's clothing.

I've wanted to write this column for four years now, ever since I was forced to use Peter Pan Trailways to haul myself home and back occasionally through the years. Sometimes, when a friend can't drive you, your car dies, or you've suddenly realized you're a moron, you go down and buy yourself a ticket on the J.M. Barrie inspired Ride O' Horrors.

Where to begin?

Well, first there's the absolute futility of trying to use their website. It's utterly useless in every way, shape and form. The only thing I could determine from it was that there was a bus company called Peter Pan, and it thought I was destined to go to Albany, NY. That's the only place it wanted to send me. I don't know why. I don't want to go to Albany. I've never met anyone who wanted to go to Albany. I'm not exactly sure the good people of Albany want to be in Albany. I bet if they knew that the evil that is Peter Pan keeps trying to stuff unsuspecting college students into buses bound for their fair city, they'd certainly have a few things to say to Mr. Peter Pan.

So, naively assuming that this company would have a somewhat early bus back to the little college I call home, I took the first train into the Hub and arrived: a bit sleepy and a little hung over – my uncle's wedding was the night before – at South Station at 8:20 Sunday morning.

South Station is one of the coolest places to be on a holiday weekend. There's a bookstore, a model train things, a good-sized food court, and people watching.

Well, the train part of the station, anyway.

However, the bus station at South Station reeks with the stench of sweat and broken dreams, and the building itself has all the warmth of one of Jupiter's moons. I popped a couple Aleve for my headache and wandered over to the ticket counter.

Now, wouldn't it make sense to have a bus leave at, oh I dunno, 9 a.m.? Somewhere around there? Since the trains pull into the station around 8:30 in the morning, that would seem reasonable. I'm not asking for instantaneous transportation. I'm asking for a reasonable amount of time between train and bus. Of course, the infant behind the counter told me the next bus was at 10. Great.

A few words on benches.

There is nothing quite so relaxing as a well built, solidly designed bench to provide respite to the weary traveler. Few things can soothe the back, sore after lugging a heavy backpack through trains and stairs and streets. Yes, the bench, a wonderful invention that, when well done, is a blessed thing.

South Station Bus Terminal has none of these.

Their benches, designed by some mad sadist, are painful and not properly bolted down, meaning that the hyperactive crack head's gyrations at the other end gives one the curious feeling of what it must be like to be one of James Bond's martinis.

Granted, the other options aren't much better. A bus to Albany has been departing for the last 40 minutes, at least according to the broken departure board that hangs over the crumpled form of a homeless man.

I'm wondering whether I should put a sign out ("Will satirize for food") when I see people queuing up in front of my gate. Cool.

I go over and get in line. There's a guy dead asleep at the front of the line. His snores lull the rest of us. About five minutes after the scheduled departure, we're still there. I haven't moved. Some green sweater person looks around and calls out that the bus to Albany is leaving from the next gate, not this one. Again with the Albany. Another one of Peter Pan's attempts to divert me from my quest. Damn you, you pixy dust snorting nancy boy. I'm NOT GOING TO ALBANY. Holyoke Mall-Northampton-Amherst-UMass will still be leaving from this gate, so I watch as several people get out of line and queue up at the next bus. The seemingly unconscious man in front of line wakes up and goes to. He's going to Albany. Of course, when we finally leave, our estimated time of arrival is more than it takes to drive from my house, an hour south of Boston, to UMass. And that's just to Springfield. With perfect conditions and a few extra Tinkerbells under the hood. No such luck for our coach, cleverly named after an obscure character from Barrie's novel.

"Again with the Albany. Another one of Peter Pan's attempts to divert me from my quest. Damn you, you pixy dust snorting nancy boy, I'm NOT GOING TO ALBANY."

Rain, traffic, and just random stoppages seem to taunt me. We finally get to Springfield, which makes South Station look like Grand Central, and we're told that it's ok to just stay on this coach, because it's continuing on to Amherst. Albany passengers have to get off.

Finally, I catch a break. So I look out the window, and sure enough, there's my luggage, on the ground. Yup, the chuckle twins are about to load it on to the Albany bus.

I get up, go out of the bus, which, remember, I'm supposed to be able to just stay on, relax, and forget about it; Peter Pan's seen the second star to the right, and he's rarin' to go.

I explain to them that I'm going on, and that this luggage, being mine, is going to. Maybe they didn't see the fact that it has a big UMass decal on it? Is there a UMass in Albany? I did not think so, but having never been to the capital of New York, I'm not really sure. But the safe money is on there not being a Massachusetts state school in New York. Put the bag back on the bus, Chumley.

That done, I get back on the bus, return to my seat, sit down, breathe a sigh of relief, close my eyes, and think of sweet, sweet UMass.

But no. The idyllic scene of Lappas leading the Minutemen to an NCAA berth is shattered by the voice of what I can only assume was one of the Lost Boys – it sure as hell wasn't Wendy. He's telling us that any Amherst-UMass passengers can get off, the bus next to us is an express.

Oooooh. An express. That sounds fast. That sounds efficient. That sounds competent.

Again; Peter Pan, you vile deceiver.

Well, long story a bit shorter, I reached UMass around 1:30 p.m. You'll remember that I started this little jaunt at 7:16 that morning.

So, in summary: bite me, Peter Pan. Bite me.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/Op ! It's the coolest.

Letter to the Editor

To the editor:

During such a difficult time when loss, anxiety, and fear continue to plague the nation, it saddened me to read a student's story detailing his feelings of being disrespected and disempowered here at UMass. In his column "I pledge my grievance to UMass," Matthew Despres outlined in language that suggested a high degree of frustration and anger, difficulties he has had with University administration. He refers to other students' negative encounters with the University, and calls on all of those with such problems to call University offices and complain loudly.

It is so unfortunate that any student at UMass should feel that the University does not listen to his or her concerns, does not respond to his or her needs, and does not care about his or her education. In such a difficult time as this one, when we are all still grieving for the ongoing losses since Sept. 11, it is of great importance to let all University members know—including students, staff, faculty—that they are important to the health and viability of this community.

Despite the genuine acts of good will which we all are trying to accomplish, there will still be conflicts in our daily lives – conflicts which need prompt and caring attention such that they do not lead to the painful deadlock of an 'us vs. them' attitude. To this end, the University has in place several important offices and organizations. Created by the University, the Ombuds Office is here to help all University members. As stated on our website, the Ombuds Office's mission is: "To ensure that all University students and employees receive fair and equitable treatment within the University system." It is our pleasure to help students sort out their University-related difficulties - to put them in touch with the right office, to get an answer to a seemingly unanswerable question, to get a dialogue going where one seems impossible.

While I certainly respect students' rights to speak out when they feel they have been treated unfairly, and applaud any student's attempt to organize others in a worthy cause, it is important, especially now, to continue to treat each other with the dignity, courtesy, and respect we all deserve. No one wants to be engaged in conflict; no one wants to feel that they will never be able to fix a problem. Yes conflicts happen, but it is the responsibility of all of us to attend to them with care and courtesy. The University Ombuds Office is here to work with all members of the University community so that problems can be resolved well before they make any student or employee feel as upset and discouraged as Mr. Despres seems to feel.

A confidential and impartial office, the Ombuds Office can be reached by phone at 545-0867 and by email at ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu. We are located in the Campus Center 823. Walk-ins are welcome.

Kimberly Leighton
Graduate Intern
University Ombuds Office

www.dailycollegian.com

Osama bin Bought

So the United States government has offered up $25 million for anyone who can give them information that leads to the arrest or capture of Osama bin Laden. Is it just me or does this creep anyone else out? It gives me the impression that we are trying to solve an international problem by having someone off. We are essentially flaunting the major thing that seems to anger the terrorist groups that target America: money.

We are not appealing to people to do a duty to help their fellow people on planet Earth. We are trying to coax someone with what is a big sum of money for Americans and an unfathomable, mythical, nearly incomprehensible sum for Afghanis who earn on average of 200 dollars per year. This is not the first time that we have used cash to try to get some bad people. The Unabomber, Whitey Bulger, even the outlaw Jesse James have had bounties placed on them by the government. So has it worked?

Not exactly. We still don't have Whitey, or suspected 1996 Olympic bomber Eric Rudolph, or many of the people on the FBI's most wanted list. Money rewards were offered for such people as Slobodan Milosevic, Manuel Noriega, and the Unabomber. The only reward that was paid from all of these was the one for the Unabomber because the others were caught without the work of specific sources or informants. The Unabomber however was caught with the help of a very close source, his brother.

"To dangle money at a group of people so hell-bent on destroying the nation I live in and expecting them to compromise what they obviously believe so strongly in is ludicrous. Money is not going to solve this problem…"

To think that this is something new, for money to be offered for the capture or location of a wanted person, you need to think again. Remember a guy named Judas Iscariot? He's the fellow that sold out Jesus Christ for a couple pieces of silver and a real ground breaker in the use of money to buy information. It is interesting to note that as of several weeks ago, the government was only allowed to offer five million dollars for information regarding any criminal. Since the anti-terrorism law was passed the limit was bumped up to 25 million. Surprise, surprise, Osama is the first man to receive then honor of having a $25 million bounty placed squarely on his head. Something tells me that he has more to worry about than the bounty though.

Not that this would shock anyone, but people are really excited at the prospect of being given 25 million dollars if they are helpful in the investigation. This means most every wacko, weirdo and conspiracy theorist is developing their own personal theories as to where Mr. bin Laden is camping out at this very second. The Justice department has received more than 22,000 tips since the Sept. 11 attacks. Just by guessing I can imagine that just about 22,000 of them have resulted in dead ends, frustrating wastes of time and energy and an overall misuse of man power in the investigation. But it is necessary. If there is that one good tip that does come through the whole operation has not been a waste. In reality, the Investigators are wading their way through the world's biggest haystack and every time they see and pin and grasp for it, five more appear in front of them.

Even the US Postal Service has put up some cash for information regarding the identity of the anthrax attacker or attackers. One point two five million dollars is what the Postal Service has put up. This seems more practical to me than the $25 million for bin Laden. I believe that it was someone inside this country that was responsible for the Anthrax and because it is someone that is here already an investigation, which is still massive and difficult is on a much smaller scope than the international one that is now going on. Another government body that makes out real well with tip offs is the IRS.

According to the Boston Globe the IRS shelled out $1.8 million to 382 people whose tips brought them $266.6 million in truant taxes.

To dangle money out to a group of people as destitute and impoverished as the typical Afghan is just not a logical thing to me. To dangle money at a group of people so hell-bent on destroying the nation I live in and expecting them to compromise what they obviously believe so strongly in is ludicrous. Money is not going to solve this problem, the $25 million, if history is a guide won't be given out and it just doesn't sit right with me that there is a school of thought which believes the solution to this most grave of problems can be bought.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in the column.

Harry huge, Potter powerful, Rowling rules

Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone made a million-zillion-bazillion dollars at the box-office this weekend, putting it easily ahead of second place Monsters Inc.

With $58.6 million in total receipts for the weekend after Thanksgiving, Potter's Hollywood producers must have been giving thanks that a bespectacled little nerd could bring them so much good fortune. After setting the single weekend record for money made (a staggering $93.5 million two weeks ago), the film has hauled in more than $188 million in ten days.

Starring little Daniel Radcliffe as Mark Hamill…err Harry Potter, the film has won over children and parents who had been starving for a film version of a book they've already read 300 times.

"It's just getting too exhausting to turn the pages at this point," reported one parent at her third viewing of the film.

"I hate reading," reported her youthful son.

Potter's creator J.K. Rowling couldn't be reached for comment, as she was too busy churning out another insufferable Potter novel – Harry Potter and the Clogged Drain or Harry Potter and His Trip to the Supermarket or Harry Potter and How He Conned His Way Into the Lives of Our Children or some similar thing.

Itself not doing too shabbily, Monsters Inc. did bring in $24.5 this weekend, although almost all ticket buyers reported that they'd been wanting to see Potter.

"I hate Monsters Inc," reported a wonderful little child, teary that she'd been unable to see the magnificence that is Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone because it was sold out.

The animated film had previously won over children everywhere its cute, one-eyed main character Mike (as voiced by Billy Crystal). Those same children turned against Monsters two weeks later because, as one child put it, "Mike isn't the same as Harry."

Elsewhere in cinema, Robert Redford's dreadful The Last Castle was replaced in the minds of moviegoers everywhere by Spy Game, a madcap caper starring the ancient acting legend and Brad Pitt. Game spied a cool $21.6 million.

Black Knight made $16.1 million. The less said about Black Knight, the better, although it should be noted that Martin Lawrence has managed to make a profitable career out of doing nothing worth watching.

The insulting Shallow Hal fell from third to fifth. The movie conned its way towards $9 million by duping its audience into believing that, by laughing at jokes made about fat people, they were being empathetic. In case there is any question about this, laughing at fat people is not empathetic.

If a loveable imp known to his fans as Harry dominated the top five, then a terribly ugly golem dominated the bottom five.

-Out Cold boarded its way to a cool $4.7 million. Hoping to cash in on the hip new trend the kids are calling "snowboarding," Hollywood got on board (get it?) about two years too late. How typical.

-Domestic Disturbance dropped from fourth to seventh with $4.2 when moviegoers realized that the film starred John Travolta.

-David Mamet's The Heist, a slick con-film, pulled in $3.3 million, thus quashing any likelihood that he would ever get another chance to widely release a film. Back to the art-house cinemas, Mamet!

-The One made $2.2 million. Starring Jet Li, The One is a character study of one man who wants to dance and the oppressive social system that stigmatizes him. Or it is a kung-fu movie with wire fighting.

-Life as a House depressed its way to $2.1 million. Such a poor showing has put into question the film's sequel, Life as a Building.

-Corky Romano…didn't do anything, but deserves mentioning. As an

Turn to MOVIES, page 6

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

Dylan rocks Fleet Center

Bob Dylan performed at the Fleet Center in Boston Friday night.

COURTESY OF COLUMBIA RECORDS

By Scott Eldridge
Collegian Staff

Bob Dylan
Fleet Center
Nov. 24

In a show that rivaled any other, Bob Dylan closed his Love and Theft tour Saturday night at the Fleet Center. Joined by his band, Dylan played a two and a half hour show that seemed to be endless.

Inarguably the folk rocker has seen the wear of time. At 60, he physically shows what an almost 40-year career in the limelight will do. However, Dylan manages to show an amazing strength that outweighs whatever toll time has dealt, and comes out on top with an unbridled musical power. Many times throughout the night the fast picking electric sounds of "Tweedlee Dee and Tweedlee Dum" or "Honest with Me," both off of the latest album Love and Theft, would play out over the crowd and you would half expect to see the younger, highly skilled, Charlie Sexton playing the lead. This was never the case, though, as Dylan proved to be the true leader of what was appropriately billed as his band.

Dylan's band, formerly named The Hawks, was made up of four skilled musicians that earned their place next to the legend. Charlie Sexton proved to be a perfect complement to Dylan's playing, both acoustic and electric. When joined by Larry Campbell, on acoustic, electric or steel guitar, as well as banjo and mandolin, the three led the music to a level unheard on any album. Mixing in the talents of David Kemper on drums and Tony Garnier on stand up and bass guitar the Band played off each other masterfully, and all played off Dylan.

Bob Dylan has spent years in the industry, and this tour has shown the experience of these years. Every aspect of the concert was well orchestrated and seemed to draw the crowd right on to the stage, connecting to the furthest seats in the balconies without once addressing the crowd.

The set list on Saturday was one that spanned the entirety of Dylan's career. With classics such as "All Along the Watchtower" and "Tangled up in Blue" mixed in with later hits off Love and Theft, the show was all-encompassing. This was an obvious appeal to the audience diversity as well. The seats were filled with fans of all ages, from the teenyboppers to the baby boomers, it was a performance meant to draw in people who picked up Dylan at all points in his career.

Trying desperately to ignore the drunken cries of "Dylan!" and "you rock!" the band started off with "Wait for the Light to Shine," a song that brought up images of religious folk songs of the south. This was the only song performed all night that wasn't Dylan's. The band quickly changed tunes and an acoustically driven "It Ain't me Babe" flowed out. While the band played on, Dylan slung his black and white guitar over his shoulder and came out on harmonica to finish out the song, mixing in bits of other songs including "Simple Twist of Fate," off 1975's Blood on the Tracks. Putting aside the harp and mic, Dylan came back with "It's a Hard Rain A-gonna Fall." From 1965's The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan and "Searching for a Soldier's Grave."

The fast paced sounds of Love and Theft's "Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum" brought the crowds to their feet with those who knew it singing along, and the rest wishing they could. As one of the more upbeat tracks off his latest album, "Tweedle Dee" was an example of the way that Dylan has defied age and still comes across with power. After "Lonesome Day's Blues" and "High Water," both off Love and Theft, Dylan played a unique version of the well known "Don't Think Twice, it's Alright." This was not the only song that was performed differently then what most listeners are used to, but it showed the versatility of Dylan as an artist.

When Dylan and the band played the anti-war "John Brown" many in attendance interpreted it as a political message against the war currently under way. With people yelling out "peace!" and others just holding up their hands in a sign of peace, Dylan managed to speak pages without saying a word. This was further added to when he played "Blowin' in the Wind" during the six-song encore. Whether or not the lyrics and songs were meant to be heard as songs of peace, Dylan tapped a sentiment in the crowd in the same way that he has throughout his career. This respite from the classics was soon ended with "Tangled up in Blue" which once again had the entirety of the Center on their feet. Once again Dylan changed the tempo and the sound of the song, which was refreshing and enjoyable to those who have heard Dylan's radio-friendly songs constantly, and appreciated the change of pace.

Not wanting to let the audience lose sight of his latest album, Dylan came

Turn to DYLAN, page 6

A Floyd faux-pas? Indeed

COURTESY OF CAPITOL RECORDS

Pink Floyd's best songs have been compiled on the new release, Echoes.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Pink Floyd
Echoes
Capitol Records

Pink Floyd's musical explorations have always been strange things. From the stoner-heaven of The Dark Side of the Moon to the horrific world visions of The Wall, Floyd has relished in the opportunity to use music as something more than a brief respite from reality.

That chosen path undoes Floyd's greatest hits album Echoes, a collection of great songs that rings hollow so contextually out of place. Floyd made a career on its albums, not the relative catchiness of its singular songs. Animals, Wish You Were Here, and Saucerful of Secrets (besides Dark Side and Wall) were all conceptual albums, total creations that worked because they were the sum of their pieces.

To take those pieces and reshuffle them takes something away from the song's original intent. "The Happiest Days of Our Lives" and "Another Brick in Wall Part 2" are great songs, but without the rest of The Wall to explain their lyrical madness, they hardly seem as impressive. Instead, they seem like singles, just another track on one of Echoes two discs. Moon is similarly pillaged, with Echoes biting "Time," "Money," and "Us and Them."

Most criminal, however, is the appearance of "Wish You Were Here," easily Pink Floyd's most emotive song. Taken out of context from that album's mechanical sound (literally), Floyd's lament at the loss of a friend in a cold world seems a mere afterthought.

Further undermining Echoes relative effectiveness is a schizophrenic arrangement of songs. Bouncing around chronologically with little regard for what does and doesn't work, it would seem that producer James Guthrie wheedled Floyd into accepting an arrangement wherein the band would pick the album's 26 songs, and then Guthrie could be the one to pick them out of the hat when organizing both discs. Thus, songs from The Division Bell, Floyd's last studio release, are wedged in between tracks from Wall and Moon. What could have been a fascinating timeline of Floyd's musical progression instead turns into a sodden mess of mismanagement. Madness prevails.

Lest this review turn into a total smashing of a collection of Floyd's work, it should be noted that most of the songs on Echoes are excellent. There can be no denying that if Pink Floyd had been a group driven by sales of its singles, the 26 selected for Echoes are surely some of the best ones that they've done. It is just that Floyd is not a singles-driven group. Its albums were always something more artistic, seemingly created with nothing to spare.

Thus, the only part of the album that really works is the eclectic "other songs" that Floyd and Guthrie found room for. Both "See Emily Play" off the 'is-this-even-available-anymore?' See Emily Play and "Arnold Layne" of the Next Projected Sound of 67 are both legitimate, and rare, jewels. That both would be included on a greatest hits album geared to be a moneymaker is a shock.

Songs like "One of These Days," "Learning to Fly," "Shine on Your Crazy Diamond (Parts 1-7)," "Astronomy Domine," and "Set the Controls for the Heart of the Sun," are brilliant. That they'd all be on one collection is at once an amazing possibility and a confounding conundrum. Echoes is great for what it has, but aren't these songs better heard in the way that they were meant to be heard?

Despite all of the above, it is difficult to take an entirely dismal view of Echoes. Pink Floyd's songs are composed and created with such an intense attention paid to the smallest details. That they'd be collected on an accessible double disc seems at first appealing, especially considering how available it makes Floyd to new fans. It might be off-putting to loyalists, but greatest hits albums are often the easiest way for new fans to get into a band.

Accessible or not, for a band so meticulous in its music, Pink Floyd's Echoes is a disjointed jumble of familiar hits and forgotten favorites. It sounds great, and it would be an excellent collection for other, more pop-oriented, groups. But for a band as groundbreaking as Floyd, Echoes can be nothing more than a legitimate disappointment.

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

It's ok, the band's with me

Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr. will lead the Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band in performance on Dec. 2 at 2 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

■ Dylan

continued from page 5

back with "Sugar Daddy," the final track off Love and Theft. The set wrapped up with "The Wicked Messenger" and "Rainy Day Woman #12 and #35," with stage lights lighting up the crowd, as "must get stoned" became the chant of the masses. Taking the conclusion of an extended jam as a break, the band stood on stage, having placed down their instruments, lined up as if they were before a firing squad, and stood their as they were applauded for what seemed like five minutes. Without saying a word, Dylan pointed out towards the audience and the band left the stage. The applause did not subside and no more than two minutes later they reappeared playing the Oscar winning "Things Have Changed," from the Michael Douglas movie, The Wonder Boys.

Dylan continued with one of his loudest, fastest, and best known hits "Like a Rolling Stone," the song that broke the barrier between folk and electric rock. Saturday night's rendition was just as powerful and meaningful. Written as a way of getting back at critics who slammed Dylan for his incorporation of electric, "I like a Rolling Stone" has become the Dylan anthem and is probably his most well known work.

With his encore shaping into what seemed to be a second set, the band followed with "Forever Young," an ironic statement that described the fresh sound of his new album as well as the still lively sound of his older hits. Love and Theft had only one song in this encore set, and that was "Honest with Me," an upbeat, hard-rocking song that put the electric sound of Dylan and his band on display. By this point in the concert the energy had filled the entirety of the crowd as he played "Blowin' in the Wind" and followed it with an electrified version of 1967's "All Along the Watchtower." The final song of the night was "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" and was an amazing crescendo to a spectacular show. People took no chance on missing out on any chance of more, and the seats didn't start to clear till the roadies were taking down the stage.

There were mixed reactions to tours of the past, particularly those of the 90s (Time Out of Mind and later when he toured with Paul Simon). Shows were often very hit or miss and audiences were not always treated to the same level of quality and consistency, as Dylan's early shows were known for. Rolling Stone and TIME magazines have heralded the Love and Theft tour as a comeback for Dylan and a true show of his talent. Without contest this show would prove such statements. From his brilliant white suit and cowboy boots to his bands powerful support every aspect of the tour's closing show in Boston supported these claims and showed that Dylan can keep rocking into his golden years.

■ movies

continued from page 5

aside, what if Corky Romanto had been as big as Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone? What if Chris Kattan had replaced Daniel Radcliffe in our collective subconscious? What if hell froze over?

On the art-house circuit, In the Bedroom, starring Sissy Spacek and Tom Wilkinson, made $95,000 from four theaters. A critically lauded family drama, expect Bedroom to open slowly in more and more theaters across the United States until it is forgotten next week when the next major art-house film gets released.

By the way, no interviews were actually conducted for this article. No child could be found anywhere to actually interview, as this was written on a Sunday, the traditional day of "Potter worship."

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Harry Potter and Monsters Inc. were in close competition this weekend

■ hockey

continued from page 10

the power play, otherwise we were going at them real hard pressuring the pocket. They were turning it over and we were getting it out.

"Usually [the power play and penalty kill] lead to success at the college level," Cahoon said. "If you get the goaltending and you win the special teams game, you're in good shape."

The Minutemen opened up the scoring at the 15:09 mark of the first period, with sophomore Brian Van Abel in the penalty box serving a holding minor. Assistant captain Samuli Jalkanen kept a clearing attempt in at the left point and slid the puck around the boards, where Justin Rafferty used a touch pass to get the puck to sophomore Jimmy Callahan behind the net. Callahan found a cutting MacDonald on the doorstep, who put the puck past a helpless Nick Boucher to give UMass a 1-0 lead.

"Jimmy had a nice look to me on the back door so I was able to pop it in," said MacDonald, who posted his first career two-goal game. "We've been working on that play in practice."

The Maroon and White tacked on to its lead just under two minutes into the middle frame. Following a key defensive play by Toni Söderholm on a Dartmouth odd-man rush, Rafferty got the puck across the ice to Thomas Pock, who was streaking ahead on the right side. Pock gained the blue line and left a perfect drop pass for senior Martin Miljko, who unleashed a wrist shot that cleared Boucher's glove and snuck just under the crossbar.

"The goalie was down a lot all game, so we knew we needed to go high if we were going to score," MacDonald said. "We noticed he was a small goalie, so we just figured we should keep shooting high."

Meanwhile, the combination of Johnson between the pipes and a solid defensive outing was thwarting opportunity after opportunity for Dartmouth. With just over 14 minutes to play in the second, senior Chris Baldwin broke in alone by splitting the defense, but was promptly rejected by Johnson.

Approximately six minutes later, Söderholm was called for a holding minor, putting his team on the short-hand for the second time. But the defense held strong, allowing no shots to get through to the netminder.

"I could count on one hand the amount of rebound chances they had," said Johnson, who hails from Excelsior, Minn. "That's the way to stop teams – if the defense can count on me to stop the first shot and I can count on them to clear guys away, we can almost have a shutout every night."

At the 16:30 mark of the middle period, junior Tim Turner was dragged down on a breakaway with members of each team in the box for matching minors. On the ensuing four-on-three, MacDonald came through again for the Maroon and White.

As Boucher attempted to clear the puck around the boards, he fell down as Jalkanen corralled the puck. He quickly passed the puck to sophomore Nick Kuiper at the point, whose shot MacDonald tipped over the goalie's glove to give the Mass Attack a 3-0 lead.

Just over 12 minutes into the game's final frame, the Minutemen added an exclamation point to their victory. Söderholm handled the puck at the left point, and feathered a pass to a cutting Jalkanen, who roofed the puck from just outside the crease for his fourth career goal and second of the season.

Yet despite the team's back-to-back victories, Cahoon was far from satisfied.

"We're a young team – a team that's searching for an identity – so we just take it one game at a time," he said. "We've got a ways to go before we become a really good team, but at least we're moving in that direction."

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Thomas Pock is the second leading scorer on the Mass Attack this season.

■ hoop

continued from page 10

stays high enough, Anderson can follow him to one side and wait for Crooks to commit or he can immediately pass the man off and settle back down to the free throw line. If the switch is successful and a pass is made deeper into the corner, then a trap should come from the grouping of Crooks and Rhymer.

If the ball is reversed around the key, Anderson pops back up top, making sure the ball isn't sent right back to the passer. Jenkins takes control of the wing, and Brand prepares to converge if the ball creeps down far enough. Accordingly, Rhymer slides into the middle of the paint, and Crooks drops to the weak-side.

"Once we make our proper rotations and we just hustle, the zone works," said Kitwana Rhymer who led the UMass defense with seven rebounds, four blocks and one steal. "That's basically all it is for a zone. You just have to make your proper rotations, just hustle to every spot and just scramble when you have to."

The UMass personnel fit nicely into the 1-2-2 set. Difficult to penetrate, the defense works best when a team features agile big men because the post players are often required to cover more distance in guarding responsibilities both at the hoop and to the baseline corners. Rhymer, Brand and Eric Williams all faired well in those rapid-fire positions.

"I'm really impressed with their front line guys," Magarity said. "I think they have one of the best front lines in the Atlantic 10.

"Our post-players are starting to get a feel for things – we didn't get a lot of scoring tonight out of them – but when you're packing in a zone the way they were, we don't really have a go-to-guy inside.

The UMass guards also faired well, forcing the Marist shooters into some uncomfortable heaves. And credit the Red Foxes' final 32.7 percent shooting percentage to the fact that their point guard Sean Kennedy had trouble creating chances, mustering just five assists though adding three turnovers to the mix.

"[The UMass guards] did a good job of keeping [Kennedy] in front of them," said Magarity, about his court coach who now has recorded a helper in 67 straight games. "He's usually very good at getting by people. But he's used to seeing man-to-man. A lot of teams just haven't zoned us."

The visitors from Poughkeepsie, N.Y. did, however, make a halftime adjustment against the Minuteman defense that brought them to within striking distance at the 10:54 mark of the second half.

Marist switched, to what Magarity called a "diamond overload" which he thought would force UMass to make trapping decisions more difficult, and spread the floor for Kennedy and give him better driving angles.

The change did wonders for the struggling Marist squad which began the final stanza with a 24-8 run to cut the Maroon and White lead to three.

"There was gray area in the mid-post, and we always had that guy open where we didn't have him in the first half," said Magarity, whose team outscored UMass 42-30 in the second half. "We kept saying that we couldn't run our diamond set against their trapping defenses but as it turned out it was probably the best thing we could have done."

Still, the Red Fox scare couldn't complete its comeback and the Minutemen escaped with the 66-59 hold-on victory. Lappas didn't credit the Marist revival to the breakdown of the defense though.

"I thought our problem in the second half was our offense," he said. "This was not about our defense. I'm disappointed in the turnovers and the way we played offensively. I think our defense both games has been very good.

"I look at defensive field goal percentage," Lappas continued. "I don't look at the amount of points you allow. Because points allowed is a byproduct of the pace of the game. I'm looking at what people shoot against us. And if I see [Marist] shot 32 percent today and [Arkansas-Little Rock] shot 37 percent [last game], defensively we're not going to do much better than that."

With just over five minutes left in the game and UMass clinging to a 57-48 lead, Rhymer made the defensive play of the game for the home team. Kennedy penetrated deep into the lane and threw one up, but his attempt was tossed hard by a leaping Rhymer, a block that sent the Mullins Center into frenzy. The swat was similar to the senior's rejection early in the second half of UMass' opener versus UARL, which sparked a Minuteman comeback.

"I just saw the ball, so I knew I had to block it," Rhymer said. "It seemed like it sparked something, so as long as I can change the game in any way, I feel good about it.

"He changed the game like he did last time on the defensive end," Lappas said. "And he played well offensively too. There's a guy you're going to miss when he's gone. He's a good kid and he plays so hard."

Minutewomen get first 'W'

Freshman's free throws clinch game for UMass

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

UMass	54
Clemson	51
Rice	65
UMass	60

Freshman point guard Katie Nelson scored both the first and last two points of the Massachusetts women's basketball team's 54-51 victory over Clemson yesterday at the William D. Mullins Center.

Nelson's final two points came in the form of a pair of free throws with 19 seconds left and essentially clinched UMass' first win of the season.

The Ellicot City, Md. native grabbed a rebound after a missed three point attempt Clemson sophomore Julie Aderhold. Nelson was promptly fouled by junior Chrissy Floyd and sent to the free throw line in a 1-and-1 situation, her team up 52-51. A pre-shot huddle calmed any nerves Nelson may have been feeling.

"Everybody [in the huddle] was real confident that I could make it, so it helped my confidence," Nelson said.

UMass (1-3) jumped out to a five-point lead with five minutes left in the first half on a Paige Harris three-pointer, but the Lady Tigers responded with some sharpshooting of their own. Floyd, Aderhold, and senior Krystal Scott each sunk a three in the next three minutes and when Aderhold sunk a layup with just 48 seconds remaining in the half, the Minutewomen fell behind for the first time in seven minutes.

Junior forward Siiri Liivandi fed her fifth first half assist to classmate Jen Butler underneath the basket and, with milliseconds left on the clock, the 6-foot-3-inch center scored her fifth point of the contest.

"Siiri is the one post player who always looks inside for her partner," O'Brien said.

UMass held the momentum into the second half. Junior forward Amber Sneed scored the first five points of the period and layups by Butler and junior forward Nekole Smith extended the Maroon and White lead to 10 at 41-31.

Clemson stayed in the game behind the continued marksmanship of Scott, who scored eight straight points — giving her squad its last share of the lead for the contest.

The Minutewomen dominated the boards throughout the second half, limiting the Lady Tigers' second chances. Led by Smith's four offensive rebounds in the second half alone, the Minutewomen out-rebounded Clemson 20-4 in the final frame.

"That's unbelievable," said O'Brien, not trusting the numbers when she first read them.

"We could be one of the best rebounding teams in the country," Smith said. "Whoever wants it more is going to go get the rebound. I think today we wanted it a little more."

Smith took another step toward being one hundred percent after dislocating her knee last year. The Ann Arbor, Mich. native looked more comfortable on the court than she had in the previous three contests.

"Tonight is the first time since we started in October that I have seen that bounce in her step," O'Brien said. "I think it's the first time where she forgot everything that's going on physically."

Scott cut the lead to two with 43 seconds remaining, but the Clemson comeback ended there.

Beating a team that made the NCAA Tournament last year, which has solid players throughout its lineup, was a major confidence builder for the Minutewomen.

"I think [the win is] pretty big," Smith said. "We needed something to build off of. Getting a win after three losses is big for us. We know what we're capable of doing. We have to do it everyday. We have to fight everyday."

The win came after a heartbreaking 65-60 triple overtime loss to Rice Friday. Two last second shots kept UMass alive for 65 minutes of play, but the team was unable to score a single point in the third overtime and racked up its third loss of the season.

Owl Jennifer Rigg put her team up two points with six seconds left in regulation, but Ebony Pegues responded by taking the ball coast-to-coast and sunk a floater in the lane to send the game into its first overtime.

Pegues missed on a similar shot near the end of the second overtime, but Butler was there for the rebound and the put back as time expired, sending the game into its third extra session.

Both teams looked exhausted in the final overtime. The only points scored in the entire five-minute period were five free throws by three separate Owls.

UMass turned the ball over 27 times in the loss. Rice scored 22 points off Maroon and White turnovers.

"We are like a body without a head right now — so many people doing so many different things," O'Brien said. "You've got three people doing one thing and two people not doing it the way they need to – that's when you get turnover."

Butler led all scorers with 19 on 8-for-19 shooting. The Brooklyn, N.Y. native pulled down 14 rebounds (eight offensive).

Smith was plagued with foul trouble throughout the contest and played just 12 minutes.

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Nekole Smith had the spring back in her step in yesterday's 54-51 win over Clemson.

Spiders poison in season finale

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

After struggling through a disappointing season, the Massachusetts football team needed to gain a little closure in its last game of the year Friday afternoon against Richmond. But as the final seconds ticked away on a 35-7 defeat at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, the Maroon and White was left with more questions than answers.

Richmond	35
UMass	7

"Where's the focus? Where's the concentration?" asked Head Coach Mark Whipple, who watched his defense jump offsides a half-dozen times and his offense commit four turnovers in the loss. "This was just not a good day for the Minutemen."

UMass (3-8, 3-6 Atlantic 10) had its hands full from the start against the Spiders, who brought the top-ranked defense in the conference into McGuirk against a Maroon and White offense that has struggled mightily all season. Richmond (3-8, 3-6 A-10) allowed only one first down in the Minutemen's first seven drives, repeatedly flushing UMass quarterback Matt Guice from the pocket and forcing two interceptions from the redshirt freshman.

The Spider offense, meanwhile, caught fire early and found the UMass endzone four times on the team's first six possessions. Running back Scott Fulton punctuated Richmond's opening 14-play, 81-yard drive with a four-yard TD scamper to open scoring. Two possessions later, Spider QB Sean Gustus capped a 13-play, 84-yard march by threading a 21-yard scoring strike to wideout Boyd Ouden.

Both drives were marked by Richmond's trademark ball control offense, in which a combination of three different tailbacks and Gustus himself keep the ball almost exclusively on the ground and chew up valuable clock time as well as real estate.

"I was happy that we were able to keep moving the football," said Richmond head coach Jim Reid, who patrolled the UMass sideline for 19 years as an assistant and head coach before taking over the Spiders' reins. "This offense is very unique in that if you do it right, you should never have a play that gets you less than four or five yards."

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, the Spiders weren't just getting four or five yards – they were breaking tackles and turning routine options and pitches into sweeping double-digit gains.

"When it's me – the safety – making so many tackles six or seven yards down the field, it's just not going to cut it," said senior All-American Jeremy Robinson, who logged 15 tackles in the final game of a brilliant UMass career.

On Richmond's very first play from scrimmage in the second half, Gustus shunned no less than four would-be tacklers and turned what looked to be a minimal-gain play into a 63-yard touchdown run. The Minutemen earned a bit of redemption when Guice connected with DeShon Hardy for a 31-yard score midway through the third quarter, but that was as close as the home team would get against Richmond's grind-it-out ground attack.

"UMass has a great defense, so it all comes down to execution on our part," said Gustus, who accounted for 185 of Richmond's 403 rushing yards on the afternoon. "When we're [firing] on all cylinders, we feel like we can move the football against anybody."

■ basketball

continued from page 10

three pointers in a 90 second stretch at the beginning of the second half to cut the UMass lead down to 10 and force Lappas to call a timeout. Marist had relied on the three to win its first three contests of the season and after struggling from behind the arc in the first half, looked to have found its stroke with Eppehimer.

"We just came out dry," Rhymer said of UMass' struggles at the start of the second half. "But we picked it up and started doing what we're supposed to do."

"I think we were frustrated with the way we came out in the first half," Eppehimer said. "At halftime we looked at each other and we were determined to make this a game in the second half."

The Red Foxes were able to make it a game by chipping away at the once mighty UMass lead, getting it down to three on two separate occasions. However, the Red Foxes were unable to forge ahead at any point, thanks in large part to the UMass defense, especially Rhymer.

Just as he had turned the tide of the game in the season opener last Friday with a key blocked shot, Rhymer did the same with 5:10 remaining on Saturday. With the lead down to just seven, Rhymer got the first of his three second half blocks, rejecting a Kennedy shot, sending it out of play and energizing the UMass faithful.

"I saw the ball so I knew I had to block it somehow and it seemed like it sparked something," Rhymer said. "As long as I can change the game in any way I feel good about it."

"He did a great job, he changed the game on the defensive end," Lappas said of his senior big man. "Kit is Kit. He's such a good kid and he plays so hard and he can change a game."

Despite the win, Lappas sees much room for improvement, especially offensively, before Tuesday's match up with the University of Oregon at the Springfield Civic Center.

"We're 2-0, teams are shooting 35 percent against us, but I'd like to get our offense better, that's what our problem is," he said. "We need to play better on offense. Except for Shannon, these guys are all young, and that inexperience is going to show up and guys are going to make mistakes until they get experience. My fears of what I thought would plague us, our youth on the perimeter, is evident as can be."

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Head Coach Steve Lappas is 2-0 so far with UMass.

Collegian Sports... we love triple overtime.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Bacon'n Cheese Skins $3.75 4.25
Fried Shrimp Tempura 7.25 3.49
Sweet Potato Fries 6.75 3.25
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome Here
Closed On Mondays
51 N Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Attention
February 2002 Graduates
If you are a member of the February 2002 graduating class who received Federal Perkins Loans while enrolled at UMass you should have recently received a certified letter about those loans.
We know this is a very busy time for you so we've mailed this information rather than having you attend a meeting.
However there are serious consequences if you fail to return these documents by 11/30/01 as instructed in our letter.
If you haven't received our letter but think that you should have or if you have any question about what you did receive,
Call 545-2377

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

The Pleasant Room of Hadley
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL
BOOMER MUGS only $2.79
Budweiser Bud Light Michelob Ultra
Nightly Specials
Sun., Mon., Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings
-$3.00
9 TV's, Smoking Section, Monday Night Football

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HEATING
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO BOWLING!
THURSDAY
40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
sco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
tro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

Aesthetics Skin & Body Care for Men & Women
34 Main St., Suite 1, Amherst, MA
253-9879
Healthy Skin begins with a deep pure cleansing facial.
Also hair waxing
-brazilian bikini wax
-whole legs
-brow shaping
-arms

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-567-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Sony Gamoffs 11 20 2 20 7 10 10 05*
Black Knight(PG13) 11 05 1 30 4 10 7 30 10 00*
Out Cold(PG13) 11 35 2 00 4 20 7 05 9 40*
Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone(PG) 11 00 11 30 2 15 3 15 5 45 7 00 9 15 10 30*
Shallow Hal (PG13) 11 10 2 00 4 50 7 45 10 25
Life as a House (R) 11 25 4 45 7 40 10 30
Heist (R) 11 40 7 40
Monsters Inc (G) 11 15 11 45 1 45 2 30 4 00 4 45
Sat 7 15 9 55* Domestic Disturbance(PG13) 11 50 2 45 5 00 7 20 9 50
The Others(R) 12 00 4 55 10 40
K-Pax (PG13) 2 10 7 50
13 Ghosts (R) 9 45
From Hell (R) 4 45 10 10
senior movie 11/29/01
Domestic Disturbance 10 45 am
*-no passes/supersavers
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

COUSINS MARKET
OPEN 7:30AM - 11PM Weekdays 9AM - 11PM Saturday 9AM - 8PM Sunday
11 E Pleasant Street
(Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International
OCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9 - RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% OFF DISCOUNT

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR REN

Sublet in Sunderland. Furnished. Negotiable. Call 253-5066 start immediately.

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

AUTO FOR SALE

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

'89 Ford Taurus. Many new parts $600 413-330-3814

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare: Handicapped experience, references, housework, car, 6/20hrs/wk. $10/hr 413-247-5800

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment - Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 17th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more information. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 374-5832

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sunscoastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

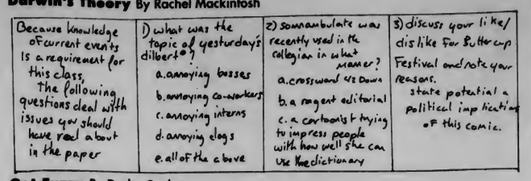
SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

WANT TO GET OUT OF THE DORMS?

WANT TO FIND A NEW ROOMMATE?

WANT TO FIND A NEW PLACE TO LIVE?

CHECK OUT THE COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS AND FIND WHAT YOU NEED!



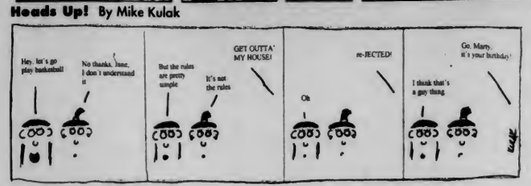
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • CBS 3 Boston
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • PBS 57 Springfield
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 30 Hartford
9 • HSCN Pay Movie Channel
10 • NBC 30 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • Fox 24 Hartford
13 • HSCN Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UMASS Cablevision Channel
16 • WB 59 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Cable Guide
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • USA
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • A&E
30 • Sci-Fi
31 • Discovery
32 • Nesn
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • HITV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Monty By Jim Meddick

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Quote of the Day

"It's not often that I see you wearing pants."

–Shannon McPhee

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 58 LOW: 35	HIGH: 51 LOW: 36	HIGH: 54 LOW: 34

Horoscopes

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your admiration for someone you've recently met may develop into something that can open a great many doors for both of you in time.
Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan.19) – Your ambition may urge you on to perform a daring act today, and others will be impressed with your ability to perform under pressure.
Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb.18) – You can afford to be just a little more opportunistic at this time. Put your plans down on paper, and you'll be more organized an efficient.
Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) – You can benefit in untold ways from breaking your routine ever so slightly. Even the subtlest change can have a dramatic overall effect.
Aries (March 21-April 19) – You may be forced into a decision that seems to go against much of what you've been working toward, but you'll discover that you are still "in sync."
Taurus (April 20-May 20) – You may be struggling with an issue that is difficult to explain to others – and more difficult, even, to fully understand yourself.
Gemini (May 21-June 20) – You may be surprised by the actions of a rival or competitor today, but you can quickly rise to any challenge that is offered and win the day.
Cancer (June 21-July 22) – You are best to avoid all manner of deception today. You mustn't stoop to tactics today that are in any way controversial. Play it straight.
Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your own personal power is on the rise, but you must take care that you don't overstep your bounds as a result of increasing confidence.
Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Keep yourself under cover for a while today until you have more information and you sense the time is right to reveal what you know.
Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Someone may be depending on you to do something that is still unclear. Get the whole story – and all the details – before saying "yes."
Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You don't want anyone to think that you're "sitting down on the job" today – so you'd better be ready to do a little more than expected.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Fried Chicken

Tuna Noodle Casserole

Caribbean Jerk Spiced Steak

Caribbean Jerk Tofu (vegan)

DINNER

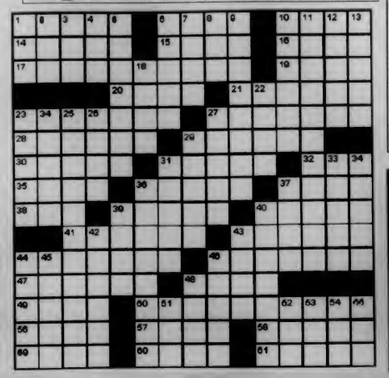
Chicken with Dijon Pecan Sauce

Beef Stew with Biscuit

Vegetable Stir Fry with Rice & Beans (vegetarian)

Multigrain Pilaf (vegan)

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!
*1/2 price munchies
9pm-close
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Claymore's cousin
6 One of the Catherwhights
10 First shepherd
14 Be extremely fond of 15 Surfing mecca
16 Good
17 Movie with a sad ending
19 "Nobody doesn't like Lee"
20 Cutlass, for one
21 Feels sorry for
23 Assemble, as parts of a document
27 Spaghetti-recipe phrase
28 Per
29 Grisham book (with "The")
30 Eat or drink to excess
31 Interest groups
32 Psychic's claim, for short
35 Burden
36 Stretch out one's neck
37 Hemingway nickname
38 Offensive of 1968
39 World-weary
40 They smell
41 "No more!"
43 Blue-ribbon
44 What a paper towel does
46 Pangs of conscience
47 They're passed to the swift
48 Seafood choice
49 Ripened
50 Exhausted
56 "The Seventh ___" (Bergman film)
57 1/16 ounce
58 Fit to be tied
59 Actress Sommer
60 Kitchen visitors
61 Fire engine feature

DOWN
1 Marked time
2 Suffix with lemon or lime
3 Its embrace is lethal
4 Take a wrong turn
5 Jump for joy
6 A moving crowd
7 Twelve ___ ("QWTW" plantation)
8 Seashell seller
9 Clergyman's white linen garment
10 "Pride and Prejudice" gem
36 Mix at the bar
37 Cup of the Americas game
39 Kind of lasso
40 Unbeatable rival
42 Soup morsel
43 Narcissist's love object
44 Put down
45 Cream cheese holder
46 Rental-sign word
48 RBIs, for one
51 Large server
52 Prefix with pod
53 Sound receiver
54 Had a bite
55 XY chromosome bearers

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER

© 2001 Universal Press Syndicate
www.unisyndicate.com

Night Editor: Melissa Hommel
Photo Editor: Tibara Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor: Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Sean Becker, Shannon Farrington

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Record season ends in second round

Pair of defensive battles in tourney

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Eventually, all good things must come to an end.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team has now halted its season after a 1-0 loss to St. John's (New York) yesterday at Adelphi University of Garden City, Long Island, in the second round of the NCAA Tournament. The Minutemen advanced to the second showdown after defeating Creighton University on Friday in the opening game.

St.John's	1
UMass	0
UMass	1
Creighton	0

Eighth seed St. John's ended the Maroon and White's season with just 11 minutes left in regulation. The goal that sailed past sweeper J.R. Pouncey landed in the net after hitting the right post, short the hands of keeper Bryan O'Quinn. SJ forward Shaltie Joseph earned credit for the goal in the 79th minute.

The Red Storm dominated the first half, getting seven shots on O'Quinn to UMass' one. The Minutemen picked up the pace in the second half, with Priah Myers nailing the ball at the net in an attempt to break the scoreless tie. Myers came up empty handed and SJU took control of the ball minutes later. O'Quinn was forced to continuously dive at the rapid fire the Storm set up. Matia Damiani set up the goal by Joseph in the closing minutes with a through pass, ending UMass' streak of 319 scoreless minutes. The Minutemen struggled to rally back, but the Red Storm held defensively and came up stronger in the end.

"They deserved to win," captain Pouncey said. "They were the better team."

The Minutemen only made it that far after crushing Creighton in their stampede through the postseason. The lone goal scored by Derek Rhodes was enough to hand UMass the win while awarding O'Quinn the most shutouts ever by a Minuteman goalie with 16 in his career.

Rhodes was able to slip one in just 20 minutes past the kick-off. Yuri Morales fed the goal as the forward dribbled past two defenders and then sent it to Rhodes who put it on the scoreboard. The Minutemen continued to hold onto the lead through the second half as Fred Kinateder and Jeff Deren worked to tally up another goal. The duo came up short but the team held onto the lead for the remaining 70 minutes.

The Blue Jays came into the tourney on an at-large bid after making it all the way into the final four during their 2000 campaign. CU came to the postseason after losing in the Missouri Valley Conference tournament, holding a record of 11-8-1. The Minutemen were confident in their first match-up, disregarding how far the Blue Jays had advanced last season.

"You're only as good as your last game," Pouncey said. "We knew if we played the way we know how to play, we would come out the victor."

The Minutemen had a season of firsts during the 2001 campaign: O'Quinn topping the all-time shutout list while holding opponents from scoring for over 300 minutes, the team won the Atlantic 10 Championship and earned national recognition with a spot in the brackets at the NCAA Tournament, and then made it into the second round.

Those accomplishments weren't enough to satisfy the Minutemen, however. Head Coach Sam Koch tied the legendary Lawrence Briggs for wins at 122 in a career at UMass. Koch was able to reach the record in 11 seasons, compared to Briggs' 37.

"He's someone to look up to," Pouncey said.

This season of firsts has been momentous for the team, which will lose six seniors to graduation, but leave behind an experience to carry into the future.

"I'm proud of what we've accomplished," Pouncey said. "It says something even better that we made it into the second round."

The Minutemen ended the season with a record of 15-6-1, the best in UMass history. Meanwhile, the NCAA tourney continues on with St. John's advancing to play Penn State on Dec. 2 in the third round. The Championship game will be held on Dec. 16 in Columbus, Ohio.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Shawn Green (No. 2) is one of six seniors leaving a winning legacy at UMass.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior Derek Rhodes scored the game-winning goal for the Minutemen Friday in their first round match against Creighton.

Johnson perfect

2nd straight UM shutout

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. – Each year at this time, everybody gives thanks for the things in their lives that they are lucky to have.

Among other things, Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon certainly gives thanks for Mike Johnson.

"Michael is a great goaltender to begin with and he has been for some time," Cahoon said. "This is a guy who a year ago made 60 saves in a 3-3 tie against Boston College, so he doesn't surprise me when he lights it up a little bit."

UMass	4
Dartmouth	0

Johnson turned away all 29 shots he faced to lead the Minutemen to a 4-0 victory over Dartmouth College (5-2-1, 3-1-1 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) on Saturday. For Johnson, it was his second consecutive shutout, and he has not allowed a goal in the last 167:11 he has logged between the pipes. It was the first time UMass (6-6-0, 2-3-0 Hockey East) has posted consecutive shutouts since 1930-31.

"Shutouts are nice," Johnson said. "That's the pinnacle of playing goalie. I guess – any time you go out, that's what you ultimately want. But obviously, it's not something I do on my own – the team has to give me a chance to do it. If it's five-on-none and I got a shutout, then I'd expect some high accolades."

Additionally, the special teams rolled for the Maroon and White, with the power play converting on three out of five opportunities and the shorthanded unit killing off all three of the Big Green's extra man opportunities. Freshman Craig MacDonald had two goals, both on the power play, to vault him into a tie for second on the team in goals with four.

"Our special teams were incredible tonight," Johnson said. "I remember Dartmouth setting up only one time on

Turn to HOCKEY, page 6

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass goalie Mike Johnson recorded his second straight shutout Saturday in the Minutemen's 4-0 win over Dartmouth.

Bench play leads UMass to victory

Lappas' crew holds on after early lead

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts men's basketball team started the season 2-0 was six years ago during the 1995-96 season. That year the Minutemen reached the Final Four and finished with a 35-2 record. That was also head coach John Calipari's final season in Amherst.

Now, in the first year of the Steve Lappas era, UMass is once again 2-0 following a 66-59 victory over Marist Saturday night at the Mullins Center. Senior center Kitwana Rhymer, who came off the bench for the first time since his sophomore year, scored a game-high 16 points and added four blocked shots to lead the way for the Minutemen, who opened up a 19-point lead at halftime before holding off a furious Red Fox rally for the victory.

UMass	66
Marist	59

UMass opened the game on a 12-2 run inside the game's first seven minutes and was able to keep its lead in double digits for the majority of the first half. Shannon Crooks scored 10 of his 14 points in the opening stanza and Rhymer and sophomore Raheim Lamb came off the bench to add 15 points on seven of nine shooting to give UMass its healthy halftime cushion.

The Minutemen hit 56 percent of their shots in the opening period, including three of four from behind the arc and outscored Marist 22-4 in the paint en route to opening up their 19-point halftime lead.

However, the real story of the opening 20 minutes was the play of the Maroon and White at the defensive end of the floor. Lappas used a 1-2-2 zone for most of the first half in an attempt to frustrate the Red Foxes and their perimeter shooters, a tactic that worked with Marist (3-1) seldom getting open looks at the basket, especially from three point range. Marist had led at halftime in all three of its previous games but was held to just five first half field goals and scored just 17 points to fall behind 36-17 when the horn sounded. Sean Kennedy, the Red Foxes leading scorer with 18 points per game coming into the game, took just two shots and was held scoreless.

The second half was a different story for both clubs, especially at the offensive end. Nick Eppehimer, a junior forward for the Red Foxes, hit three consecutive

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7

Minutemen zone in Foxes

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team was in the zone Saturday night against Marist – a 1-2-2 zone to be exact. Fortunately for the Minutemen, it's the type of zone that will flummox a Red Fox.

Known for its touch from the outside, Marist came into the game with already 25 three-pointers banked in three games, a stat backed by its 46.3 shooting percentage from behind the arc.

But coach Steve Lappas and his assistants figured during their eight-day layoff (after a 66-60 win over Arkansas-Little Rock in the season opener) that setting into a trap-hungry zone defense might baffle the Red Foxes and their long-range luster.

Essentially, that plan worked. Flustered by converging Minutemen in dead zones on the court, Marist managed only 17 first half points on 5-of-23 shooting (3-for-14 from three-point range).

"We just didn't do a good job of executing early," said Red Foxes mentor Dave Magarity, whose 3-1 Marist squad succumbed for the first time this season. "I think their trapping – their deep sideline traps, their baseline corner traps – really got us out of sync and they did a real good job of keeping us off balance early."

For most of the night, Anthony Anderson began defensive sets at the top of the key for the Minutemen, Shannon Crooks and Willie Jenkins guarded the wings, while Micah Brand and Kitwana Rhymer protected the blocks.

With that lineup – in the 1-2-2 setup – it is Anderson's job to force the point guard to one side (say, the side of Crooks and Rhymer) of the court. After that, several things can happen. If the opponent

Turn to HOOP, page 6

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior Shannon Crooks scored 10 points in the first half of Saturday's 66-59 win over Marist.

Britney: how low can she go -- in album sales.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The UMass men's hoop team hosts Orgeon tonight at the Springfield Civic Center. Read about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 55 www.dailycollegian.com Tuesday, November 27, 2001

Clock running out for Consumer Studies students

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

The Consumer Studies department at the University of Massachusetts will cease to exist by the end of spring, 2002.

The Board of Trustees approved tenure for the four Consumer Studies faculty members, as they transfer into different departments at UMass. Their previous standing will transfer with them in their new departments.

This decision finalized the last administrative step in the over-a-year-long process of closing the department, which is comprised of the Apparel Marketing and the Family and Consumer Sciences undergraduate programs.

The proposals to terminate the Apparel Marketing program altogether, to transfer the Family and Consumer Sciences program into the Resource Economics department and to close the Consumer Studies department as an administrative unit were first introduced before the Faculty Senate in November of 2000 by the then-Provost, Cora Marrett.

Admissions into the two programs had been suspended until further notice since February of 2000, and a review committee began looking at the department's state in greater detail, noting that nearly half of the faculty had left the department over the past five years.

"In looking at this situation, it has become clear to me that the question is not whether we think closing Consumer Studies is a good idea," Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Charlena Seymour, wrote in a memo addressed to the Rules Committee of the Faculty Senate in mid-September. "The question is whether, under the circumstances, we can reasonably achieve a different outcome."

Assistant Provost for Planning and Assessment, Bryan Harvey, reported that the faculty departure from the Apparel Marketing program was the main cause that sparked first consideration for closure.

"It got to the point where there weren't enough [faculty] to hold the department together," Harvey said. "It went from eight and a half to four [faculty members] in five years."

He further noted that although almost all departments were loosing faculty at that time, citing that the entire University lost approximately 260 faculty members in those same five years, Consumer Studies' initial size was the factor that sealed its fate.

"It was because the [Consumer Studies] department was so small to begin with that the percent of loss was greater," Harvey said, adding that the department could not hire new faculty to replace those who left.

Faculty left due to a variety of reasons, including the fact that some members transferred into different departments. However, their positions were unable to be refilled because the Dean did not have enough resources or money with which to supply them in order to pay those who would be newly hired.

Harvey also explained that the reason for the transfer of Family and Consumer Sciences to the department of Economic Resources was because it was the department that expressed the most interest in obtaining the program.

"The [Family and Consumer Sciences] program is most related to what people might call home economics," he said. "It is largely concerned with economic models and deals with the ways people purchase, so it makes a lot of sense [for the program] to go to an economic-based department."

In her memo to the Faculty Senate, Seymour cited

Turn to CONSUMER, page 3

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Collegiate wasteland
The road near Herter Hall and Whitmore is desolate during classes.

Symposium to display some pre-major talent

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

Pre-Major Advising Services presents a first-time symposium for freshman tomorrow morning from 8:30 to noon in Campus Center 163, offering breakfast and a discussion on the topics of community, diversity and leadership.

The Symposium includes student poster presentations, breakfast and an award ceremony for the students who participated in the poster project, a panel discussion among eight faculty members and a question and answer session to follow.

"[The Symposium is a] good follow-up to the Majors fair and pre-registration because people have been thinking about the issue of their education," Professor Elizabeth Petroff said.

Petroff is a professor in the Comparative Literature Department and has been very involved in the organizing of the Symposium.

"[We will] discuss the role students already play [at the university], what more they could do and how they could find other people who share their concerns. Because that's a big thing when you're a freshman, you don't really know where to go," Petroff said.

All of the panelists have worked extensively with freshman, several in a classroom setting. Others, like Assistant Vice Chancellor Manuel R. Townes of Campus Activities is more directly involved with registered student organizations and can offer advice on joining or creating organizations.

Sidonio Ferreira, associate director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students may speak on what the CCEMBS does and what the group's purpose is, as well as different opportunities for leadership in the community.

The panel also includes Dean Merle Ryan of the Dean of Students Office, Community Service Learning Director John Reiff, Dean Pamela Marsh Williams of the Undergraduate Advising and Academic Support Center, Professor Joye Bowman of the History Department and Alexandrina Deschamps of the Women Studies Department.

Petroff plans to speak on the kinds of self-knowledge students can reach in classes such as hers. She has been teaching a course titled "Spiritual Autobiography" for over a decade, a class largely filled by freshman. The poster participants, for instance, largely come from her class. Each participant will receive one-credit of Independent study for their work.

All the panelists will discuss how they interact with freshmen and "what we feel we have to offer undeclared freshmen," Petroff said. The Symposium aims to get students to think about the ideas that they come across in class, and using them for community learning projects as well as using the opportunity and encouraging further connection with faculty outside of class.

The Symposium, an idea sprung from Pre-Major Advising Services Academic Dean Richard Pioli, is financed by a grant from the Chancellor's Council on Community, Diversity and Social Justice. All freshmen are welcome to attend.

Pedestrian struck by automobile

A University of Massachusetts student was struck by an automobile Sunday evening.

Anthony Patrick, 21, a junior Food Science major, is listed in stable condition at Baystate Medical Center after suffering an apparent head injury in the accident.

Police say Joshua Mason, a 29-year-old Amherst resident, was operating under the influence alcohol when his car struck Patrick near the Southwest circle on University Drive at approximately 8 p.m. The incident was reported to the Amherst Police Department, who contacted the UMass police.

Mason was arrested for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

The Amherst Fire Department dispatched an ambulance to transport Patrick to Baystate.

It is unknown at press time if Mason will be arraigned, or on what charges.

If charged and convicted of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, a person can face suspension of their driver's license and, on first offense, possible jail time.

-Alicia Upano

Send in the Marines, US Defense officials say; friendly fire wounds five

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Five U.S. troops were injured in the northern Afghanistan city of Mazar-e Sharif in what's being described as a "friendly fire incident," while Marines are actively engaged in the south.

The five injured soldiers, whose names have not been released, were hurt after calling in a close air support mission to suppress rioting prisoners of war. The wounded were evacuated to a military hospital in Uzbekistan. Their injuries are being called "serious," but "not life threatening," by the U.S. Central Command.

Officials confirmed yesterday that helicopters from the 15th Marine Expeditionary Units were landing near Kandahar. The Pentagon said that the troops, which currently number less than 1000, would be used to establish a base of operations in southern Afghanistan.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld had previously told reporters that while the Marines were in the area, it was field commander General Tommy Franks' decision whether or not to use them. That decision, Rumsfeld said, has been made.

"U.S. Marines are now on the ground in the southern portion of Afghanistan. More are joining them. They are not an occupying force," Rumsfeld said. "Their purpose is to establish a forward base of operations to help pressure the Taliban forces in Afghanistan, to prevent Taliban and al Qaeda terrorists from moving freely about the country."

Rumsfeld explained that the base would be used to mount operations in the area, but would not elaborate on what those operations might be.

"The Marines are in to do what I've said, and that is to establish a forward operating base. And that is their purpose. It is not their purpose to do the other things that have been suggested," Rumsfeld said. "The question as to what else might that base be used for, prospectively, is an open question which none of us have discussed, and don't intend to."

Marine Corps Headquarters was also quiet on the possible missions, saying only that they would be conducting "a variety of follow-on operations including road interdiction" near the city of Kandahar.

General Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, explained that so far, the mission has been a success.

"The operation over the weekend to position Marines at a forward operating base in southern Afghanistan has gone well so far," Myers said. "We also remain focused on providing support to opposition groups throughout Afghanistan and on establishing airfield hubs for humanitarian assistance efforts."

Myers described the actions over the weekend. Air strikes and humanitarian efforts continued in several parts of Afghanistan, all designed to aid the people while pressuring the Taliban faction.

"Our main focus continues to be

Turn to WAR, page 3

Literacy Project seeks volunteers to help with adult reading program, GED classes

By Denise Nuñez
Collegian Correspondent

The Literacy Project is an adult, basic education program for successful education, community and social change. In Massachusetts, 1.2 million adults, or 25 percent, have skills below a high school level. Every year dozens of volunteers join the Literacy Project in an effort to change the statistics.

"This program is for those that have not succeeded in traditional education," Hollyn Green, the executive director of the program said. "Maybe because of a disruptive home life, early parenthood or learning disabilities, they had to drop out of school early."

When the students get to the Literacy project, they do an assessment test with math and reading. They are then enrolled in classes to study subjects such as math, reading and computer skills.

"Some people are in the 0-4 grade level or maybe are ready to get into the Pre-GED class," Green said.

Green suggested that the Literacy Project is important because it helps students increase their ability in reading and helps them with their family, life jobs and community.

"It helps them be in a higher level of community participation, such as voting," Green said.

The Literacy Project also provides accommodations for people with disabilities, and is partially funded by the Department of Education. The Project is not only beneficial for those who take the tests but also for the volunteers.

"Volunteers almost always get more than they give," one volunteer said. "This has been the most rewarding thing I have ever done."

The training is for 15 hours, and volunteers must attend two sessions. Pre-registration is required and space is limited. The Literacy Project is funded by the Massachusetts Department of Education, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the United Way, the community Coalition for Teens, community foundations and private donations.

"It is a free program that helps students improve their lives to become better individuals and citizens," Green said. "The Literacy Project is seeking for volunteer tutors. They find the work personally rewarding. Volunteers find a great way to strengthen their communities and create a lasting change."

The Literacy Project is located in 6 counties. In Franklin and Hampshire Counties, Amherst, Northampton, Ware, Orange, Turner Falls, and Greenfield all host programs.

This program is free of cost. It is currently seeking Classroom assistants for literacy, math, computer and GED classes. To register, call Margaret Anderson, Volunteer Coordinator, at 413-774-3934, extension 15.

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

The Literacy Project assists adults in improving reading skills.

National Briefs

By Heather Nicholson
The Daily Cougar (U. Houston)

(U-WIRE) HOUSTON – While the debate continues as to whether Houston or Los Angeles is the nation's "smoggiest city," a report released this year by the Environmental Protection Agency named Houston the "dirtiest" city in America in terms of air pollutants.

The EPA, the federal agency charged with enforcing the nation's environmental regulations, has established a National Ambient Air Quality Standard for air pollutants. The agency imposes standards on pollutants and emissions, investigates areas found to be in violation of the NAAQS standards and designates deadlines for areas to come into compliance with the standards.

The agency defines smog as "pollution made up of a combination of primary components: carbon monoxide, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide, ozone, lead, volatile organic compounds and particulate matter."

Ozone is a reactive form of oxygen. When found in the troposphere, or at ground level, it can have adverse effects on humans, animals and vegetation. The number of days that a metropolitan area experiences excessive amounts of ground-level ozone is the usual benchmark for the "dirtiest city" title.

The Houston-Galveston Metropolitan statistical area is composed of eight contiguous counties: Harris, Galveston, Brazoria, Fort Bend, Waller, Montgomery, Liberty and Chambers. The EPA monitors "ozone exceedances" in these eight counties daily. An "exceedance" occurs when the number of smog particles exceeds 125 parts per billion, the maximum deemed healthy by the agency.

According to the EPA's report on the Houston area for 2000, the area was in violation of the standards 43 times. Through the end of October this year (with two months of monitoring left), the area had been in violation 30 times.

The EPA separates ozone exceedances into three categories: 125 to 164 ppb is unhealthy for sensitive groups (children, the elderly); 165 to 204 ppb is unhealthy for the general population and 205 to 404 is very unhealthy.

The leading factor driving the Houston-Galveston area's pollution problem is the petrochemical industry. The cities of Pasadena, La Porte, Deer Park, Channelview and Baytown, Texas, are home to 36 petrochemical plants and oil refineries.

In 1999 a letter to the EPA from the community group Galveston-Houston Association for Smog Prevention said, "Any winds coming from the east blow toxic chemical pollutants towards downtown [Houston] and many neighborhoods where people work and live."

Through the end of October, the southeast Harris County area claimed the highest number of days of pollution exceedance for any county in the nation with 14.

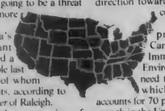
A survey of the petroleum and petrochemical industries in Texas conducted by scientists at Rice University reported that of the 39 refineries along the Texas coast, 12 are located around Galveston Bay. Of the 74 gas processing plants, 22 are on the bay.

Between '96 and '99 the American Lung Association in its "State of the Air" reports, gave the Houston Galveston area a rating of F in comparison to other regions in the United States.

The people who are most likely to be affected adversely are those who work in the petrochemical industry. James Chadwick, a lifelong Deer Park, Texas, resident, has been an employee of a Lubrizol Corporation petrochemical plant for 30 years.

"Chemicals aren't the best thing to work around, but these plants are the only jobs available [in Deer Park] and I can't afford to be picky, even if there are health concerns," he said.

By Ruth Carlitz
The Chronicle (Duke U.)



(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.C. — The Latino Credit Union in El Centro Hispano offers services for local Latino residents, many of whom say they are disappointed that a proposal to give illegal Mexican immigrants amnesty now seems unlikely.

Earlier this year, President George W. Bush talked of granting amnesty to illegal Mexican immigrants – a prospect upon which many members of the large and steadily growing Latino population looked fondly. But the events of Sept. 11 created a shift in national priorities that has worried some Mexican immigrants in Durham.

"There's two sides of the coin," said Ivan Parra, director of El Centro Hispano in Durham. "[There is] concern and solidarity with the U.S. community for what has happened on Sept. 11 and after that, but also there's a sense of worry and preoccupation that those conversations [about amnesty] have stopped."

Parra said he has heard that many local Mexicans are considering moving back home, though the suspension of amnesty talks is not their primary motivation.

"They're coming here usually to escape from those very same situations of violence in their communities," Parra said. "For some people, it's not worth it to be here if there's going to be a threat of more violence, more [...] terrorism."

North Carolina's Mexican immigrant population numbered a quarter million people last year, roughly half of whom are illegal immigrants, according to The News & Observer of Raleigh.

In addition to the suspension of amnesty talks and the threat of terrorism, some local Mexicans expressed fear of increased prejudice.

"The worst thing is that some people, even here in the United States, can take advantage of these things in order to exacerbate the racism against minorities," said an illegal immigrant from Mexico, who works for a local housekeeping service and spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Many Mexicans come to Durham in order to find work in construction, at restaurants and other businesses, but now, these jobs may not be enough to keep them here.

"It is not worth it here in this time of war," the housekeeping service worker continued.

Some of the women at the housekeeping service expressed concern and said they have heard of people wanting to return to Mexico. One woman, an illegal immigrant, specifically pointed to bioterrorism as a reason for her fear. She also said it is now going to be harder to get a job, a house or a driver's license.

Prior to Nov. 1, North Carolina was considered one of the easiest places for illegal immigrants to get driver's licenses, but a new law, which originally was not supposed to go into effect until Jan. 1, has put in place stricter guidelines for proving residency.

In addition to requiring two forms of identification, every customer applying for a driver's license must now provide one document showing proof of residency in North Carolina, unless one of the required identification documents has the applicant's residence address on it. As of Jan. 1, anybody applying for a driver's license must have either a Social Security number or an Individual Taxpayer Identification Number.

Some local residents said stricter licensing laws are a step in the right direction toward tighter immigration control.

Ron Woodward, President of North Carolinians for Lowering Immigration to Save the Environment Now, cited the need to restrict immigration, which he said currently accounts for 70 percent of all population growth in the United States. He said the population is currently growing too rapidly, creating stress on the environment and government services.

"People who support mass immigration are more concerned with what's good for the immigrant rather than what's good for Americans," he said.

Woodward also opposes amnesty for illegal immigrants, which he sees as a reward for bad behavior. He added that after Sept. 11, an amnesty policy for Mexican immigrants might amount to racial profiling, as it would apply to only one ethnicity.

By Akiko Ono
The Lantern (Ohio State U.)

(U-WIRE) COLUMBUS, Ohio – Ever wanted a tutor who is available to help with classes 24 hours a day? If so, here is a dream come true.

RideTheBellCurve.com, a new online learning Web site, allows undergraduate students to post their academic problems to online teaching assistants, began service this month.

The online TAs are graduate students from across North America who are ready to provide step-by-step solutions any time undergraduate students need their academic assistance.

"We're focusing on providing a learning process," said Grant Goodwin, president of RideTheBellCurve.com. Undergraduate students pay $3.30 when they accept the solution sent by the online TAs. Eighty percent of the charge goes to the online TA, the company receives the other 20 percent.

"What was lacking at university educational level was assistance," Goodwin said.

After nine months of research about what is needed to enhance university-level education, the company reached the conclusion that the best thing is to provide solutions, Goodwin said. The educational assistance universities provide is not enough to meet students' needs, he said.

Other than the post-a-problem service, the company offers an essay review service and soon will offer what is called a solution bank service.

An essay review service allows students to post final drafts of their essays and assignments. They then will be reviewed and marked by online TAs. Students pay $1.67 per double-spaced page, and the TA receives $1.33.

The new solution bank, which contains previously posted problems and solutions, offers more learning options for students. Students pay $2 to download the solution bank, and the online TAs who provided the browsed solutions receive $1 for each bank that is downloaded.

According to the company, Ohio State University graduate students anonymously work as online TAs, and as of Nov. 19, 25 problems had been posted by OSU undergraduate students.

Bill Hall, vice president for student affairs, said the office didn't realize this type of new online service existed though it knew various kinds of educational help are available from private mentors.

Whereas the services seem to be catching on at OSU, concerns about cheating arise from how the services are used. The possibility of cheating arises if undergraduate students simply copy and hand in the solution of their assignments or projects from the online TA's reply.

Goodwin said the company is well aware of cheating problems. However, he believes the service will provide a better learning process for students than simply copying their friends' work. The service at least offers a step-by-step explanation.

"The trade-off is simple," Goodwin said.

According to Goodwin, by the end of the quarter, if they pass or fail, the students will realize the results of their actions.

As one solution for plagiarism, the Web site can't be browsed through any handheld Internet devices, Goodwin said. It is impossible to cheat during the exam because the Web page doesn't grow or shrink in size.

Further investigation is needed to see if using these new Web sites are considered cheating. Responses from OSU officials vary.

"I see the potential to be a good thing if undergraduate students are being mentored by graduate students," Hall said. "Actually, if they are learning, growing and developing from their experiences, that will be a positive contribution."

However, if undergraduate students are using the service in order to avoid doing their own work, that will be a serious concern, Hall said. He emphasized that the office needs to know specifically about the service to see if it is legitimate.

Susan L. Huntington, dean of the Graduate School, said it is unclear if the Web service crosses the line between tutoring undergraduates and doing the work for them. In the latter case, it will be a new form of cheating that can erode undergraduate education. Moreover, she said, it can be an unethical way for graduate students to earn money.

Huntington said both undergraduate and graduate students need to be cautioned before using the Web. Whether this type of Internet service eventually will be blocked from the OSU server remains unknown until further review is conducted, Hall said.

"Potentially, that could happen if we determine that the practice is not a legitimate one," Hall said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Every Monday Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Dunzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

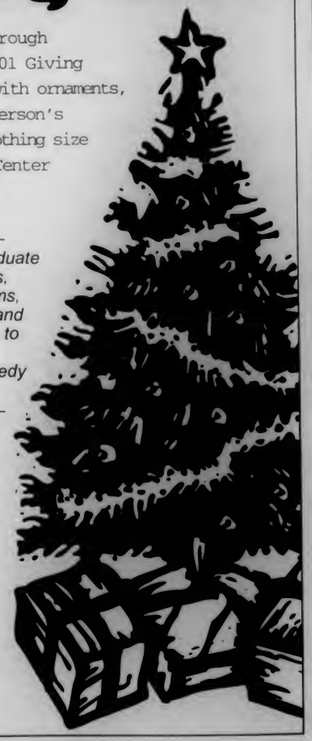
The Newman Center invites you to Participate in our annual

Giving Tree



From December 1st through December 14th, our 2001 Giving Tree will be adorned with ornaments, each baring a young person's first name, age and clothing size given to the Newman Center by local churches and social agencies.

Undergraduate and graduate students, fraternities, sororities, sports teams, offices, departments and families are welcome to take an ornament and give a gift to a needy young person.

The Giving Tree is located in the Chapel of the Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St., Amherst

Please drop off gifts no later than Sunday, December 16, 2001

Call or stop by with any questions 413-549-0300 X36

This is Ted.

Ted had no friends.
Ted had no future.

Then Ted got a job selling ads at the Daily Collegian.

Look at Ted now.
Sell Ted, Sell.

Follow Ted down to the Campus Center Basement where the Collegian is now accepting applications for advertising representatives for Spring, 2002. Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply. Stop by 113 Campus Center or call 545-3500.

Police Log

Monday, Nov. 19

Annoying Behavior
Woman reported a man drinking beer in the third floor women's bathroom of Lederle Research Lowrise at 1:55 p.m. When the police officers arrived, the suspect could not be found. Officers searched area and found no man matching his description.

Disturbance
Parking Attendant called at 3:15 p.m. to request police assistance with an irate student. Student's car was being impounded in Lot 46 (between the Brett and Wheeler Dormitories) for numerous unpaid parking tickets. Officers put hold on vehicle due to student's suspended driver's license.

Larceny
Durfee Conservatory reported two missing Bonsai trees, one worth $300, the other worth $250. The Conservatory has had several thefts of Bonsai in the past year, and the current report is still under investigation.

Assault and Battery
Woman called at 9:51 p.m. to report that two males had pushed her while attempting to get into her car in Lot 65, north of Skinner Hall at approximately 9:20 p.m. Suspects fled as a group of people approached. Woman said she would go to police station to file a written report at a later time.

Tuesday, Nov. 20

Health/Safety Hazard
Officer on patrol noticed a light pole near Morrill was knocked over. Called the Physical Plant and Environmental Health and Safety. Power turned off.

Vandalism
Two vehicles found with driver's side window smashed and stolen radio at Lot 13 (near Fraternity/Sorority Park) at 4:10 a.m.

Larceny
Police received a report of a stolen credit card from Pierpont Dormitory at 8:23 p.m.

Assist Citizen
Person reported an odd smell on the second floor of Conte Polymer Research Center at 11 p.m. Environmental Health and Safety called to the scene, found that water leaking on a computer produced the smell.

Wednesday, Nov. 21

Suspicious Activity
Resident director of Prince Dormitory called at 7:47 a.m. to report chairs and other items blocking main entrance.

Friday, Nov. 22

Larceny
Report of stolen stereo and cash from a vehicle in Lot 79 (near North Village) at 10:16 a.m. At 1:15 p.m., two other cars were found in the same parking lot: one missing door speakers, a computer in the trunk and had a damaged dashboard, the other car was missing two speakers, a CD player and three badminton rackets.

Saturday, Nov. 23

Suspicious Person/Activity
Caller reported two students sneaking into Hills Dormitory when the majority of housing on campus was closed for the holiday. Officers found a male and female on the second floor and escorted them out of the building.

Sunday, Nov. 24

Personal Injury
Pedestrian struck by vehicle on University Drive near Southwest circle at approximately 8 p.m. The pedestrian, a Southwest resident, suffered a head injury and was sent to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, Mass. Driver was arrested for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

Dog struck on Clark Hill Road, reported to be limping around Franklin Dining Hall at 8:19 p.m. Officers were unable to locate dog.

Personal Injury
Chadbourne Dormitory resident inured herself while preparing to go to bed. Resident experienced a knee injury and was sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Property Damage
A car accident was reported near Cashin Dormitory at 9:23 p.m. There were no personal injuries.

-Alicia Upano

■ war

continued from page 1

on putting maximum pressure on al Qaeda and the Taliban, and we are continuing air strikes and have increased our ground forces, as the Secretary mentioned, by putting some Marines in Afghanistan," Myers said. "We used about 110 strike aircraft [Sunday], including about 85 tactical aircraft launched from platforms at sea, about 10 land-based tactical aircraft and about the same number of long-range bombers. We dropped leaflets in the Mazar-e Sharif, Kabul and Kandahar and Herat areas, and continued our Commando Solo broadcast missions as well.

"Our humanitarian relief support continued with two C-17 air drops near Kunduz and Herat, delivering about 40 containers with over 19,000 rations, and 40 containers of wheat and blankets," Myers added. "To date we have delivered about 1,900,000 humanitarian daily rations."

Rumsfeld explained that there was some confusion earlier in the war over the food packages, which were colored similarly to cluster bombs also dropped by U.S. planes. The packages are now clearly marked, Rumsfeld said.

"We've seen a lot of photographs of the rations being gathered up by people and guarded with weapons and passed out to people, and that people are in fact eating them and using them," Rumsfeld said.

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

COURTESY USMC

Marine CH-46 helicopters lift off. The United States deployed Marines to Afghanistan to construct a forward base.

■ consumer

continued from page 1

the reason for Apparel Marking's complete closure, as opposed to a transfer similar to the Family and Consumer Sciences program, was that neither the Dean nor the affected faculty members were successful in persuading the School of Management that the Apparel Marketing program would be a "good fit" there.

"We have no procedure to compel one department to accept a program from another," Seymour continued. "I believe we would want to think long and hard before adopting such a practice."

According to Harvey, the closing process of a UMass department begins with the Dean, who lays out the reasoning for its closing. The Provost Office then explains that reasoning to the Faculty Senate, just as Marrett did a year ago, and the professors vote on what to do.

At first, he said, the Faculty Senate did not agree that the department should be closed. However, Seymour's September memo outlined the problems created in a situation that lacks both faculty and funds, and the final plans to officially close the department went underway shortly thereafter.

Seymour explained that the four department faculty members will indeed keep their same rank and tenure as they move into different departments next school year.

"They still have jobs here at the University," she said. "Their tenure will now be in a different department. It is just there's no administrative unit now for them to be located in."

The Consumer Studies department head and associate Professor Sheila Mammen will transfer to the Resource Economics department with her colleague, associate Professor Musaddak Alhabee, with both working in the Family and Consumer Sciences program.

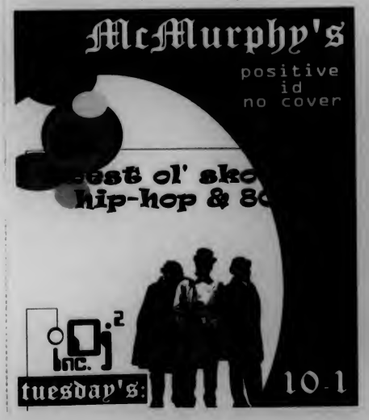
Furthermore, associate Professor Patricia Warner will transfer to the Theater department and assistant Professor Susan Michelman to the Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration.

"I don't want it to appear that I want to leave my department because obviously it is where I feel the most comfortable," Mammen explained. "At the same time, I'm grateful. I think it [Resource Economics] is a great department."

Even with these optimistic words, Mammen further expressed her personal sentiment as to the thought of her department's closure, describing it as sad, painful and something about which to grieve.

"It's over and done with," she added. "It's just a very difficult time for the staff and faculty and a difficult time for the students."

All students enrolled in the Consumer Studies department will have completed their coursework by the end of spring of 2002, and thus mark the final graduating class from UMass with such a degree.



"I have been acutely aware that the campus has learned many lessons since the closure was first proposed, and I understand that if we had the ability to roll back the clock we might do things differently," Seymour wrote to the Faculty Senate. "But I also recognize that discussions regarding the future of Consumer Studies have been ongoing for several years. My main responsibility now is to make the best decision I can, given all that has happened, and move the campus forward."

Peaceful pathway
Trees shade a serene scene on a sunny day.

News meeting tonight @ 5:30. Be there, it's important!!!

www.dailycollegian.com

Attention
February 2002 Graduates

If you are a member of the February 2002 graduating class who received Federal Perkins Loans while enrolled at UMass you should have recently received a certified letter about those loans.

We know this is a very busy time for you so we've mailed this information rather than having you attend a meeting.

However there are serious consequences if you fail to return these documents by 11/30/01 as instructed in our letter.

If you haven't received our letter but think that you should have or if you have any question about what you did receive,

Call 545-2377

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Christmas is here

Don't over do it

The retail world is worried we won't buy anything. That's amazing. Last week's post-Thanksgiving sales showed us the great lengths that the business world goes to keep our economy moving.

Don't be fooled by the gimmicks. Don't be fooled by the shtick. Corporate America can wave the flag all they want. People talk about the necessity in exercising all of our patriotic duties. We've got plenty of them. We vote. We serve on juries and participate in our justice system. We follow laws. We pay our taxes. In different ways, we support our troops. There's many ways to be a proud American. But shopping? Since when do people bleed red, white, and blue for that?

There's no doubt about it, our economy is a mess right now. It might not be "official" yet, but there's no doubt that the United States of America is in a recession. Recessions mean that as a whole, the American people don't buy as much.

Don't feel guilty about that. It's not the American public's fault. A key piece of wisdom for this holiday season would be to remember the recession, but do not feel as though you personally have to fix it. Retailers are offering huge discounts, bargains and cut interest rates. If you were going to buy a particular item, that is their way of keeping you interested in buying that item. That's beneficial, both for the interested consumer and for the business that was worried about attracting the sales.

If you weren't going to buy that item, however, then don't. Do not overextend yourself this holiday season by single-handedly trying to compensate for the lost sales of a nation. Your country needs you, but you've got plenty of ways that you can help. Putting all of your extra money into, say, Sam Walton's pockets because you think it's your civic duty is just foolish.

We've been told it time and time again since Sept. 11. Hysteria is our enemy. Hysteria will not solve our problems. Hysteria is not the answer. Quite practically, it doesn't take a brain surgeon to figure that one out. Hysteria isn't the answer to anything for a simple reason: a hysterical response to anything is bad. Therefore, hording money like a squirrel as a reaction to everything that has changed isn't helping anyone. It's that paranoid, we're-all-headed-for-doom response that our government is doing its best to guard against.

There are a lot of brilliant people in marketing, developing all sorts of schemes to get us out of our homes and buying this holiday season. If the gimmicks they've developed suit you, go for them. If they don't, leave it alone. You owe our economy nothing more than the money you are comfortable spending. Patriotism has its limits, and it shouldn't be exploited for greed's sake by corporate America. Buy what your checkbook allows you to this year. We'll all have a happier holiday if we're not struggling to make ends meet.

Staff editorials are the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial staff.

A Ray of Elvis

He's the guy that grew up a mile away from my home and pumped gas for his dad at a station at the end of my street. You want inspiration? Try this one on for size.

Ray Guillemette grew up in my hometown of Chicopee as a normal kid. His mother played Elvis Presley records. This doesn't seem like anything unusual, and it's not. Ray really liked the music, though, to the point where he started collecting news clippings on Elvis. This doesn't make Ray any different than me or anyone else; he was just an honest fan of the man and the music. Everyone has his or her favorite artist, and Elvis was one of Ray's.

As Ray got older, things snowballed. He and a buddy would go down to the clubs, and Ray would sing karaoke. Not surprisingly, he often gave Elvis a whirl. It didn't take long before he was taking requests on Saturday nights. On a whim, Ray called a company called Imposter Bostonian after seeing an advertisement they had looking for Michael Jackson and Madonna look-alikes. A couple of months later he was a hit, performing at parties and shows just about every weekend as "A Ray of Elvis."

After a few months of shows, Ray made a trip down to Memphis with a New Hampshire DJ who saw him perform. With nearly 200 contestants from across the globe, Ray came away with first place in an Elvis impersonation contest. In his first competition ever, Ray beat out them all.

It's kind of an odd story. Ray went from working as a chef in a local restaurant to performing across the country and overseas in Japan with Presley's first band, the Jordanaires. Then the rug got pulled out from under him.

On a warm July night last summer on a quiet stretch of Route 83 in Connecticut, Ray and his girlfriend Lisette Thompson were heading back to her home in Somers upon his motorcycle. The roar of an engine and the flash of headlights closed in on them from behind, and their lives were changed forever.

The cowardly driver responded to the accident with a hit-and-run reaction. With Ray and Thompson broken on the pavement and blood oozing onto asphalt, the driver motored on. Thompson, with a fractured wrist, a head wound and a random assortment of bruises, bumps and scrapes, faired relatively luckily in the accident. Ray did not.

> The roar of an engine and the flash of headlights closed in on them from behind, and their lives were changed forever.

Ray Guillemette has endured 14 staples to the head, 13 operations on his left leg, the hospital airlift helicopter trip from Route 83, countless hours of physical therapy and 104-degree fevers due to a horrible infection in his mutilated leg. Oh, and the pain. Even after all of those surgeries and fevers, the infection won. After two months of surgeries, traction, and helplessness, Ray had had enough. With options running out, Ray pulled the plug himself, opting for amputation. He wanted control again and by going forward with the amputation, Ray was gaining it. Little less than morphine could ease Ray's pain after they took his leg.

The worst is over. Ray has been fitted with a prosthetic and is on the road through rehabilitation. While down a leg, he's not down in spirit – in fact, leg or not, he can't wait to get back on the stage for more. That's not a bad thing, and it shows the courage and perseverance that people have inside of them when they really need it. Ray could have given up on everything. He's better than that.

Some day soon, Ray will no doubt be performing. Mopping sweat from his brow and belting out Presley's finest, "A Ray of Elvis" will live again. And you know what? Those in attendance who don't know any better won't even be able to tell that underneath his pants leg, there's a limb missing. Or that in the missing limb lays the story of a hero who has overcome.

Ray has two shows booked in April and has stated in interviews that he plans on being a positive influence in people's lives, just like he always has. My parents caught on the news the other day that he visited a local grammar school to talk to the kids about becoming an amputee and how having a prosthetic doesn't make people different. He's right. If Ray is any indication, it makes them better.

I stopped over the weekend to get gas at Ray Guillemette's Service Station down the street. It's that station that Ray's dad, Ray Sr., owns. I wanted to ask him how his son was doing.

Unfortunately, Ray Sr. wasn't there that day. It's ok, though – it's pretty easy to know what he would have said. He's damn proud of his son, just like a lot of other people. It's hard not to be. When someone takes something so negative and makes it into a positive in their own life and in the lives of others, there's only one reaction that's fitting. Ray Guillemette, Jr., "A Ray of Elvis," has my complete respect. I've never seen a show, and it doesn't matter. Ray has the kind of courage that most men only dream about.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Information from the Union-News and from the Valley Advocate was used to write this column.

Passing times

Robert Redford was on the cover of USA Weekend this Sunday. He's got to be at least 103 years old, but you know he hasn't aged a bit since Sneakers, which was released in 1992. I'd also like to bring your attention to the fact that Mick Jagger, who is also 103 years old, just released a new solo album and is probably doing groupies as we speak. This leads me to believe that the only way to retain youth is to become a superstar.

I had a sinking, dreadful feeling this week on my Thanksgiving sabbatical. I am old and I am getting older with each passing day. Now when we come home, my friends and I meet at bars, where we reminisce, blurry-eyed about the good ol' days. The "good ol' days" are sixth grade, which I guess doesn't make us ancient, but definitely miles closer to thirty, forty and eventually fifty.

I wonder, as time goes by, who accepts age with dignity? Who, willingly, lets time get the best of them? Maybe those people are the ones who truly enjoy life. I have spent four autumns here at the University of Massachusetts. Again, this year, the leaves are gone, the Valley has grown colder and another fall of my youth has passed on. Just yester day I was enjoying summer, going to concerts and reading bad paperback novels on the beach. Now, I am making Christmas lists and recovering from yet another Thanksgiving dinner.

When I'm around adults, I often get the sense that they long for their youths. They say, with a distant look in their eyes: "Oh, you are so lucky, getting ready to go off into the world." We have our whole lives ahead of us, where we will succeed, fail and suffer the slings and arrows that life hurtles at us. Unless you learn to make time your own, you'll find those things you've always said you were going to do and that you've always wanted to accomplish slip further and further out of reach. I'm not saying we should regret. When you regret you become an immediate victim of the sea-sons, the clock and the cycles of the Earth. It brings you back into the past instead of focusing on the present. You have to follow through and do those things you talk about.

Think about all the plans you make during the holiday season: to meet with friends, to work in a soup kitchen or do a good deed, to dedicate serious thought to the presents you give your loved ones. I am the Queen of Procrastination. I have left everything to the last minute my whole life. When you do that, your life becomes full of stressful last minutes. It is every minute that's important. I'm not talking about schoolwork. If there's anything you should leave until the last possible minute, it's schoolwork. What is schoolwork going to get you, a job? Maybe. A piece of paper penned with a dead language? Maybe. Not that you shouldn't value your education, but there's a method to schoolwork, a system that is different for each student. Life, the things that are meaningful, the baggage that you carry with you throughout your time here on this great planet – that is different.

You cannot help but be more aware of it as you grow older. There are no instructions on how to pass the time, how to hold onto it so that it lasts as long as you need it to. When you can grasp this, it all becomes easier. I have no tips on how to actually do this, but I've experienced it before while looking up into the night sky or seeing the sun settle over the mountains in the west.

Perhaps we need only to acknowledge how insignificant we are in the great scheme of things. The hardest thing for humans to do is to recognize how little they matter. We are schooled into thinking that we can "make a difference," that we, as the youth in society, are responsible for the future. This is all true, but the more I hear it, the more unlikely I'm going to accept that vocation. That responsibility is far too great for anyone to conceive. There is way too much pressure for you to use your time to make a difference in the world. What if instead, you focused on making little differences here and there? That's all you're going to be able to accomplish anyway. Humans are in the business of expecting big. Hollywood results, but real life is never like that. Real life is better.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Read it. Write it. Love it. Get involved with Ed/Op.

Random ramblings inside a UMass head

SEAN JACQUET

You know it's a scary world when you see some laundry detergent spilled in the hallway and your first thought is anthrax.

Does it bother anyone else when an athlete points to the sky or makes the sign of the cross after scoring a touchdown or hitting a home run? Hey, Jesus didn't make you score that touchdown, buddy, you did. If you believe in God that's fine, but incorporating a deity into your on-field celebration makes you look pretty stupid. Perhaps more irritating are the athletes that launch into some dogmatic response during routine interviews. These buddy Chris and I like to call "Jesus athletes." Kurt Warner and Evander Holyfield are two of the worst offenders. Holyfield, former heavyweight champion, will speak at length about the Lord, Jesus and the Bible. That's interesting, considering he competes in the most brutal of mainstream and has fathered six illegitimate children by five different women. I don't condemn Holyfield for his sexual improprieties because everybody makes mistakes, but don't preach about the teachings of the Bible when you continuously violate them. Furthermore, I doubt Jesus is proud that you pummel other men for a living. Kurt Warner, the St. Louis Rams quarterback, is more confusing than hypocritical. Warner can turn a simple football question into a lengthy sermon. "Kurt, what play did you run on that crucial fourth and eleven late in the third quarter?" "Well, I just want to thank God for being there on the field with me and giving me the strength to complete that pass..." Answers like this are more confusing than my mother's frequent warnings not "to go to pot." Athletes succeed because they are talented individuals, not because God is aiding their production on the field.

Hey, what better way to endear America to the Muslim population of the world and reverse its reputation as a racist, capitalist, bully nation than to bomb the crap out of Afghan civilians?

I miss Anthony Michael Hall. And Ally Sheedy. And Molly Ringwold. And Judd Nelson. And Emilio Estevez. Oh! I'm gonna go rent The Breakfast Club.

Hey, should we have riots and start torching couches every time a New York team doesn't win a championship?

Martin Lawrence is in a new movie called Black Knight where he travels back to medieval times. Lawrence plays the cool black guy that makes fun of all the lame white crackers. The problem with this premise is that it has become a tired genre. Not only that, it wastes the considerable gifts of a talented comedian like Lawrence. I'm all for making fun of lame white crackers, but It should be done in moderation. Like any overdone joke, it loses humor each time it's told. Crackers.

Congratulations to Michael Jordan for proving he can still play with the league's elite. After a public challenge from Boston Celtics forward Paul Pierce, Jordan lit up Pierce, scoring 32 points on 12-for-26 shooting. Jordan also held Pierce to 14 points in a Wizards loss. At 38, Jordan has adopted a more jump-shot oriented game and doesn't drive to the basket as well as he used to, but he still defends very well. Although he hasn't been the Michael of old yet, the season is young and I have a feeling he's just getting warmed up.

I would like to confirm a Collegian columnist's assertion that there are in fact, wrestling fans that have skills with the blades. I'm just not one of them.

Speaking of wrestling, why do people think they've just clued me in on some earth-shattering detail when they tell me it's fake? I know it's fake. I know it's stupid. I don't watch wrestling because it's great theater. None of these wrestlers will ever be recruited to play Hamlet. I watch because the action inside the ring is impressive. The stunts these men and women do require incredible skill, strength and discipline. They may not actually be fighting, but when you see them crash through tables, take chair shots, or do front flips off of fifteen foot cages, that's real. They put on a good show, and that's why I watch. So please, let me watch my stupid wrestling without being reminded that it's "fake."

I'm really worried about my car lately. I bought it two years ago for 2000 dollars from some old man. It's got 126,000 miles on it, and it's American-made. Needless to say, it's not lasting me too much longer. Not having a car would make taking a girl out interesting.

Me: Do you want to go out some time, maybe catch a flick or something?

Her: That sounds like fun. How about Saturday? Pick me up at 8?

Me: That depends. Do you live near a bus stop?

Happy retirement to Mark McGwire. After 16 injury-plagued seasons, McGwire is calling it quits, saying that spending another offseason rehabbing his surgically repaired knee didn't appeal to him. McGwire burst onto the scene in 1987, hitting 49 homers, a rookie record, and winning Rookie of the Year honors. In 1998, he shattered Roger Maris' single season home run record of 61, hitting 70. (Barry Bonds broke that record this season with 73). He followed the next year with 65 dingers, but spent most of 2000 and 2001 on the disabled list. He did manage 29 home runs in 2001, but batted a paltry .187. McGwire, one of the more recognizable athletes in America, was always gracious with both fans and the media. He went out of his way to include the Maris family in the 62nd home run celebration as well as Sammy Sosa, his closest competitor that year. One of the most prolific home run hitters of all time, McGwire retires with 583 homers, fifth all time. He also leaves with the best at-bat per home run average ever (10.6 at-bats per home run hit). McGwire joins Cal Ripken and Tony Gwynn as sure to be members of the Hall of Fame Class of 2007. McGwire respects the game and left when he knew he could no longer give it his best. He, along with Sosa, captivated a nation in 1998 and restored America's love affair with baseball. Good luck, Mark. Thanks for the memories.

Sean Jacquet is a UMass student.

Stylish giving

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

I've long had a rule not to go shopping the day after Thanksgiving. I always listened to my family's advice that the crowds would just be too much. But this year, I headed over to Downtown Crossing in Boston post-Turkey Day, and was amazed and astounded. Yes, it was crowded. Yes, people were bustling through the streets, jostling others with bags laden with gifts. And yes, a few fat-faced little children were throwing tantrums, while their parents threatened them with no Santa. But, as a whole, people were so pleasant! The store clerks were cheerful, people weren't pushy in line and most people waited patiently for hours to see Santa at City Hall Plaza. A day can make such a difference in people's behavior – the day before Thanksgiving people weren't being quite so kind.

The time between Thanksgiving and [illegible] is truly a magical time. Kwanzaa, Christmas, Chanukah, Ramadan and the Winter Solstice (and any other holidays that I've forgotten) are all times for people to reflect, give thanks and rejoice. And the new year is a time for people to start their lives anew, with past mistakes (theoretically) wiped clean (although, I highly doubt your girlfriend will have forgiven last year's anniversary debacle). But it's not just the holidays that create this good will amongst people – I think the holidays were, at least partially, created for people to have the opportunity to show appreciation to others and spread their talents and wealth around their community and around the world.

So while your holiday may (or may not) be a time where you give gifts to your family and friends, take the time to show others you care as well. There are so many ways that you can give back to the world, and help someone else share in the joy you feel. Since this is a style column, here are some of the more "fashionable" ways to give something back.

Donate your hair to kids who have medical hair loss (due to chemotherapy, burns, etc.). Do you have long hair that you're tired of having to tie back all the time? Or are you willing to sacrifice your hair to make a difference in a child's life? Two organizations, Locks of Love and Wigs for Kids, are always looking for people of all ages, races and genders to donate hair for children's wigs. Hair can be permed or colored, as long as there is no chemical damage. Hair must be clean, dry, bundled into a ponytail or braid, and sent in a plastic bag. Hair swept up off the floor cannot be used. The two organizations' websites offer more information on donating hair. Locks of Love, www.locksoflove.org, accepts donations of hair 10" or longer and offers lists of hair salons that give discounts/free hair cuts to those donating their hair, while Wigs for Kids, www.wigsforkids.org, accepts donations 12" or longer.

Donate clothes through the Red Cross, Salvation Army or your local church or shelter. Or help out another great charity, Dress for Success. Dress for Success is an organization that gathers women's suits and interview-appropriate attire to "help low-income women take charge of their lives." Sadly, we live in a society where skill can only take you so far – image is sometimes just as important as being able to do a job. Dress for Success helps women look the part

Turn to STYLE, page 6

Music industry's sales drop

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

The month of November sees the biggest number of record releases than any other time of the year. But this holiday season was one for the record books, as releases by Michael Jackson, Madonna, Britney Spears and the Backstreet Boys made for a blood match on the album charts.

Hurt little by the Sept. 11 events (after all, this is the nation that made Jay-Z's The Blueprint No. 1 the week following the tragedy), music buyers went out in droves to support their favorite pop stars.

So how did all the artists fare in first week sales figures?

One of the most anticipated albums of the year was Michael Jackson's long-awaited comeback effort, the brazenly titled and poorly reviewed, Invincible. Some cynics dismissed a Jackson return, predicting sales under 300,000 copies. Scandals have made Jackson a tabloid favorite since the 1990s. This, combined with fading popularity and a music market decline, had led many to doubt Jackson could ever come near the success of his 1982 opus Thriller, the biggest selling album in history with sales of more than 40 million units worldwide.

Detractors be damned! Jackson rocked our world with a respectable 366,000 copies sold, enough to land him at the No. 1 position on the Billboard 200 album chart and help him reclaim the throne as the "King of Pop." Surrounded with a bevy of publicity, (including an ABC special which attracted an impressive 25 million viewers) Invincible has yet to fall out of the top ten since its Oct. 30 release. In a little family comparison, Jackson's kid sister Janet shifted 605,000 copies of her latest album last April.

Powered by the post-9/11 anthem "Hero," Enrique Iglesias' Escape debuted just behind Jackson at No. 2 with sales of 267,000. The Backstreet Boys' The Hits - Chapter One moved only 197,000. Even though greatest hits packages usually don't have colossal openings (they continue to sell well over time if the artist/group maintains longevity), the debut is rather disappointing, considering the million plus debuts of their two previous albums.

But Jackson didn't have much time to gloat at the pole position, as Britney Spears made a debut at the top of the charts the following week. The self-titled effort scared major rivals from the release date, including idol Madonna's GHV2: Greatest Hits Volume 2, pushed back to the following week. Spears' previous album Oops...I Did It Again broke the record for first-week sales by a female artist with 1.3 million copies last year. Britney dropped a staggering 46 percent to 746,000 copies compared to her previous disc. Despite the steep decline, the album became the second best opening week of the year (behind 'N Sync's Celebrity take of 1.9 million) and making her the first female solo act to reach No. 1 with her first three albums.

SOUND OFF
with Nick Markantonatos

Madonna's GHV2 debuted at No. 7 with sales of 150,000 copies, a strong debut considering that the record contains no new material and that the Material Mom did no publicity for the release. Madonna's previous greatest hits collection, The Immaculate Collection, has sold 22 million units worldwide.

Garth Brooks, the best-selling solo artist of all time, landed on top of the charts this week with Scarecrow selling in excess of 465,000 copies. The country superstar now has a total of seven pop albums that have debuted at No. 1, a new chart record.

The aforementioned releases may help to alleviate the sales slump experienced during the earlier part of the year. Due to several factors, including the recession and growing CD piracy, this year has been a rough one for most record companies and retail chains.

Record sales dropped five percent the week after Sept. 11, but the music industry returned to normalcy about a month later. On a sour note, however, sales of new releases fell more than six percent from 2000. The lack of powerhouse records this year has hurt the industry as well – 'N Sync's Celebrity was the only album to sell more than 1 million copies in its first week, compared with five records in 2000. For the first time in a decade, the music industry is faced with the possibility of declining sales.

Part of the problem seems to be the lack of talent with staying power. Unlike many 80s acts such as Michael Jackson, Madonna and U2, the record industry has found itself artists with diminishing presences. Poor performances from anticipated hits by Mariah Carey and Macy Gray were just a few albums that under performed this year.

With superstar releases bringing customers in, most album sales may rise slightly before the year ends. The fourth quarter is always the industry's bright light and this year it may end up being the most important fourth quarter in history. In 2000, nearly thirty-five percent of the year's sales occurred between October and December, and a repeat performance is more than likely. Record releases, including heavyweights Kid Rock and Creed, also hold promise.

Other problems contributing to the slump in sales include a decline in the teen-pop market. As manufactured pop albums continue to crop up like unwanted weeds, fans are becoming savvier in discerning the difference between substance and style.

COURTESY JIVE RECORDS

Britney Spears begs listeners to look at, er... listen to, her talents.

COURTESY ALAN SILFEN

... While Enrique Iglesias just wants to be your hero.

Winter board-dumb

Out Cold sophmoric but funny

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

OUT COLD
Directed by The Malloys
Starring Jason London and Zach Galifianakis
Playing at Cinemark 12 in Hadley

Out Cold, your basic hijinxs-in-the-snow madcap comedy, is everything you expect from the trailer: dumb, crass and unlikely to further the art of cinema. It's a movie about drunken carousing on the slopes, reminiscent of '80s teen films Hot Dog...The Movie and Ski School (not to mention early John Cusack vehicles like Better Off Dead and One Crazy Summer). But with lowered expectations come lowered defenses, defenses that Out Cold attacks vigorously. The movie is funny, in that "stoo-pid," brow-lowering sort of way. In a year of the senseless, awful, gross-out comedy (from the repugnant Tomcats to the lame Corky Romano), Out Cold ranks as one of the few lowbrow comedies – along with Rob Schneider's endearingly goofy The Animal – that remembers to tickle the funny bone rather than the gag reflex.

Directed with no particular flair by Brendan and Emmott Malloy (music video vets who are credited as "the Malloys") and written by Jon Zack, the movie plays like one of those videos shown at snowboard shops padded out with a minimal plot. Half the movie consists of real life snowboarders doing what they do best. There's even a montage over the end credits showing the boarders wiping out. The stunts are admittedly amazing, but it's like watching the ESPN X-Games on the big screen.

Bull Mountain was founded by the late and beloved Papa Muntz (he died skiing backwards downhill, trousers dropped and beer in hand) as a place to party and have fun. The locals even go by the motto "Don't Go Changin'." Now, however, Muntz' wimpy son is planning to sell the mountain to developer John Majors (the Six Million Dollar Man himself, Lee Majors, looking like he needed the paycheck). Majors is a good-ol' boy who plans to yuppify the area, turning it into another Vail or Aspen. Some of the local employees (who drink and snowboard more than they work) won't let Bull Mountain change without a fight.

COURTESY SHANE HARVEY

Lee Majors (right) and co-stars knock the audience Out Cold.

The movie focuses on this motley crew of goofballs. Their leader is nice guy Rick Rambos (Jason London), who's still pining for his one true love Anna (Caroline Dhavernas), a French girl he met while in Cancun. But he's also started flirting with Jenny (A.J. Cook), a cute snowboarder who hangs with the guys. Things get complicated for Rick when Majors shows up and brings his daughters – one of whom is Anna, now engaged to an ex-extreme snowboarder/doctor/pilot, who is handicapped. Meanwhile, Rick's friends get into a series of misadventures, mostly while getting drunk or trying to get in bed with Majors' other daughter, a Swede named Inga, played

Turn to COLD, page 6

1/2 Black Knight
(•)ne word : terrible

By Nick Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

BLACK KNIGHT
Starring Martin Lawrence
Directed by Gil Junger
Playing at CineMark

Perhaps the greatest question posed in the movie Black Knight, is not how to measure one's worth or the quest for the hero within. No, the greatest question is why. Why was this movie made? Why can't Martin Lawrence make a good comedy anymore? Why, for the love of god, did I see it?

Black Knight is the story of a young black man, Jamal Walker, (Martin Lawrence) from South Central L.A. (more precisely on the corner of Normandie and Florence) who works in a Medieval themed amusement park. After a fight with his manager (and apparent mother-figure despite the fact that this relationship is never fully investigated) about selling the park and taking the money, he sees a gold medallion in a fake moat and reaches down for it, only to be sucked into the water and transported to fourteenth century England. He emerges from a lake to meet a very drunk former knight, Knolte (award-winning actor Tom Wilkinson). He stumbles to the castle of the land and tells the guards that he is a traveler from Normandie. Well, the guards think he is talking about Normandy, France and inform the king of his arrival. All this time Jamal thinks he is at a competing amusement park, that is until he witnesses a beheading.

He becomes involved in a plot to give power back to the people and helps them overthrow the king before coming back to the twenty-first century with a new found respect for overcoming the odds instead of bowing out.

It really upsets me when a good solid comedic actor starts making films like this and, previously, What's the Worse that could Happen? Much like What's the Worse, the production value is horrible and the editing is horrible. There are obvious points in the film where the medallion is above his shirt and then a second later beneath it again. They couldn't even have him actually drive on the streets of L.A. or even real streets; instead it is obvious that he is in front of a green screen.

Not that I was expecting cinematic brilliance when I walked into the theater – but I was expecting Martin Lawrence to be funny. Instead his slapstick humor, which was the highlights of the films Nothing to Lose, Blue Streak and Life, comes off as silly, and almost racist as we see one black man being laughed at by hundreds of white people. Why are they laughing? Because he is a man who can't ride a horse or because he is a black man trying to ride a horse? And yes, it is funny when he teaches the rebels moves straight out of the WWF and NFL football, and even demonstrates the rope-a-dope, but it's not smart or intelligent – it's "America's Funniest Home

Turn to KNIGHT, page 6

COURTESY DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC & DANCE

Need a lift?

Guest choreographer Terry Creach (left) works with the University Dancers. The University Dancers will perform Collaborations in Sound & Motion on Thursday and Friday, November 29 & 30, and Saturday, December 1 at 8 pm in Bowker Auditorium.

Fugazi's new album

By Alex Roman
The Daily Forty-Niner (California State U. – Long Beach)

(U-Wire) LONG BEACH, Calif. – Ah the '90s, the beginning of the end for rock music. Every single one of your favorite indie bands signed with major labels and as a result, there was no such thing as underground music.

That is, of course, with one exception, the D.C.-based Fugazi, who not only shunned major record deals and chances to play corporate sponsored rock festivals, but also have never played a headlining gig for more than eight bucks.

Because of their anti-corporate stance, Fugazi's frontman, Ian Mackaye, has earned the respect of many of today's popular bands. Fugazi's ninth proper compact disc, The Argument, is nothing more than a demonstration of what a band could be if they choose not to whore themselves.

The 11-song, completely independently produced work finds a band that has not yet exhausted their musical vision. In fact, Mackaye, along with bandmates Guy Picciotto (guitar/vocals), Brendan Canty (drums) and Joe Lally (bass) seem to have found new life.

Mackaye remains one of the best vocalists in rock, with a range that goes from a quiet dissonance to a siren-like wail.

All the while, Mackaye spits lyrics that provoke thought. On Argument Mackaye sings: "When they start falling/ executions will commence/ sides will not matter now/ matter makes no sense/ how did a difference become a disease?"

Sure, Fugazi could have sold out like the rest of their early '90s contemporaries. But, while bands like Pearl Jam, Green Day and The Offspring struggle to reinvent themselves while still trying to sell millions of records, Fugazi's choice to stay independent has allowed their sound to grow in ways those bands will never know possible.

The Argument proves that integrity and artistic vision is what really matters if you're going to make music for a living. If Fugazi would have chosen to whore themselves, they would be just like the other pre-millennial washups, instead they are a testament to what rock music can be.

Magazine on DVD

By Phoebe Bronstein
Daily Bruin (U. California – Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – For everyone who has always loved magazines but never liked to read, there's a new kind of periodical.

A magazine called SubstanceTV presents everything one would see in a standard paper magazine: music, documentaries, art, but putting it all on a DVD. The publication runs 10 times a year and a subscription costs $20.

Unlike many other magazines, however, SubstanceTV gears itself not towards mainstream media but rather towards topics that receive little media attention.

SubstanceTV aims at what is below the surface of mainstream media," says Mike Wilson, CEO and one of the founders of the company.

SubstanceTV, based out of Texas, began two years ago after Wilson, Jim Bloom, Rick Stults, Doug Myres and Harry Miller decided that their friends, and more generally the people of their generation – Generation X –were not addressed by the mainstream media.

"We're a lost generation of people that has never been seen as adults by adults. We're still viewed as gamers and skaters," Wilson said. After selling his other company, God Games, Wilson took his staff and threw them into the production of something entirely new. They aimed to do something that had never been done before, a magazine unlike all others, a magazine on DVD.

According to Wilson, DVDs are in approximately 25 percent of all the households and is one of the most rapidly growing industries. He hopes to take advantage of this growing trend.

In creating this DVD Magazine, SubstanceTV hopes to address this generation as adults for the first time. He wants to spark interest in what he sees as artists who have not been acknowledged by mainstream society.

"The artists of the future are right there," Wilson said.

Wilson sees the magazine as a navigator in what he describes as a wide eyed exploration of the arts. He aims to include an eclectic selection of documentaries and music.

"This magazine aims to be an outlet for bands and artists who might not otherwise have exposure," said Bloom, SubstanceTV's executive producer and co-founder.

Under fluffy pop music and action movies, there is a counter-culture of art and media that Wilson wants to bring to the attention of the public. The magazine features small clips of documentaries, entire music videos, and photography.

In the first edition of the magazine, there is a documentary describing the life of a record store. "The Last Record Store" focuses on one of the largest independent record stores in the country. In addition there is a documentary discussing the events of Sept. 11. The music videos range from Latino pop music to a video done solely in computer animation.

"We're not interested in showing the same Britney Spears video you can see on MTV; we're looking for something unique," Bloom said.

Wilson realizes that most artists who are not among the top 50 are not played on MTV. He aims to expose those artists who cannot afford this kind of exposure. In essence, SubstanceTV aims to create a new version of MTV.

According to Wilson, MTV has become too political, and gives preference to those artists that can afford to buy their way onto television. SubstanceTV offers merely a glance at the art in its original form. The company wants people to think for themselves.

"The magazine is a wide-eyed exploration of art, there is no preference, no politics, no editorializing," Wilson said.

And it's definitely one of a kind. SubstanceTV wants to avoid a network mentality," Bloom said. "There's no Tom Brokaw, summing it all up for you. We're trying to create an environment that allows people to think for themselves, to hear the facts and understand both sides."

■ Cold

continued from page 5

by 1947 Playboy Playmate of the Year Victoria Silvstedt. Of course there would be a Playboy Playmate in this movie.

Out Cold seems to be replicating the formula for the American Pie movies, keeping the body fluid jokes to a minimum while upping the antics centered on sex. There are key moments involving an amorous polar bear and a man getting, um, stuck in the jet of a whirlpool. A guy chugs bong water and there are the requisite (and unfunny) jokes centered on defecation and farting. How this movie got a PG-13 instead of an R is beyond me. Maybe the fine line is in the showing of nudity, since this movie has all the earmarks of a teen sex comedy except the bare breasts. That's Hollywood for you.

But the movie is funny, sometimes side-splittingly so. Technically, the movie is no great shakes. The Malloys use the overdone tactic of ladling on a punk and pop-rock soundtrack. The plot comes by in fits and starts; the filmmakers don't so much as advance it, instead throwing out a few kernels between jokes. But I'll say it again: the movie is funny.

Hipsters be damned. Out Cold is check-your-brain-at-the-door funny. In a year of tired, laughless "comedies" that's all you can really ask for.

COURTESY SHANE HARVEY

Board Games– A.J. Cook (second from right) and Jason London (right) get flakey in Out Cold.

■ style

continued from page 5

of the job that they are applying for, so that they can better their and their children's situation in life. For more information on how to donate clothing or organize a suit drive, check out the organization's website, www.dressforsuccess.org.

Help out the American Cancer Society with it's "Look Good... Feel Better" program, which offers makeovers to female cancer survivors. Makeovers include scarf/turban wrapping, wig cutting, makeup application and eyelash/eyebrow application. Chemotherapy and other cancer treatments can ravage one's looks. While the treatments may help the disease, it can be very difficult for a woman to feel feminine with no hair, no eyelashes and one breast. Contact the American Cancer Society or your local hospital to find out about making contributions, aiding an existing program or starting a new program in your area.

There are many other ways to help out, or get creative and make your own organization/program. While a makeover program might seem to some less philanthropic than a hospice, just realize that the whole concept of putting on a happy face, or happy suit, or happy wig can brighten your day and your whole outlook on life. Bring some joy into another's life this holiday season, and you can be sure it will also bring some joy into yours.

■ Knight

continued from page 5

Videos". His character is always in for the money, looking for a quick buck and fame, and he even pitches an idea for a fast food drive through for the kingdom.

The highlight of the film, is composer's Randy Edelman's arrangement of medieval instruments to produce Sly and the Family Stone's "Dance to the Music", in which all of the peasants in the castle dance and sing along. And while they don't know funk won't be popular for close to six hundred and fifty years, it's the thought that counts.

The film defiantly takes the credibility of director Gil Junger down a notch as well. His debut film 10 Things I Hate About You succeeded in being a well-done teen version of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew." Not only did it directly attract the teen audience but also ignited the careers of Julia Stiles and Heath Ledger, who have since moved on to bigger and better things. Junger failed at his sophomore film – the scenes are crowded and not laid out well. It's as if he put too many people on the set, and didn't have enough room to move them.

Martin Lawrence needs to stop doing these movies, movies that sound good in theory but end up being god awful in the end. We need the antics of the man in Bad Boys and Blue Streak. We need that fast-talking physical comedian who can be a con man or a tough guy. Martin, listen to the voice of reason, please read the script from start to finish and don't just let your agent pick a film based on a pitch.

One more interesting fact: Black Knight was written by the guys who wrote Say it Isn't So, proving that movies about a black man in ancient England are just about as funny as movies about incest.

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

Night graphics has been censored

Work over Break
RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:
Boston 617-484-1788
North of Boston 978-777-2253
South of Boston 508-821-5591
New Hampshire 603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape 508-833-1145
Route 3 South 781-340-6355
Springfield 413-731-6910
Worcester 508-832-8757
Providence 508-336-5658
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

CENSORED

Final Four

The UMass men's water polo team is two wins away from the National Championship. Look for the preview this week.

UCLA men's water polo team's performance keeps NCAA in sight

By Eric Perez
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. – All things considered, it was a job well done for the UCLA men's water polo team.

The Bruins (13-3, 7-1 Mountain Sports Pacific Federation) placed third in the MPSF Tournament by beating Long Beach State 7-6 in overtime Sunday at the Spieker Aquatics Complex.

The Bruins, ranked second in the nation, fell short of their goal in winning the tournament title on Saturday, suffering an upset at the hands of California 9-7.

Had the Bruins won the tournament, they would have garnered an automatic berth to the NCAA Final Four. A victory over California would have virtually assured them the at-large bid to the NCAA.

But the Golden Bears were playing perhaps the best water polo in the country. The loss came at an inopportune time for the Bruins and left them powerless in determining their fate for the rest of the season.

"Obviously we're disappointed," junior two-meter defender Matt Flesher said. "We didn't play a bad game yesterday, and a couple of tips didn't go our way. It's a game of inches."

The Bruins almost fell off tournament radar, coming out flat against Long Beach in the third place game. They trailed 4-2 at one point in the third quarter.

UCLA regrouped against the 49ers to force overtime and took the lead on a penalty shot at the end of the first overtime by freshman Brett Ormsby. The Bruins held their lead into the second period of overtime and took third place in the tournament.

"We did what we needed to do to win," UCLA assistant coach Matt Armato said. "I don't think we played very well at all. We played really flat. Our effort across the board was pretty lackluster."

"I think they came out flat, and they weren't feeling it," he added. "It's hard, coming off a game like yesterday, to be able to come back and play in a situation like today. But we did what we needed to do to win."

With UCLA losing to Cal, the Golden Bears were placed in the tournament championship game against top-ranked Stanford, putting UCLA in an awkward position: the Bruins had to root for their arch-nemesis, the Cardinal.

Well, maybe not root for the Cardinal, but at least they wanted Stanford to win.

"No I'm not," said senior two-meter attacker Alfonso Tucay when asked if he was rooting for Stanford. "I want (Stanford) to win, but I'm not rooting for them because I hate Stanford."

Thankfully for the Bruins, Stanford did win, and they did so in a hostile environment. The Cardinal seemed absolutely determined to atone for their 4-3 loss to Berkeley on Nov. 17, their only loss this season.

Stanford defeated California 7-5 while Bruin players watched poolside at one end of the pool, with their future out of their hands.

Barring any lapse in judgment by the NCAA Men's Water Polo Committee, it is safe to say that the Bruins will be heading to the NCAA Final Four to compete for the National Championship.

"I'm thrilled," head coach Adam Krikorian said.

"All we wanted was just an opportunity to play in the Final Four, and that was our goal at the beginning of the season."

■ Oregon

continued from page 10

we'd outlet the ball to them and they would go, so that we'd have to get back against seven guys."

Lappas also talked about a certain drill that his team has worked on in an effort to lower its number of turnovers.

"We'll play seven guys against five, so we'll make the five guys on offense have to play against seven defenders, where they're getting trapped and doubled all the time, making it as hard for them to handle the ball in the half court as we can simulate," he said. "But I think the only thing that's going to prevent [turnovers] is us getting more experience and as we get more experience that will hopefully cut down the turnovers."

Anthony Anderson (7.5 points per game) will again start at point guard for the Minutemen along with Shannon Crooks (15.0 ppg) and Willie Jenkins (5.5 ppg) on the wings. Micah Brand (16.5 ppg) and Kitwana Rhymer (10.5 ppg) will begin down low for the Minutemen, and will do their best to thwart the efforts of Oregon's 7-foot-2 center from Roenne, Denmark, Chris Christoffersen (12.5 ppg). Also starting for the Ducks will be junior Robert Johnson (10.0 ppg), a 6-foot-8 junior college transfer from Santa Rosa (Calif.) and the 6-foot-7 Luke Jackson (10.3 ppg). Luke Ridnour (13.3 ppg) will direct the Duck attack, joining Jones in the backcourt duties.

GERALD DINC/COLLEGIAN

Eric Williams has provided much depth off the bench for the Minutemen.

Dritte und Vierzig
Ich filtere den Zucker aus
(TRAINING AND PARTY-SHIRT ACCESSORIZATION)
If we get one email asking for the return of "Third and 48," then we'll bring it back. If we get 5,000 emails (from different addresses) telling us to axe it, then we will.
thirdand48@yahoo.com

MEN'S B-BALL GAME PREVIEW
CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

PENN GRADUATE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
What are you looking for in a Graduate School?
Chances are we have it!
Penn GSE offers Doctoral (Ph.D. & Ed.D.) and Master's degrees in:
Education, Culture and Society
Educational Leadership
Educational Linguistics
Educational Policy
Higher Education Management
Intercultural Communication
Interdisciplinary Studies in Human Development
Policy Research, Evaluation, and Measurement Psychological Services*
Reading/Writing/Literacy*
Elementary & Secondary Teacher Education*
Teaching, Learning and Curriculum
Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages
School, Community, and Clinical Child Psychology
Dual Degree with School of Arts and Sciences
Executive Ed.D. in Higher Education Management
Mid-Career Ed.D. in Educational and Organizational Leadership
*State certification available
APA accredited

YAMAHA HONDA DUCATI KTM Husqvarna
VALLEY MOTORSPORTS
M.V. Augusta Kawasaki CAGIVA
State Inspection & Winter Storage
SUPERB, PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/MADLEY • 256-0011
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-3 a.m. Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
Buy any medium or large pizza & get a second pizza of equal or lesser value
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESIONS WEDNESDAYS OR THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport 5 spd, 4x4, 25mpg. White SUV loaded 82,000 miles. 1 owner, NADA $7875 asking $6375. 549-4506

AUTO FOR SALE

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment - Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more information. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare: Handicapped experience, references, housework, car, 6/20hrs/wk. $10/hr 413-247-5800

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.Fluid Visions.com

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 374-5832

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

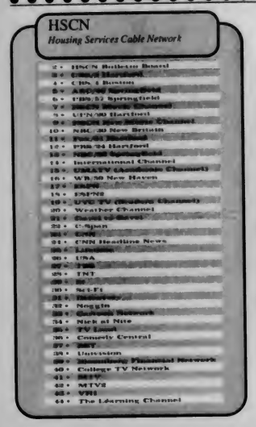
SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com



Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

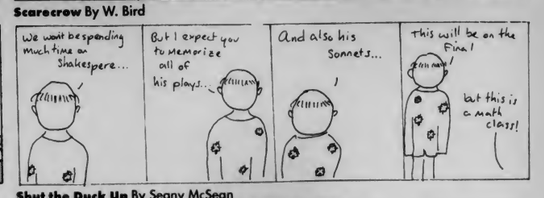
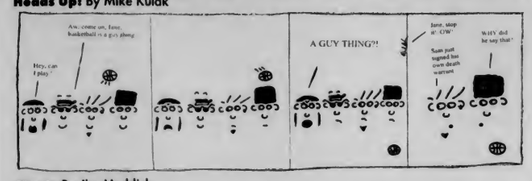
#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



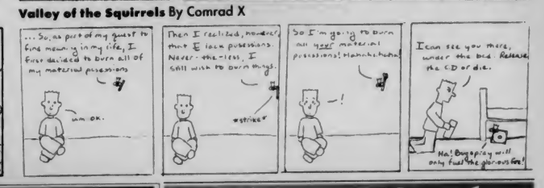
Monty By Jim Meddick



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"School is sucking my will to live."

–Lizzy Nielsen

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 51 LOW: 39	HIGH: 52 LOW: 36	HIGH: 55 LOW: 40

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) – An early start today will enable you to get more done but much of it will be in a personal vein. Specifically, the pulmonary one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – You may have some trouble as the day opens gathering your forces. Later on, however, you're likely to enjoy more support than you need from unlikely sources. Let the homeless guy give you a "hand up" not a "hand out."

AQUARIUS (Jan 20. – Feb. 18) – You mustn't fool yourself into thinking that you deserve anything today. You're worthless. Seriously, you're pathetic.

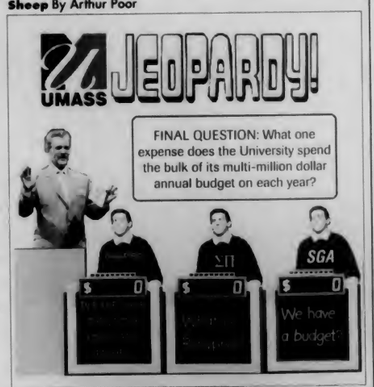
PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – You're anticipating something that isn't likely to happen – but you can't win if you don't play. Quick pick me, my good man.

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) – You're likely to get what you want today – and then some. You sly dog, you.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – You're not likely to agree with many people today. But that's cause everyone's a moron except you and me. Don't worry; it'll be our little secret.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – A disagreement between friends is no reason for the relationship to end. Now, catching your best friend in bed with your beta fish – that's a reason to end a friendship.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – The only way you can show others exactly what you're after and what you expect is to show them. You sly dog, you.



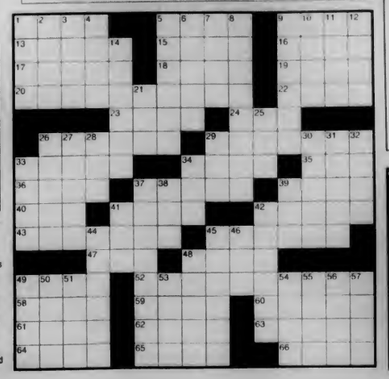
LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — You may be tempted to do something out of character today with the sole intent of attracting a new kind of attention. And you'll get plenty of it. Heh heh. If you know what I mean. Heh heh. And I think you do. Heh heh.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) – You may feel as though you're "on the spot." But you missed it. The spot's about two feet to the left. That's it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) – You may find yourself caught between two conflicting desires today. On the one hand, you have your uncontrollable love for reading. On the other, your strange compulsion to gouge out your eyes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) – You would prefer to be left to your own devices today. Unfortunately, a gap-toothed international man of mystery won't let you play with your "laser."

Sheep By Arthur Poor



ACROSS
1 SAT section
5 Dirty air
9 Makes laces
13 Attu resident
15 Hand signal
16 Footed vases
17 TV's White
18 Turkey's neighbor
19 Exam for HS juniors
20 One behind the other
22 Taps gently
23 "Kiss Me, —"
24 Sturgeon delicacy
25 Documents
29 Jokers around
33 Felt it
34 Shock
35 "Iron Man" Gehrig
36 Sit down heavily
37 Quarries
39 Pitzer
40 — Paulo, Brazil
41 Boast
42 Bakers' needs
43 Way-out
45 Colorado trees
47 Souffle ingredient
48 Arthur of tennis
49 Desires
52 Intelligent one
58 Got off
59 Abu Dhabi leader
60 Ice-fishing tool
61 Cat's victims
62 Zero
63 Sleep noisily
64 Pit
65 Those people
66 Increase

DOWN
1 Dallas team, informally
2 Tien Shan range
3 Mo. neighbor
4 Suspended
5 Swallowlike birds
6 Singer Osmond
7 Ellipse
8 Loaders
9 Henson creation
10 Big Dipper bear
11 Pesky bug
12 Fast jets
14 Had a chat
21 Teacup handle
25 Que. neighbor
26 Rice dish
27 Distant
28 Vigor
29 Stringy physique
30 Ms. Burstyn
31 Reddish-brown horses
32 Gets a tan
33 Lhasa —
34 Ewer
37 Particle
38 Feast
39 Night before
41 Implore
42 Works by Puccini
44 Outdid
45 In error
46 Not he
48 All kidding —
49 Sweet potatoes
50 Writer Wiesel
51 Polite
53 Far East maid
54 Bean-sprouts bean
55 Frankenstein's gofer
56 "Duo Vadis?" role
57 Selected a card

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	C	R	A	M		I	D	E	A		A	S	S	T
A	R	E	N	A		B	E	E	P		L	A	K	E
N	E	P	A	L		S	A	R	I		O	L	I	N
D	E	S	T	I	N	E	D		E	Q	U	A	L	S
			C	O	N	S		C	U	D	D	L	E
L	O	O	S	E	R		E	P	E	E
A	N	K	A		M	E	A	L		E	L	B	O	W
P	E	R	U	S	A	L		A	U	R	E	O	L	E
P	S	A	L	M		L	A	Y	S		S	T	E	P
			E	R	A	S		U	P	S	H	O	T
T	A	C	K	L	E		T	E	A	L
A	L	L	O	T	S		A	I	L	E	R	O	N	S
S	T	I	R		E	N	I	D		D	A	M	E	S
T	O	N	E		T	A	R	E		G	R	A	I	N
E	S	T	A		S	E	E	R		E	A	R	L	S

12-12-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2026 for more information.

LUNCH

Hot Roast Beef Sandwich

Broccoli & Cheese Casserole (vegetarian)

Herbal Polenta (vegan)

DINNER

Breaded Pork Chops

Turkey Divan

Vegan Cutlets

Grilled Portabella Steaks (vegan) (W Basics)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician	Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor	Jesse Greenspan
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Jess May, Cara Horowitz

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

First big test for Minutemen

The UMass men's hoop team will look to Kitwana Rhymer tonight to solidify the middle against 4-0 Oregon.

Shannon Crooks has played solid in two games at his new No. 2 starting guard spot, averaging 15 points per contest.

Undefeated UMass, Oregon meet for Springfield clash

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Steve Lappas wasn't thrilled with his team's 66-59 victory over Marist Saturday night.

"I'm not a happy camper right now about certain things," said Lappas after the game. "Certain things I am and certain things I'm not."

Lappas was pleased with the way his Minutemen played on the defensive end. He was content with the fact that his team held Marist to 17 first half points, held the Red Foxes in crunch time and only allowed their offense a 32.7 shooting percentage.

But he wasn't as excited with UMass' offensive output – one that totaled 18 turnovers on the evening.

"Our problem is we have to play better on offense," Lappas said. "We turned the ball over five times in the first five minutes of the second half – that's your problem."

And it's a hitch that must not arise tonight if the Minutemen plan on knocking off Oregon at the Springfield Civic Center, a place UMass has enjoyed in times past, taking 12 of its last 13 games there. Coming off a 90-63 dismantling of Rick Pitino's Louisville squad, the Ducks are now 4-0, looking to waltz through another non-conference schedule with relative ease. Last season, Oregon began the season 10-1, a run marked with its 91-76 defeat of the Minutemen at the Rose Garden in Portland, Ore. In that game, the Ducks shot 53 percent from the field and hit 35-of-46 free throws.

"I watched the tape [of that game]," said Lappas last night. "I don't think they did a bad job I just think they played against a team that made every shot."

Oregon's great start last year soon caved in though, as the team struggled throughout its Pac-10 slate on the way to a 14-14 final record.

But in their first four games, the Ducks have proved themselves a totally different team from the one that ended the 2000-01 season losing 10 of its final 13 games.

After hiring Fred Litzenberger – a defensive specialist from the Oregon women's team – the Ducks have only allowed an average of 57.5 points a game, a significant drop from last year's 77.3 mark.

"They'll play 100 percent man-to-man," said Lappas, who also announced yesterday that Jackie Rogers will redshirt this season due to nagging injuries. "They'll do some full-court trapping, but mostly man-to-man."

Also, all five of the Duck starters are averaging double-digit scoring outputs, led by senior Frederick Jones' 14.0 a game. Known for its strength in transition, Oregon is averaging 92.5 points per brawl, a numeral UMass must lower if it plans on going 3-0.

"[Y]esterday, when we scored in practice, we had the second team not take the ball out of bounds, but just take it right out of the nets," said Lappas, speaking about his efforts in practice to ready his team for the Ducks' running excellence. "And then we had two other guys standing at half court, and

Turn to OREGON, page 7

In what was supposed to be a down year, the member schools of Hockey East are proving that even without a bona fide National Championship contender, they can still compete with the best that college hockey has to offer.

'Cats make statement without saying a word

New Hampshire made a big time statement over the weekend by manhandling No. 2 ranked Denver in the final of the two-day conference classic. The Wildcats, which played host to three of the nation's best teams, dominated the contest from start to finish en route to a convincing 5-2 victory.

The win effectively quelled the notion that the western schools had taken an edge on their eastern counterparts, as the 'Cats beat up on Central Collegiate Hockey Association opponent Ohio State before taking on Denver in the final.

Darren Haydar led the way for UNH, as he earned Most Valuable Player honors with two goals and a helper on the weekend. Even after the pair of impressive victories, the 'Cats chose to let their play do the talking as both coach Dick Umile and Haydar downplayed the effect the weekend might have on the polls and national perception.

UNH, at No. 6 to start the tournament, is more than likely to move up.

COURTESY UNH MEDIA RELATIONS

New Hampshire's Darren Haydar helped lead his team to 5-2 victory over No. 2 Denver last weekend.

Sikatchev who?

Alex Sikatchev turned his Merrimack Warriors contest against Colgate into a goal-scoring clinic. The junior tallied four goals and two assists in a 9-5 comeback win over Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference opponent, the Red Raiders.

Colgate staked itself out to a 3-0 and 4-1 lead early in the second before Sikatchev went on his tear to bolster the Warriors to nine goals in the final two periods.

For his exploits, the Russian earned himself Hockey East Kobo Player of the Week honors.

Johnson stacks the hardware

The only thing Mike Johnson is letting past him lately is the Hockey East Defensive Player of the Week award he earned after two consecutive shutouts against out-of-conference foes, Vermont and Dartmouth.

The senior backstop made 55 saves in the pair of games and he hasn't allowed a goal in over 167 minutes. He will face a tough test this weekend when Maine comes to Amherst before the Minutemen head down the Mass Pike to face off against defending National Champion Boston College.

The Black Bears have been one of the conference's most explosive teams with 55 goals in 12 games. The Eagles, on the other hand, boast a dominant scoring duo with Tony Voce and Ben Eaves, who have combined for 15 goals and 36 points.

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

The puck drops here: Look for the Hockey East notebook every week for the rest of the semester.

Bat Boy in New York! Turn to Arts for the review.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen won their third straight game last night at the Springfield Civic Center. Read all about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVIII Issue 56 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 28, 2001

Same-sex marriage topic of Asay talk

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Bridget Asay held a seminar and discussion on same sex marriages.

Civil unions in Vermont remain controversial issue

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Bridget Asay, assistant Attorney General of Vermont, came to the University of Massachusetts to speak about the topic of same sex unions yesterday.

Asay spoke to a group of 15 students in a question and answer format, giving her personal views on the topic of civil unions. She explained that she had not come as a representative of Vermont but instead as an individual interested in discussing the topic with students.

She explained that, in Vermont, it was legal for same sex couples to obtain the same legal rights as married couples under the term civil unions. These rights include insurance when it falls under the state's jurisdiction. This is the only decision of its kind in the country. The decision occurred following a same sex couple's petition for a marriage license.

"That, in turn, resulted in a decision by the Supreme Court, the only decision upheld in the country," Asay said. "Under the Vermont Constitution these people had the right for the benefits and protections that go along with marriage. They stopped short of issuing a marriage license. They did not give them a marriage license but they did find a constitutional violation."

Following the decision, there have been over 2,000 civil unions in the state of Vermont and there have also been attempts by the legislature to overturn the decision based upon values and the intentions of the framers of the Constitution.

"The court recognized that the framers of the Constitution never thought that it would extend as far as this issue," Asay explained. "The court said that the only decision before them was to decide whether or not to allow same sex couples the benefits that having a marriage certificate brings."

According to Asay, there was debate surrounding same sex marriages when the issue went to the Vermont legislature.

"The state essentially argued that marriage was between a man and a woman," she said. "They also argued that the state had an interest in promoting a link between procreation and child bearing."

The only two other states to attempt to legalize same sex unions were Hawaii and Alaska. In both states the voters overturned the decision.

Turn to UNIONS, page 3

Journalism professor receives high honor

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and University of Massachusetts professor of journalism Madeleine Helena Blais spoke to a crowd of about 200 people yesterday at Memorial Hall.

Her lecture, titled "Personal Narrative in an Impersonal World: Finding the Story in Your Experience," was the second installment of the UMass Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series this year.

The lecture series was created to showcase four faculty members each year who have made outstanding contributions to the University, either through personal research or through teaching. After giving a brief talk in their field of expertise, the lecturers receive the Chancellor's Medal, which is the highest award bestowed by the campus.

To open her talk, Blais introduced herself as a "hard-core memoir-reader."

"My career as a writer began as a reader," she went on. Blais then listed several of the books that had been influential to her as a young girl. The Diary of Anne Frank, she said, "was my first introduction to memoir."

The book was so important to her, she said, that it became an historical artifact as well as an enjoyable read. "In my mind the full horror of the Holocaust and preventing it from recurring were involved in preserving this one text," Blais remembered.

She also gave a brief background of her childhood in Granby, Mass., and of the struggles she and her five siblings went through with their mother after their father died.

"At that time in Granby, there were no broken families," Blais explained. "There were no households headed by single parents."

The story of those times is chronicled in her third book, Uphill Walkers.

"Growing up I got a lot of rude questions," Blais said. "Things like, 'Do you remember your father?' 'Did your mother ever remarry?' And from the time it became clear that my older brother had [a mental illness], 'what's wrong with your brother?'"

She said that she usually dismissed the questions with "a short answer," and joked that she became a reporter because "I wanted to be the one asking rude questions and getting paid for it."

More soberly, she added that there are longer, deeper answers to the "rude questions."

"The long answers formed the basis for Uphill Walkers," she said.

Blais told the audience that, after the death of her father and the discovery of books, her interview with the aging playwright Tennessee Williams was her most pivotal experience.

"He had the air of an aging lion," Blais remembered.

Williams had been in the news because he had been mugged, robbed, found his gardener dead in his apartment, and then discovered that the gardener had been stealing rough drafts of his work from his wastebasket. Blais said that his broken spirit "made me review my own writing life. I was determined to start writing something

Turn to BLAIS, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Professor Madeleine Blais (left) spoke about writing memoirs as a part of the Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series.

Alternatives to media presented in RSU video

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Radical Student Union continued its series of video presentations aimed toward fostering debate about the war in Afghanistan last night in the Campus Center. Last night's video, titled 9.11, offered an alternative to the mainstream media's portrayals of the attacks in New York City and their aftermath.

The video opened with a montage of news sound bites and sirens played over images of firemen, empty-handed medical workers, shrines on the sidewalks, and shots of the World Trade Center towers crumbling. Gradually, the sound of a man's voice singing a gospel tune faded in over the montage of noise. Finally, the images transitioned to the singer on a subway car, as he stopped singing and began to lecture passengers. "Thank God for another day," he said. "Thank God for the last five minutes. 'Cause we're at war and the only thing war means is that a lot of people are going to die. And it probably won't be the government because they're well protected.

"I have one question for you all on this train," the unidentified man went on. "Why are we at war? Can any of you tell me why we are at war?"

No one on the subway offered an answer, but as the video moved through about 50 minutes of anonymous man-on-the street interviews and recordings of protests by activists, some suggestions were put forth.

Many turned to the media when looking for a reason why grief had escalated into counterattack.

"Before anything else, we were being bombarded by images of a so-called enemy, who has a beard, who wears a turban, who is of dark complexion," one person remarked. "Then President Bush is speaking in politically correct language about not attacking Muslims while they show only Muslim people on TV."

Another man said that U.S. foreign policy was the cause of the war. "One disastrous policy after another

Turn to RSU, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Radical Student Union hosted a movie showing that analyzed the transition in "Tragedy to War", focusing on the Sept. 11 tragedy.

Arava Institute topic of discussion at Hillel

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Amidst the violent turmoil in the Middle East, the Arava Institute for Environmental Studies in Israel provides an educational resource for students of all faiths and nationalities.

Rabbi Michael Cohen, the director of the Institute's North American office, will speak at 7:00 tonight at Hillel House about Arava's benefits, and encourage University of Massachusetts students to study abroad at the Institute.

"The Institute was founded in recognition of the fact that the environmental issues facing each nation are not limited to the political boundaries we've placed on Mother Earth," Cohen told The Collegian. He explained that it was for this reason that the Arava Institute recruits Jewish, Muslim, and Christian students alike.

Generally a third of all Arava students are North American, a third are Middle Eastern, and a third come from other regions. The Middle Eastern students come from both Israel and Muslim nations.

"The kibbutz [or communal living situation] shared by the students becomes a model for us living in this world," Cohen said. "We share our resources and our cultures.

"In many programs where you study overseas, you end up living with other Americans," he continued. "That's what makes this program so unique. It's a very rich, multicultural experience."

The Institute serves as a regional center for conservation and environmental activities, and offers students of all faiths the opportunity to study the unique environmental ecosystems of the Arava Valley and the Red Sea. While many think of the Middle East as a wasteland, some of the ecosystems found there are actually quite varied.

The Institute is located on the grounds of Kibbutz Ketura, near the borders of Jordan and Egypt. Students who attend have the chance to travel throughout the region. UMass students can spend a semester or year abroad at the Institute, and have the option of earning undergraduate and graduate credits while studying there. The Institute is fully accredited by Tel-Aviv University.

Cohen plans to make mention of the attacks on America in tonight's speech. Cohen was only several blocks from the World Trade Center on Sept. 11, and provided rabbinical services to the fami-

Turn to ARAVA, page 3

Car burglaries on rise

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department had an eventful long weekend responding to calls of breaking and entering and a car accident that landed an undergraduate student in Baystate Medical Center.

The UMPD received a call from the Amherst Police Department at 8:08 p.m. on Sunday evening. Responding officers arrested Joshua Mason, a 29-year-old Amherst resident, for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol. Police say his Mason's car struck junior Anthony Patrick on University Drive near Southwest circle.

Mason was arraigned yesterday in Northampton and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and a crosswalk violation. At the time of the accident, he was driving a red 1993 Saturn sedan. How fast Mason was driving, whether or not he has a previous record, and his route that evening are not being released by the UMPD, as the case is still under investigation.

Patrick, a Coolidge Dormitory resident, suffered a head injury and was taken by ambulance to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield. He is listed in stable condition.

Fatal accidents, similar to this one, in the past five years have prompted reexamination of cases, whether or not speed limits and crosswalks are appropriately placed and set. UMPD spokesman Jim Lyons said. In this case, only the alleged OUI has been found as a cause for the accident thus far.

Three cars in Lot 79, near North Village, were found burglarized Friday. The first car, discovered at 10:16 a.m., was missing a stereo and cash and the dashboard was damaged. At 1:15 p.m.,

Turn to BURGLARIES, page 3

Collective mix of crafts showcasing soon at Holiday Crafts Fair

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Correspondent

Student Union Craft center will hold its 30th Annual Holiday Craft Fair starting on Dec. 5.

This three-day event will be held on the Campus Center Concourse from 9 a.m. to 4 pm.

The event is co-sponsored by the Campus Center/Student Union Commission, the Student Government Association, the Graduate Student Senate and by Members of the S.U. Craft Center. It is also partially funded by the University of Massachusetts Arts Council.

The Craft Fair will feature twenty professional artist and student crafters from around the New England area. Some of the artisans have come from the western Massachusetts region, Vermont, and Cape Cod. The Craft Center Coordinators personally handpicked these twenty artisans based upon a review of their sampled work on slides.

All the crafters have made their own goods such as pottery, jewelry, clothing, holiday ornaments, photos, and other items that will be on display and sold at a "reasonable" price, according to Paula Hodecker, the Craft Center Director.

"A lot of our crafters have been with us for many years, some as close to twenty," Hodecker said. "They return year after year along with some new people that we pick up."

Ever since the Craft Center was built in 1971, the Craft Fair has been an annual event and a major reason why the Craft Center has been open for so long.

"It's our annual fundraiser which helps earn income," said Marlene Kilcoyne, another one of the Craft Center coordinators. "It helps support our programs, to buy materials and equipment, to support our workshops, etcetera."

The revenue received from the vendors that goes into the budget is also used to subsidize student employee salaries and supports the visiting artist program. The visiting artist program has been helpful to students, because it has allowed professional artists to come in and teach "hands-on" workshops with the students. This and other programs like it have allowed the center to remain accessible to students, faculty and staff, with affordable prices for the materials and workshops.

Besides the artisans themselves, there will be student employees from the Craft Center with their own tables set up. They will showcase information regarding the Center. These students even take a portion of the table to sell their own works.

This year, the Craft Center workers will expect to run into a few problems in setting up. The new television stand set-ups, the University Store Cage and lack of outlets will all pose potential difficulties. However, the students will be expected to work around these problems without incident.

"Everything's pretty smooth," Hodecker said. "We work with the building facili-

Turn to CRAFTS, page 3

Cultural Events Calendar

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Film Series will continue on Wednesday, Nov. 28 with 9.11 and Turning Tragedy Into War, two films about the attacks on America and their aftermath, at 7:00 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. This event is sponsored by the Radical Student Union. Discussion will follow.

AMHERST – The film M, a Weimar period "noir" thriller about the hunt for a child murderer, will be shown in Amherst College's Merrill Science Center 4 at 4:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 29. This event, part of the German Film Series, is free.

UMASS – The premiere of SPEAK UP!, a new video about reclaiming schools as safe and welcoming spaces for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender students, will be held in room 102 of Thompson Hall on Monday, Dec. 3, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The filmmaker will be on hand for discussion immediately following the screening.

PERFORMANCES

HOLYOKE – Nuyorican Bronx poet Mariposa will perform at Holyoke Community College on Wednesday, Nov. 28, from 11:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This event will take place in the Leslie Philips Forum in Building C.

UMASS – The Stonewall Center will host Quintessentially Queer Café and Open Mic at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 29, in the Graduate Student Lounge of the Campus Center. This event, a showcase of Five College queer expression for Fall 2001, is free.

AMHERST – Writer/actor Dianna Fuemana will perform her play Mapuki at Amherst College's Kirby Theater on Friday, Nov. 30 and Saturday, Dec. 1, at 8:00 p.m. The play deals with the theme of domestic violence. Tickets can be reserved by calling 545-2511.

AMHERST – The Pioneer Valley Capella will present, "Hallelujah," a program that explores the musical expression of praise in a variety of religious traditions, at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 30, at the South Congregational Church in South Amherst. "Hallelujah" will also be performed on Saturday, Dec. 1, at 8:00 p.m. at Helen Hills Chapel in Northampton. Admission is free, but donations are accepted.

UMASS – Collaborations in Sound and Motion, a performance by the University Dancers and Jazz Ensemble, will be held in Bowker Auditorium on Saturday, Dec. 1 at 8:00 p.m. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

AMHERST – Amherst College Jazz Combos in Concert will be held on Saturday, Dec. 1, at 8:00 p.m. in Keefe Campus Center Auditorium. "Diminished Nine," "Los Pantalones," and "Unit 7" will perform the music of Ellington, Monk, Parker, Gershwin, Montgomery, and others. See www.amherst.edu/~jazz for more information. This event is free.

DANCES/PARTIES

UMASS – The Asian-American Students Association will hold Karaoke Night on Friday, Nov. 30, from 7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. Tickets are $7 at the door, or $5 if purchased from Tickets Unlimited.

SMITH – The Smith College Black Students Alliance will hold a Jazz Dinner Dance on Friday, Nov. 30, at 7:00 p.m. in Davis Ballroom. This event is free.

UMASS – The Jewish Student Union will hold a semi-formal dance from 8:00 p.m. to midnight on Saturday, Dec. 1, in room 1009 of the Campus Center. Admission is $7, $5 if received in advance.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – An International Students Club Party will be held in Mount Holyoke's Betty Shabazz Cultural House on Saturday, Dec. 1, at 11:00 p.m. Admission is $2. The event will feature international music and dancing.

AUDITIONS

UMASS – Auditions for the Jewish Student Union's production of The Vagina Monologues will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 28, from 7:00 to 11:00 p.m. in rooms 162-175 of the Campus Center. No experience is necessary, but be prepared to have fun!

SEMINARS

UMASS – A Women of Color Seminar will be held on Saturday, Dec. 1 at the New Africa House from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Continental breakfast and lunch will be served. Pre-registration is desired. Contact Kara Green at 546-7321.

UMASS – The ALANA Job Fair will be held on Saturday, Dec. 1, from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. At the fair, Alumni will speak about their experiences in the job market.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

UMASS – Rabbi Michael Cohen will speak about the Arava Program in Israel on Wednesday, Nov. 28 at 7:00 p.m. at Hillel House. The Arava Program provides a place where Israeli Jews and Arab, Palestinians and Americans come together to live and learn about the environment

UMASS – A Palestine Action Coalition Teach-in, titled "The Palestinian Struggle: Popular Resistance, U.S. Foreign Policy, and the Media," will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 28, at 7:00 p.m. in room 904 of the Campus Center. Speakers include Palestinian-American slam poet Bushra Muhammed, Anthony Arnove of the International Socialist Organization, and Mazin Qumsiyeh, an associate professor at Yale University.

AMHERST – A campus-wide discussion on the ethics of war will be held in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Nov. 28, at 7:00 p.m. President Tom Gerety, Political Science Professor Uday Mehtia, and Vincent Ferraro, Professor of International Relations at Mount Holyoke College, will lead a discussion on "When, if ever, is war just?" A Reception will follow.

SMITH – Dr. Jens Christiansen, Professor of Economics and Environmental Studies at Mount Holyoke College, will deliver a lecture, "Terrorism and Global Warming," in Smith College's Neilson Library Browsing Room on Wednesday, Nov. 28 at 7:30 p.m.

UMASS – Kiaran Honderich will be speaking on Nov. 28 at 10:00 p.m. in the Student Government Association Office in the Campus Center. Her lecture will deal with the socio-economic and political effects of the HIV/AIDS pandemic in Africa. Several other speakers will also be present. After the lectures, the students will "chalk" the campus in honor of World AIDS Day.

UMASS – Viera Wallace-Lorencova, a graduate student in Communications, will deliver a lecture, "The Rise of LGBT Activism in Slovakia: Notes from the Field," in room 904-908 of the Campus Center at 12:30 on Thursday, Nov. 29. This event is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series.

UMASS – A feminist forum on the war in Afghanistan will be held on Thursday, Nov. 29, from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. in rooms 162-175 of the Campus Center. Speakers include Sirutpa Roy and Neta Crawford of the Political Science department, and Liz Miller, Five College Visiting Professor of Film and Video. Ann Ferguson, Professor of Philosophy, will moderate the forum. A segment of the film Women Under the Veil will also be shown.

AMHERST – Damián J. Fernández, Chair and Associate Professor of International Relations at Florida International University in Miami, and author of Cuba and the Politics of Passion, will deliver a lecture, "The Elian González Case and the Prospects for Reconciliation Between Cuba and Miami," in Amherst College's Merrill 3 on Thursday, Nov. 29, at 6:30 p.m.

UMASS – The More/Minds Wide Open Book Club will hold a meeting on Thursday, Nov. 29, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. in room 203 of Wilder Hall. The club offers community women a chance to "gather to read good books and discuss them in support of each other's growth and expanded thinking."

SMITH – A Sahaja Yoga Meditation workshop will be held at Smith College's Helen Hills Chapel on Thursday, Nov. 29, at 7:00 p.m. This event is open to individuals of all religious backgrounds.

SMITH – Jill Ker Conway, former President Emeritus of Smith College, will read from her new book, A Woman's Education, at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 30 in Wright Hall Auditorium. A reception will follow in Neilson Library Browsing Room.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Christine Benvenuto, a freelance writer from Amherst, will deliver a lecture, "Shiksa: The Gentile Woman in the Jewish World," on Monday, Dec. 3, at 4:30 p.m. in the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

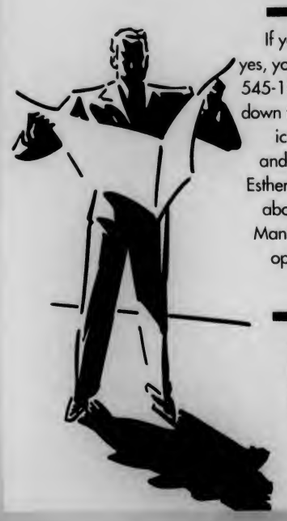
UMASS – The University Gallery will be preparing for its spring exhibition The Culture of Violence by hosting Community Coffees, in which to explore the subject of violence and the impact the exhibition may have on the community. The Coffees will be held at the Gallery on Tuesday, Dec. 4 at 7:30 p.m., and Wednesday, Dec. 5 at 4:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., and are open to the public. The curators will give an overview of the exhibition with slides, and foster discussions that explore how this project might be used to further the understanding of violence and peacemaking.

SMITH – Rabbi Arik Ascherman, Director of the Israeli Organization Rabbis for Human Rights, will deliver a lecture, "A Bridge to the Future: Defending Israeli and Palestinian Human Rights," in the Neilson Library Browsing Room on Tuesday, Dec. 4 at 7:30 p.m. This event is sponsored by the Smith and Amherst College Hillel organizations.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Author Eugene Pogany will discuss his book In My Brother's Image: Twin Brothers Separated by Faith After the Holocaust, at Odyssey Bookshop on Tuesday, Dec. 4 at 7:30 p.m. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a five-subject publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzny-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simiawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

STUDENT TICKETS

UMass basketball VS CONNECTICUT HUSKIES ESPN

Tuesday • DEC. 11TH • 9:00 pm

$ 5.00 each

WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

THE BATTLE OF THE BORDER
THE BIGGEST BASKETBALL GAME OF THE YEAR!

TICKETS ONSALE NOW!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810

GET YOUR TICKETS AT CAMPUS CENTER • THE CAGE • MULLINS CENTER

Blais

continued from page 1

more substantial, to focus on people [like Williams] who walk along on an edge, curiously unworried."

Now that she has released several nonfiction books, including her memoir, Blais has turned to reviewing the writing lives of undergraduates at UMass. Her two rules for good writing, she said, are that it must be both literary in quality and substantial in content.

"I tell my students, no sunsets. No beaches. And especially, no sunsets on beaches," she said. "Because it takes more than pretty language to tell a good story, and more than a good story to write well."

Blais said that at this time of crisis and unrest in the country, memoir is that much more relevant. There is a general lack of trust among some in official institutions, Blais said, and this leads to the conclusion that "the self is the only remaining trustworthy institution." Writers then seize control of making their narratives known and interpreted, she said, resulting in an explosion in the genre.

After the lengthy applause following Blais' lecture, interim Chancellor Marcelette G. Williams stood and presented Blais with the Chancellor's Medal.

"You have been an extraordinary example to all of us," Williams said.

Arava

continued from page 1

lies of victims during the Jewish holiday season.

"I plan to weave Sept. 11 into what I talk about," Cohen said. "It's all clearly related [to the work we do at the Institute.]"

He added that attendance in the program has suffered slightly this year, presumably as a result of the attacks.

While some students may be hesitant to travel to an area as notoriously unstable as the Middle East, Cohen feels that the benefits of the program outweigh the potential dangers.

"In the Middle East, you're confronted with a clear understanding that the earth is not affected by the political boundaries that we scratch on it," he said.

burglaries

continued from page 1

two other vehicles were reportedly burglarized in the same parking lot. One car's stereos were ripped out of the doors and the dashboard was damaged. A computer and monitor were missing from the trunk. The other car was found with damaged door molding and was missing a compact disc player, two speakers and three badminton rackets.

The UMPD received another breaking and entering/burglary call on Saturday at 6:35 p.m. A person reported that they had seen someone climb through a first floor window in Hills House North on Infirmary Way. Soon after, the person saw a room lighted on the second floor. Police officers found a male and female student in the building and escorted them off the premises.

Despite the weekend's events, Lyons said that burglaries are not necessarily more common during the holidays. He explained that the dormitories are locked and many resident assistants are still around and therefore "people actually stick out more."

Suspicious behavior was also spotted on campus last week. On Monday, Nov. 19, a woman walked into the third floor women's bathroom of Lederle Research Lowrise to find a man drinking beer. She described the Caucasian man as approximately 30-years-old, 5 feet 9 inches in height, dark brown hair with a full beard, medium build and appeared unkempt. The UMPD received the call at 1:55 p.m. and the responding officers found no suspect upon arrival and searched the area with no result.

That evening, a woman called to report that at 9:20 p.m. two males pushed her into her car. The woman said she was walking to her car parked in Lot 63, north of Skinner Hall. The suspects left as uninvolved parties approached the area.

crafts

continued from page 1

ties and the Campus Center Commission to secure the space. The Craft Center staff is involved in all aspects of preparing and running the Craft Fair."

Paula Hodecker oversees all of the administrative and correspondent artists and also works closely with the students and crafters.

Advertisements have made it in the local newspapers and heard on the campus and town radio stations, such as the UVC and WMUA broadcasting stations.

"Our main purpose is to help enrich campus community by providing general accessibility to the Craft Center," Hodecker said. "We're one of the only creative outlets open to all students and specifically the students. We're an educational service, a multi-disciplinarian nature, fusing art and business."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE H/COLLEGIAN

What, no chimney?

"Santa" was spotted outside of Brooks residence hall.

unions

continued from page 1

"Hawaii made much more explicit arguments in that gay people should not be raising children," she said. "Vermont did not make that argument because the state had legalized same-sex adoptions so that would be going against already existing policy."

Although that may not have been the way that the state of Hawaii wanted the legislation to go, they could not change it once the vote was in place.

"Once the constitution was changed, Hawaii couldn't do anything about it," Asay said. "The people of Hawaii decided by popular vote to overturn it."

Some of the students in the audience thought that Vermont did not go far enough and instead should have allowed for same sex marriages instead.

"I think that they backed down and did all of this PC civil unions garbage," one student in the audience said.

The issue of social change and how that connects to law was also brought up during the lecture. Asay brought up the question as to whether or not law is responsible for bringing about social change. She compared the current situation of the rights of same sex couples to that of the civil rights movement. She asked students to think about that in terms of social change.

"Some people would argue that the courts changed public opinion," she said. "Not that the court was so far ahead of their time but that they change the people's opinion."

RSU

continued from page 1

and now it's brought us to this kind of moment when the chickens come home to roost," he said.

The interviewees also had different ideas about what should be done, though most agreed that war was not the answer. "Terrorists don't need anything you can bomb out of existence," one man said. "All they need is desperation and the continued inequity between countries around the world."

Another woman said, "The solution is for America to look at itself."

No matter what the cause or solution, activists portrayed on the video seemed to unite behind the idea that the mainstream news media had not been fair in its portrayal of public opinion. One young man said he felt that the media had been "insensitive and manipulative" in saying that everyone in the country was calling for war. Others went a step further in warning what would happen if the cycle of violence continues.

"There will be more days like Sept. 11," an interviewee claimed. "I don't think we want to live like that. We're heading down a very dangerous road."

The UMass audience had views of their own. Audience member Charles Coburn protested what he felt were anti-Semitic sentiments in the video and questioned the blame that he claimed has been put on Israel, and its military support by the United States, for the Sept. 11 attacks.

Moderator Ryan Coughlin, a senior Psychology major, countered that the purpose of the video was not to lay blame on any one group, but to offer different perspectives on what has happened.

"Some of it is rooted in actual grievances and not just a general blanket anti-Western sentiment," Coughlin argued. "Granted, some of those grievances are subjective, but all views should be considered in this situation."

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT OOPS!

POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

Attention
February 2002 Graduates
If you are a member of the February 2002 graduating class who received Federal Perkins Loans while enrolled at UMass you should have recently received a certified letter about those loans.
We know this is a very busy time for you so we've mailed this information rather than having you attend a meeting.
However there are serious consequences if you fail to return these documents by 11/30/01 as instructed in our letter.
If you haven't received our letter but think that you should have or if you have any question about what you did receive,
Call 545-2377

www.dailycollegian.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

Work over Break
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

New Bedford prevents tragedy

students recognize warning signs

Massachusetts was rocked by the news that there had been a near tragedy in the fishing town of New Bedford over the past week. Students planning a Columbine-type spree plotted to bomb their school and shoot both their teachers and classmates. The operative word here was planned.

The four students who had been identified, as well as what police believe to be a group of others, were thwarted by a janitor who discovered a letter outlining their plans.

However the attempts to avert a tragedy by no means started here. A student attending high school there overheard some of the students bragging about the plan and alerted both the school and the police. The New Bedford Police Department, realizing that they couldn't wait for another Monday to pass (the day given for the attack), entered the homes of the accused and found items to make bombs as well as weapons.

Through the quick thinking of a student and school system, the police were given the proper information to prevent a tragedy from striking.

It is admirable that schools now are offering up advice to students on how to mediate disputes, get those who need it the proper help and how to prevent what could be a tragedy.

These students are beginning to know what to look and listen for. Because these types of incidents are alarmingly becoming more and more common in our school systems, we are almost becoming a society prepared to prevent an incident from occurring. While the gruesome attacks at Columbine took us collectively by surprise, we were educated on warning signs for dangerous behavior. The students and faculty at New Bedford High School proved that they understood the warning signs and took action in order to keep their school safe rather than treating the incident as a joke.

We have to realize that schools are not as safe as they used to be and move towards an action that will allow students a secure environment in which they can learn without feeling that their safety is threatened.

The next step towards providing a safe environment for children all over the country is the recognition of warning signs for violent behavior in their own children.

While it is not a surprise that many parents do not recognize that their children may be dangerous, it seems unlikely that involved parents would not realize that their children were building bombs in their own homes.

It is surprising and scary that the parents of the children accused of plotting to bomb New Bedford High School have already gone on record explaining that they will not even entertain the possibility that their children may be violent.

Because these types of incidents are so terrible and so scary, we as a society need to be more aware of the actions of those around us. That goes for students and for parents.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

UMass drops the student body, again

SAM WILKINSON

The University of Massachusetts can't do anything right.

If our students aren't busy rioting in Southwest, if our administrators aren't busy cutting majors out from underneath those same students, then our academic departments are busy catching flak from the media.

In this case, it's our Political Science Department. That would be the same department that happens to house my major. So to say that I took affront to The Chronicle of Higher Education's recent attack on said department would be an understatement.

Before I begin, here's da' facts.

Neta Crawford is a professor at UMass. She is a highly touted researcher in her field, widely praised for her study of both the Iroquois Nation and the role of emotion in world politics. She lives in Boston and has frequently spent a great deal of time away from UMass, teaching at other universities on fellowships of one variety or another. Her time at UMass has been checkered by, shall we say, less than stellar reviews of her teaching by students, specifically a staggering 58 percent of her students that described International Security as "one of the worst" classes that they had ever taken.

When Crawford applied for tenure, her department's tenure committee turned her down, 5-2. We are taught in our Political Science classes that one side getting 55 percent or more of support is a crushing victory. In this case, it was 71 percent of the department opposing her.

They voted against her, not because her research had been substandard (it had been well above what tenure traditionally requires), but because she had spent so much time away from the University and because her teaching had apparently been so god-awful. Typically, she appealed the decision through the various subcommittees around campus until her appeal lay on the desk of new Chancellor Marcellette Williams, who overruled Crawford's department, awarding Crawford the tenure she'd wanted.

She then promptly accepted another fellowship to teach at Brown University. In her years at UMass, half of them have been spent on other campuses, teaching other students.

"You know I have a question about the International Relations certificate and classes in the Political Science major..." This is what a friend of mine asked Crawford, her advisor.

This is how Crawford responded: "I don't really know. I can't help you. I don't like students. Let's just not waste anymore time so you can leave now."

Another told a story of, "my friend, who took her class. He said her teaching left him with a stomach ache she was so abusive to her students."

This is a person that deserves to have a guaranteed job?

There are some that have argued that Crawford, regardless of her apparent ineptitude in the classroom, should have been given tenure because her research is so amazing.

It should not matter, they'd argue, that she doesn't care about her students.

It should not matter, they'd argue, that she doesn't spend any time at this University.

It should only matter that she does what some would term fascinating research.

Well research shmesearch. Neta Crawford should not be teaching at this University.

Ignoring this University's current budgetary crisis – this University cannot afford to pay Neta Crawford the $51,306.32 that she currently makes, especially if she isn't going to be here – one wonders why UMass would keep somebody around who doesn't care about teaching. If she doesn't want to spend time in the classroom, if she isn't going to help her students to better themselves, then what in the hell is she doing at an institution fundamentally established to educate its students?

Crawford clearly cares about her research, her pocketbook and ultimately, herself. Unwilling to give, she instead demands. And Marcellette Williams concedes.

Williams' decision might be the most disconcerting part of this whole situation. Seemingly like all administrative decisions around here, Williams' overruling of the Political Science department is designed only to make the problem go away. But what did it solve?

Crawford, every fifth semester that she actually spends here at UMass anyway, will never be professionally respected by a department that knows she had to go crying to the administration to keep her job.

The Political Science department won't have faith in the administration for a long time to come, especially when it comes to making, independently made, internal decisions.

Williams gambled the trust that her employees have in her, all to keep a professor loathed by students who is never here anyway, on staff.

UMass has again found a way to lose face in the national media despite all the good that occurs on this campus.

> "UMass once again managed to take a situation where an excellent precedent could have been set and botched it completely. Instead of taking a stand against professors who don't care, UMass caved completely."

And students? Poked, prodded, pushed and again forgotten, our best interests have been ignored by everyone that is supposed to know better.

Excluding the five votes against Crawford, everyone apparently believes that research far outweighs in-class ability. This University apparently values a totally incompetent teacher, as long as she's willing to better her own career with her own research done at other institutions with our paychecks still going into her pocket.

UMass once again managed to take a situation where an excellent precedent could have been set and botched it completely. Instead of taking a stand against professors who don't care, UMass caved completely. Instead of firing Crawford, which is what a tenure denial would have accomplished, UMass kept an employee on staff that doesn't care about anyone but herself.

No wonder UMass never does anything right; every time we have the opportunity to, we do the exact opposite.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/Op is always accepting student submissions. Please make every effort to email your column/letter as an attachment to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, or bring it down to us on a disk at our office in 113 Campus Center basement.

www.dailycollegian.com

The use of tragedy to justify racism:

Incidents continue to occur on the University level

On Sunday, Nov. 25, I returned to my dorm after a long weekend to find the bulletin boards on my floor, which were once empty, busy with many university announcements. I must express compassion for resident assistants everywhere who must deal with the burden of bulletin boards – the burden being drunken males who decide to rip down announcements in a "look how rebellious I am" sort of rebellion. It was nice to see the boards full of communication, events, and ideas. The Office of Jewish Affairs had many posters up displaying the various holidays that are sometimes unknown to people or drowned out by the Christian/Corporate Christmas hoopla.

I took in the posters, each displaying and offering information on a different holiday that most young Americans haven't heard of, from the Wiccan/Pagan Yule celebration, to the African Kwanzaa festivities. The posters were not "recruiting tactics" to sway young and impressionable college students to abandon their religions. They were not devaluing Christianity or even (gasp) America, but when I passed by the posters later on in the evening, someone had voiced their opinion, as Americans are wont to do, on a particular poster by the Office of Jewish Affairs displaying the Islamic holy month of Ramadan. The poster had been spit on, and scrawled in pen were the words "sand niggers." That, my friends, is a hate crime.

I know that some right-wing readers and other misinformed individuals are shouting "free speech!" at the idea of calling graffiti on a poster a hate crime. Well, for those of you who haven't examined your freedom of speech, lets discuss it. In this country, you may say whatever you want; you may voice your opinion, no matter how foolish, narrow minded, inaccurate, or outdated it may be (The KKK, Aryan Nation, and the Christian Right are living proof of this). However, your freedom ends when you endanger the safety of someone else. For example, you cannot go into an airport and even joke about having a bomb in your carry on bag because of the past and present security breaches that have endangered civilians. You can not stand up in your biology lecture and threaten to kill someone because you are then endangering their safety, and you cannot use racial slurs, whether spoken or written, against someone of a different ethnicity, gender, religion, or sexual orientation, because you endanger that person's well being. Case closed.

I looked at the other posters, which were not altered in any way, and I suddenly had an idea of the motive behind this crime. Americans, as they haul out the 4th of July decor, place flags on their cars, lawns, dogs, and t-shirts, they become increasingly nationalistic, a view which is not wrong – its nice to have pride in your country. However, this pride in America is rising in direct proportion with anti-Islamic/Arab sentiments due to the September 11th attacks. The reaction of Americans to Arab/Islamic peoples can be taken straight from the "Adolph Hitler Book of Scapegoats, Half-truths, and Racism." We see the face of Osama bin Laden on every newspaper, magazine, and television screen everywhere, most depicting bin Laden surrounded by a gun targeting graphic. When we see this face every day connected to such a large-scale murder and ensuing rage, anger, and sadness, his features begin to blur into an image that is not the face of bin Laden, the individual, but of every Islamic person, male and female, adult and child – it is sickening. Americans are ushering in an old era of racism ala World War II and justifying it based on the deaths of people on September 11th.

ROSE NAUGHTON

I believe the person who defaced the poster, did so with the same hatred that people have displayed all over the country and all over campus. Suddenly, if you aren't wearing your American flag cape, you are anti-American (says The Minuteman), and if you are not white or if you appear to be (God help you) of Arab decent, you are the enemy of all red, white, and blue-blooded Americans everywhere. This is wrong. Some readers may think that this is an isolated incident, or not directed specifically at Islamic people, but I will ask of these readers and of the perpetrators (assuming they read this), why not deface all of the posters? Why was the Ramadan poster the only one targeted? I think that the present climate of the US answers that question. We want to justify our hatred based on the deaths of thousands of people. We want to get even with the dead suicide bombers so we choose to generalize people that are from the same area of the world. We throw around words like "coward" and "evil" to describe our attackers when in the same breath we are just as cowardly and evil as those who have killed our people when we write racial slurs on a university poster in black pen.

The Resident Director of my building took down the poster to report the incident. Again, I must express compassion for Resident Directors everywhere who must bear the burden of removing posters and writing reports – the burden being the sight of stupid racism or inappropriateness. I guess that is the route of action: reporting incidents. That defaced poster was on the board for all to see for at least 16 hours. No one reported it to an RA, no one even took it down because they were offended. Maybe no one was offended, except me. The nation needs to assess the racism that has erupted after the attacks. We, as students, must be informed so that we don't harbor biased opinions or decide to take it upon ourselves to flex our patriotic muscle by writing stupid things on religious posters. We also must continue to report hate crimes to the authorities so that the legislators and the public can see the evil that exists in our minds and hearts. Seeing that defaced poster made me think of America and its pledge of allegiance in the post September 11th world:

"One nation (the only one that matters), under God (the white-man's God, not Allah), indivisible (we're united unless you're an Arab)..."

With liberty and justice for none.

Thomas Naughton is a UMass student.

Jam bands rock local music scene this weekend

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

As we are all settling back into Amherst for the homestretch of the semester, it's important to realize that any good student needs plenty of relaxation time. Why not take some time off this week to ease your mind and shake out those bones a little bit?

There is no time like the present to see some amazing up and coming bands. The diverse selection of music hitting Northampton is simply unbelievable. Simply take your pick, and head down Route 9 to the club of your choice.

Starting things off tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 8:30 p.m. will be newcomers Town Hall. These guys, hailing from Philadelphia, are simply indescribable as they meld together all different types of music into their live performance. On any given night you will hear tunes bridging gaps including funk, groove, jazz, bluegrass, acoustic rock and even traditional blues. Coming off a strong live debut album, Live at the Point, these guys are sure to put on a great show. Opening will be the acoustic trio Cardinal Direction, who have opened for the Pat McGee Band and Guster and blend acoustic music stylings.

Thursday night is full of options, as you must decide whether to boogie down reggae-style or bluegrass-style. For all the reggae lovers out there, the Legendary Wailers are making another Pioneer Valley pit stop at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton starting at 8:30 p.m. After spreading the music of Bob Marley to the packed Student Union Ballroom last semester, they're ready for another roots rock explosion. Led by original Wailer bassist Familyman Barrett, these guys sound as good as ever.

Across Main Street at the Iron Horse Music Hall, bluegrass newcomers Railroad Earth will be making their first headlining gig in Northampton. After opening for the Yonder Mountain String Band earlier this semester, these talented musicians are ready to teach you a few things about bluegrass. Opening for Railroad Earth will be the Sim Redmond Band from Ithaca, N.Y. These guys are taking the jamband scene by storm having opened up for Moe this past week end in New York City. They blend an interesting mix of root-rock, reggae and folk music to form an interesting and unique sound.

You have a few options for your musical entertainment on Friday night. For you Deadheads out there, check out the Dark Star Orchestra for their first show at the Calvin Theater. For every performance, these tribute masters select a complete Grateful Dead show and recreate it exactly. They also throw in a few other favorites for the encore. This show begins at 8 p.m. Be sure to break out the tie-dye.

Connecticut's Rane will be headlining Pearl Street on Friday. This is going to be a great show with some astounding opening talent that could be headlining themselves on any given night. Starting things off will be the acoustic virtuoso Steven Kellogg. Following Kellogg will be current Percy Hill drummer Aaron Katz with his side project. If the Dark Star is not your thing, check all three of these bands, which will begin at 8:30 p.m.

Jazz Mandolin Project, the improvisational trio, does not leave much room for any options on Saturday. They will be playing two shows at the Iron Horse. Starting things off at 7 p.m., Jazz Mandolin will be a relaxed sit-down performance. Hopefully, there will be at least some room for dancing. For the second show beginning at 9:30, the tables and chairs will be cleared away for a general admission dance floor.

Tickets for all events will be available at each respective venue the day of the show or can be purchased beforehand through the Northampton Box Office on the second floor of Thorne's or by calling 1-800-THE TIC

From tabloid page to stage: Bat Boy

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

BAT BOY: THE MUSICAL
Union Square Theatre, NYC

For all you tabloid newspaper junkies who love musical theater, your day has come. Bat Boy: The Musical is the new, off-Broadway show that got its inspiration from the cockamamie magazine article about a child born half human and half bat. In its nine-month run, it has won several awards, including Lucille Lortel and Outer Critics Circle awards, garnered rave reviews and developed a select fan following.

It's not so different than the cult-classic The Rocky Horror Show, which is also a black comedy wrapped in the shroud of a spooky story. Bat Boy has a kick-ass rock n' roll score (by up-and-comer Lawrence O'Keefe) moving it along. The music may make the show soar, especially in the tongue-in-cheek opening number "Hold Me, Bat Boy" and the riotous "Three Bedroom House," but when it comes to the actual plot, it nosedives at an alarming velocity. The most noticeable flaw in Bat Boy is that it can't choose whether it wants to be a comedy or a horror story. In its darker, more haunting scenes, the show is a true pleasure, but when it hastily switches gears to be funny, it feels so out of place that the effect is lost. It carelessly jumps back and forth between motifs, making the audience dizzy with its indecision.

When Bat Boy (Devin May) attacks a local girl out of fright, he is brought to the home of Dr. Parker (Sean McCourt). Bat Boy and Parker's wife Meredith (Kaitlin Hopkins) and their daughter Shelley (Kerry Butler) immediately become close. As time progresses, everyone grows to love Bat Boy, now named Edgar, except for Dr. Parker, who is becoming jealous of the attention being given to Edgar by his family. As Dr. Parker sets out to bring him down, Edgar and Shelley start to fall in love, and Meredith reveals a terrible secret about her past with Bat Boy.

COURTESY PLAYBILL

Relative newcomers Keythe Farley and Brian Flemming wrote the quirky yet clunky script, but whatever slack they leave behind them, it is picked up by the talented, young director Scott Schwartz (who also helmed the wonderful tick, tick...BOOM!). He tries to mold Bat Boy the best that he is able, but despite his astute aptitude, the show can't help but crumble in his hands in several places.

While the show generally flounders at comedy, Schwartz has managed to sculpt one scene in particular to be laugh-out-loud funny. When Bat Boy and Shelley hide in the forest at the show's end, the woods come to life with singing and dancing animals, as the actors puppeteer them. It is clearly a parody of The Lion King musical on Broadway, and it is not lost on the theatergoer's senses.

Perhaps the most disquieting element is the set design. It doesn't really resemble anything, except perhaps a trash dump. While most of the scenes are set in the house of the family raising Bat Boy, it would have been better to have an empty stage than the eyesore of the heap looming behind the actors. In its favor, the designers have made a hole in the ceiling of the theater, which the actors climb down through in a scene where they are exploring an underground cave. Also, in a moment near the end of the show, the set splits in half to create a flashback montage, and it is enjoyably clever. Apart from these moments, the set looks like the characters are conducting their meetings out of a waste plant.

One part where Bat Boy bothers this critic is having men playing women roles. Schwartz's aim is for the cliché of cross-dressing to humor the audience, but it's not as though these roles are bit parts. They are among some of the more prominent characters in the show, and the formula just doesn't work here. I was happy to find that Bat Boy was actually a guy, and not a girl dressed like one.

Despite the cult following and the many accolades, Bat Boy is set to close its doors on Dec. 2. Nonetheless, it remains clear that Bat Boy has brought to light many new talents in the theater community, and if nothing else, it is the springboard from which these fresh voices will be able to fly from, as they will no doubt move on to bigger and better things.

Devin May brings a Chris Kattan-like quality to the role of Edgar; jumping and running all over the stage and making contorted facial gestures while spewing out nonsense sounds. It's all very amusing and endearing for a little while, but it begins to grate on the nerves with its sheer lunacy. May's energy, however, remains full on for the entire show, and for that he should be commended, for it certainly is a difficult role to perform day-in and day-out. May remains onstage for practically the entire show, and in between his rambunctious bouts, he sings and dances up a storm, with more emphasis on the former. He has a powerful voice that fully embraces the score and he never falters.

Equally absorbing a stage presence is McCourt as Dr. Parker, who deservingly attracts the audience's attention whenever he steps onto the boards. Having already written two musical scores, and starred in a bunch of shows already, it will not be a surprise to see him climb the ranks of Broadway theater.

The rest of the cast struggles, however, especially Hopkins, whose role is highly demanding. Instead of being fully committed to the role, she instead acts like she is doing the part as a favor to someone, not really displaying any enjoyment in the part. While her vocals are strong, her acting is not up to par.

Despite the cult following and the many accolades, Bat Boy is set to close its doors on Dec. 2. Nonetheless, it remains clear that Bat Boy has brought to light many new talents in the theater community, and if nothing else, it is the springboard from which these fresh voices will be able to fly from, as they will no doubt move on to bigger and better things.

Leona charms, Walker's sideburns beguile

COURTESY JIM HERRINGTON

COURTESY LEONANAESS.COM

COURTESY LEONANAESS.COM

Mike Walker croons...while Leona Naess could be the mayor of your town.

LEONA NAESS
I Tried To Rock You But You Only Roll
MCA

I need an emotionally wounded female singer/songwriter to fall in love with on a pretty regular basis, so skipping across the worn cobblestones of Fiona, Shea Seger, Sarah Harmer, among others, I see Leona Naess approaching in the distance.

She's been around here before, with her debut Comatised, an album that contained only a twinkle of what was to come. Songs like "Lazy Days," detailing the bursting passivity with which Naess asked a lover to chill in her apartment and order Chinese, and "Charm Attack," a pop song of steel whose hooky gaze gave us a not-so-outsider look into the world of beautifully unattainable guys. The momentum of the album slowed down soon after those highlights, though, and, like the latest Travis album, waded far too deep into the sludge of over-confessional songwriting accompanied by sparse and unaffecting musical accompaniment.

With her latest, however, I'm the one that's good need something to cataract her charm attack, as the heightened clarity and vitality of I Tried To Rock You But You Only Roll is enough to drown anyone in its confidence. Naess had a cute checklist on her last album where certain emotions (like a broken heart) could be checked off as inspiration for the individual songs. The new album could have a similar checklist with all exclamation points, since whether she's yearning, empowering, or apologizing, it's all done with an assuredness and conciseness that we all secretly want from our pop songs, no matter how many pieces the author is in.

The album title is cringeworthy at first, but it only takes one listen to roll right along with the sense of humor that livens both the songwriting and the music, the latter often augmented this time around with hubbly electronics. "When you fall, I'll be around/ I'll be the mayor of your town," Naess thrown back at a love that missed his chance. Other times she's less cryptic. "Come with me to Mexico/ Stop listening to that damn radio," she demands. How anyone in her presence could be anything but transfixed is unknown, but I think you oughta take her up on this ride. (Michael Delano)

MAPPARI
High Enough to Notice
Wheelkick Records

The up-and-coming band Mappari has been receiving a lot of buzz. They supposedly rock in concert and have opened up at sold-out venues for G. Love and the Special Sauce and the Rustic Overtones. They've also recently released this debut album, which was produced/mixed by Rob Stevens (who has worked with everyone from John Lennon to the Red Hot Chili Peppers). With this in mind, let me just say one thing. They suck! A lot. Listening to this album is like getting punched in the ass. And not in the good way. The band doesn't have an original bone in its eleven-song "album." But how can I describe their sound? How about this: suppose the Gin Blossoms came back but left their songwriting talent back in the 90s. And suppose their comeback album had a green cover and sounded nothing like their good old stuff and made you embarrassed that you ever liked them in the first place. Hmm, maybe that's a bad example...alright, suppose Toad the Wet Sprocket came back...

The fact that this band was signed to a label and given a record deal single handedly disproves the existence of God. After listening to this album twice (the second time, I muted my stereo and the band's strength was revealed to me), I now truly believe in evolution. Charles Darwin would have loved Mappari but he's dead so let me tell you why they suck. First of all, on the cover of the album, there is a picture of a boy holding a piece of broccoli. No one likes broccoli! Why are you doing this to us, Mappari? What have we done to deserve this?

The best song on this album is a track called "Light," only because it kind of sounds like a second-rate Guster song and makes mention of Allen Ginsberg and Van Morrison (does the band even know who these people are?). The track also manages to have a good closing that speeds up the beat of the song, kind of like the Beatles' "A Day in the Life" except nowhere near as good.

With lyrics like "all I want is to be a fish," it's amazing that this band got where they are. On one track, leader Will Bailey sings "sex hurts the first time, but then you find your role" and it really makes you wonder what Bailey is doing wrong and what compelled him to write a song about this. The track "Idiot," which was probably written about the guy that signed Mappari has lines like "he wears your skin like a dress, to hide his manliness." First of all, that makes no freaking sense! And secondly, I hate broccoli!

This album punched me in the ass and left a mark. Don't let it happen to you ... wait for Mappari's second album featuring a girl holding a piece of cauliflower. I'm sure people will eat it up. Mappari, you are the reason I stopped believing. Thanks for showing me the dark. (Serge Pinsky)

LITTLE A Scene
Say aaahh!! Records

You know the TV commercial with the little blue aliens using a Pentium to alter a tourist's photo of the Eiffel Tower, making the woman in the photo more aesthetically pleasing to them? Well, the cover photo for Little A's new album Scene looks as if it went through that same process. It's that kind of cheapness that permeates this wan, lusterless album.

With lead singer Bruce Grover's whiny, nasal voice, and the band's desire to probe new places with their instruments, Little A sounds kind of like Our Lady Peace, the difference being that OLP actually bring passion to their noodlings. Whenever Grover isn't growling or bleating to sound like he has vibrato (it doesn't work), he's moaning as if he had taken Thorazine. At a little over 45 minutes, this hazy mope rock gets downright dreary. Each song (excepting two) run past four or five minutes, even after the song should've ended. The band endlessly repeats lyrics and beats, with either Grover's drowsy keening or his strangulated attempts at nu-metal anger.

I wished the band would break out at least once, and my hopes got high halfway through, during the beginning of "Down." But the song quickly died, and the remainder of Scene was a flat-liner.

The members of Little A – Grover, guitarist David Kirkdorffer, and drummer Danny Lee – also have the problem of wanting to be other musicians. At times, Grover comes off like a nu-metal Dave Matthews, complete with the singer's sometimes-incoherent verbal gymnastics. This is most obvious on the worst track, "Pendulum," a long, slow, nearly six-minute downer bracketed by 40 seconds of ... people eating. "Silence" sounds like it could've come off the Verve Pipe's self-titled, somewhat misguided, sophomore disc.

Little A may think they're bringing melody and inventiveness to the world of hard rock. But their arty touches are ill advised, and the music is unlistenable. Despite their optimistic name, Little A gets a big, fat F. (Johnny Donaldson)

MIKE WALKER
Mike Walker
Dreamworks

Mike Walker is the reason most people today hate country music. Every bad cliché that is associated to the long lost, once respected music style can be found on Walker's latest and hopefully last album. From the incestual "Who's Your Daddy?" (seriously, that's a song), to the heartfelt closing track "Memphis Women and Chicken," Mike Walker destroys everything that greats like Johnny Cash and Hank Williams created. He also doesn't play a single instrument and didn't even write one song by himself. He co-wrote three tracks on this album, and you guessed it, they're terrible.

The only thing that Mike Walker has going for him are sideburns. He has killer sideburns. If they could somehow just get their own album, I think it might be better than Walkers'. You heard it here first, people – Mike Walker's sideburns are going places! He, however, is not. I think that Mike Walker's career will be over before you can say Tom Cochrane. Except that "Life is a Highway" was a kick-ass song and that guy ruled.

Listening to this album, I get the impression that Mike Walker isn't even trying. The songs that he sings are pathetic, and his personality is nonexistent. He doesn't want to be Garth Brooks, he wants to be Chris Gaines, the ill-fated Garth alter ego. Hell, if Garth Brooks' alter ego were Mike Walker, he would never get a show at Staten Island, let alone a sold-out Central Park.

Walker also does a terrible cover of a great Roy Orbison song on the track "What Kind of Love." If the Orb wasn't dead, he would have totally grabbed Walker by his sideburns and shown him what good music is all about. If Chris Isaak ever hears this track (and I have a feeling he will, since bad music tends to become popular, and since country stations have already put songs off this album in rotation), he'll show Mike Walker how imitating Roy Orbison is really done. Until then, Walker is safe in his crappy downward spiraling country music scene world. But time is running out until it starts getting good again and he will be seen for what he really is: a hack. And those sideburns are growing... (Serge Pinsky)

significant others

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

AUTO FOR SALE

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978.

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1985 Olds Calais New Tires 30 mpg Good Condition $700.00 O.B.O. 413-250-1826

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport 5 spd, 4x4, 25mpg. White SUV loaded 82,000 miles. 1 owner, NADA $7875 asking $6375. 549-4506

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

AUTO FOR SALE

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, pagemaker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare: Handicapped experience, references, housework, car, 6/20hrs/wk. $10/hr 413-247-5800

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

INSTRUCTION

Need Computer Help? Call Rob at 549-4275. Free if I can't help!

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

Room Available for Jan. 1st. walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-3492 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

Two Male Roommates Needed for apartment in Brandywine CHEAP for info call Dana 549-5436 or 374-5832

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Martin's Auto Saab & Volvo Martin's Auto Repair ASE Certified. Reasonable rates, friendly service. 323-6362

SERVICES

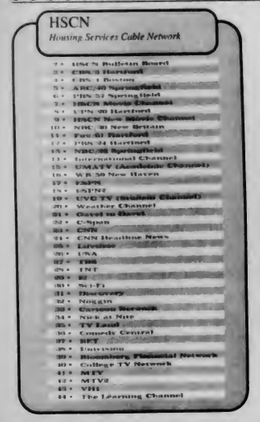
Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

TRAVEL



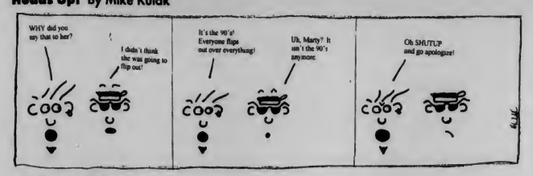
SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



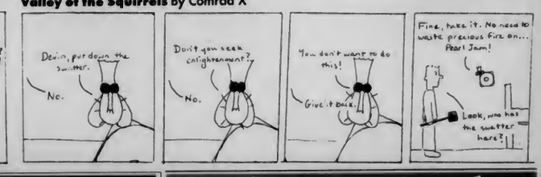
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Monty By Jim Meddick



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"I'll be your Huckleberry."

–Doc Holiday, Tombstone

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 56 LOW: 36	HIGH: 46 LOW: 43	HIGH: 63 LOW: 37

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21–Dec. 21) – Today is Wednesday. You know what that means. Wear clean socks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You know that hot girl in your class, stay away. She thinks you're weird.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Skip class today. You need a break. If you always skip class, show the Collegian to your professor as your absence excuse. They'll understand.

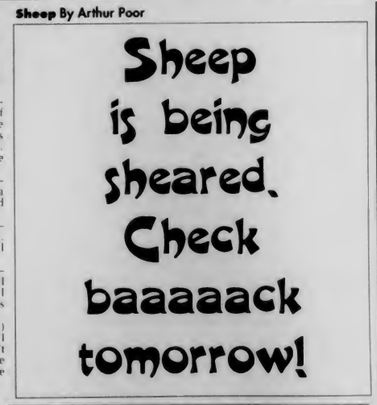
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – The stars are telling you something that you really don't want to hear. Eventually you will snap, and the police will arrest you for swimming naked in the Campus Pond screaming, "Shut up, Julia Roberts!"

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may eat some ... food ... of some sort ...today. Although it may be a cosmic metaphor — look, I'm not really sure. The Magic 8 ball's stuck on "Try Again." And Miss Cleo's phone is busy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You really should go Boyden Gym tomorrow and cheer on your favorite Collegian employees in their valiant attempt for their only shot at an intramural championship. Otherwise you'll be UMass-acred.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The planets are finally in the right alignment. Now is the time for you to reform your band for your glorious reunion tour. Hair bands are back, Venus says.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Venus is in the house of Capricorn. Saturn is in the house of Aries and Mars is in the House of Pancakes. What does this mean? We don't know. Just be careful.



LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Partly cloudy today with a chance of showers toward evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Surf areyouhotornot.com. You may find your soul mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21) – Suddenly the answer to all of your problems will appear at 113 Campus Center Basement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21) – When someone says, "I think I'm getting sick," don't believe him. It's man-code for "I really want to make out with you."

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Burrito

Fried Clams

Bean Burrito (vegan)

Pasta Bar
American Chop Suey

Grill Station
Bacon Cheeseburger

InternationalPasta Stir Fry

DINNER

Chicken Cacciatore

London Broil

Vegetable Cacciatore (vegan)
(W Basics)

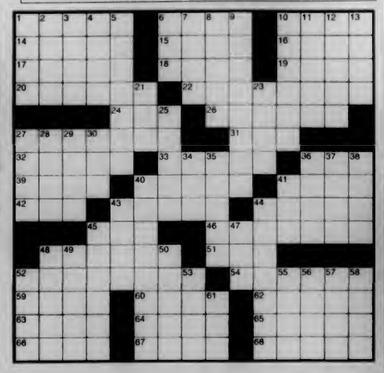
Native American Stew (vegan)

Pasta Bar
American Chop Suey

Grill Station
Bacon Cheeseburger

International
Smoked Chicken Pronto

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 Striped animal
6 Bad actors
10 Prepare to leave
14 Oversight
15 Western state
16 — Pie Terrible
17 Economist Janeway
18 Portuguese lady
19 Singer Braxton
20 Couch
22 Locate
24 Rx givers
26 Schedule
27 Wood protector
31 Bought
32 Traffic jam units
33 Ryan of films
36 Library sound
39 Require
40 Port-au-Prince site
41 Appeal
42 Subway opposites
43 Diplomat Bunche
44 Loan-sharking
45 Thicken
48 Realms
48 Cul-de-sacs
51 Science room
52 Gravely's pull
54 Soothsayer
59 Capital of Peru
60 Authentic
62 Throbbed
63 "The race —"
64 Nick
65 Cars or Castle
66 Not pencils
67 Got a ticket
68 Imp

DOWN
1 Last letters
2 Gardner of mysteries
3 Liverpool chap
4 Cheer on
5 Moon goddess
6 Fed building agcy.
7 On the summit
8 Obsession
9 Chinese port
10 Mountain climbing gear
11 Shun
12 Large blossom
13 Woven
21 Newspaper execs
23 Bell tower sound
25 School of fish
27 Windmill blade
28 Novelist Jean
29 Hwys.
30 Gesture
34 Bite
35 Merman of song
36 Mumble
37 Present
38 Makes bales
40 Ship's ropes
41 Frat letter
43 Coral ridge
44 Scold
45 Gathers bit by bit
47 Cultural Revolution figure
48 Originate
49 Citrus fruit
50 Take a nap
52 Acrobat's feat
53 Country road
55 Farm unit
56 HS class
57 TV host Jay
58 Actress Barbara

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

M	A	T	H		S	M	O	G		M	U	G	S
A	L	E	U	T		W	A	V	E		U	R	N	S
V	A	N	N	A		I	R	A	N		P	S	A	T
S	I	N	G	L	E	F	I	L	E		P	A	T	S
			K	A	T	E		R	O	E
P	A	P	E	R	S		B	A	N	T	E	R	S
A	I	L	E	D		J	O	I		L	O	U
P	L	O	P		F	E	U	D	S		E	L	A	N
S	A	O		B	R	A	G		O	V	E	N	S
O	F	F	B	E	A	T		A	S	P	E	N	S
		E	G	G		A	S	H	E
Y	E	N	S		M	A	S	T	E	R	M	I	N	D
A	L	I	T		E	M	I	R		A	U	G	E	R
M	I	C	E		N	A	D	A		S	N	O	R	E
S	E	E	D		T	H	E	Y		G	R	O	W

12-13-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Matthew F. Sacco
Photo Technician — Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor — Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor — Pete Preston
Production Staff — Esther Danzig, Andrea Mellis

Check out tomorrow's Sports for a preview of the weekend's action

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, November 28, 2001 8

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass improves to 3-0 in team effort

Rhymer's defensive play is key for Minutemen

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

What a difference a year makes.

Last year, just after the Thanksgiving break, the Massachusetts men's basketball team traveled across the United States to Portland, Ore. to take on the University of Oregon. That day, a tired Minuteman squad was soundly beaten 91-76 by the Ducks. Now, 360 days later, UMass got its revenge.

UMass	62
Oregon	58

The Minutemen (3-0) overcame an 11-point first half deficit to beat the high-octane, but clearly fatigued, Ducks 62-58 last night at the Springfield Civic Center. Shannon Crooks led the way for UMass with 13 points, but the win was a team effort in the truest sense. All nine Minutemen who played scored and eight of them registered a rebound, but, more importantly in the eyes of head coach Steve Lappas, they controlled the pace of the game.

GERALD ENG/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson hit a huge three-pointer late in the game last night to break a 54-54 tie.

"It's all we talked about for three days, it's all we talked about in every timeout that we called. Keep the pace," he said.

After scoring just two points in the first 38 minutes of action, Micah Brand came up big when it counted, making a tough lay up over Oregon's Robert Johnson on the low block with 1:16 remaining to regain the lead for the Minutemen at 59-58 and then gave UMass a three-point cushion a minute later with a pair of free throws.

The Ducks (4-1) had a chance to tie the game on their final possession, but sophomore forward Luke Jackson threw an ill-advised pass in the direction of James Davis that Kitwana Rhymer easily corralled before being fouled. He proceeded to hit the front end of the one and one to seal the victory for the Minutemen.

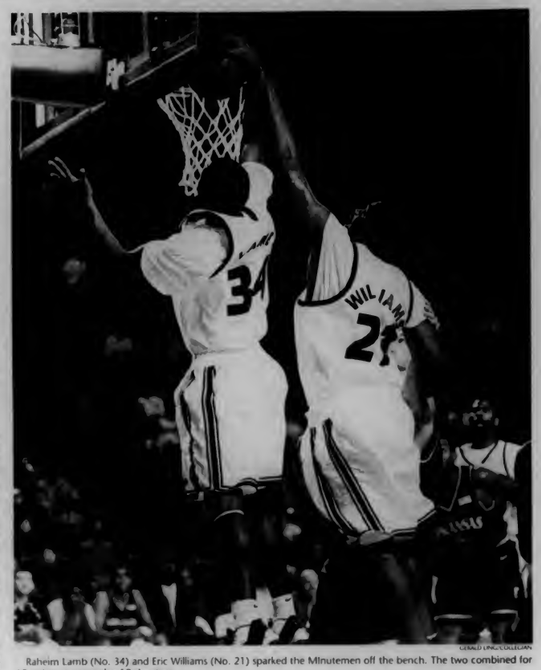
Early on it did not look like the Maroon and White would be able to stay close to Oregon, falling behind 11-3 in the game's first four minutes. The Ducks, who came into the game averaging more than 90 points a contest, were off and running from the opening tip, scoring a number of easy buckets.

Oregon was able to keep a healthy lead in the game's first 10 minutes before UMass went on an 11-3 run to cut a once 11-point lead down to three. In that run, Kyle Wilson scored the first points of his collegiate career with a three pointer from the wing while senior forward Eric Williams added a pair of three point field goals of his own.

"Coach told me to look for my shot more because I know I can score I've just been a little frustrated," Williams said. "He told me to just go out there and play and if my shot opens up, shoot."

"Eric Williams and Kyle Wilson got the game back to normal for us," Lappas said. "Those two guys gave us the lift with those three three's to get us going."

Despite the run UMass trailed 32-31 as the teams headed into their locker rooms at halftime.



"I thought UMass did a good job of regaining their composure after the start of the game," Oregon coach Ernie Kent said. "We had them on the ropes with our running game and we took some tough shots, and they made us pay for taking those tough shots. They regained the momentum of the game in the first half and never really gave it up."

The game would remain tight throughout the final 20 minutes with UMass forging ahead, but never able to build more than a four-point lead. With 5:12 left, the Ducks regained the lead on a Jackson jumpshot, to make the score 53-52. But from that point on, like it has for the majority of the season's first three games, the UMass defense took over, allowing just one field goal the rest of the way.

With the score tied 54-54, Anthony Anderson hit a three-pointer, his only of the night, with 3:35 to go that put UMass ahead. That three was UMass' seventh and final trifecta of the night, establishing a new season high.

For the third straight game, the contest's outcome was up in the air until the final five minutes and, for the third time the Minutemen came out victorious.

"This shows that we are capable of playing with a big name team," Crooks said. "We pulled it out late and that shows that we have a lot of heart on this team, a lot of character and a lot of heart."

GERALD ENG/COLLEGIAN

Raheim Lamb (No. 34) and Eric Williams (No. 21) sparked the Minutemen off the bench. The two combined for 18 points on seven-for-10 shooting.

Cahoon announces future

UMass HOCKEY
THE MASS ATTACK
2002-03
Recruiting Class

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts coach Don "Toot" Cahoon laid another brick on the foundation on a burgeoning hockey program with the signing of six recruits to National Letters of Intent.

"All these players should be able to impact the program in the near future," said Cahoon.

Character and speed were the themes that ran through most of Cahoon's first full recruiting class, which totaled ten. That premise remained the same, as another sextet of talented players will call Amherst their home in the fall of 2002.

"We think it's a very solid class," Cahoon said. "[It] continues to attack the mission of improving our skating and overall skills, while maintaining a physical presence."

Keeping with his creed to battle regional powers Boston University and Boston College for Bay State talent, Cahoon signed four Massachusetts players to go with a player each from Illinois and Maryland.

"We've really made an effort to get into Massachusetts and go after who we consider to be some of the prized candidates for Division I hockey," Cahoon said. "Right now we have their attention, and over the last two years we've been able to attract a number of good players."

Headlining the class will be the program's first ever United States National Development Program signing.

Six-foot-one-inch forward Stephen Werner is easily one of the most talented players to ever enter the program. His signing not only marks a recruiting coup for next year, it also signifies the maturation of a program into the realm of blue chip recruiting.

"Werner gives us the first opportunity we've had to recruit a player from the U.S. National Development program," Cahoon said. "It makes us more of a known quantity in the recruiting circles. It will play a role in some future recruiting we'll be able to do."

Joining Werner as another high profile recruit is defenseman Marvin Degon. The five-foot-ten Millbury, Mass. native will solidify a good returning core while also adding a new dimension to the UMass blueline.

"He is a great skater," said Cahoon of his potential laden recruit. "He's not Jim Fahey," referring to the Northeastern defenseman who is presently leading all of Hockey East in scoring. "But he definitely has some offensive tendencies."

With Mike Johnson on track to graduate this year, the Minutemen will be without experience in the crease next fall, but they certainly will not lack talent.

Joining high profile freshman Tim Warmer is nationally recognized tender Gabe Winer.

"Every Division I school has the [Stoughton, Mass. native] on their list of the top 6-8 goalies in the country," Cahoon said. "He is a different type of goalie than Timmy, more of a stand up type. But he should have success here."

Rounding out the six-man group are two more Bay State forwards. 6-foot-2 tough man Stephen Jacobs is the "big, strong, power forward in the group," while James Solon is a 5-foot-7 speedster who Cahoon calls a "prototype college hockey player."

Illinois native Matthew Fetzer has also signed on as a defenseman for a team that will be severely depleted in that department next year. With the loss of captain Toni Soderholm and senior Randy Drohan, Fetzer's "sense for the game" and puck movement" will be a welcome addition.

Marvin Degon
Defense; 5'10", 175 lbs.
Cushing Academy (Mass.)

Matthew Fetzer
Defense; 5'10", 180 lbs.
Sioux City (Ill.)

Stephen Jacobs
Forward; 6'2", 200 lbs.
Cushing Academy (Mass.)

James Solon
Forward; 5'7", 175 lbs.
Cushing Academy (Mass.)

Stephen Werner
Forward; 6'1", 190 lbs.
U.S. National Development Program Under-18 (Mich.)

Gabe Winer
Goalie; 5'9", 177 lbs.
Governor Drummer (Mass.)

A Red Sox fan's X-mas wish list

JIM PIGNATIELLO

It's time to fill out your Christmas wish list. After looking at mine for this year, I realized that they all involved the Boston Red Sox in some way. So, Red Sox Nation members stuck out here too close to Yankeeville, check out my list and compare it to yours.

1. Pedro Martinez stays healthy and happy in 2002.

It almost seems like a pipedream to hope for Pedro to make all of his starts next season. Martinez started just 18 games for the BoSox last season and hasn't pitched 220 innings since his first season with the team in 1998. After injuries to the best hitter in the American League (Nomar Garciaparra), a solid catcher (Jason Varitek), and the implosion of a once-solid closer (Derek Lowe), the team stayed in contention until Martinez got hurt on June 26 and stayed off the mound for two months. By the time Pedro returned to the lineup on Aug. 26, the season was essentially over.

Things went from bad to worse after Pedro was activated from the disabled list. After complaining about continued soreness in his throwing shoulder, Pedro hinted that he should shut it down for the rest of the season, especially since the Sox were all but out of contention. General Manager Dan Duquette, being the jerk that he is, went public against Pedro's comment, saying that the doctor's examination found nothing wrong. Duquette, lacking any kind of foresight, also pointed out that Sox fans love watching Pedro pitch and that he is paid to do so. While the statement is true, there is no way the fan base would rather watch Martinez pitch when it doesn't matter than have him at 100 percent for the next season.

2. Tony Clark reverts to old form

After establishing himself as a top power hitter in 1998 by batting .291 with 34 home runs and 103 runs batted in, Clark has spent the last two years struggling due to injuries. An all-star for the Tigers last season, Clark had 77 RBI in the first half of the season, but a sore right wrist limited him for the second half of the season.

If the 6-foot-7-inch first baseman can stay healthy and continue his dominance at Fenway Park (.382, 6 HR, 24 RBI in 28 games), the Red Sox will have a solid hitter behind Manny Ramirez, giving him some protection. Duquette truly may have found a diamond in the rough off of the waiver wire this time.

3. Jason Giambi doesn't sign with the Yankees.

This would be an absolute nightmare. Giambi is easily one of the best players in baseball and would do wonders for New York's lineup. A solid power hitter (.342, 38 HR, 120 RBI in 2001) would be a perfect addition, giving added protection to both Bernie Williams and Jeter. A team as good as the Yankees adding a legitimate MVP candidate would make things much harder on the Red Sox the next few years.

4. Carl Everett is traded.

At this point, I don't care if Duquette trades him for a stick of gum, get the jackass out of the clubhouse. Everett is a distraction and has been one since the second half of the 2000 season. Despite putting up some decent numbers (.329, 24 HR, 69 RBI) in 2001, he is always on the wrong side of controversy (siding with Everett in Everett vs. Williams in 2000 and then Pedro's elbow last season) and he knows nothing about clubhouse chemistry.

There would be so many quality prospects that would love a chance to be the GM to finally bring a championship to Boston and it is time to give one of them a chance to do so.

8. That no one will ever riot over the Yankees ever again.

No real fans were rioting after the World Series. Real Red Sox fans reacted to the Diamondbacks in just one way: A quick smile and a big sigh of relief. How anyone can feel justified chanting "Yankees suck!" when the team has been consistently whipping your team's ass is beyond me. Let's be intelligent next time and not make a bad name for all the real Sox fans here in Amherst.

9. The Godfather DVD Collection.

Okay, so this has nothing to do with the Red Sox or sports in general, but The Godfather is the greatest movie of all time and its sequel is the second greatest movie of all time. You get both in this set (along with the third installment which I will never, ever sit through again) and I need to add to my DVD collection. What better way to do so than with my favorite two movies of all time?

So there you have it. My holiday wish list is officially finished. If anyone can help make some of these happen, I would greatly appreciate it.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

Spy Games is an absolute thriller. So is our video games page. See: ARTS p. 5

Tim Turner is trying to lead a youthful revolution. Learn how on: SPORTS p. 13

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 57 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, November 29, 2001

'Outrageous' budget cuts stir discussion in SGA

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Bets on who can use the largest vocabulary words in their reports and this years up and coming University of Massachusetts Amherst budget were just a few of the topics discussed in last night's Senate meeting.

Meeting for the first time in two weeks, Senators and members of the Student Government Association's Executive Cabinet entered the meeting with much discussion surrounding the up and coming State of Massachusetts budget cuts.

Student Trustee Jon Laubinger explained to the Senate that this year the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would be facing up to a 12 million dollar budget cut.

"The budget outlook sucks," Laubinger said. "Twelve million dollars will be cut from the University, meaning that last year students were protesting our 1.35 percent cut, and this year were facing a five percent cut."

Laubinger further explained that the SGA Executive Cabinet has been asked to submit reports to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos regarding their thoughts on the budget cuts and what it will mean for the University.

"This year is just the beginning, and

Turn to SGA, page 3

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Once upon a time....

Author Michael Silverstone signed copies of his book, Winona LaDuke; Restoring Land and Culture in Native America, last night at Food for Thought Books in Amherst.

Controversy at Palestinian teach-in

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Arab Students Club and the University of Massachusetts Palestinian Action Coalition co-sponsored a teach-in last night in the Campus Center called "The Palestinian Struggle: Popular Resistance, U.S. Foreign Policy, and the Media."

The event was well-attended, with a standing-room-only audience that struggled to cram inside Campus Center Room 904 to listen to the night's featured speakers: Bushra Mohammed, a slam poet who writes about Palestinian political issues; Mazin Qumsiyeh, a political activist and an Assistant Professor at Yale University; and Anthony Arnove, an activist with the International Socialist Organization.

The event would become emotionally charged and conflicted as the night drew on, and as one opinion after another clashed with opposition in the room. The difficulty of maintaining peaceable discussion appeared to be an issue from

Turn to PALESTINE, page 3

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Bushra Mohammed read her poetry at the Palestinian Action Coalition's teach-in last night.

Rabbi Cohen promotes peace in Middle East

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

While the conflict in the Middle East was debated at last night's Palestine Teach-In, students gathered at Hillel House to hear Rabbi Michael Cohen lecture about a school where Jews and Muslims live and work side by side.

Cohen is the director of the North American office of the Arava Institute for Environmental Studies, an Israeli academic institution that caters to students of all nationalities and religions. He spoke about the challenges faced by a multiethnic institution located in the heart of the Middle Eastern conflict, and the breakthroughs he's witnessed in the minds of its participants.

"The vision [of the Institute's creator] was to have a place where Middle Eastern students could study the environment together," Cohen said. Keeping with this vision, the Institute takes students from all backgrounds, including many from Islamic Middle Eastern countries. University of Massachusetts students have the option of studying at the Arava Institute as part of a year or semester abroad program.

Cohen shared some of the stories about the cross-cultural experiences that have taken place at the Institute.

"There are two levels to the dynamic there," he explained. "Some of [our experiences] are nice, fun, easy stuff. But some of it's more difficult."

As an example of "easy stuff," Cohen told the story of an Israeli Arab woman who volunteered to work with children at the Kibbutz Ketura, the site on which the Institute is located.

"The first day she walked into the children's house, they asked her, 'Are you going to throw stones at us'?" Cohen said. "As time went on, though, a different perception was created. A bridge was created."

Other situations have proved more difficult, Cohen described a lecture attended by Arava students, in which an Arab woman discussed why she felt Israel was illegitimate.

"It was very intense to hear," said Cohen. "There was a very quiet Israeli

Turn to COHEN, page 3

CONSTRUCTION
UStore gets face-lift

By Jennifer Eastwood and S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

There is one on every campus, the quintessential college store, there to fulfill the needs of every student. It is in the mystical place that freshmen spends exorbitant amounts of money on sweat suits, coffee mugs, and other paraphernalia to prove their allegiance to the school and their inability to wash dishes and do laundry on a functionally regular basis.

However, here in the jungle that is the University of Massachusetts students have been seen running from campus store to campus store, wondering where their favorite pens, the cool UMass "gas shorts" and the shot glasses are.

The University Store, otherwise known as the UStore, has been undergoing a renovation since early last summer, less than a year after the Follett Company bought the rights to the store. Follett, based in Oakbrook, Ill., has budgeted the renovation at $825,000.

Follett contracted Thayer Street Associates, Inc. of South Deerfield, Massachusetts, to do the construction, which was quickly halted by the discovery of asbestos in the store's air ducts. Asbestos is a type of naturally occurring silicate minerals that can be separated into strong, very fine and flexible strands or fibers that are both heat and fire resistant. It took until Oct. 13 to completely remove all of theses fibers from the area, and construction is now finally coming to an end, leaving the expected completion date at Jan. 1, 2002.

Paul McKita, the Director of the Design Department at Follett, is optimistic that the project will remain within budget despite the discovery of asbestos and consequent the delay of work.

"It's going to be a really nice space when it's completed" said McKita. "The new design opens up space, [and] takes a lot of visual blocks that were there out of the way. It will be much more pleasing to shop in, and we of course are making sure it is ADA [Americans with Disabilities Act] complaint."

The renovation has left many students running around trying to figure out which store location has certain products. There are currently four satellite locations selling UStore merchandise.

The first store is the "cage" on the Campus Center concourse, currently selling Follett's school supplies. The second store in the reading room across from the Graduate Lounge predominantly sells giftware merchandise. The third store in the Games Room in the Student Union sells computer equipment and software and reading materials. In addition to those three stores, a portion of the Textbook Annex has been given to the UStore to sell its art supplies.

Philip Olson, Follett's UStore manager, said that the temporary locations were chosen based on the factors that only certain areas of space were offered by the University to the Follett Company with the approval of the building inspector. Furthermore, he continued, Follett initially attempted to obtain a permit to set up shop in other areas before settling on the locations in which they did.

"Our initial idea was to keep everything in one area," Olson said, noting how the company first looked at setting up a tent system on the lawn in front of the Campus Center.

However, the building inspector did not approve the permit for such an act, leaving the UStore to attempt to obtain a permit in which a temporary building structure would be set up on that same lawn. Again though, the Inspector turned the proposal down, leaving the UStore to settle on its four locations.

According to Ashoke Ganguli, Director of Auxiliary Services, Follett will pay one million dollars for the UStore's reconstruction, $875,000 for the building and interior decorating (as McKita had noted before) plus $125,000 for the new computer system.

"That was the original estimated cost," he explained, but noted that money does not however include the asbestos removal and new installation of ducts. "The institution [UMass] will pay for the extra costs, but we're very lucky to have Follett pay for as much as they are."

After construction is completed, University officials will sit down with Thayer Street Associates, Inc. construction company, going over the budgeting in detail, determining how much over budget the asbestos removal has placed them.

Ganguli said until that meeting, the University does not know how much the ultimate cost will be.

Turn to USTORE, page 2

■ UStore

continued from page 1

nor will it be releasing an official estimate. Once the additional costs are confirmed, he continued, the monies to pay for it will come out of a budget set aside to deal with the annual costs for campus building maintenance.

Project Superintendent Rob Quick explained that 99 percent of the ductwork has been finished. Upon completion of a brief project to paint the ceiling's ductwork black (the new UStore will feature exposed mechanical works), the project will be nearly done.

After the painting, only testing of safety devices will remain. He will test the air ducts, which ensure there is enough air in each area of the store, the fire alarms, which must adhere to ADA mandates by sounding both an audio and visual alarm, and the sprinkler system. Quick plans to have all testing finished by Jan. 1, 2002.

Quick's reasoning for slower progress during the construction was the need to adhere to an abundance of codes to ensure health safety.

"This is just one of the code books here," he said, pointing to a six inch thick book as proof.

According to Quick, no one should worry about the asbestos for the air quality tests have presented the company with "incredible" readings.

"It's cleaner in here than it is out there," he said.

During the air quality testing of the store, the Campus Center concourse, and directly under the store in the Campus Center basement, Quick added, the hygienists found proof that the UStore air was not affecting any of the air in these surrounding areas.

Two tests are used in this process: the TEM test, which takes a fiber count and reveals what fibers are in the air, and a swipe test, in which a hygienist swipes the area with a special cloth and looks at it under a microscope to see which fibers the cloth attracted. While the TEM test identifies all the fibers per 1400 square feet of air, the hygienist picked up roughly three fibers in the UStore area, Quick proudly added.

"Those were really impressive tests you won't find that anywhere else on Earth," he said.

Quick recalled when the asbestos was initially found by first showing up in small section on the walls. Upon inspection of the air ducts, the project was shut down until asbestos removal was completed.

He noted that it was "one of the deadliest asbestos know to mankind," and forced the crew to replace about 38,000 pounds of ductwork.

"It [asbestos] was all up in the honeycombs. You could only see it if you shined the light up in it. It was amazing. I've never seen that much," said Quick, speaking from almost 26 years of experience in the construction industry.

He estimated that the first asbestos removal came about in the first part of July, remembering how the containment process left the UStore covered in containment plastic all along the walls and floors, and a three-door locker with a shower enclosed the entrance and exit.

"You can't really hold anyone responsible though," Quick said, noting that the rules for what passes for acceptable tolerant amounts of asbestos have changed four times since the store was last inspected for health safety in 1985, at which time, it passed.

Andrew McLellan, a senior majoring in Spanish and Sociology, pointed out that the store's construction has worn hard on its student employees.

"I don't think it [the construction] has been a good thing," he said. "This is just a temporary thing. It's hard not knowing where things are or having to tell people to go to a different store if they need something that's not here."

McLellan, who last year worked in the UStore, paused to answer a student's question, telling her that poster board is not sold at this current location in the reading room but is instead sold at the art section of the Textbook Annex. He then continued his explanation of how he now spends his days working at one of the four store locations.

He noted that the job calls for "more of a need based" schedule, and while employees have an approximate timetable as to which location they will work at on certain days, they can be moved about as needed.

McLellan's co-worker, Dana Dowe, a freshman majoring in Communications, added that some of her shifts include transferring back and forth from one store location to another if the demand mandates it so. However, her frustrations extended beyond just that.

"A lot of times people aren't sure where things are, so they get mad at you if you don't know either," Dowe added. "They also get mad sometimes if what they're looking for isn't in the store, and you have to send them somewhere else."

McLellan agreed that the semester has not been an easy one to deal with but that he does what he must until the time arrives when the store moves back into it's one, permanent location.

"It's just not been a good experience for us because the managers are upset because people are shoplifting like crazy, and we're loosing money," McLellan cited as an example.

However Olson disagreed, saying that shoplifting has not become anymore of a problem than it had ever been before. In order to deal with shoplifting in a more "sophisticated" way, Olson pointed out, the new UStore will implement a new security system that will include many monitoring cameras, which will tape on a 24-hour loop, as opposed to the one security camera in the store as it once had been.

Olson plans to move the merchandise into the store as soon as possible after the store's completion, hoping to be fully operational for the back to school spring rush. The UStore moved in location twice in the summer, taking only four days for each move. He expects the same amount of time for this move as well.

"The entire shopping experience has been affected for our customers. It's more of a target shopping," said Olson. "It has impacted us so that sales are below what sales were last year."

The main UStore location is about 14,600 square feet. Including the piece of the Textbook Annex used for art supplies, the UStore is currently operating out of about 6,000 square feet.

"We've literally tried to fit 12 pounds of stuff into an eight pound box," Olson said. "There's no music or hallmark on sale at the moment because I just don't have room for it."

Some student responses revealed a range of sentiments about the construction scene and its repercussions on campus that point to frustration.

"I wish they would finish it, so I don't have to go on anymore scavenger hunts to find products for my personal needs," said Noah Ditto, a senior majoring in Plant and Soil Science.

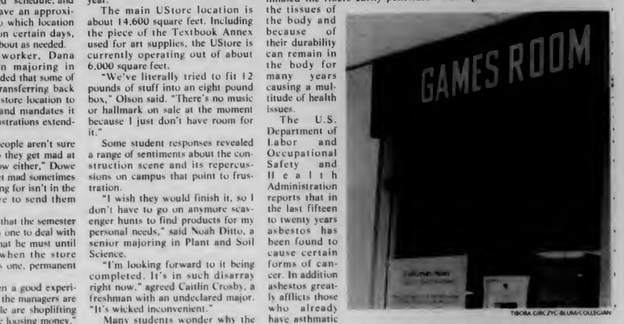
"I'm looking forward to it being completed. It's in such disarray right now," agreed Caitlin Crosby, a freshman with an undeclared major. "It's wicked inconvenient."

Many students wonder why the process could not have been completed by the start of the regular school year.

"I don't understand why they couldn't have finished by the beginning of the year. I feel like it should have been done sooner. I feel like they wasted a lot of time with this," said Melissa Darrah, a junior majoring in Sociology.

According to Kazan, McClain, Edises, Simon and Abrams Law Corporations Web site, during the twentieth century some thirty million tons of asbestos products were used in industrial sites, homes, schools, shipyards and commercial buildings in the United States.

The primary types of asbestos found today are chrysotile, amosite, and crocidolite. It is when these fibers are not completely encapsulated that they begin to break down into a microscopic dust which because of its size can remain suspended in the air for long periods of time waiting be inhaled. Once inhaled the fibers easily penetrate the tissues of the body and because of their durability can remain in the body for many years causing a multitude of health issues.



The U.S. Department of Labor and Occupational Safety and Health Administration reports that in the last fifteen to twenty years asbestos has been found to cause certain forms of cancer. In addition asbestos greatly afflicts those who already have asthmatic and other pulmonary diseases.

There are some who agree that it was time for the UStore to be renovated, citing the disorganization and poor floor planning as their main reason.

"I think the UStore renovation is a good thing," Damon Carlson, a sophomore with an undeclared major, said. "It was a bad setup before and hopefully they can make it so that there is a bit more organization as to where things are, like the registers."

Carlson added that he didn't believe it was a bad thing since the product will be, in the end, worth the wait and the hassle.

"I'm very much looking forward to getting back to the place where we can better serve our customers," Olson said. "It's not been an easy fall. It's been hard on the staff and also hard on the customers. We just wanted to thank the community for bearing with us."

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Students can no longer play pool since the UStore moved into the Games Room in the Student Union.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.daily collegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargama Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Voted BEST SPORTS BAR 10 Consecutive Years! BY READERS IN THE VALLEY ADVOCATE POLL!

We're #1

Direct TV Sunday NFL Ticket

FREE POPCORN!

Friday, Nov. 30 9:30pm
Join us for the Great Guinness Official Toast
Barenaked Ladies will be Broadcast Live at 9:30pm

Karaoke Party Night
sponsored by Edison Light
Saturday Nights 9pm-1am
Dec. 1 & Dec. 8
Win Edison Dollars for Great Prizes!

20% Off All Gift Certificates Sat., Dec. 1, 2001 only!

MONDAY NIGHTS QB1 NFL
1/2 price appetizers, nachos & wings 9 til midnight
The Ultimate Live Football Experience and Interactive Strategy Game!

CELEBRATING 10 years Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive • Amherst

Sign up now for our V.I.P. e-mail parties coming soon!

HAPPY HOUR 1/2 PRICE APPETIZERS... Nachos & Chicken Wings
Served Mon-Thurs 3-5pm in the bar area only.

Fridays only
The PIZZA PLAYOFFS
FREE PIZZA
3-5pm

Food served until midnight every night

4 Pool Tables
December Special Edison Light Pitcher $6.95
Keno ('til closing!)
New Drafts
BBC Draymen's Porter
BBC Last Sailor
IPA

December '01

ARTS ON CAMPUS...
A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Saturday, December 1
SEMINAR: Colorful Women Seminar will bring together women that represent diverse ethnic backgrounds, religion and races to explore issues that effect all women. It will also include a performance by Project 2050. 9 a.m. in New Africa House. 546-0580.
MUSIC: Collaborations in Sound & Motion University Dancers and Jazz Ensemble I with Billbob Brown & Jeffrey Holmes, directors. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Sunday, December 2
MUSIC: Winter Winds Wind Ensemble & Symphony Band with Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr., conductor. $ 2 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, December 4
MUSIC: Young Composers Student Composer's Concert. $ 7:30 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.
Thursday, December 6
※THEATER: Diary of a Madman A powerful statement on the tribulations of miscommunication between people [or nations] and the ways in which madness has no language and recognizes no boundaries is presented in this adapted version of Nikolai Gogol's original story. 8 p.m. in Rand Theater. $ 545-2511. Through 12/8. Also 12/12-14.
※DANCE: When the Spirit Moves An exhilarating evening that brings together live New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance. 7:30 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
※POETRY: Diaspolitan Dementia Bronx poet and actor Mariposa drives out manic appressive demons and delivers a poetic healing from internalized colonialism. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
※THEATER: Picasso at the Lapin Agile The play centers on the fictional meeting between Albert Einstein and Pablo Picasso at the Lapin Agile in Paris, France in 1904, and their subsequent discussion about the impact they have made on the 20th century. 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 545-2511. Through 12/8.
Saturday, December 8
※FASHION SHOW: Original fashions designed by both professional and student artists interpreting "fantasy" through fashion. 7 p.m. in Campus Center Auditorium. $ 546-0749.
MUSIC: Orchestra Series, Concert #2 University Orchestra with Lantranco Marcelletti, Jr. director. 8 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
Monday, December 10
※MUSIC: All That Jazz An evening consisting of performances by Thr Jeff Robinson Trio, readings by poet Stephanie Renee and an open mic session for students. 6:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. $ 546-0580.
MUSIC: Contemporary & Jazz Voices Vocal Jazz Ensemble with guest ensemble, Vocal Jazz II. Catherine Jensen-Hole, director. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, December 11
MUSIC: Jazz Ensembles in Concert Chapel & Lab Jazz Ensembles with David Sporny & Jeremy Winstead, directors. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Thursday, December 13
※MUSIC: "Wrench" This musical "captures the experience of what goes on behind the scenes of an average performance, by exploring the lives of those actors and stagehands that bring the magic of theater to public view." 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511
READING: Sleep Deprivation Chamber Staged Reading of Adrian Kennedy's latest work, infused with realistic personal experience to create a frightening account of race relations in the U.S. in the twentieth century. 7 p.m. in Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177.
Sunday, December 16
MUSIC: Youthful Winds Youth Wind Ensemble with Steven Dennis Bodner, conductor. 2 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

Remeneber These Dates!

Upcoming Grant Deadlines (all grant due in at noon)
February 6, 2002
February 27, 2002
March 13, 2002
April 10, 2002

Celebration of Arts on Campus
February 5, 2002
call the Arts Counci for more details!

Exhibits

※AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House · 545-5177
M-TU 1-7 pm; W-F 1-5 pm
Student Shows
Artists to be announced
Dec. 3-7
Dec 10-14

※CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680
M-TH 3-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Frances Kidder NEW WORK
Through Dec. 12

※HAMPDEN GALLERY
Southwest Residential Area ·
545-0680
M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Robert Taplin: Jupiter
Through Dec. 6
MFA Thesis Exhibition
By Anna Campos
Dec. 10-15
Reception: Dec. 13, 4-6 p.m.
Rapid Response
Dec. 16-22

※HERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall · 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
The Weight of Light
Recent photographs by Liza Ryan
Through Dec. 14
Robert Cumming: Selected Drawings, 1980-2000
Through Dec. 14
Artist Talk: Dec. 12, 5 p.m.
West Gallery

※STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building · 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
Photo Show
Advanced Photography Students
Dec. 3-14
Reception: Dec. 4, 4-6 p.m.

※UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center · 545-3670
TU-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
Markus Raetz
Through Dec. 14
William Hosie
Through Dec. 14

●Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events
※Sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

12/01

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

■ Cohen

continued from page 1

Arab woman from our program who, at one point during our conversation, said, 'I agree with what she's saying.' Everything could have fallen apart. But when the lecture was over, my students went up to her and said, 'Talk to me. I want to hear your views.' They had an intense, amazing conversation."

He also described an incident in which an Israeli woman took offense to a program to feed Palestinian villages. Her son was a soldier in the Israeli Army.

"Why," she asked Cohen, "should I feed a young Palestinian who may kill my son tomorrow?"

Cohen said that he responded with a story from the Bible, in which an angel offers water to Ishmael. God is asked why he saved the life of a man destined to kill Jews, and responds by saying that when confronted with a starving child, one should not be concerned with the future.

It is through the Arava Institute, Cohen says, that many students learn about the importance of diversity in human relationships and the environment.

"Most people on the program understand that the more diverse the human world is, the healthier it is. The real challenge is to celebrate diversity."

The Arava Institute offers students not only a chance to travel to the Middle East, but also to study a unique ecosystem. Of special interest to many students is the Red Sea, which includes endangered coral reefs.

"Because our students are interested in the environment," Cohen said, "they have a greater understanding that political boundaries have nothing to do with the environmental realities of the world."

■ SGA

continued from page 1

next year could and probably will be worse, meaning more huge budget cuts for us in the future," Laubinger said.

Speaker Aaron Saunders expressed his thoughts on the situation by stating that students need to take a stand and let the University know how they feel about the budget cuts.

"The budget really, really sucks and were being hit the hardest because we're students here for four, five and six years, so were only temporary," Saunders said. "We have to show them that we're outraged, because it is outrageous."

Saunders continued to explain that it's important for the SGA to be organized and prepared for what the future may hold.

"If it even looks like we could have more cuts, we need to stand united and say that we won't stand for anymore of it."

Aside from budget cuts, the Senate allocated funding of $1,500 to Soul TV's annual fashion show. The fashion show is set to be held on Dec. 8, and will feature student designs as well as performances by the University of Massachusetts Funk Club.

"Our basic goal is to promote student talent," Senator Verena Bryan said. "We have 47 models who are students on this campus and well as a variety of performances."

The Radical Student Union also asked the Senate for the allocation of $1,500 for funding future events. The Senate passed the motion unanimously.

Issues surrounding displaying the American Flag and the State of Massachusetts flag were once again a motion brought before the Senate. Last spring a similar motion was brought before the Senate causing much debate and it was then ruled dilatory. The motion was presented upon the recommendation of the Administrative Affairs committee, and tabled to the Diversity committee for further discussion.

"It's more important to see this motion tabled because diversity will be able to provide a different perspective so hopefully they will be salient to one another."

Discussion surrounding the appropriate electoral districts and their appropriate definition in the SGA Constitution was brought before the Senate once again. A motion calling for just two electoral districts, On-Campus Residential and Off-Campus Commuter was discussed by the Senate and tabled for further discussion.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Lights, Camera, Action!
Many Women filled out paperwork previous to their auditioning for the Vagina Monologues, presented by the Jewish Student Union.

■ Palestine

continued from page 1

the very beginning, when Alicia Klein, of the Arab Students Club, introduced the event with the caution that "we'd like to keep the questions tonight questions, not statements.

"Also, please keep them to 60 seconds in length at the longest, and let the speakers answer them fully."

Tension was already high as Mohammed began to read. There were visible reactions among members of the audience to lines such as "we now, the new Wandering Jew," in reference to Palestinian refugees. Finally, before her selection "Liberation from a Freedom Fighter," Mohammed said to the audience, "I want you all to keep in mind that I am a poet. I write from my heart. You want objectivity? Go home and watch CNN."

Even this statement was met with debate. "CNN isn't objective!" an unidentified audience member yelled back.

"Well, then, if you want to hear what you want to hear watch CNN," Mohammed replied. "Maybe you can be rocked to sleep by their lulla-bies."

Qumsiyeh took the microphone next. He discussed his personal experiences growing up on the West Bank, and wove in his own perspective on Israeli-Palestinian history. He said that before 1967, "I didn't know much about Judaism or Jews or what their thoughts were."

"But in that year, as the Israelis took over the West Bank, I saw soldiers and I saw fear."

Someone in the audience shouted, "what happened in 1947 and 1948?"

"In 1948 they had a much more horrific experience with Israeli soldiers," Qumsiyeh said. "During that year 531 Palestinian villages were repopulated. The majority of people, even according to Israeli historians, left while the area was still under British mandate, but they still left 'under the gun,' so to speak, in a method which we would call ethnic cleansing. Israel simply loaded them on buses and told them to leave."

Qumsiyeh said that the goal of the original British design for a Jewish state included Palestinian citizens, but that Palestinian leaders "rejected this for good reason, and many Jews in Palestine also opposed this action." He likened it to "a jailer giving you control over your own affairs while keeping the keys."

Qumsiyeh said that his anger at Israeli occupation was not aimed solely at Jews. He said that the British had had much to do with the creation of Israel. "In Palestine we all lived together peacefully, not just Muslims," he said. "Muslims, Jews, and Christians. The problem began when the British called for the creation of a Zionist state."

Nor, Qumsiyeh said, was his outrage at what he termed "a catastrophic situation" in the West Bank region directed at all those of Jewish nationality.

"I remember in 1967, my grandfather received a visitor at his house and I happened to be there," Qumsiyeh recalled. "It was an elderly Jewish gentleman, a high school friend of my grandfather's, and I just remember these two old gentlemen, one Israeli, one Palestinian, crying on each other's shoulders.

"I've always kept in mind the difference between this Jewish gentleman, who was a best friend to my grandfather, and the Israeli soldiers who were invading us."

Qumsiyeh also pointed to the media and what he termed skewed or fabricated accounts of international events for the continued conflict in the Middle East. He said that there is an imbalance in which regions of the Israeli-Palestinian territory get coverage.

"These bombings aren't happening in Tel-Aviv," he claimed. "They're happening on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, in occupied areas, where 400 Jewish settlers in Hebron control the lives of 100,000 Palestinian refugees."

These comments were met with outspoken disagreement from several members of the audience. Klein stood and reminded them to save questions for after the speakers had finished.

"The media doesn't really tell you what is happening," Qumsiyeh continued. He gave a list of websites, including www.intifada.org, and www.palestineremembered.org, as "good sources that debunk Zionist myths." Again, there was visible and audible unrest in the crowd.

The emotionally charged talks continued with Arnove's speech concerning what he termed "The US relationship to Israel and our responsibility for some of the crimes against humanity that [Qumsiyeh] just described."

According to Arnove, United States financial and military aid "has allowed Israel to carry out immense human rights abuses."

He also said he felt that this aid has been excessive.

"If you look at it per capita, it's off the charts," he said. "And if you look at it politically it's all a means for Israel to continue systematically violate Palestinian human rights."

Arnove described the conditions in Palestine, which he visited last year, as "horrific and untenable," likening the situation to that of apartheid South Africa.

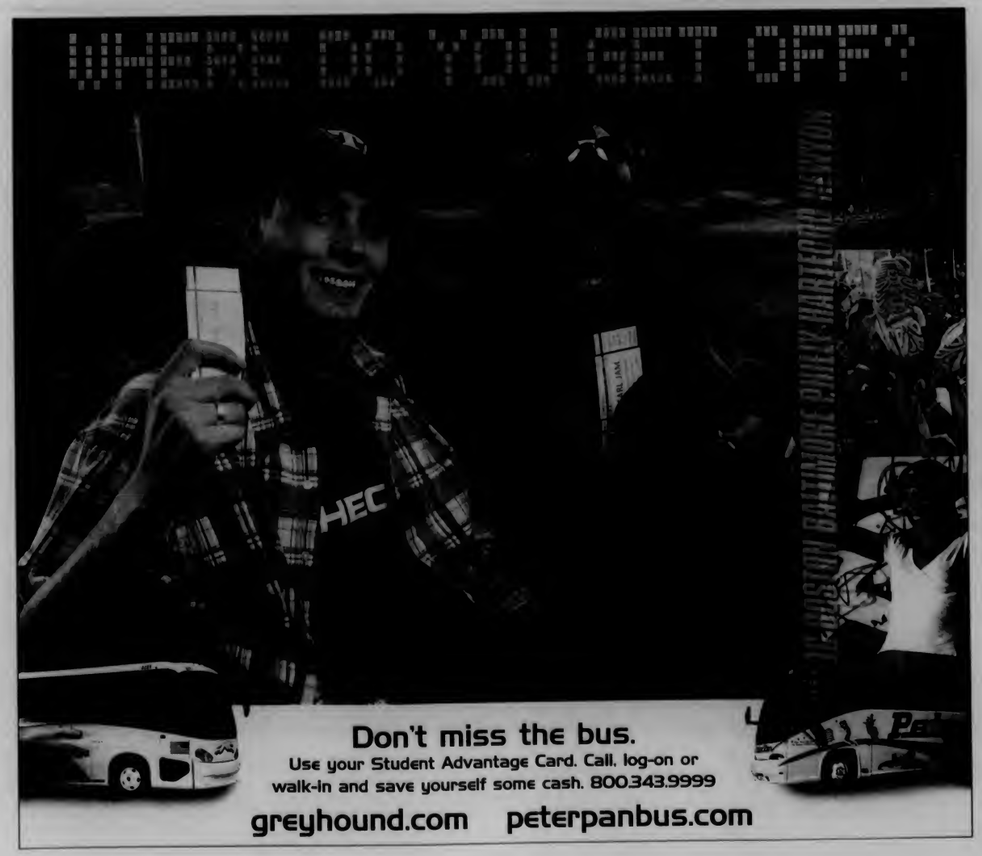
He then explored the origins of the US-Israeli alliance. Citing the United States' "horrible historical record when it comes to protecting the rights of Jews," Arnove moved argued that for the United States the alliance "is a purely strategic and cynical one," aimed mostly at controlling oil production in the region and, as he put it, "punishing other states for contradicting US interests in the area."

"Israel doesn't have oil!" came a protest.

"Yes, yes, Israel doesn't have oil," Arnove replied. "But use your intelligence. Israel serves US interests in a region that has a lot of oil." He quoted an article from Newsweek to support his point, and then commented, "at least Newsweek seems to think so. You think what you want."

According to Arnove, US taxpayers should address the issue of US aid to Israel.

"We need to tell the government that we know that the US interests in this region are at odds with the interests of those who live there in immense poverty," Arnove said. "It's an area of tremendous disparity and desperation. It's a volatile and dangerous equation."



He said that the current war in Afghanistan was part and parcel of the Iran-West conflict that has engulfed Palestine and Israel.

"It's threatening to further destabilize the region," Arnove said of the war, "and it's being taken advantage of by other states, including Israel and I think that we need to involve Palestine in protesting against this war. We have to talk long term here like President Bush is doing, about the situation in the Middle East and around the world. Our political system today is unsustainable, we need a new world order based on cooperation and peace."

Mohammed then closed the event with three more poetry selections, ending her reading in tears.

Audience member Aura Spivak, a Senior Women's Studies and English Major, said that she was "stung" by what the featured lecturers had to say. She took particular exception to Qumsiyeh's claim that there were no bombings going on in Tel Aviv, and Arnov's characterization of Israeli leader Ariel Sharon as "a mass murderer" during his talk.

She said that the speakers were "obviously very educated people, so I'm disappointed that they would skew events this way. I just don't like it when only part of the truth is what's given. Because part of the truth is basically a lie."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 29, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Casualties:
losing our journalists

The Italian daily Corriere della Sera, the Spanish newspaper El Mundo and Sweden's TV4 – organizations that, in the past, were linked as media outlets only. Now, however, since the war in northern Afghanistan began, they also share loss.

Eight journalists have lost their lives in the war, a startling number that has forced other major media outlets out of northern Afghanistan back into more protected space so that the lives of their reporters can be more aptly protected.

The BBC, Reuters, and the major US broadcast networks have taken steps to withdraw, while the Associated Press and the Washington Post have indicated they plan on moving in a similar vein.

An article on Boston.com quoted Tim Regan, a correspondent for the British TV company ITN, who was witness to some of the most recent attacks. "We are going to kill you," he recalled the attackers saying, as they took, among other things, cameras, computers, and the life of Ulf Stromberg, a cameraman, who was shot dead.

Since Sept. 11, much has been said in praise of the policemen, firemen and others involved in the efforts in New York City. The praise is certainly appropriate. Many from that day, however, and the days that have followed, have been overlooked: the individuals in the buildings, the bystanders, the entire population of the fourth flight that went down.

Journalists have found themselves in the same group.

There are no ceremonies for writers killed in war; no benefit shows or televised telethons. Like police or firefighters – journalists rush to the scene of an event. They are there to do their job, unglamorous as it may be. They can't physically help the situation. But they can, in the best cases, help the rest of us to understand it.

The journalists killed in Afghanistan were doing just that. Their jobs. They were gathering facts, speaking with strangers, trying mightily to remain objective where everyone has a strong opinion of some kind. They were up against the world as it was, and then it was ended.

Some may think that because they're not fighting, because they're not directly contributing to the war effort, journalists are extraneous pieces, that they clutter an already complicated board. It's not true. Without the talent and bravery these men and women have, the war in Afghanistan – the news anywhere – would filter down secondhand, or perhaps, not at all. Say what you will about the news being slanted at times, not always and completely objective. Without journalists, there would be nothing; you'd be left in the dark.

Remember the lives of these men and women that have been prematurely taken. Not just the journalists, but every individual that leaves home to do a job and loses their life as a result. We may not always agree with the situation overseas, the reasoning, the political shifting for a foothold, but in the end, they're simply trying to improve each one of us.

Remember that.

Information from Boston.com was used in this story.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

New Bedford kids need help, not hell

ROB SCHULZE

I've seen two of their pictures. The boy looks older than his age, hard and balding. The girl looks the exact opposite, terrified and very, very young. Before her arrest, she was going to school in my hometown of Plymouth. The other two, underage, haven't had their photos in the media.

I'm talking about the four kids charged with plotting to shoot up New Bedford High School. It's been all over the news, but in case you missed it, I'll give you a rehash.

Three boys and a girl were plotting to sneak guns into school and kill as many as they could before they killed themselves. It all went to hell when the girl warned a favorite teacher and an alert janitor found a note with some details on it. The police arrested them all last week.

Good shoot by the authorities, I say. Usually I don't have much good to say about principals and cops busting down on kids, but I think that the evidence warranted the actions taken in this case. I've already seen enough dead kids on the news to last me the rest of my life. Enough really is enough.

Still, though, when I heard that Amy Bowman was going to school in Plymouth, I got to thinking. I don't know that she went to my alma mater – there are two high schools in Plymouth, imagine that – but still there's a 50-50 chance that she did. That she walked down the same halls that I did. Had the same teachers. Read the same books. And, of course, dealt with the same bullshit that I'd loved'm win though.

You see, I was as surprised at Columbine as the rest of you, but in a different way. I was surprised that it had taken so long to happen. From my perspective, it was only a matter of time before someone did it.

I met up with a friend from Plymouth North last week for the first time in a couple years, and at some point he remarked on how much I'd changed since graduation. "Back then you always looked like you were going to kill someone," Scott said before taking another drag on his Corona. He really wasn't kidding, though.

I wasn't a Columbine-type myself, though, to be honest. Not my style. I was a different kind of messed-up – I was the guy who was cutting his face with a steak knife in the bathroom, stabbing his wrists with a screwdriver in the bedroom. It wasn't an easy time for me, to be honest, and I was never able to talk about it until very recently. I've made my peace, though, and now I'm not shy at all (as you may be able to tell). It's a part of my past, not my present, but it is a large part of what made me the man I am today. I'm sensitive to victims, to the downtrodden, to those who suffer silently. It's a big reason why I'm going into journalism. These are stories that need to be told.

But, you say, I never wanted to go into school with a gun and waste my classmates. I was all about pulling a Jericho – I wanted to go into school and waste myself. That'll show 'em, I thought.

Hey, I was fifteen. What do you want? At least I wasn't into Dave Matthews like everyone else. That would have been really unfortunate.

Still, through a combination of different things – good upbringing, good friends, the fact that (in case you were wondering) cutting your wrists with a screwdriver hurts like a motherf*ck – I managed to never do it and go on to become the debonair bald colossus man I am today.

That doesn't mean I've forgotten, though. That doesn't mean I don't feel for Amy Bowman. Because I remember what it's like to be young and scared and incredibly pissed off and consumed by the need to lash out. That I lashed out at myself and she planned to lash out at others is simply a personal character issue.

Something has to be done, of course. These kids can't get a bunch of guns and plan to waste a bunch of teachers and other kids with no consequence. That jocks have always gotten to waste other kids with no consequence is what keeps that practice alive, after all, and we'd like to learn from that lesson.

Did I say that out loud? Silly me.

One great tragedy was averted with their arrest, and I applaud the authorities for it, but I say that committing them to a penitentiary would be another great tragedy and waste of life. They need help and someone to talk to, not bars.

Still, I can't help but thinking that throwing the book at Amy Bowman, Eric McKeehan, Michael McKeehan and Steven Jones would be a terrible waste of life. They were caught in time. No one died. No one was even hurt. They are being charged with conspiracy and possession – no actual harmful actions. The cops say they believe that they would have gone through with it if they hadn't been caught, but who can know?

I am, of course, biased. If intent, thought, and possession is enough to put kids in jail and cops could read minds, I'd probably still be serving out my sentence from high school. (I intended to do harm, thought about it obsessively, and there was definitely no lack of steak knives in my silverware drawer.) I look at me now, though. I have a great life. I'm a well-adjusted member of society. I drink in bars with friends, live in a nice apartment, enjoy the company of a wonderful girlfriend, get good grades, and appear to have a bright future in front of me. I figured me out and put myself together, and I shudder sometimes because I know just how close I sometimes came in my younger days to throwing all that away before I even knew I could have it.

And without Amy Bowman's conscience and resultant warning, many many people could be dead right now.

This is a chance to get some messed-up kids the counseling they need. Don't thaw these four in jail, especially not the one who may have saved many by her desire to save one. They must be punished, but it can't be not seeing the light of day until middle age. One great tragedy was averted with their arrest, and I applaud the authorities for it, but I say that committing them to a penitentiary would be another great tragedy and waste of life. They need help and someone to talk to, not bars.

Who knows what Amy Bowman or the others could become? They almost made the mistake of throwing it all away; let's not make the mistake of completing the job for them.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit to Ed/Op anytime at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com or top by our office in the Campus Center Basement. Just do it, because "we're cool like the otherside of a pillow."

Letter to the Editor:
In Response to "The Afghanistan Situation"

Dear Editor:

This is an open letter to Yousef Munayyer as well as anyone who read his article ("The Afghanistan Situation," Nov. 14). I'd like to go over some of the points in his column, as I found most of them to be either ridiculous or just plain un-informed. First, he asserts that Americans can't know what oppression really means. What am I supposed to tell my grandparents, who had to live in fear of Hitler and Nazi Germany finding out they were Jewish? What would they know about oppression? How about the Japanese-Americans during the same time period who were forced into internment camps? They wouldn't know about being oppressed, either, I guess. Maybe any African-American who was alive during the Civil Rights movement could tell you a little about oppression. But maybe that doesn't count either.

Munayyer's second paragraph is very unclear. He says we use our own moral standards instead of laws when we govern our country and others. Obeying the laws instead of our morals? I would imagine it's fairly against the law to hijack an airplane in U.S. airspace (and according to the FAA, it is in fact against the law to hijack the aircraft). Then we can get into the fact that the airplanes were crashed, deliberately, into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. What do you think the terrorists were trying to accomplish? Do you think they were trying to open the windows in the buildings so the people could get some fresh air? Of course not. They were trying to murder people. This means murder in the first degree in any American court (pre-meditated murder). Right off the bat, the people who enacted the terrorism are guilty under U.S. law.

Moving down a little farther, Munayyer questions why we don't condemn the Wahabi movement in Saudi Arabia. The simple reason is the fact that they are not harboring Osama bin Laden. The Taliban has reputedly been oppressive for several years, and I don't remember us trying to topple their government at any point after we put them into power (Remember that the U.S. gave Osama and his Taliban government weapons to fight Russia when Russia invaded and helped them to take over the country).

Munayyer begins to ask what we're going to do next, now that Kabul and Jalalabad have fallen to the Northern Alliance. I believe the general idea is that we are still going to try to find Osama bin Laden and any other members of Al Qaeda and bring them to justice.

The assertion that nothing we've done so far in Afghanistan has had any of the desired effects is far-fetched. We, according to all published reports (including those in The Times in the U.K. as well as several other international papers) are closing in on not only bin Laden, but also many of his followers (i.e. Al Qaeda). The idea that we have no proof of bin Laden's involvement in the attacks is ludicrous. He released, through his own personal television network, a video in which he repeatedly claimed responsibility for the attacks.

Beyond that, he has openly accepted responsibility, along with Al Qaeda, for the first World Trade Center bombings a few years ago, the bombing of the embassy in Kenya and the bombing of the U.S.S. Cole off the coast of Yemen. The final statement is in particularly poor taste. It acknowledges none of the issues and instead makes an attack on the current President.

Munayyer's most ridiculous idea is that the U.S. does not play an active role in the international community. I guess we didn't do anything in Yugoslavia to try to stop the ethnic cleansing, and I guess that Somalia really doesn't need the food that our soldiers are delivering despite being shot at by the Somalian government. Remember the floods in Bangladesh that killed hundreds of thousands of people? The survivors there probably didn't appreciate the help of the Red Cross and Salvation Army. What about all of our work to try to help struggling economic nations in Asia and Africa? Regardless of whether you agree with the means we are using, you must agree that we are trying to help these people. To quote Michael Medved (WorldNetDaily): "but if Americans are supposed to feel guilty for their shortcomings, then what other nation should inspire them as an example of greater moral purity and selfless generosity? Sweden, which remained scrupulously neutral while the world battled the Nazis? Saudi Arabia, which practiced black slavery until 1962? China, which slaughtered more than 20 million of its own citizens in its Great Leap Forward and Cultural Revolutions?"

Munayyer's point on what should and what will happen in Afghanistan is another misinformed solution. Current efforts are including every major political group in Afghanistan (excluding of course the now on-the-run Taliban) to form a more democratic government.

In conclusion, while the way the U.S. has gone about this war may or may not be justified, the fact the bin Laden and Al Qaeda should be brought to justice is obvious. No one cried for Timothy McVeigh – I don't remember seeing any demonstrations or flag burnings to protest his execution. Why, after bin Laden killed over 5,000 of our citizens, are we suddenly so willing to let him walk away and possibly do it again? This is the fourth time he's attacked the United States.

Will we keep turning the other cheek until our head spins off?

Jesse Myers
UMass sophomore

Arts&Entertainment

VIDEO GAMES

XBox vs. Gamecube
What's the point?

By Ian Beck
Collegian Staff

I am addicted to videogames, and my girlfriend hates it. It's needless to say then, that with the launch of Microsoft's Xbox and Nintendo's Gamecube, I've been foaming at the mouth. Although I don't plan on purchasing either of the two in the near future (I'm quite content with my PS2), I enjoy trying to wax elite and justify a love of videogames, whether they are Sony, Nintendo, or Microsoft.

It has been a big year for all three companies, with Sony strategizing on how to compete with the new challengers, Nintendo readying itself for another round in the console wars, and Microsoft launching the second (the Atari Jaguar was first) U.S. designed gaming console in the history of the industry.

Here we are then, bamboozled about which direction to focus our attention and where to drop any of that sweet sweet money we're so reluctant to part with. First up, there is Nintendo, who've been making sure our thumbs stay strong since the eighties, with Mario, Link, and all the others. The Gamecube is their fourth contribution to the videogame industry, working hard to make up what the N64 failed to deliver. Standing next to Nintendo, then, is Microsoft who's trying to cast a shadow over Nintendo and relax what some might call Sony's stranglehold over consumers worldwide. Finally, Sony will keep pushing with the Ps2, trying hard to ignore Bill Gate's attempts to monopolize the console market. That out of the way, now would be a good time to take an in depth look at what's new and exciting with videogames.

The Xbox

Um.

This would be a good place to start off. "Uncle Moneybags-Gates" wasn't fooling around when he decided to participate in the console market. Not unlike your average PC, the Xbox is technically one, if not many, steps above the competition. As I read its specifications I shuddered thinking about the gaming possibilities. The Xbox has a 733 MHz Intel processor to contend with, almost double the Gamecube, and more than double the speed of the PS2. Additionally it has double the RAM (64 MB) of both the PS2 and Gamecube, thus giving it the potential to outlast other consoles and not be rendered obsolete four years from now.

In the graphics and sound department, Billy-bo didn't skimp either. The Xbox has an obscene 256 channels of sound, which is nice for you DVDphiles, as it also includes Dolby Digital support. Nvidia (the BMW of PC Graphic support) developed the Xbox's graphics card, which can handle nearly 10 times that of the Gamecube. The Xbox also has a 10/gigabit hard drive and broadband capabilities included with the basic system.

Um indeed.

The Gamecube

One of my friends referred to the Nintendo's newest star as "A girl that you have the hots for, and once you get with, is incomparable to all other girls for like a month, but then you get bored with her or find out that's not what you're looking for."

Ouch.

As far as specific specifications go, the Gamecube sports a 405 MHz Gekko processor specially developed by IBM, which happens to be faster than the PS2. It has 32 MB of RAM, and 64 channels of sound.

The big difference between the Xbox and Gamecube is the form of media that the Big N is using this time around. The Gamecube uses 1.5 gigabit optical disks not much bigger than the palm of your hand instead of a DVD drive. Hopefully this won't lead to the train wreck that ruined the N64, where the cartridges couldn't hold anywhere near as much information as Dreamcast and PSX CDs.

Nintendo has something hot going for it though. Just like our old pal Sega, Nintendo not only makes a great console but great games too. Every time I see Mario, I shed a tear thinking about days past glued to a TV set with friends, screaming about falling into a bottomless pit. When technically compared to the Xbox, the Gamecube is like me, a tall skinny kid who's got the moves, but not physique to talk to the ladies. All the consoles that have been developed in the past have been like the Gamecube as far as technology goes. When juxtaposed to all its ancestors, the Xbox is a technical mutant, with perverse muscles that as of now, it's just flexing to scare anyone who bought a Ps2 or Gamecube.

I don't see why you're advocating Nintendo when it seems like they're so underpowered.

Well kiddies, it's not the size of the ship that matters but the motion of the ocean. You know where I'm going? It doesn't matter how much power any console has when there aren't any games to play on it. What would be the point in spending $500 on a gaming console when a year or so from now developers are terrified of making a game for it because it costs too much money, is a pain in the ass to develop, or doesn't have a broad enough audience base?

If Nintendo gets its act together and starts luring more third-party developers to come make sweet videogame-love then it could be a force to be reckoned with. Microsoft is beginning to get some hot franchises of its own and yes, Bill Gates is looking to monopolize the market in case you were wondering (he's been bribing and buying off numerous publishers to make exclusive games for the Xbox). Nintendo, I mean even Atari had some hit games. Games like Missile Command, Centipede, Pong, and Pitfall are classics, never to be messed with. But no, you have to go and drive those games out with Sonic The Hedgehog. And that's another thing, you give up a goomba stompin, Italian plumber for a spinning Hedgehog. What's wrong with you people?

And then comes what I refer to as the "Dark Ages" of video games systems. Sega CD falls in this category as does Neo-Geo and Atari's laguar. People weren't ready to give up on Genesis or even Meganan to turn to new systems. The time wasn't right.

And then suddenly Playstation emerged forcing Nintendo to create the updated 64, which also called for the reincarnation of heroes like Mario and The Legend of Zelda. And just when you think it can't get any better the Playstation 2 is developed making everything else look like a drawing my preschooler, or so we were told. But lo-and behold, besides the ability to play a DVD, the games and systems weren't all that different.

So now we have the X-Box (one more way for Bill Gates to entrap us in a circle of power in which he controls, high above In his Obsidian Tower of Terror, better known as the Space Needle) and Nintendo's GameCube (because they need to make a system that uses CD's but still is ugly and cumbersome) premiering across the nation. If people really cared about their kids and minimizing their time in front of the TV they would not want to support these systems, instead we have mobs of angry parents fighting for another controller (priced at fifty dollars a pop, because it's more important than a driver's license) because little Jimmy will cry until his birthday if he doesn't get his video system.

I know people who have four video game systems. FOUR!! What's the point? Do you need four video game systems? Honestly, it's getting kind of ridiculous. Now if you excuse me, NBA Street is calling me.

Wanted: Solid Snake

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Sony has become a giant in the video game business not simply because of the quality of its games and systems, but also because of the ingenuity with which they formulate their sales strategies.

When Nintendo 64 came out back before the turn of the century, Sony had already established itself in the 32-bit plus market with Playstation. But Nintendo's new system was inevitably going to dominate the market around the time of its release. Sony attacked this problem with the release of highly anticipated titles with an even higher quality of game play, such as Final Fantasy VII.

Sony's strategy dealt a blow to the supposed avalanche of buyers and exposure Nintendo hoped to get from the release of its new system. And now that Nintendo is on the scene with Game Cube and Microsoft with X Box, Sony seems to be taking the same initiative.

This time the wrench in the engine of Sony's competition is Metal Gear Solid 2: Sons of Liberty for Playstation 2 (released last winter). The new Metal Gear game, which takes place sometime after the highly successful Playstation version, takes full advantage of the PS2's capabilities.

MGS 2 is just like controlling a character in a movie. It is one of those games that someone could enjoy watching their friend play for hours at time. The graphics are astounding, the soundtrack is straight off the action genre of the silver screen and the character interaction and artificial intelligence is as close to reality as a game could get at this point in technological evolution.

Of all the rich detail, smooth game play and capturing plot line this game has to offer, it unfortunately has one flaw it may never overcome. That fact is the detachment of the series' main character, Solid Snake, from the player.

It is almost like buying a Spider Man comic book and finding out the main character is Mary Jane Watson. Snake, who has become one of the most beloved characters in video game lore, this generation's Link and Samus, is only the player-character for the first couple hours of the game.

After completing a very short mission on a tanker near New York City, you are forced into the role of Raiden, a prima-donna character who couldn't hold a candle to the rough-edged Snake, who could make even his hideous, but lifelike, mullet look tough.

Any true Metal Gear fan would be horrified by this sudden change of events and character. It is easily one the worst video game surprises in recent history. But luckily for Sony, the quality of the game itself

Turn to SOLID, page 9

Dreamcast R.I.P.

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

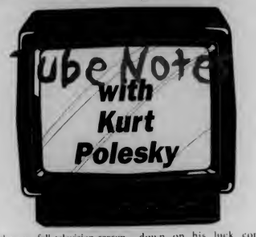
Dreamcast, we hardly knew ye. Unable to compete with the rampaging PS2, Sega's little white machine didn't have the hype or the support to make it into the next round of the console wars. What it did have was great games, though, so here are the best, well worth scrounging up at bargain basement prices.

P.S. Show some love for one not on the list, the recently released Fatal Fury: Mark of the Wolves, and prove that the recently departed SNK's often ambitious vision wasn't in vain.

Virtual On: Oratorio Tangram – While the controls on the DC could never be as responsive as the Immersive arcade sticks, VOOT remains the high watermark for mech combat on any platform. Widely copied, the game's character design, arena layouts and infallible camera positioning were rarely equaled. If only more programmers had the ambition on display here, there wouldn't be the need for endless Armored Core sequels.

Soul Calibur – Namco's culmination of the vital elements on display in both the Soul and Tekken series is still unrivaled in terms of 3D fighting games. Insanely deep and detailed gameplay matched by crisp and swift visuals would be sufficient, but the host of unlockable features and play modes elevated this to Namco's finest moment and notable cause for wondering why Ridge Racer V was so uninspiring.

Marvel Vs. Capcom 2 – It's hard to believe that Capcom's finest moment on the DC comes in the form of yet another installment of their frenetic, always over-the-top and unsinnable 2D Vs. series. But with MvC2, the creators fully embraced the madness of the 50+ characters and gave them vibrant 3D backgrounds to play on, along with crazy special moves and combo attacks. No wonder they didn't bother with a storyline.



GunBird 2/ Cannon Spike – The two products of Capcom's union with the infamous shooter-maker Psikyo are sturdy proof of the DC's commitment to the old-school gamers. GunBird 2's lighthearted approach on the top-down shooter is reminiscent of Pop 'N Twinbee, but not without the tried and true screen-filling bullet the sky attitude that was never as enjoyable in either of the GigaWing games as it was here. Cannon Spike is the kind of classic arcade shooter (think Smash TV on crack) that never gets made any more, so while some mean the game's 20 minute length, it still stands proudly among other 'short' games of the past where beating your score, and not the 'experience,' was the goal.

Virtua Tennis/ NFL 2K – While

Turn to R.I.P. page 9

prynt
http://www.prynt.com

Endless possibilities for mid-season replacements

With the new fall television season in full swing, certain shows are bound not to make it due to pitiful ratings. Because of that, the networks will have to unveil the shows that weren't quite good enough to make the original fall schedule: the midseason replacements.

Considering how poor some of the shows that made the original lineup were, one can only shudder to think what the replacements will be like. Here at Tube Notes we have come up with a list of potential premises (or pilots as they are called in the industry) for new shows. These shows will be guaranteed ratings grabbers, bound to change the face of television forever. In certain instances, the network that the show would theoretically work best on is included in the description (or log line as it is called in the biz). So here they are, the "Tube Notes" midseason replacements!

-Al Gore and Ja Rule play roommates sharing a two-bedroom apartment in Northhampton. Gore plays a disgruntled Journalism Professor. Ja Rule a Wings delivery boy. Project is currently untitled.

-O.J Simpson plays a door-to-door knife salesman in this new "light comedy" on the WB.

-MTV's Swas replaces Dan Rather on the "CBS Evening News." News on when OutKast's new album drops and P-Diddy's new clothing line lead off each newscast.

-O-Town and Slipknot share a townhouse in San Francisco on the new season of "The Real World." Find out what happens when 5 pretty boys and 5 psychotic motherfkers stop being polite and start getting real. Surprising "hookups" and bonds occur down on his luck conservative blowhard who can't meet that special woman. He joins a mail-order wife club, and gets UMass Physics Professor Jeanne Traschen.

-Pamela Anderson stars in a new comedy where she plays a short order cook by day and stripper by night. Tentatively called "Fish Sandwich."

-Stifler from American Pie is mistakingly accepted into Amherst College on a technicality in this new Fox comedy.

-Abraham Lincoln, Cleo the Psychic, a Women's Studies Graduate Student, Cap'n Crunch and Bill Belichick star as roommates in this new madcap ensemble comedy set to air after "Friends" on NBC.

- Smart freshmen spend their days studying and nights playing Snood and looking at pornography on the Internet in this new drama from David E. Kelly entitled "Commonwealth College."

- Monty Mack plays a bootleg DVD salesman in the new comedy "Five Finger Discount."

-Hulk Hogan, and his sidekicks Afroman and Ralph Nader, fight crime and drive around in a really fast boat in the new action series "Thunder in Paradise 2."

-Maury Povich hosts the new game show "Are Those Real?" where contestants guess which member of the panel has fake boobs.

-Former wrestler Kamala decides to rush a fraternity upon entering college; in this as yet untitled UPN comedy.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian staff member

Queen of Pop exposed... sort of Madonna biography falls short

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

MADONNA
Andrew Morton
St. Martin's Press

"He couldn't possibly have the real story on me, because he never interviewed either myself or anyone that really knows me, so what's the point in publishing a book?"

That was Madonna last week in an interview speaking about author Andrew Morton's latest biography. Earlier this year, Morton promised the world a sensational read while writing the book on the world's most famous woman, promising to unravel the Madonna we never knew and discovering details of her early years.

Andrew Morton is of course one of the best-known biographers and famous for celebrity dish. He penned two hugely successful biographies on Princess Diana (Diana: Her True Story) and Monica Lewinsky (Monica's Story). Morton's "credibility" has come from the fact that he had direct access to his subjects in the books about Diana and Lewinsky. As Madonna makes clear in her admonition of the book, such is not the case in his latest book. In fact, nobody who actually knows much about Madonna was interviewed for the bio. Not family members, not close pals Rosie O'Donnell or Gwenyth Paltrow, nor even business associates such as long-time publicist Liz Rosenberg.

What more can be said about Madonna? After all, she is one of the most written about (and photographed) people in the world. I don't know what shreds of news are left to be leaked, shared or otherwise sold.

The depressing consequence of books like Madonna is that the tawdriness level is off the scale. It is without surprise that the book dribbles in repeated stories and diva deconstruction. Most of the quotes come from recycled interviews from magazines and TV appearances. There are few revelations, most of which are insubstantial and only lightly discussed. And since Madonna had absolutely nothing to do with the book, the reader is left wondering if any so-called "exclusives" are actually true. (Morton estimates that Madonna's worth is $300-600 million; talk about ballpark figures.)

The text of Madonna seems tired and tacky. As if we don't already know, Morton spends nearly the entire book trying to convince us that Madonna is in supreme control of her career but so often out of control in her love life. More information about Madonna can be learned by watching her spectacular Drowned World Tour, where revelations of her life are imbedded in the theatrics. At the age of five Madonna's mother died of breast cancer, leaving her, along with five brothers and sisters, alone. It was from these awful circumstances that Madonna had a burgeoning desire to become a superstar and to find a lover, yearned for the attention she never received when she was younger.

The highlights in Madonna are the wealth of unpublished photos and an occasional contribution from past lovers. Morton portrays the now Material Mom as an insecure manipulator so desperate for affection that she scared off some boyfriends, two-timed most of them and almost always made foolish choices.

Morton claims Madonna had two abortions: once with boyfriend Jellybean Benitez and the second during her relationship with Sean Penn. Both pregnancies were terminated because Madonna felt it would slow her career.

The tragic incident, according to Morton, that led Madonna to divorce Sean Penn occurred on the night of Dec. 29, 1988 when "Penn grabbed his wife, threw her down and sat on her, pinning her arms to the floor. In spite of her screams and tears he kept her like that for what she later told friends was about four hours." Any hope of reconciliation died and a month later they were divorced.

Vanilla Ice, one of Madonna's lovers in 1991, spoke candidly about his tryst with Madonna. "I was digging her, but there was a desperate neediness about her an impatience to get married," he was quoted as saying. Then there's her flame with Michael Jackson in 1991 that, "one of her lovers" confessed: "When they touched he would start giggling, like a little boy. Nothing happened because he was giggling so much." Yet another "one of her former lovers" claims that her fling with JFK Jr. in 1987 failed because "he was just too nervous for them to click sexually."

In the fall of 1978, according to old college friend Linda Alaniz, Madonna was sexually assaulted at knifepoint on a tenement rooftop. Morton recounts her horrific incident.

"When they reached the rooftop, the attacker forced Madonna at knifepoint to perform oral sex on him. Almost paralyzed with fear, she obeyed, without a word, her assailant left as abruptly as he had appeared leaving her alone in a state of utter shock."

Madonna is no longer eager to open up her heart to the public. The birth of her first child in 1996 softened her image. That iron armor she wears around is necessary protection for prying paparazzi that snap photos and look for the dirtiest details at any expense. Unlike her wedding to Penn in 1987, her wedding to British film director Guy Ritchie last year was a heavily guarded affair; one in which the thousands of photographers who descended on Dornoch Cathedral (in Scotland) have yet to see a single photo materialize from the event.

In the end, Madonna only justifies that only an autobiography by the star herself (or at least a biography in which she may have a heavy hand in) would provide a close look into her mind. The pent up emotions and wild antics of a media starved soul and why she ultimately decided to use both her sexuality and her social and sexual codes as connecting with her audience may then finally be revealed.

COURTESY OF JEAN-BAPTISTE MONDINO

Madonna's new biography doesn't come close to being the final chapter on the chameleonic artist.

GIVE HOUSING SERVICES A PIECE OF YOUR MIND!

Your thoughts about on-campus housing might just get you one of 15 gift certificates!

Housing Services needs to have input from students as we plan for the future. We want to know what you think, and we're willing to pay for it! Fifteen survey respondents will receive a $100, $50 or $25 gift certificate at one of the following places:

Media Play, Barnes & Noble, Amazon.com, Sugar Jones, Antonio's, Northampton Bowl, University Store, Pinocchio's or Judie's

Fill out our quick survey at http://www.housing.umass.edu/housing_survey/.

It will only take a few minutes of your time, AND YOU COULD WIN BIG!

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House presents the exhibit "Echoes of the Caged Bird" artwork by Lena Shaw in watercolor, acrylic, and oil paint on canvas. The show will go from December 3 to the 7 with an opening reception on December 3 from 5-7 p.m. The Gallery is open on Monday and Tuesday from 1 to 7 p.m. and Wednesday and Friday 1 to 5 p.m.

UMASS – The Hampden Gallery will be exhibiting Robert Taplin's work Jupiter through December 6 and a closing reception on Sunday, December 2 from 2-5 p.m. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday noon to 6 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

UMASS – The University Gallery is inviting the community to explore violence in society and the possible affect that this spring's exhibit entitled "The Culture of Violence." The Coffee and chat will occur on Tuesday, December 4 at 7:30 p.m. at the University Gallery. For more information call 413-545-5670.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – Photo artist Anne Ross will be exhibiting Digital Photography in an exhibit called "A Space Odyssey 2001." Already an accomplished color photographer, Ross believes that the endless possibilities involved with computer manipulation are "a natural transition." Her show will be at the Smith College Alumnae House Gallery through January 12, 2002. The gallery hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday – Friday.

NORTHAMPTON – A collection called "Virtual Tea Party" will be on display and for sale at PINCH in Northampton. The pieces are designed and produced by American Studio Artists in ceramics, [illegible]

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – New WORLD Theater presents poet and actress Mariposa in her one-woman coming-of-age work DiaspoRicanDementia, which will make its Pioneer Valley here at UMass. It explores the intersection of theater with performance poetry, spoken word, and hip-hop culture. The show will be on Thursday, December 6 at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. It costs $10 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The Student Society for New Works will present its first project, Wrench: An Original Jazz Musical. It is the creation of Crescent Productions Company, a non-profit collaboration of UMass writers and designers. The performance will be in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, December 13 at 8 p.m. The show is free to the public.

UMASS – The UMass department of Music and Dance presents an evening of contemporary jazz, which will feature the work of composers Joe Henderson, Bobby McFerrin and Paul Simon. Along with ensemble pieces, vocal jazz majors will perform solos for the audience. It will take place in Bezanson Recital Hall on Monday, December 10 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public, $4 for students, elders and children under 18. For tickets call 413-545-2511.

UMASS – Fifty high school students from across Massachusetts and New Hampshire will arrive at the Fine Art Center Concert Hall for a tribute to the twentieth century music for winds. The event will occur on Saturday, December 16 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for students, elders and children under 18.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Jacques Thibaud String Trio, a distinguished contemporary chamber ensemble will play selections from memory by Schubert and Shoenberg. They will perform in the Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College on Monday, December 3 at 8 p.m. Tickets cost $20 for general admission, $16 for seniors and $5 for students.

AMHERST – The Women's Choir will perform Love Cantata a new piece of Roman Yakub in memory of the September 11 attacks, focusing in on "faith, hope and love." Yakub is an UMass graduate majoring in composition from 1996. It will be performed at the First Congregational Church in Amherst on Thursday, December 6 at 8 p.m. and is free to the public, but donations are welcome.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Jill Ker Conway will read from her book, A Woman's Education, a memoir about her time at Smith College. The event will take place in Wright Hall Auditorium on Friday, November 30 at 8 p.m. The event is free and all are welcome.

AMHERST – Associate Professor of English at UMass Amherst, Laura Doyle will be at Food For Thought Books on Wednesday, December 12 at 7 p.m. The book Bodies of Resistance: New Phenomenologies of Politics, Agency and Culture was edited by Asst. Prof. Doyle and looks at the intersections between the physical world and the way it exists through bodies.

AMHERST – Author Becky Thompson will read and sign her new book A Promise and a Way of Life: White Antiracist Activism on Thursday, December 13 at 7 p.m. at Food For Thought Books.

AMHERST – Author Sonia Rivera-Valdes reads from her new book The Forbidden Stories of Marta Veneranda at Food For Thought Books. The book deals with the comforts and discomforts of bi-cultural co-habititation of Anglo and Latino Cultures in the form of a Latina women acting as a confessional for people. The event will take place on Tuesday, December 18 at 7 p.m.

AUDITIONS

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Theater Department will be holding auditions for two spring productions on December 2 and 3 from 7 to 10 p.m. The play Hot 'N' Throbbing, where "obscenity begins in the home," calls for 3 male roles, ages 15-40 and 3 women ages 15-40. The other play, The House of Bernarada Alba has over eleven roles available for women.

COURTESY OF KNOTH

Lifelike to a Tea

"A Virtual Tea Party: The Designer Collection" is on display at PInch on Main Street in Northampton.

COURTESY OF NEW WORLD THEATER

Discovering Identities

Poet and actress Mariposa will present DiaspoRicanDementia Thursday, December 6 in the Bowker Auditorium.

IN THESE TIMES OF ECONOMIC UNCERTAINTY, HAVING AN EDGE OVER YOUR COMPETITION IS EVEN MORE IMPORTANT!
HOW CAN YOU GET AN EDGE?

DO A CO-OP OR INTERNSHIP!

Check out some of the Employers looking for UMass Students!

Hamilton Sundstrand (Accounting, Finance and Economics Majors)

Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceuticals (Finance and Accounting Majors)

United Technologies (Mechanical Engineering, Management, Accounting, Finance & Op Management, Computer Science, Computer Systems Engineer and Electrical Engineering Majors)

BAE Systems (Computer Science, Computer Systems Engineer, Electrical Engineering, Industrial Engineenng and Mechanical Engineering Majors)

Reebok International Ltd. (Communication Majors)

Saks Fifth Avenue (Apparel Marketing and Management Majors)

Genzyme Corp. (Bachelor Degree w / Ind. Concen., Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, Biology, Chemical Engineering, Chemistry, Computer Science, Finance & Op Management, Microbiology and Marketing Majors)

John Hancock (Economics and Mathematics Majors)

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Mondays		Wednesdays
1:30 pm	114 Stockbridge Hall	1 p.m.	305 E LAB
3 pm	103 South College	3 pm	8 ISOM Building
		4 pm	204 Herter Hall
Tuesdays
11:30 am	211 Marston	Thursdays
2 pm	8 ISOM Building	3 pm	103 South College
5 pm	3 Bartlett Hall	4 pm	114 Stockbridge Hall
		Fridays
		11 am	122 Lederle Tower
		2 pm	122 Lederle Tower

For more information, call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265 or see our website www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

As cheerful as yellow snow

COURTESY OF DAVID LEWIS

Inked-out Bil Naked contributes to TRL's Christmas CD, a lump of coal in any self-respecting person's stocking.

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

VARIOUS ARTISTS
TRL CHRISTMAS
Atlantic

Ka-ching! Ah, the sweet sound of cash registers ringing. As Christmas continues to commercially spiral out of control, MTV decides to release an album full of cheesy Christmas songs by a bunch of so-so artists.

The little elves at MTV's flagship show, "TRL" decided to create a Christmas album full of the shows staple artists (and some not). For some time now, MTV's daily viewer-programmed show has been the barometer of who's hot at this very moment. The latest trendsetters sing holiday tunes about Christmas and the New Year, even though some of them may not be around by the time 2002 rolls around.

The first track and released single/video from MTV TRL Christmas is "Santa Baby (Gimme Gimme Gimme)" by Willa Ford. It should come as no surprise that the song sounds exactly like all of the others on the horribly putrid album she released this summer.

Then, of course, we mellow in 'N Sync's (did you really think you were going to escape them on this album?!) mushy ballad "I Don't Wanna Spend One More Christmas Without You." Another excuse for a track is box band LFO's "Red Letter Day" a band that continues to churn out useless teen pop crap with no end in sight.

Most of the tracks on this album are forgettable. Sugar Ray's "Little Saint Nick," Bif Naked's "I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus," and Little T and One Track Mike's "Snow Angel" leave absolutely no impression on the listener and border on being categorized as embarrassingly bad tracks.

But the album does have some highlights. Christina Aguilera's version

Turn to TRL page 9

Spy a solid entry in thriller tradition

COURTESY OF KEITH HAMSHERE

Brad Pitt (smooth) and Robert Redford (leathery) star in Spy Game.

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

SPY GAME
Starring Robert Redford and Brad Pitt. Directed by Tony Scott. Playing at CineMark 12

As a little child, one cannot stand anyone to whisper to someone else. Secrets are evil, because it excludes someone and children become most upset when that someone is them. So we grow up with this deep interest in finding out what we cannot or should not know and Hollywood capitalizes on this insatiable curiosity in the unknown.

The latest of Hollywood's flicks about the clandestine is Spy Game. The film is filled with spies and CIA intrigue, a common theme in the movie industry. However, Tony Scott's Spy Game is anything but generic. Scott, whose past director credits include Top Gun, Crimson Tide, and Enemy of the State has created a fantastic movie. From the very beginning, the movie holds ones interest despite the fact that the film is not what many would expect it to be.

Turn to GAME page 9

Amelie a whimsical, stylized vision

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

AMELIE
Directed by Jean-Pierre Jeunet
Starring Audrey Tautou
Playing at Academy of Music
In French, with English Subtitles

Audrey Tautou has big, expressive saucer eyes the color of hot coffee, and a smile that curls into whimsical mischief. In the winning new French film Amelie she plays the title role of a lonely dreamer who schemes and plots like a Gallic Jane Austen heroine, seeking to help everyone else find happiness. Tautou is an enchanting presence and she uses those eyes and that smile to lead us into empathizing with Amelie, the hopeless romantic.

Amelie's troubles stem from her childhood. Her father was a

Turn to AMELIE page9

Audrey Tautau stars in Amelie.

■ Game

continued from page 8

This surprise story line, which goes off the typical spy film path, is what makes the movie such a treat to watch. The story is original, witty and strong. The film, like the CIA, is on a need-to-know basis. So, one can't go much into the plot. The movie stars Robert Redford as CIA operative Nathan Muir, a man finishing up his last day before retirement. But his last day is more than he, or his bosses, bargained for when Muir's protegé Tom Bishop (Brad Pitt) is arrested for espionage in China. The rest of the film takes place in 24-hours, with an on screen clock popping up from time to time to keep us posted on how long its been.

The acting is excellent. Pitt excels as a dreamer turned international operative. He's tough and sweet at the same time. But Redford steals the film playing a craggly old agent who knows the ropes. The sneaky Muir makes the decisions of who wins, who loses and who lives. And you have no choice but to love him for it.

Yes, the film does tend to have some cheesy one-liners but that's to be expected in a spy flick. But the film is a brilliant piece of writing, acting and cinematography. The movie captures the despair of a Chinese prison and the horrors of a refugee camp right outside a war torn city.

The film is poignant about torture, especially during a time when our nation is struggling over government-sanctioned torture of foreign citizens to gain information about terrorist actions.

This movie is good. It's very good. And it knows that it's good. The film doesn't need to rely on nudity, shocking language or car chases to keep interest. It just goes with what its got and that's all it needs.

Don't come to the theater expecting scores of fast paced spy intrigue. If you do, you will be disappointed. There is intrigue abound, it's just smarter and more subtle.

The catch line to Spy Game's ad campaign is, "It's not how you play the game, it's how the game plays you." This movie will play you. And you'll love every minute of it.

■ r.i.p

continued from page 5

other sports games cram so many stats in your face that you're wondering if you pumped Bledsoe full of enough potassium for the game. Sega's sports line always focused on gameplay uber alles. Virtua Tennis was the hot game of summer 2000 simply because it was impossible to put down. The spot-on controls incorporated enough realism to make them appealing, but were more concerned with grab-and-go ease and the ability to develop strategies. The NFL2K series featured the same intuitive gameplay with enough stats to satisfy the hounds, but not placed prohibitively in the way of those who just wanted to run and gun. Yell all you want, it's better than Madden.

The Rest – Dreamcast had so many noble attempts at classic games that it's worth mentioning a couple, since you can get nearly all of them now for a 20 note. Jet Grind Radio controlled like an aneurysm, but the excellent urban level layouts and all-around wackiness of rival tagging gangs in Japan were too much to ignore. Sonic Adventure couldn't decide exactly what game it wanted to be (RPG, Action), but proved that with a more focused development team the next-generation answer to Mario 64 was just waiting to be unlocked (but never was).

■ Amelie

continued from page 8

distant doctor who only touched her during her monthly checkups (every time this happened her heart would speed up, leading her father to believe she had a weak heart). Her mother was a neurotic who died when a suicidal woman landed on her. She was home-schooled and raised without any friends.

Now at 23, she's lonely but hopeful, working as a waitress in a cafe in the Montmarte district of Paris. Then one night she finds something that changes her life.

Hidden in the wall of her bathroom in her tiny apartment, she discovers a small, rusty tin cigar box full of old toys and mementos. She decides to track down the owner of the box, now well in his fifties and give it back. If he's happy, she'll become a do-gooder; if not, well, it was an adventure. When the man sees the box he becomes incredibly moved and Amelie sets on her path to help others.

She plays matchmaker with a hypochondriac coworker and a grumpy regular, leads a blind man on a walking tour of the neighborhood describing the sights to him and exacts elaborate revenge on a cruel grocer who bullies his young employee. While she plans her complicated schemes, however, she remains timid of finding her own happiness.

Amelie finds a photo album full of torn photo booth pictures belonging to Nino (Matthieu Kassovitz) a porn shop employee and mutual dreamer. She sets in motion a plan to contact him without really meeting him, because she is much too scared. All the while she's watched over and counseled by the old man across the way, a painter with bones so fragile he's nicknamed the Glass Man.

Amelie was directed by Jean-Pierre Jeunet, whose previous films do not suggest he's capable of this film that's so full of magic and light. He was co-director on the acclaimed, but dark, films Delicattessan and City of Lost Children as well as Alien Resurrection, his only Hollywood film. Here is the complete opposite, a film bursting with joy, a feel-good film without the sticky grease of schmaltz. His vision of the City of Lights is airbrushed, golden, composed like a travel brochure. Every character is filled with life. Amelie is magical realism at it's best.

Jeunet directs with a sure hand. The movie is drenched in rich, buttery light and Jeunet handles his most whimsical, stylized moments with a delicacy that renders them endearing rather than clubfooted. At one point Amelie, stricken with sadness, literally dissolves in a torrent of tears. Jeunet makes believe this moment – we desperately want to hold her, telling everything will be okay. Tautou has that wonderful, expressive face is a bewitching actress; it's impossible to take your eyes off her.

The movie is already an international hit and award winner (sadly the film was forbidden to compete at Cannes this year, probably because snooty organizers were turned off by the fact it wasn't another morose, woebegone drama). Americans are bound to fall in love with this gamine princess. Amelie is a movie that radiates so much beauty and magic, heart and soul that it deserves to be our next foreign hit.

COURTESY OF KEITH HAMSHERE

Spy Game begs the question: when is enough when piling on the superhunks?

■ XBox

continued from page 5

ing out developers into Xbox exclusivity). Each system has some tight games now or in development, and as far as I can tell the majority of launch titles leave a lot to be desired excluding one or two "must-have games for each system."

The Xbox definitely leaves nothing out as far as its hardware goes, but if it doesn't have any games, then there's no point in such extravagance. The Gamecube has potential to wreck the way Dreamcast and the N64 did, but Nintendo is interested in changing their cutesy image. If I were you I'd grab myself a PS2 and a copy of Grand Theft Auto 3 or Metal Gear Solid 2 and wonder if Bill Gates is trying to compensate for something with so much power behind the Xbox.

■ Solid

continued from page 5

is so high, gamers who are able to stomach Raiden will enjoy a truly beautiful game.

In that same sense, Sony and MGS 2 will likely succeed in stealing some thunder from the release of the two new systems. The fact that the X Box and Game Cube will go toe to toe with each other this Christmas season, will also aid in PS2's cause.

Just in case though, Sony has planned the release of 100-150 new games in the next few months. The PS One, as it is now called, survived what was supposed to be a Nintendo dominated market when 64 came out. In fact the Playstation actually turned out to be a better system, what with their huge edge in sports titles. Now there is no reason, with a year to prepare and hundreds of games at hand, to think that the PS2 and Sony will not emerge victorious once again.

■ TRL

continued from page 8

of the classic song "Angels We Have Heard on High" rises above the others not only because of Aguilera's multi-octave vocals but also due to the lyrics that are more sensible than most of the cuts. A gospel choir backing her up doesn't hurt the song either. TLC takes us on a joyful "Sleigh Ride" singing "giddy up, giddy up, giddy up and away we go in winter wonderland/ Hope we ride in the snow." If these tracks are any indication, new albums from both Aguilera and TLC will help them have a Happy New Year.

An RTP remix of P.O.D.'s hit "Rock the Party" is a hot track, but has nothing to do with Christmas. Angela Via, a cross between Christina Aguilera and Jessica Simpson, sings a song titled "Christmas Wish" even though this song also lacks a Christmas message. Via's only claim to fame so far has been through her additions on the Pokemon soundtracks.

Smash Mouth lends a good original song to the compilation called "Better Do It Right." The lyrics, which consist of lines such as "If I'm gonna do wrong/ I'm gonna do it right," may not be completely appropriate for this time of year but there's no denying we all need a little scrooge spirit during the season. Blink-182 offers a blast of frigid air on the anti-Christmas song, "I Won't Be Home for Christmas." "It's Christmas time again/ It's time to be nice to the people you can't stand all year...You people scare me" offers a cynically realistic view on Christmas.

We also have funnyman Jimmy Fallon who contributes the track "Snowball" about a snowball fight towards the end of the album. The song is nothing special, but at least offers a respite from the dizzying cheese leading up to the cut.

Simple Plan's "My Christmas List" earns a few laugh for its amusing lyrics which consist of "I want a lifetime supply of Skittles and Slurpies and Eskimo pies...just bring me things that I don't need" and "I want a girl in bed that knows what to do/ A Playstation 2/ I want a shopping spree in New York City."

With a slew of studio and best-of albums hitting shelves, there really is no need to pick up this latest album. If you are trying to get into the Christmas spirit you're better off picking up classic tunes, not these hokey-pokey songs from artists you'll never

17. Office XP is now available at almost 70% off, for only $149.
You buy it because:

A) It can help students stay ahead in school..... ☐
B) It comes with full versions of Microsoft® Word, Excel, Outlook®, and PowerPoint®..... ☐
C) It's a limited offer..... ☐
D) All of the above..... ☑

Microsoft® Office XP Standard for Students and Teachers is now available at a special low price. With all the tools to help students get more done, faster and easier. It's a no-brainer. Buy it today at one of the retailers below.

microsoft.com/office/forstudents

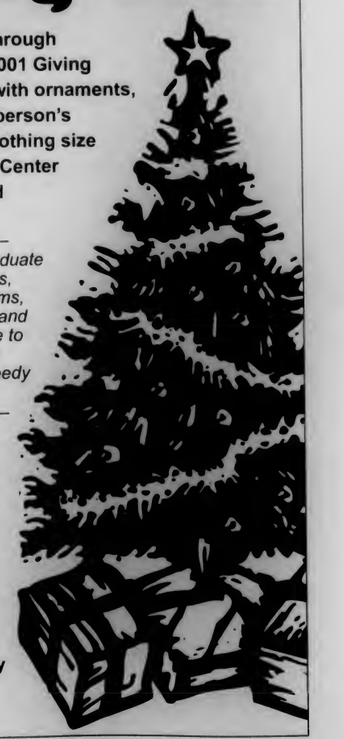
Microsoft

Office DEPOT COMPUSA CITY Fry's STAPLES BEST BUY
OfficeMax TARGET GameStop MICRO CENTER

* Reseller prices may vary. To use this product you must be a Qualified Educational User (QEU). See product box for details. Good in the United States only, while supplies last. Limited time offer. Not for business or commercial use. © 2001 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved. Microsoft, Office, PowerPoint and the Office logo are either registered trademarks or trademarks of Microsoft Corporation in the United States and/or other countries. The names and logos of actual companies and products mentioned herein may be the trademarks of their respective owners.

The Newman Center invites you to Participate in our annual

Giving Tree



From December 1st through December 14th, our 2001 Giving Tree will be adorned with ornaments, each baring a young person's first name, age and clothing size given to the Newman Center by local churches and social agencies.

Undergraduate and graduate students, fraternities, sororities, sports teams, offices, departments and families are welcome to take an ornament and give a gift to a needy young person.

The Giving Tree is located in the Chapel of the Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St., Amherst

Please drop off gifts no later than Sunday, December 16, 2001

Call or stop by with any questions 413-549-0300 X36

EVERY MON
$4.95 All-You-Can-Eat buffet after every hoop and hockey game

EVERY TUES
Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes

BEER
12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts

THE HARP IRISH PUB

OCMP accepted
All Credit Cards Accepted
Full Menu
From Burgers to Lobster
Never a Cover
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 548-6900

THURS. 11/29
Early Show: 8:30 - 10:30 The Lonesome Brothers (Valley Legends)
Late Show: 10:30 - close I-Ganic Sound System (roots, reggae & dub)

SAT. 12/1
THE EQUALITES (SKA / R&B)

"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

You earn one, two, or three credits during January Winter Break.

CIS 125-1	Internet Literacy, 1 cr, weekdays, Jan. 7-11
DAN 101-1	Introduction to Dance, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan. 3-23
ENG 101-1	English Comp. I: Expository Writing, 3 cr, weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
ENG 112-1	English Comp. II: Exploring Literature, 3 cr, weekdays, 8-11:50 a.m., Jan 3-23
HIS 105-10	History of the American People to 1865, Saturday & Sunday, 12:30-6 p.m.
MAT 142-1	Mathematical Modeling, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23 and Feb 8-10
PSY 101-1	Principles of Psychology, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23
SPA 111-1	Spanish Skills Practice I, 2 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPA 112-1	Spanish Skills Practice II, 2 cr, weekdays, 9-11:50 a.m., Jan 8-18
SPE 101-1	Oral Communication: Public Speaking, 3 cr, weekdays, 9-12 noon, Jan 3-23

Registration is now in progress through January 2, 2002
Call (413) 775-1803 for more information. Visit our website: www.gcc.mass.edu

GREENFIELD Community College

The Rossman Alumni Career Forum Presents...

THE ALANA JOB FAIR
— CAREER WORKSHOPS —

DATE: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 2001
TIME: 10 AM- 3AM
PLACE: MEMORIAL HALL

Planned Acivities:

- Free Continental Breakfast and Lunch
- Interview and Dress for Succes Workshops
- Alumni Panel Discussions
- Drawing for a dress suit from Filene's

Sponsored by Hispanic Collegiate Program (HCP), Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBS), Minority in Management Education Services (MMES), Minority Engineering Program (MEP), United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC), Multicultural Graduate Support Services (MGSS) and the Computer Center Network (CCN)

UMass heads to Final Four; No. 1 Stanford up first

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It all comes down to two days in the place where it never rains.

Of course, ask Massachusetts men's water polo coach Russ Yarworth, and he'll say that it's all about one day – Saturday, when the Minutemen take on the Stanford Cardinal in the semifinal round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament.

The Maroon and White earned a spot in the Final Four after defeating Queens College 8-4 at the NCAA Eastern Championship. It will be joining Stanford, the University of California Los Angeles, and Loyola Marymount University.

The Minutemen, however, face a tough challenge in the Cardinal, which has been at or around the No. 1 ranking in the country throughout the fall, and is playing in its home pool at the Avery Aquatic Center in Palo Alto, Calif. Stanford. Host of the tournament, Stanford is also eight-time National Champion, and boasts, who Yarworth calls "the best player in the country" in Tony Azevedo (64 Goals), as well as a near perfect record in the regular season (20-1 Overall, 8-0 Mountain Pacific Sports Federation).

However, Yarworth does not see Stanford as an unconquerable challenge.

"A Stanford upset is definitely not something we can't do" Yarworth said. "They'll be revved up, but so will we."

UMass, which went 20-3 overall in the regular season, is in the championship for the second time in three years. The Minutemen garnered third place honors in 1999, though they missed the tournament last year. The 1999 team also featured many of the names who appear on the roster headed to Palo Alto. This is a big advantage for Umass.

"Most of the [current] playing rotation was there in '99", said Yarworth, "and it's the third time [at the championships] for [seniors] Evan [Luiz], J.R. [VanderWall], and Carlos [Ramos]. Maybe the experience will work in our favor."

If UMass were to advance past the Cardinal, it would be the first team outside of California to reach the finals in the tournament's history.

However, in order to do so, the Minutemen will need to implement the game plan that has made them so successful throughout the regular season and early postseason. The gameplan has been a mix of great defense that has kept the otherwise brilliant VanderWall relatively idle in net, as well as pacing the game to UMass' liking.

However, all of that could change in the first quarter.

"I think that the first four or five minutes dictate everything else," Yarworth said.

Stanford has been a force throughout the fall, behind the incredible play of Azevedo, as well as a strong supporting cast, including junior goaltender Nick Ellis, who held an impressive 7.7 saves per game, and only 4.3 goals allowed per game. The Cardinal earned a spot in the tournament by holding off the University of California at Berkeley in the MPSF final. After a valiant comeback by the Golden Bears, Stanford solidified the win on a Azevedo penalty shot with eight seconds left.

UCLA and Loyola-Marymount will also prove to be a very exciting contest. UCLA is two-time defending champion, after winning the 2000 National title over Cal-Berkeley. Loyola squeaked into the tournament, with a 14-13 regular season record. The Lions also boast a freshman star in Steve Lipinski, who netted 56 goals this season. UCLA will look to counter with freshman Brett Ormsby, who scored 38 this season, as well as six other swimmers who scored in double digits.

UCLA entered the tournament as the wild-card selection, as it did not win its conference tournament.

UMass had three players earn spots on the All-CWPA tournament team last week. Seniors Mike Foley (53 goals, 11 assists) and Ramos (28 goals, 47 assists) were named to the second team, and senior Greg Trayer (49 goals, 18 assists) was named to the first team. Trayer was also named the Most Valuable Player of the Eastern Championships.

"I think [having three named to the team] is a pretty good indication that we are a real team. You can't pick out a star."

While the experienced seniors will be in the spotlight this weekend, the bench is not to be ignored. The Minutemen have plenty of young talent, with freshmen Adam Zobler (18 goals) and Nick Koenemann (17 goals), as well as sophomore Tim Craycraft (14 goals) and juniors Chad Arnold (23 goals, 21 assists), Ricardo Puig (19 goals), and Justin Houck (24 goals, 26 assists), who have all seen plenty of pool time this season.

"Our strength is that we're interchangeable," Yarworth said.

For now, though, the Minutemen have their eyes set on a goal that would make all sort's of waves in a sport that has been absolutely dominated by teams that play in the western part of the country.

"Why not us?" Yarworth said. "You never expect [to win the championship], but you enjoy it and appreciate making it there."

UMass men's water polo coach Russ Yarworth (middle) and his team are two wins away from the national title.

WWW.dailycollegian.COM
www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.com
WWW.dailycollegian.COM
www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.com

ZANNA has it...
Sweater Dusters

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERST'S HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.
TUESDAY KARAOKE HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJ SOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES
FRIDAY GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs HUSH, SUMI AND BON BONS
SATURDAY HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY LIVE JAZZ
COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-8, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 8, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

Your Ticket To CHINA
Internship Program in Shenzhen, China
Spend a year teaching English conversation in a school in Shenzhen, China's fast-growing economic miracle adjacent to Hong Kong. This bustling city of four million offers modern housing, a warm climate, beaches, and is only a half-hour train ride to Hong Kong.
DESCRIPTION OF THE PROGRAM
Teach English speaking and listening skills in a Shenzhen school, and learn Mandarin Chinese. Each semester you earn 6 credits from the University of Memphis (transferable to other universities): 3 credits in teaching English as a Foreign Language and 3 credits in Chinese. August 23, 2002 to June 30, 2003
WHAT YOU RECEIVE
• One round-trip ticket
• Free Faculty housing and some meals. Apartments have air-conditioning and TV. Married couples can be accommodated.
• Stipend 3,000 Yuan per month (approx. $360)
• Paid 3-week vacation at Chinese New Year in January/February
• Vacation travel bonus 4,000 Yuan (approx. $480) at the end of the program
For Detailed Information
Program Contact: Professor William O'Donnell, Univ. of Memphis
Phone: 901-678-4584 • Fax: 901-624-3198 or 678-2226
Email: chinapgm@memphis.edu or visit our website at: http://www.people.memphis.edu/~chinapgm/sponsored by The University of Memphis An Affirmative Action / Equal Opportunity University

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!

THURSDAY
40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
sco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
tro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

Steve Lappas has guided UMass to its first 3-0 start since 1996.

Proving with victory

New Lappas system is working in early stages

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD – In the press conference following the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 66-59 victory Nov. 24 over Marist, a reporter asked coach Steve Lappas what it would take to bring the UMass basketball program back to where it was in the years surrounding the Minutemen's 1996 Final Four run – coincidentally, the last time the Maroon and White began a season 3-0.

"You know, I don't want to be a jerk," said Lappas, the 19th boss in UMass hoop history. "But, you just have to win. It's that simple."

And Tuesday night in Springfield, the Minutemen did just that, knocking off previously undefeated Oregon 62-58 in front of 4,427 at the Civic Center. Its first win against a worthy opponent – according to several college hoop critics – UMass overcame an early 11-point deficit and held off the Ducks in the final seconds to continue its three-game season-opening undefeated streak.

"I was just very proud of the way our kids responded last night, playing against a very good team," said Lappas, whose squad held Oregon to 30 points below the Ducks' season average. "I told my assistants before the game, 'We'll win the game 74-71, 74-72...I didn't think that we could really keep them in the fifties, especially after the way the first eight minutes started."

Oregon scored 17 points in those first eight minutes, connecting three times from behind the arc, thanks in part to its high-octane style of play in transition. But UMass held strong throughout and with the help of some late aggressive low-post heroics by Micah Brand, survived the close encounter.

"The kids were really happy after the game; it was a big one for us," Lappas said. "Because as I told them, Marist and Arkansas-Little Rock, those are games you have to win in order to stay in the hunt and you have to beat teams like Oregon and N.C. State in order to get in to the NCAA Tournament."

The key to UMass' Duck defeat was a defensive switch Lappas made about nine minutes into the first half – switch from a 1-2-2 zone to a man-to-man defense. And the Ducks managed only 41 more points in the final 31 minutes of regulation.

"One of our goals was to stop their transition and we did a very good job on the defensive end," said Lappas, whose last Springfield Civic Center appearance came during a high school game back in the early 1980s when he was head coach at Manhattan College. A recruiting trip for Lappas, he was there to lure Derek Kellogg (not present Indian Pacer guard Travis Best who was also playing in that game) to his Jasper squad.

It was former UMass skipper John Calipari, however, who signed Kellogg to the Minutemen. And in the point man's final two seasons, UMass advanced to the Sweet 16 and Final 8, in that order.

In Calipari's eight seasons at the University, he took the Minutemen to the postseason seven times, seasons that ended twice in the NIT, and five times in the NCAA Tournament (second round or higher). And credit that success to a program that had players that believed in their system. The Minutemen of the Calipari era didn't question what their coach was doing – because they were winning – so they obeyed their mentor and had fun doing so.

The problem with Calipari successor James "Bruiser" Flint's five-year stint was that he failed to win big games. And when the collapses begin to add up, players begin to lose faith in the coach's blueprints, and success tends to decline.

It's for this reason that Tuesday's win over Oregon was so huge for UMass basketball nation. In Lappas' first big game, he came through. He put the correct personnel on the floor at the correct time, he made effective in-game changes, and proved to his new team that he could help them win big games.

Plus, it's still November.

"They have really responded well to what we're trying to do," said Lappas, whose second big test comes this Saturday, as UMass heads to Raleigh, N.C. to face off with 4-1 ACC foe North Carolina State. "And we've been on them pretty hard. It's good for them to see some positive results early. They have new coaches, and for them to see some positive results early can only help."

Micah Brand's power lay-up late in Tuesday's game against Oregon helped UMass to victory.

Castaway Lounge
Proudly presents another successful Amateur Night
Monday Decem... starting at 7 p...
3rd
phone# 413 665 8733

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Ticket & directions at www.cinemark.com

Please join us for prayer and reflection at our...
Advent Reconciliation Service
reflection by Sr Betty Broughan
7:00
*A gathering for those who will find it difficult to get through the holidays will follow at 8:30 PM with Sr. Carol Hebert in the Quigley Room
the NEWMAN CENTER

Work over Break
RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:
Boston 617-484-1788
North of Boston 978-777-2253
South of Boston 508-821-5591
New Hampshire 603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape 508-833-1145
Route 3 South 781-340-6355
Springfield 413-731-6910
Worcester 508-832-8757
Providence 508-336-5658
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

LIQUORS 44
OPEN SUNDAY 12-5
Everyday Pricing
Beers Wines Liquors
Domestic 1/2 Kegs
Coors Light ... $69*
Bud, Bud Light ... $69*
Michelob Reg & Light ... $69*
Natural Light & Ice ... $69
Rolling Rock ... $67
Micro Brew 1/2 Kegs
Berkshire Brewing Co. ... $99
Sierra Nevada Pale ... $112
Sam Adams Lager, Seasonal ... $112
Harpoon Lager, Seasonal ... $99
Killians Irish Red ... $77*
Dundee Honey Brown ... $89
Magic Hat #9 ... $109
Imported 1/2 Kegs
Heineken & Amstel ... $99
ALL BEER PLUS DEPOSIT
Lite & Genuine Draft 30-12oz cans + 2 FREE $17.49 +dep
Milwaukee's Best 30-12oz cans + 2 FREE $9.99 +dep
Busch Light & Busch 24-12oz bar bottles + 2.50 $9.49 +dep
Bass Ale 12pk bottles + 1.75 FREE $10.99 +dep
Killian's Irish Red 12pk bottles + 1.75 FREE $9.49 +dep
Natural Light & Ice 2-12pk cans + 2.50 $8.99 +dep
Woodbridge Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet 1.5lt $8.99
Beringer Founders' Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet 750ml $8.99
Walnut Crest Chardonnay, Merlot, Cabernet 1.5lt $7.99
Fontana Candida Pinot Grigio 1.5 Lt $9.99
Sutter Home White Zinfandel 1.5 Lt $6.99
Almaden 5lt bag in a box Chablis, Burgundy, Rhine, Golden Blush, White Grenache, Alinasco Red $6.99
Smirnoff Vodka 80, Orange, Raspberry, Vanilla, Citrus 750ml $9.99
Bacardi Rum Silver & Gold 1.75lt $17.99
Dewar's White Label Scotch 1.75lt $27.99
Bailey's Irish Cream 750ml $14.99
Seagram's 7 1.75lt $15.99
Gordon's Gin 1.75lt $13.99
at the STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
DON'T Drink & Drive

■ wbball

continued from page 13

turnovers on the season.

Despite its good guard play, though, the real strength of JML lies in its frontcourt. Nadine Morgan is the leader of an impressive group, as she has totaled 10.8 points to go along with a team-leading 6.0 rebounds per game.

"The key to our practice [yesterday] was making sure that we took care of the post players, and playing good solid defense," O'Brien said.

Despite its 1-3 record, defense is something that the Maroon and White has done well, and will need to continue doing well if it plans on knocking off the Dukes. So far on the year, UMass has held its opponents to a mere 60 points a contest, including the Clemson game in which the ACC powerhouse was held to just 51 in the Maroon and White's momentum building victory last Sunday.

On the other hand, JML has totaled an impressive 73.2 ppg, so shutting down the potent Duke attack could prove to be a challenge for the Minutewomen.

Offensively for the UMass, Jen Butler is leading the team with 14.5 points and 11 boards per contest, while Amber Sneed is also in double figures with 10.0 pp

The UMass women's hoop team has high hopes after defeating Clemson last weekend

■ Turner

continued from page 13

junior season. "He's one of our leaders, our veteran guys. But we need him to put the puck in the net as well."

With the shadow of his brother left stripped off the Pioneer Valley map, the scrawny Turner has stepped to the forefront and scored big goals for a growing program.

"I absolutely want to be around the puck when it matters the most," Turner exclaims. "I like putting the pressure on myself to put the puck in the net. I know I can come through in the clutch."

Turner has been a poster boy for the timely in the early goings of his third year in college hockey. In UMass' six wins this year, he has two game winning goals, one game tying tally and an assist on Mauldin's clincher against Northeastern.

"I pride myself on being out there in important situations," Turner says. "It's exciting knowing that coach has faith in me to get the job done."

Late in the second period of the season opener, with his inexperienced team clinging to a one-goal lead in what was supposed to be a cakewalk against Niagara, Turner personally took the UMass faithful off the edge of their seats.

The junior fearlessly rushed the crease and stuffed home a rebound in the face of two opposing defensemen and sprawled Eagle goaltender Ryan McNeil just three games later. Turner found himself on a game hinging power play, down one and on the road against heavily favored Providence. The Minutemen's silent leader rose to the challenge again with a brilliant tip in off a Tom Soderholm pass that knotted the game at two and gave UMass the momentum to take a 4-3 decision.

"Me and coach sat down before the season and he told me I was going to be an integral part of the team and the offense," Turner remembers. What Cahoon neglected to mention was that in Amherst, integral means irreplaceable.

Forget that Turner is the top scorer on the teams best and most consistent line. Note that his three power play goals lead a team that has made a cellar exiting jump in man up efficiency (12.8 percent in '00 to 22 percent in '01), while his plus-1 rating makes him one of only six players with a plus/minus in the white.

Now factor in that his line, with two freshmen at his side, has contributed for 12 goals (four GW's) and 21 points, as UMass has jumped to a steady 6-0 record.

Most impressive is Turner's ascension to success, when doubters were plentiful and expectations were absent.

"Timmy is an overachiever," Cahoon says. "He skates faster than he should and plays bigger than he is. It's all of product of his will and character."

Nobody ever expected him to be the big time goal-scorer that he is. And now that he has become the go-to-guy, the player who lights the lamp under pressure, so what? Anyone can score goals, but it takes a player of a different cut to lead.

Tim Turner fits the mold of leader – and that goal-scoring thing, he can do that to.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Tim Turner has two game-winning goals so far this year.

■ hockey

continued from page 13

One would expect many similarities between the young Minutemen and their counterparts from Chestnut Hill. However, according to Cahoon, despite the youth that BC has on its side, there is still a wealth of talent.

"As good as our young players have been for us and as much as a contribution as they've made, they probably didn't come in here as highly touted as the young players that went to BC, simply because they, along with a few other schools – the Michigan States, the North Dakotas, the BUs – have gotten the most visible, known athletes," he said. "We've got very good athletes, we're very happy with them – we think some of these kids as a diamond in the rough that were available, but they've got the most publicized and well-known athletes. I think in terms of the contributions that they're making, there's some similarity."

In order for the Minutemen to have a successful weekend, they will have to continue their success in the special teams. The UMass man advantage has been sizzling over the past five contests, converting at a 33 percent clip. Additionally, the shorthand unit has killed off 15 of its last 17 penalties.

That, along with the play on faceoffs, is the vital key for success for the Maroon and White this weekend.

"I think we're going to have to do a really good job with special teams and keep our penalties to a minimum," Cahoon said. "I think we're going to have to do a great job on faceoffs because they both run great faceoff plays, get a lot of scoring chances off the faceoffs, and we have to be really responsible and accountable in that regard."

However, history does not bode well for the Minutemen. They are just 2-22-2 all-time against Maine and a slightly better 4-21-1 against BC. In terms of UMass' history, Cahoon referred to the history he helped create at Princeton when he was head coach there.

"I always told our guys, 'Our history is now, we're making our history. Our history is what we're doing today and you're a part of it."

Faceoff for both games is set for 7 p.m.

Justice for the accused, but not the rape victim

By Christina Stephens
The Reveille (Louisiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. – Many people have fond memories of Friday night high school football games, especially in smaller towns where football is key and the players kings of the community.

But in Port Sulphur, a small industrial town in Louisiana's Plaquemines Parish, one unnamed 13-year-old girl never attends the games. You see, three of the football players were indicted 17 months ago on charges of raping her when she too attended Port Sulphur High School.

That hasn't stopped football in the town, however. Though the three boys and another, also accused in the rape, were indicted by a grand jury more than a year ago, they've yet to go to trial. And they still attend Port Sulphur High and play on its football team, which is battling its way through the state playoff seeking the 1-A championship title.

OPINION PIECE

And it is this quest that has left the victim's family wondering when the boys – and their daughter – will get their day in court. Their daughter hasn't been back to Port Sulphur High since the alleged March 25, 2000 rape. The boys' trial was delayed for the fourth time on Nov. 14.

The victim's mother recounted her family's struggle to the Times-Picayune in New Orleans last Wednesday. It's a story of pain and tragedy, not only caused by the rape, but also by the reaction of Port Sulfur officials and the community to the incident.

Many community members support the boys and attended the grand jury hearing, including other students, teachers and coaches. A preacher told people to pray for the boys, while less stood by the young victim. The family just wants some closure and the mother told the Picayune,"Whenever those boys quit playing, that's when they'll get on with it. This case proceeds only if they're out of the playoffs."

Port Sulphur officials disagree, saying the case is complex and citing that the district the case is being heard in only has two judges. Port Sulphur School Superintendent James Hoyle told the Picayune that because the boys haven't been convicted of the rape, they are still students and have the right to play football.

Which raises an interesting question. Is Port Sulphur manipulating the system, working overtime to ensure the rights of the accused, while ignoring the rights of the victim? The law guarantees the accused the right to a speedy trial, but neglects any mention of how long a victim must wait before his or her attacker goes to court.

How terrible it must be to wake up every morning and feel the lingering pain of a rape, knowing full well that those charged with raping you still attend your former high school, where they're considered stars because of how they play football?

It's amazing that this student came forward to report being raped, and she does not deserve to be tortured for more than a year while lawyers delay the trial.

No, we shouldn't immediately assume these boys are guilty. However, as the trial date for the football players gets pushed back and the team advances in the playoffs, it's no wonder people are questioning the motives of those delaying the trials.

Seventeen months is too long to wait for justice, both for the victim and her alleged attackers. Delaying a trial only hurts the victim's case, as her memories and those of other witnesses fade. Oftentimes, rape cases boil down to his word versus hers.

Statistics about rape are staggering. According to the Rape And Incest National Network, a person tthat's right, men can be raped, too) is sexually assaulted every two minutes in America. And a U.S. Justice Department survey released this February shows that only 5 percent of rape victims on college campuses choose to report the crime.

One way for law enforcement officials to encourage victims to report the crime and work to put their attacker in jail is to ensure that justice is served in a timely manner.

Hopefully, the case in Port Sulphur is the exception and not the rule. But according to RAINN statistics, only 28 percent of rapes are reported to police and only a 16.3 percent chance exists that the rapist will end up in prison.

Once RAINN factored in statistics of unreported rapes, it found that 19 out of 20 rapists walk free.

It's sad that so many people hold within them the secret pain of being sexually assaulted. It's even more disappointing that the justice system sometimes discourages many victims from even reporting the crime.

START FINISH
Collegian Sports.
We're a-maze-ing

UMass HOCKEY
FRIDAY NIGHT
THE MASS ATTACK
vs.
MAINE
FRIDAY
7:00 pm
Mullins Center
FREE STUDENT TICKETS!
For more information call 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS @ Mullins Center, Campus Center, Curry Hicks Cage

See page ten for men's water polo coverage.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Tim Turner's actions, such as his team leading three power play goals, speak louder than his words.

Silent turnaround

Junior Turner leads by scoring big, playing hard

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It's less than an hour before face off. Tim Turner is not pacing the maroon carpet of the UMass locker room, barking encouragement to his teammates. He's lacing up, preparing, focusing.

Just seconds before the Minutemen take to the 200x95 foot Mullins Center ice surface, Turner is not standing at the entrance, uttering motivational catch phrases. He is in line with his teammates, eyes fixed on the task.

Make no mistake, Tim Turner is a leader. But he leads in the corners, on the boards and in the slot, not in the locker room.

"I went to Timmy at the beginning of the year and told him to lead by example," says UMass coach Don "Toot" Cahoon. "He's not a 'ra-ra' guy and we don't need him to be that type of guy."

On a team that is unmatched in its youthful talent, Turner is the glue. He doesn't' wear a letter as a captain or assistant captain, but the badge of honor he brings into each practice and every physical or mental challenge he faces is enough to garner the respect of seven rookies who skate along side him up front.

"There is no question [the freshmen] respect the effort he puts in on a daily basis," Cahoon explains. "They see how he competes and how he earns his ice time."

Turner's determination and will have rubbed off on a particular pair of talented newcomers.

Six games into the season talent laden rookie Greg Mauldin was struggling to find the net, despite his firm place on one of the top two scoring units.

Instant cure: Cahoon drops Mauldin on a line with Turner and the junior ends up assisting on his understudy's first collegiate goal in a 4-2 win over Northeastern.

"[Tim] has been a good example for us," says Craig MacDonald, who completes the line with Mauldin and Turner. "He has really relaxed me and Greg. We know we can feed him the puck and he'll get it back to us. It's just made us more comfortable."

Mauldin and MacDonald have been the junior forward's most consistent linemates this year, if for no other reason than the trio's collective thirst for success and willingness to work for it.

"He never takes a second off, he's never taking a break. The guy just wants to win," MacDonald explains. "I know all the younger guys want to have a work ethic like that."

He isn't used to the role of mentor, but Turner is certainly familiar with the teacher-student relationship. For has first two years in the Pioneer Valley, he thrived (52 points in two seasons) on a line with his older brother Jeff, who showed him around the rink and around campus – now Tim hopes to do the same for his own pair of pupils.

"Having my brother here was a big advantage for me," Turner recalls. "He taught me a lot and I feel like I am [Mauldin and MacDonald's] big brother. I want to teach them some stuff and hopefully leave a lasting impression on them."

Turner didn't wait long to make an impression on the incoming class. He made his statement from day one – without saying a word.

"Since the day we got here you could tell he was one of the leaders, just how he carries himself on the ice," MacDonald recalls. "It's not what he says, its how he takes care of his business."

Day in and day out he sports the efficiency of a stockbroker. From analyzing game tape with his linemates to in-practice drills to pre game warm ups to his regular game shifts, Turner wears the same face of competitiveness.

"He's got a great will to compete," Cahoon says. "Timmy is a well conditioned and highly motivated kid."

Turner's ethic is the high water mark for the rest of the UMass frontline. His leadership among the forwards is silent yet unchallenged, but role model is not the only post he occupies for the Minutemen.

"We expect Timmy to score some big time goals for us this year," said Cahoon before game one of this. Turner's

Turn to TURNER, page 12

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior Tim Turner leads his team with 10 points and an unequaled work ethic.

Mass Attack up against recent history

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Four points. In the scheme of a season, that may not seem like a lot – two games among a slate of 29 for an entire season – but those two games can make all the difference in the world in a conference as both competitive as the Hockey East.

The Massachusetts hockey team (6-6-0 overall, 2-3-0 HE) will be faced with the task of picking up a couple points on the rest of its conference this weekend as it plays a pair of games against highly-touted rivals.

"Every point is a big point, and the points you don't get come back to bite you in the backside later in the year," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

The Minutemen face Maine (6-4-2, 2-1-0 HE) at the Mullins Center tomorrow night, and will travel across the state to face defending National Champion Boston College (7-4-1, 3-2-0) on Saturday. BC is tied for fourth place in the conference, while the Black Bears are knotted with the Minutemen for seventh.

"They're very different types of teams, although this year with Maine being a little bit more high-powered offensively and struggling a little bit more on the defensive side, they might have a more similar look than they've had in the recent past," Cahoon said.

Maine has had one of the most prolific offenses in the country this year, putting up 55 goals on the season, with 16 tallies in its three conference contests. Leading the way is the trio of senior Niko Dimitrakos, junior Tom Reimann and freshman Colin Shields. Shields, who hails from Glasgow, Scotland, has turned many heads around college hockey this year, as he is tied for the conference lead in goals, with 11.

"Maine's always been an outrageously disciplined defensive team complemented by really high skill people that were great in special teams," Cahoon said. "This year, they seem to be putting up big numbers offensively but giving up goals more readily and they're struggling a little bit with an inexperienced defense."

Nonetheless, the Black Bears will have to be at their sharpest if they want to torch the Minutemen. Mike Johnson has been stellar between the pipes as of late, as back-to-back shutouts have seen him keep the puck out of the net for the last 167:11, a feat earning him USCHO Defensive Player of the Week for the entirety of Division I.

As for the Eagles, they suffered major losses in the offseason, including six seniors and three underclassmen that elected to pursue professional careers. Where that left BC was with a slew of question marks on its roster.

Sophomores Ben Eaves and Tony Voce have provided one answer – stepping into the role of offensive leaders with utmost ease. Eaves and Voce are tied for third in the conference in scoring, putting up 18 points apiece. However, experience is not something that the Eagles have plenty of, as only six upperclassmen are on their roster.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 12

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Toni Soderholm has stepped up his physicality this year.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Katie Nelson will direct the Minutewoman offense today versus James Madison.

UMass inexperience a problem

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

James Madison is a very experienced team.

The last time the Massachusetts women's basketball team played a squad with more experience than itself, it was blown out by Holy Cross on opening day by a 68-42 score.

It was a contest in which the Minutewomen (1-3, 0-0 Atlantic 10) were outplayed in almost all facets of the game, and looked young compared to the veteran Crusaders.

This inexperience is something that worries coach Joanie O'Brien, going into tonight's 7 p.m. matchup with the Dukes in Virginia.

"Their strength is in their interior players and they have one excellent shooter (Allyson Keener)," said O'Brien about JMU. "They play a similar style to Holy Cross and we obviously struggled with that our first game of the year."

However, that is not to say that O'Brien is intimidated by the Dukes.

"We need to quit turning the ball over unforced," the eleventh year coach said. "And we need people making better decisions.

"I think we'll be ready to play, though," she added.

Thus far on the year, James Madison has posted a 3-1 record, with convincing wins over Stony Brook, East Tennessee State and Gardner-Webb. These three wins, along with a run to the WNIT semifinals a season ago, has kept the Dukes flying high despite the fact that the Dukes were destroyed by 40 points against Illinois in their one loss.

It is basically the same team returning for the 2001-02 campaign, as James Madison only lost a single player to graduation in the offseason.

"The team was very excited about the WNIT experience last year," JMU Head Coach Bud Childers said. "It was a very surprising ending for most of us and no one could have predicted the run we made through the WNIT. But when it was all over, every player indicated to us 'that was great, but we want to do this in the NCAA tournament next year'."

In its four games, Keener has been the main spoke in the Duke's offensive wheel. The veteran guard has posted 16.5 points per game, and has been the only significant outside threat for JMU.

Joining her in the backcourt is Jess Cichowicz, who has run the offense with great fluidity. The junior point guard has dished out an amazing 8.3 assists to go along with 7.3 points per contest. In addition, Cichowicz was taken good care of the ball, with a mere 1.2

Turn to WBBALL, page 12

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978.

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

AUTO FOR SALE

1985 Olds Calais New Tires 30 mpg Good Condition $700.00 O.B.O. 413-250-1826

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport 5 spd, 4x4, 25mpg. White SUV loaded 82,000 miles. 1 owner, NADA $7875 asking $6375. 549-4506

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS

Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, pagemaker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare: Handicapped experience, references, housework, car, 6/20hrs/wk. $10/hr 413-247-5800

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

SERVICES

Martin's Auto Saab & Volvo Martin's Auto Repair ASE Certified. Reasonable rates, friendly service. 323-6362

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURETOURS.COM

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

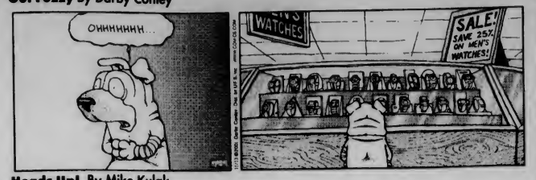
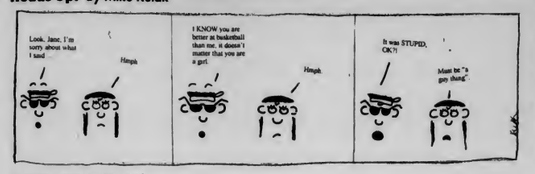
Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica from $389! Air, hotel, free meals, drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com



Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

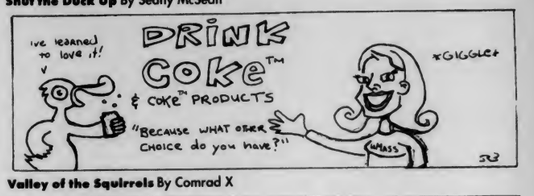
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



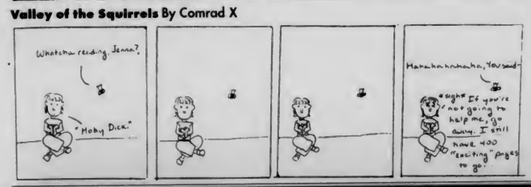
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

> "...one owes respect to the living; to the dead one owes only the truth"
>
> –Voltaire

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 42	HIGH: 54 LOW: 35	HIGH: 49 LOW: 25

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – An early start today will enable you to get more done – but much of that will be in a personal vein.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may have some trouble as the day opens gathering your forces. Later on, however, you're likely to enjoy more support than you need.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You mustn't fool yourself into thinking that you deserve anything today that you are not willing to work for in some way. Be realistic.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're anticipating something that isn't likely to transpire, but you may be missing signs of something that really is on the way.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're likely to get what you want today – and then some. You'll surely have your hands full on more than one occasion today. Prepare yourself!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're not likely to agree with many other people today about certain pivotal issues. Your singular point of view suits you well at this time.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A disagreement between friends is no reason for the relationship to an end. You can surely keep any threat from materializing at this time.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The only way you can show others exactly what you're after and what you expect is to show them. Your demonstration can be more than constructive.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be tempted to do something out of character today with the sole intent of attracting a new kind of attention. Think twice, however!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may feel as though you're "on the spot" today. Put yourself in someone else's shoes and things can be seen in a more balanced fashion.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may find yourself caught between two conflicting desires today – and neither one is your own! You can strive for a compromise and achieve it.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You would prefer to be left to your own devices today; you're not likely to tolerate anyone who keeps trying to "look over your shoulder."

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

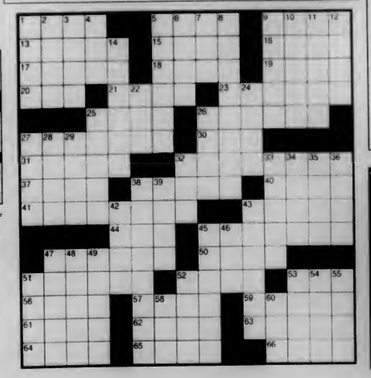
LUNCH
Beef Stroganoff
Honey garlic Chicken Wings
Veggie Chow Mein (vegan)

DINNER
Roast Turkey
BBQ Ribs (F, B, H)
Ginger Black Beans (vegan) (W)
Ratatouille (vegan)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
★
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!

Thurs	Karaoke w/ Cloud Nine Productions	$2 cover
Sat	Trailer Park Sweaty Funky Horns	$4 cover
Sun	Kaizen Quartet Jazz	No cover

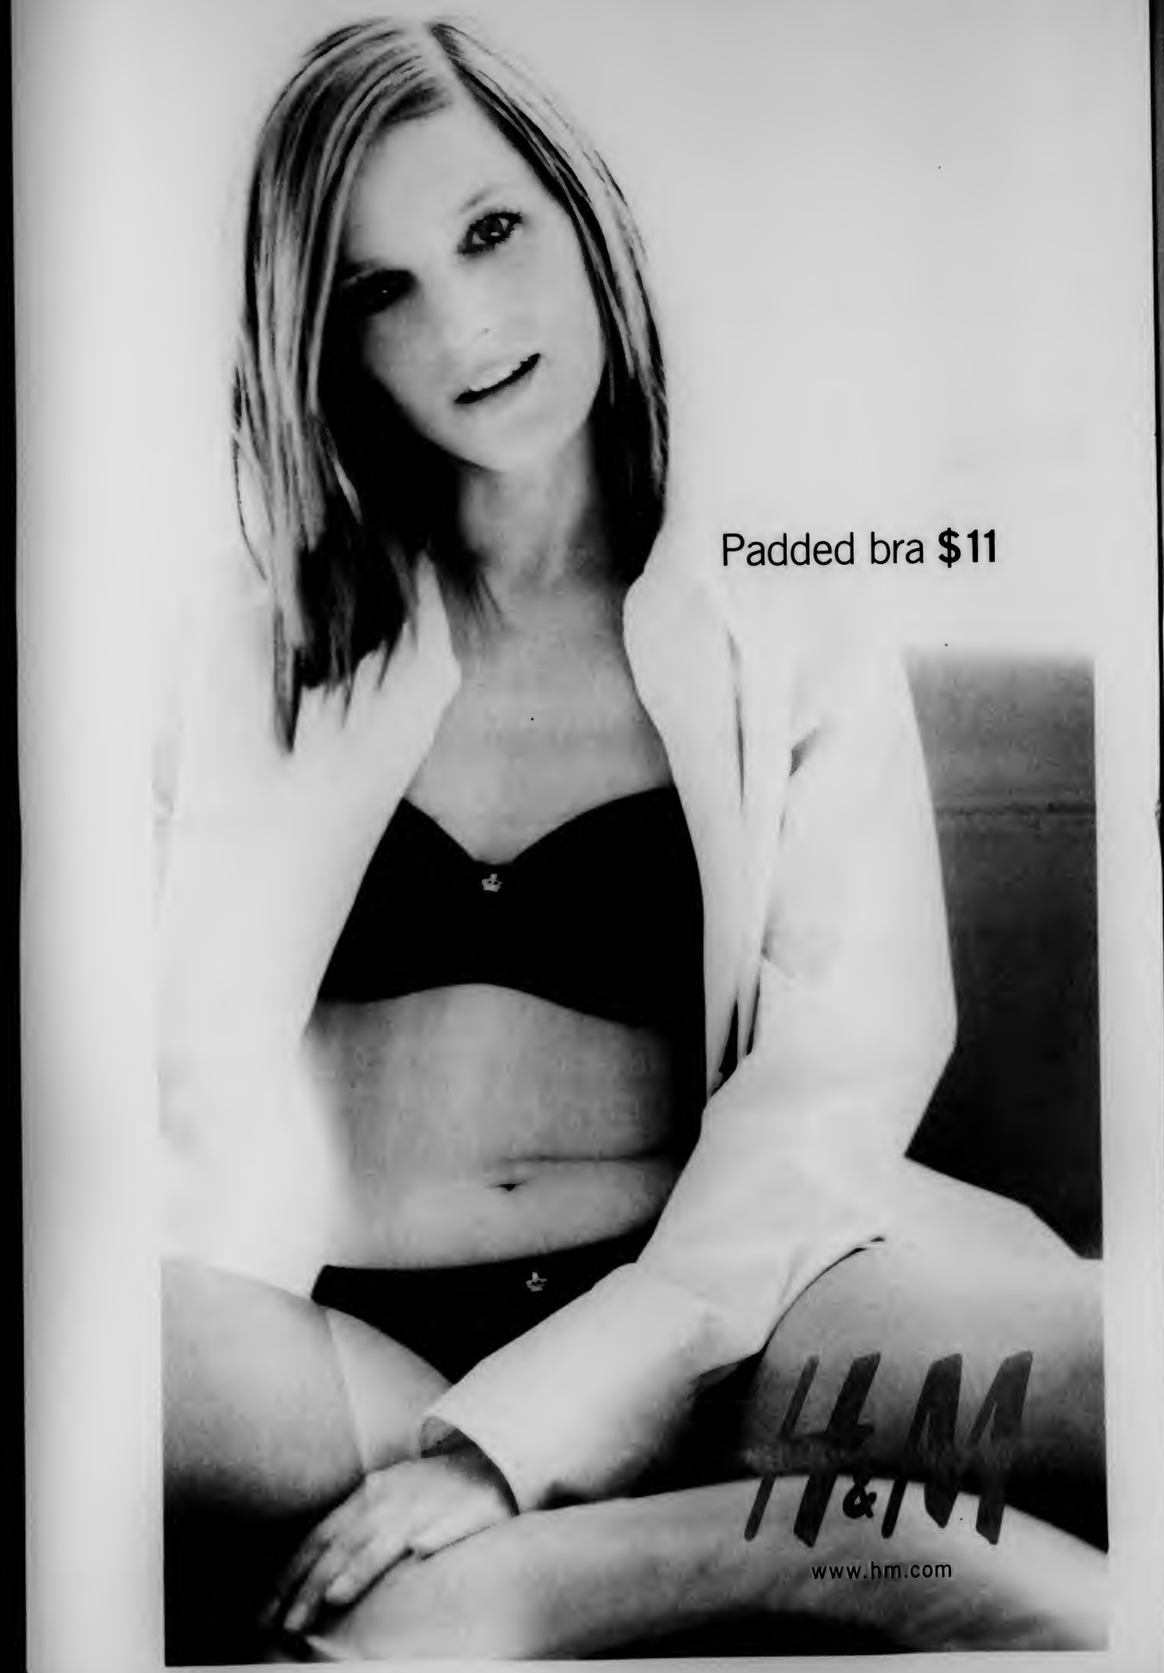
36 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst
413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Banter
5 Raggedy Ann
9 Mighty blow
13 Excuse
15 Nautical position
16 Antioch locale
17 Cobra lotion
18 Heart of the matter
19 Prospector's find
20 Plead
21 Comic-strip possum
23 Climbed
25 Bail
26 Worshipped
27 Party provisioner
30 Hold up
31 Century plant
32 Infants
37 Axiom
38 Song of joy
40 Knight's weapon
41 To the point
43 Conclusive
44 Half of zwei
45 Incomplete
47 Italian cheese
50 Hot-tub locales
51 Bring to mind
52 Consider
53 Stomach muscles
56 Store sign
57 Light brown
59 Diminutive
61 Senator Cranston
62 Tater
63 Saddle extra
64 Talking bird
65 Type of wrestling
66 Trial run

DOWN
1 Coffee, slang
2 Fiesta shouts
3 Plummet
4 Cinemax rival
5 Macbeth's weapon
6 Mishmash
7 "— Miserables"
8 Disappoints
9 — plexus
10 In one piece
11 Bailed out
12 Drove a nail obliquely
14 Polluted
22 Copper source
24 Baseballer Ty
25 Quay
26 Square footage
27 John Dickson —
28 Fit of shivering
29 Like a skyscraper
32 New Jersey cager
33 Skips past
34 Jaipur princess
35 Coll. sports org.
36 Bear's advice
38 Without woe
39 Livy's year
42 Young beef
43 Constitution drafter
45 Fake
46 Gorilla
47 Answer
48 "Jaws" setting
49 Food from heaven
51 Gallivant
52 Thump
53 Remote
54 Fortitude of food
55 Be impatient
58 Computer brain
60 Rim

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



Z	E	B	R	A		H	A	M	S		P	A	C	K
E	R	R	O	R		U	T	A	H		I	V	A	N
E	L	I	O	T		D	O	N	A		T	O	N	I
S	E	T	T	E	E		P	I	N	P	O	I	N	T
				M	D	S		A	G	E	N	D	A
V	A	R	N	I	S	H		M	A	S
A	U	T	O	S		O	N	E	A	L		S	H	H
N	E	E	D		H	A	I	T	I		P	L	E	A
E	L	S		R	A	L	P	H		U	S	U	R	Y
			G	E	L			E	M	P	I	R	E	S
		A	L	L	E	Y	S		L	A	B
F	R	E	E	F	A	L	L		O	R	A	C	L	E
L	I	M	A		R	E	A	L		A	C	H	E	D
I	S	O	N		D	E	N	T		I	R	E	N	E
P	E	N	S		S	P	E	D		D	E	M	O	N

12-14-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Tibora Girgycz-Blum
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	riki Alcid
Production Staff	Frankie DiMeglio, Mike Kulak

Who's "Da Fat Rat Wit Da Cheeze?" Arts knows ... Check us out.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The women's hoop team lost despite a hard fight. Check it out in Sports.

ARTS p. 5 SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 58 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, November 30, 2001

Free HIV testing available to students in preparation for World AIDS Day

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

A coalition of University of Massachusetts organizations sponsored free HIV testing in the Campus Center for students in preparation for World AIDS Day on Dec. 1.

Co-sponsors of the event included the Student Government Association, Pride Alliance, Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, Students Helping Area Reach-out Efforts (SHARE), the Multicultural Greek Affairs Organization, along with the Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC) Department and Campus Design and Copy.

"We wanted to draw in as many groups on campus as possible, because AIDS is obviously not strictly a gay issue any more," explained Ed Kammerer, a junior English and Political Science double major and the former president of Pride Alliance, as well as a member of the event's planning committee. "It's an issue that affects everyone on campus. AIDS is still going on. It's still a pressing concern, and often times that gets forgotten."

Kammerer said that the organizations decided to offer free testing in the Campus Center because, though the University Health Services offers HIV testing, it must be done by appointment and is done by drawing blood, a procedure that makes it unappealing to many students. Certified healthcare workers from Tapestry Healthcare in Northampton performed yesterday's tests with the Ora-Sure Method, which uses a swab of cheek cells to test for HIV antibodies rather than a blood sample.

Results of the tests will be available in the Campus Center by Dec. 18, Kammerer said. This waiting period for a result is about as long as that for blood-sample tests.

Privacy will be a priority, according to Kammerer. Students are tested behind partitions and their cheek swabs are identified by a barcode. Results will be given in a similar manner.

Kammerer explained that the more painless method of testing was important to draw in as many students as possible for the testing.

"People need to be able to know their HIV status," he said.

Martin Walker, a junior Civil Engineering major and a member of Pride Alliance, was supervising the walk-in testing facility yesterday.

"Definitely, it's been going well," he said. "I regret that we've had to turn people away."

He added that he hoped that those offering free testing in the future would have "contingency plans" for an overflow of students seeking tests.

A lecture Wednesday night by AIDS activist Kiaran Honderich had been a similar success, Walker said.

According to Walker, Honderich discussed the AIDS situation in South Africa, in which the AIDS epidemic has reached pandemic proportions.

"Most people there can't afford a 28-cent drug."

Turn to HIV, page 2

One hundred yards of red cloth were displayed on the library lawn. Organizations were invited to purchase sections and mark them with messages.

More arrests in school plot

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

New Bedford High School is still reeling from the arrest of four students for attempts to bomb the school in a Columbine-like attack.

Police arrested 17-year-old Amylee Bowman earlier this week for conspiracy to commit murder and possession of ammunition and charged a fifth suspect, a male student who threatened fellow classmates, yesterday.

The other three suspects 15-year-old Steven Jones, 17-year-old Eric McKeean and 15-year-old Michael McKeean were all charged and are being held without bail until further decisions can be made. Bowman was set free until she is to appear in court again on Dec. 17, due in part to her cooperation with the police department.

All suspects pleaded innocent to the charges and were arraigned in a juvenile court as adults.

Police say that the five suspects intended to shoot faculty and fellow classmates before turning the gun on themselves. According to the released police report, the students intended to shoot "thugs, preps and faculty."

They planned upon video taping the incident and then going to the roof and smoking marijuana and taking LSD. The plan also included shooting and killing each other, the report explained.

"As a parent, I don't think you can overreact in this situation," acting Governor Jane Swift said in a televised statement. "Unfortunately, unimaginable things have happened in schools around our country, and we have got to take very seriously any threat."

The plot was uncovered due to the discovery of a letter outlining the plans and also because of Bowman's cooperation with the police. Bowman had informed her teacher Rachel Iupin, whom she thought may be in

Turn to PLOT, page 2

SGA diversity committee meeting uses words, fists

By Krisin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

A motion calling fur the display of the American and Massachusetts flags sparked debate within the Senate and went on to cause a physical fight at last night's Student Government Association Diversity committee meeting.

The fight broke out between former senator and Republican club member Patrick DeCourcy and Secretary of Finance Gabriel Tavares over the issue of respect at the meeting.

The clash occurred when DeCourcy interrupted the Diversity committee's meeting in an effort to state his opinion on the matter.

"The fight broke out on the other side of the office, but all I know is that Pat (DeCourcy) interrupted the meeting," said Scott Turnberg, chair of Diversity. "I warned him before he could say anything that if he disrupted the meeting again that he would have to leave. That is when Gabe (Tavares) came over and told him that he need to show more respect."

A witness to the account stated that Tavares told DeCourcy that he was capable of coming over and punching him. He then proceeded to push DeCourcy to the floor, and had to be restrained by two other individuals.

Senator Matt Progen was presenting his motion, a request for flags to be present at every Senate meeting, when the disturbance occurred.

"It was totally unacceptable for them to act the way they did, and they definitely did not act in a mature way," Progen said.

Speaker Aaron Saunders reacted to the disturbance stating that violence is in no way acceptable within the realms of the SGA. He further explained that he would not let the evening's actions affect the next Senate meeting.

"Violence and that kind of behavior is unacceptable within the SGA," Saunders said. "I've spoken to Gabe and he apologized to me and he also told me that it was an issue between him and Pat and that it just happened in the SGA."

The Senate tabled the motion at this past Wednesday's Senate meeting in an effort to get a second positive recommendation by the Diversity committee. The motion went before the Diversity committee with a unanimously positive recommendation from the Administrative Affairs committee.

"I got a lot of negative vibes by the Senate at the last Senate meeting, and the Chair (Turnberg) seemed to be opposed," Progen said. "People brought up issues like nationalism over patriotism, but I was confident as to why I was presenting this motion and I was not going to let them tell me why I was there."

The Diversity Committee, with a two to one vote, passed the motion, which allows it to return before the Senate with a positive recommendation from the Diversity and the Administrative Affairs committees.

"I think that Wednesday night's attendance was pretty indicative as to what is going to happen with this motion," Progen said. "I think that people will have problems with it, but that it will go over better than the motion that was presented last year."

Saunders explained that he would not let debate regarding the flag

Turn to FIGHT, page 2

Prisoners not killed, Pentagon says

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The pressure on the Taliban and al-Qaeda forces in Afghanistan is mounting, as U.S. warplanes attacked several cave and tunnel complexes around the cities of Jalalabad and Kandahar, according to Pentagon sources.

The Defense department also denied reports that 160 prisoners were executed by the Northern Alliance.

"The reports are just not believable. A U.S. liaison team is on the ground with opposition forces in the area," said Victoria Clarke, assistant secretary of Defense. "The team has not reported the capture of more than a handful of prisoners.

"Additionally, the team has not reported any information about improper treatment of prisoners, and would certainly do so, if they had witnessed that or learned of these sorts of deaths," Clarke added.

Defense officials also confirmed that the military is trying to establish a northern airbase, although they suggest that it would be used primarily for humanitarian purposes, which are "continuing."

"Two C-17s [dropped] about 34,000 humanitarian daily rations," said Rear Admiral John Stufflebeam, of the Joint Staff. "That brings our total now to date to more than 1,970,000."

Stufflebeam described Wednesday's air strikes, which targeted eight areas.

"We're continuing to focus the pressure on al-Qaeda and the Taliban through strikes on fixed and emerging targets," Stufflebeam said. "Most of our effort was against emergent targets, including Taliban command-and-control facilities and military forces in the South and in support of opposition group efforts there.

"We used about 120 strike aircraft again yesterday, which includes about 100 tactical sea-based platform aircraft, 12 to 14 land-based tactical jets, and between six to eight long-range bombers," Stufflebeam added.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld told reporters on Tuesday that the Marine deployment was going as planned.

"My understanding is that the deployment is going along very well and it's continuing. They're there to establish and secure a temporary forward operating base," Rumsfeld said. "Is it conceivable that some day some one of that group could be used for some other purpose? The answer is it's conceivable. Is it intended at the present time? No."

The Pentagon declined to confirm reports that the Northern Alliance had invaded the southern city of Kandahar, although the troops may be in the province.

"We can't deny that, I guess, is a better way to put that," Stufflebeam

Turn to WAR, page 2

Navy Rear Adm. John D. Stufflebeem gives reporters an operational update on the missions in Afghanistan during a Pentagon press briefing.

Just browsing
A shopper scoped out the goods at the Craft Fair in the Campus Center.

Afghan war subject of feminist debate

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

The program "Feminist Forum on the War in Afghanistan" invoked feminists' responses to the rapidly changing world events since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11. The forum analyzed the United States current "war on terrorism" and its effects on the local region yesterday from 4:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. in room 162 in the Campus Center.

The event, co-sponsored by the Everywoman's Center, the Social Thought and Political Economy program, the University of Massachusetts Students for a Peaceful Response, and the Women's Studies program; brought Ann Ferguson, Women's Studies Director, Liz Miller, a Five College visiting lecturer on Film and Video Studies, and Neta Crawford, Political Science professor, to share their conceptions of the ways the United States has responded to the terrorist attacks before approximately 40 people.

Ferguson, a last moment replacement for Political Science Professor Srirupa Roy, explained how the panel, which did not consist of any native Afghanistan women, was chosen with some difficulty.

At least three Afghanistan women were asked to present at the forum, she noted. However, they each declined out of apprehension of the current political climate, fearing that they might be suspected of belonging to a terrorist organization themselves if they spoke out against the U.S. government.

"There have been journalists and entertainers who have lost their jobs for speaking out against the war," Ferguson explained, noting how the most recent anti-terrorism act passed by Congress gives such a broad view of the description of terrorist that almost anyone who disagrees with U.S. foreign policy could be questioned.

Miller presented video clips of two professors, from Clark University and Amherst College respectively, showing their reactions to the United States' responses to Sept. 11, as well as a clip from the CNN documentary "Beneath the Veil," which followed journalist Saira Shah's journey to her father's native home of Afghanistan, looking at women of Afghanistan since the Taliban government's rise to power in 1996.

Miller pointed out afterwards what she considered the good point of the documentary, namely the discussion about the political organization, Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan. However, she soon turned her attentions toward criticism of the film and its recent use in the media.

"This ["Beneath the Veil"] was made two years ago, but now CNN puts it on prime time," Miller said. "It provides no role for the United States in the construction of the Taliban."

She further noted how this absent assessment is also lacking in President Bush's campaign in aiding these "oppressed" women.

According to Miller, Bush had lost 11 percent of women's favor earlier this past fall. In light of this statistic, the administration had set up a "winning women" campaign shortly before

Turn to LECTURE page 3

Campus Perspectives

What was your favorite cartoon or cartoon character when you were little? Why?

By Martha Olivo

Timothy Gunn
Sophomore – Undecided
"I used to watch the "Gummi Bears." It was fantasy and I like that."

Jen Danforth
Sophomore – Biology
"She-ra." She was a woman of power. I didn't go for that girly save-me-from-the-dragon thing."

Rob Kavanaugh
Sophomore – Pre-law
"Masters of the Universe." He-man was a tough guy."

Jonathan Hanlon
Junior – Journalism
"GI Joe." It was an important show. It was groundbreaking."

BSU seminar nears

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The Black Student Union revives its annual Women of Color Seminar with a "younger, more vibrant vibe," as Essence executive editor Jean Morgan Murray hosts tomorrow's event at the New Africa House, according to the BSU president.

BSU President Arthur Hunt said the seminar aims to offer knowledge on issues relevant to women of color, self-reflection, and the opportunity to network.

Interested participants should register at the New Africa House at 9 a.m. to select two of the ten offered tracks, one during the morning and the other in the afternoon. Breakfast will be provided, followed by an opening by Morgan Murray and then the morning tracks will begin. Lunch will also be provided and participants may come to only the morning or afternoon sessions but are encouraged to attend both.

The ten tracks are based on issues the organizing committee felt affected women of color and most importantly would spark discussion. Some of the issues that will be discussed are the color complex, women in the work force life after college and Morgan Murray will speak on the portrayal of women in hip-hop.

Undergraduate and graduate students as well as a handful of professors will facilitate the remaining tracks. Hunt said, "I'll want all the logistics so I don't want to feed it to them."

Each track is limited to fifteen people because "we want the classes to be small enough to be intimate but big enough for discussion," Hunt said. "I hope people will take with them a sense of self, and that they will be able to discuss issues they were never able to discuss, to express their opinions and to network with other women of color on campus."

Every event the BSU presents, Hunt explained, aims to both build a community and to educate the community in general.

The male community is also welcome to this event. Although the BSU expects the seminar attendees to be largely women, Hunt said a few men will be in attendance.

"I like the idea of men being there, it gives the [discussions] more perspective," he added.

Morgan-Murray was a guest of the BSU last year, in a lecture based on her book When Chickenheads Come Home to Roost: A Hip-Hop Feminist Breaks It Down. Positive reaction to the event prompted the BSU to welcome her again for the seminar. She will only be available during the seminar's morning session.

After breakfast, the morning session runs from 9:30 a.m. to noon. For those interested in attending only the afternoon session, the BSU encourages people to register between noon and 12:45 p.m. The seminar ends at 4 p.m.

A registration table will be present at the doors of New Africa House throughout the day. Tracks will be held in separate classrooms, while meals and the opening and closing remarks will be held in the building's library.

The event is cosponsored by the Women of Leadership Network, UMass Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund and Student Commission.

■ fight

continued from page 1

motion get out of hand.

With Administrative Affairs passing the motion unanimously and Diversity passing the motion it gives the Senate a benchmark to use," Saunders said. "It's really an issue that goes to the heart of the constituency and it's going to come down to each individual senator's own opinions. One thing is for sure however, nothing like what happened last night will happen at the Senate meeting. I won't stand for anyone being disruptive or out of line."

Tavares and DeCourcy were both unavailable for comment at press time.

■ HIV

continued from page 1

Walker said. "The crisis has been brought about because of the country's lack of ability to treat people, especially in rural areas."

The biggest problem, Walker said, is how the West, with access to expensive treatments for the disease, has begun to turn away from working to end the crisis in poorer countries. Both Kammerer and Walker said that raising awareness and educating an affluent Western public was their long-term goal.

"It's almost become a dead issue," Walker lamented. "It was all the rage at the height of the epidemic in America. It was mentioned in every classroom and on the news, and that just isn't there anymore. Granted, there are other issues that need to be talked about, but AIDS has faded into the background."

Kammerer said he hoped that next year's World AIDS Day events would be more widespread. Another event sponsored by the coalition this year, which coincided with the free testing yesterday, he said, was A Day Without Art, in which panels in the Campus Center were covered with brown cloth.

Signs hung on the cloth read, "To honor those in the artistic community who have died and those currently suffering due to HIV/AIDS, we have covered this piece of creative expression to demonstrate the losses we have all suffered."

Kammerer spoke of efforts afready underway to get administrative permission to cover sculptures on campus for the next Day Without Art.

He also said that next year's World AIDS Day plans included a lecture series featuring professors and researchers in the community with an expertise in health, medicine, and the AIDS epidemic.

All in all, Kammerer said, there's still much to be done on campus in the field of AIDS activism.

"A big problem is that there is no RSO that addresses this directly," Kammerer commented. "Other RSOs don't have the resources to focus on it."

But someone has to put AIDS in focus, according to Kammerer. "There's still a lot of discrimination against people with AIDS," he said.

"I say, I think has a lot to do with it."

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Get your skis here!

A merchant showed off his wares at the Ski and Board Sale in the Student Union.

■ plot

continued from page 1

danger when the incident took place about the plan. The teacher in turn contacted the police. Upon searching the homes of the youths the police found items used to make bombs, satanic masks, a meat cleaver and a photograph of Adolph Hitler.

The school re-opened on Monday of this week after police had searched the building with bomb sniffing dogs. Attendance was down on Monday with many students opting out of school and others being escorted by their parents but numbers had returned to near normal later in the week, spokesman for the school said. New Bedford High School had crisis counselors on hand to answer any questions or deal with concerns that either students or faculty members may have about school safety.

Jennifer Battle, a sophomore student who is undeclared and from Eastern Massachusetts mentioned that when she was in high school this kind of violence was not prevalent.

"It is scarier for kids to go to high school these days," she said. "When I went to high school there was just fist fights."

She explained that the proximity of the attempt was also disconcerting.

"It is strange that it occurred in Massachusetts," she said. "It seems more foreign and unreal if it happens in another state."

This incident is being compared with the attack at Columbine High School in Colorado in 1998. Two students Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris opened fire on the student body. More than 20 people were injured and the body count totaled 15, including both shooters.

Information for this story was obtained from CNN.com

■ war

continued from page 1

said. "But I could not confirm, and I've not seen any reports that any opposition groups have entered Kandahar City at this point."

Stufflebeam did confirm that the city itself was surrounded, but would not say it was under siege.

"The city of Kandahar is in a large way relatively surrounded by opposition groups. The major road that goes to the south towards Quetta is controlled by opposition groups," Stufflebeam explained. "So the city is somewhat ringed by opposition groups."

The situation in Kandahar is complex, and negotiations between the opposition forces and Kandahar's defenders are on going.

"They're very active in negotiations from those who are within the city and those who are outlying," Stufflebeam said. "We know there are Taliban forces that are digging in, intending to fight, would be my assumption. We know there are non-Talihan forces there as well, who have already broadcast their intentions to dig in and fight to the death.

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts. Its status as such is governed by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Spirit in 1907, the Massachusetts Collegian in 1914, and then the Fri Parish Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

ZANNA has it.....Jeans
How Low can you go?
MAVI "Serena"
Low Rise
hip hand dark denim boot cut
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Stonewall lectures continue

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Viera Wallace-Lorencova, a doctoral candidate in Communications at the University of Massachusetts, gave a lecture in the Campus Center yesterday as part of the ongoing Stonewall Center Lecture Series.

Wallace-Lorencova read from her doctoral research about the rise of LGBT activism in Slovakia. Though her work is not yet complete, she said yesterday that she was proud to be able to present some, "notes from the field" that she has collected in her native country.

She outlined a brief history of the country before describing the LGBT activist networks there. After Czechoslovakia split into Slovakia and the Czech Republic, Wallace-Lorencova commented, the Czech Republic was more liberal in politics than Slovakia. Though by the early nineties more and more gay rights were being approved in Slovakia's legislature, according to Wallace-Lorencova, the homophobic culture of the conservative, largely Roman Catholic country has declined very little.

"Legislators were diminishing the punitive consequences of being homosexual," she said. "But especially among rural, less-educated, older people in the country, the homophobia remained the same."

It wasn't until 1992, Wallace-Lorencova said – when the homosexual minimum age of consent was reduced legally from 18 to 15, to match the age of consent for heterosexuals – that activist networks felt more freedom to organize around LGBT issues.

As a journalist working for Slovakia Public Radio at the time, Wallace-Lorencova said she was, "lucky enough to be able to witness their work first-hand."

Though her interview with the leader of Ganymede, the first Gay Non-government Organization (NGO) in Slovakia, was approved for airplay by the managers of the station "without express disproval," Wallace-Lorencova said she still met with trouble elsewhere.

"Of course, it was not a theme I had to compete over with my colleagues," she joked. "It was still considered taboo. The music director at our station made some very explicit homophobic comments to me and criticized me for doing the interview."

She went on to explain that she also received criticism from individuals with strong religious beliefs.

"I also received a letter from a gentleman who thought I needed to be reminded that the Roman Catholic Church still regarded homosexuality as a sin," she said.

Slowly but surely, Wallace-Lorencova said, LGBT activism has begun to spread around Slovakia, in the form of decentralized local networks. She explained that another obstacle to activism in Slovakia is that, since the collapse of socialism in that country, "everyone is wary of being pulled into any kind of organized activity as they often were during the Socialist period."

Because of the decentralized nature of the current activism, Wallace-Lorencova said that she is, "careful not to talk about any existing LGBT community. It's still just coming into existence."

Rather, she has been watching its progress from overseas, and occasionally pays visits to do field research there while studying at UMass.

Though she accepts that progress will be slow, she said, she also understands the urgent need for activism within Slovakia.

To illustrate this, Wallace-Lorencova quoted a Slovakian lesbian journal, Aspekt.

"On the one hand," she read, "there is a need to encourage heterosexual tolerance. But on the other hand we hardly even know anything about ourselves. We lesbians are exiled to the worst kind of loneliness."

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Ph.D. candidate Viera Wallace-Lorencova prepared to speak on Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay and Transgender activism in Slovakia.

■ lecture

continued from page 1

Sept. 11, in order to regain that lost percentage. Miller viewed Bush's campaign to support women of Afghanistan as only a means for them to continue that campaign.

While this is good for Afghanistan, she pointed out, there are other situations across the world in which women suffer from an oppressive system that is just as fierce as the one in Afghanistan that never are spoken about in mass media, citing the fact that women cannot drive automobiles in Saudi Arabia as an example. Miller added it that is not enough for the U.S. government to just be concerned with Afghanistan women; one must look at the reason for the concern.

Crawford began her speech by acknowledging that there are indeed many different and sometimes conflicting feminist perspectives in the world and that she would only attempt to share her own viewpoint.

She said the stereotypically deemed roles of masculinity and femininity are the lenses through which context the U.S. government views the Sept. 11 attacks and the "war on terrorism."

"[Sept. 11] was seen through the stereotypical male perspective, so the U.S. is seen as resilient ...we'll pick ourselves up, shake the dirt off, and fight back," Crawford said. "This is masculization of the victim, and soon the victim will no longer be the victim."

She added that any proposal of a non-military reaction to Sept. 11 is seen as "soft," "weak," or "too feminine," and therefore not taken seriously.

"Wars used to be fought by military nations, but now wars are fought by criminals, people looking after their illegal industries," she said. "The military war cannot be effective against those who have organized themselves as criminals."

Crawford added that because the U.S. government holds to its masculine image of "fighting" back or else face being dubbed "un-American," arguments such as hers are usually discredited.

"We have let the drum of patriotism beat down on divergent thought," she concluded.

An open-floor microphone following the panelists' discussions allowed the community to bring forth their own opinions on the current political situation.

"A lot of women are being advised by their lawyers to be quiet right now, but if you can speak, speak," advised Sandy Mandel, Associate Director for Special Events at the Everywoman's Center. "Please don't be silent. Find out a way to be heard."

She cited calling or writing one's state representative as such an action.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Finals, Closing, and Parking

EMERGENCY CLOSING POLICY
Amherst Campus

CLOSING OPTIONS*	Delayed Opening Until 11:00am (exam period 10:30am)	Closed All Day	Closed During Day	Cancellation of Evening Activities
WATCH OR LISTEN	starting at 6:00 am	starting at 6:00 am	when decided	starting at 2:00 pm
WHEN	STAY TUNED TO YOUR RADIO FOR ADDITIONAL INFORMATION
TO	Amherst (WTCC, WMUA, WFNX, WITT) - Brattleboro (WKVT, WTSA) - Greenfield (WHAI, WRSI, WQAM) - Hartford (WTIC, WHCN) - Northampton (WHMP) - Orange (WCAT) - Pittsfield (WBEC, WBRK) - South Deerfield (WPVQ) - Springfield (WHYN, WAQY, WMAS, WGGB-TV, WWLP-TV) - Ware (WARE) - Westfield (WNEC) - Worcester (WTAG) - Campus Derms (HSCN) (see alphabetical listing below for frequency numbers)
WHAT WILL BE AFFECTED	Classes - Day Care - Offices - Activities - Textbook Annex - Meetings - University Store - Convenience Stores - Continuing Education - Blizewall - Hatch - Snack Bars at Physical Plant, Whitmore, and Hampden
WHAT WON'T BE AFFECTED (Designated ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL will report to work)	Dining Commons - Health Services - Hotel - Police/Security - Coffee Shop - Physical Plant - Conference Services - University Operator
	Other areas as pre-designated (consult your Department Head)
ATHLETICS, FINE ARTS, AND MULLINS CENTER	Athletics, Fine Arts, and Mullins Center events will take place as scheduled unless a separate announcement is made on local radio stations
	Athletics Information: Sports Information Hot Line 545-2439 Fine Arts Information: 545-2511, 545-0192, or 545-0400 Mullins Center Information: 545-3081 Events will not unless announced separately on local radio stations
BUS SERVICE	Call 545-1633 for recorded message
LIBRARY	Same as University
"Academic Calendar" and Intersession	Delayed Opening Until 10:30am	The Library will make every effort to open Call Library Hours Hot Line 545-0414
"Exam Period
"Sat/Sun/Holiday	Listen to radio or call Library Hours Hot Line 545-0414
INFORMATION	Call Emergency Closing Hot Line 545-3630, watch Housing Services Cable Network (HSCN), or go to WWW.UMASS.EDU (click on Timely Information or University Services)

* If there is no vertical line, the information applies for each option.

AM						FM
WACE	730	WQAM	1520	WNNZ	940	WAJY	102.1	WHMP	99.1	WPVQ	97.1
WAQY	1600	WHAI	1240	WTAG	580	WBEC	105.1	WHYN	93.1	WRNX	100.9
WARE	1250	WHMP	1400	WTIC	1080	WBRK	101.7	WKVT	92.7	WRSI	95.3
WBEC	1420	WHYN	560	WTSA	1450	WCAT	99.9	WMAS	94.7	WSRS	96.1
WBRK	1340	WKVT	1490	WTTT	1450	WCCC	96.5	WMUA	91.1	WTB	96.5
WCAT	1700	WMAS	1450			WHAI	98.1	WPVQ	91.9	WTSA	96.5
						WHCN	103.9

 automated until 9:00 am refer only for possible early afternoon or evening closings

WGGB — TV Channel 40 WWLP — TV Channel 22

RESCHEDULING OF FINAL EXAMS ON OFFICIAL SNOW DAYS - FALL 2001

In order to reschedule final examinations in case of snow, two alternate exam periods have been devised. They are 6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. each exam day. The use of these alternative periods in the event of closings is outlined below. This policy goes into effect ONLY if the University is officially closed. The snow day Hot Line is 545-3630. If the University is open, all exams are expected to take place as scheduled. Each faculty member should inform his or her class of the planned time and location of the rescheduled final exam in the event of a snow day. All rescheduled exams will be held in the same location as published in the final exam schedule.

If the University is closed until 10:30 a.m.

8:00 am ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm same day
10:30 am ..... held as originally scheduled
1:30 pm ..... held as originally scheduled
4:00 pm ..... held as originally scheduled

If the University is closed all day but open in the evening:

8:00 am ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm same day
10:30 am ..... rescheduled to 8:45 pm same day
1:30 pm ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
4:00 pm ..... rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day

except

1:30 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 8:00 am Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 10:30 am Dec. 22

If the University is closed all afternoon and all evening:

8:00 am ..... held as originally scheduled
10:30 am ..... held as originally scheduled
1:30 pm ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
4:00 pm ..... rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day

except

1:30 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 8:00 am Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 10:30 am Dec. 22

If the University is closed all day and all evening:

8:00 am ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
10:30 am ..... rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day
1:30 pm ..... rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day after next
4:00 pm ..... rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day after next

except

1:30 pm Dec. 20 ..... rescheduled to 8:00 am Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 20 ..... rescheduled to 10:30 am Dec. 22
8:00 am Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 8:00 am Dec. 22
10:30 am Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 10:30 am Dec. 22
1:30 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21 ..... rescheduled to 4:00 pm Dec. 22

AMHERST CAMPUS

IN EFFECT FROM 12:01:01 to 04:15:02

The Amherst Campus Parking Snow Policy affects OVERNIGHT parking (1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m.) and parking during a snow emergency closing period.

OVERNIGHT PARKING (1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m.)

PARKING ALLOWED

Lot 24 — Lot 62 — Lot 25 (north of roadway to yellow lot only)
Lot 30 — Lot 63 — Lot 32 (west of Lincoln Avenue only)
Lot 41 — Lot 65 — Lot 45 (including Thatcher Way (except at meters))
Lot 42 — Purple Lots — Lot 46 (except at meters)
Lot 52 — Yellow Lots — Lot 48 (except at meters)

PARKING ALLOWED — ONLY WITH APPROPRIATE PERMIT

Lot 21 — Lot 50 — North Village
Lot 29 — Lot 54 — Lincoln Apartments
Lot 47 — any posted reserved space

PARKING NOT ALLOWED

Lot 26 — Lot 40 — Lot 25 (south of the roadway to yellow lot)
Lot 27 — Lot 64 — Lot 32 (east of Lincoln Avenue only)
Lot 31 — Lot 66 — Lot 45 (except by special permit only)
Lot 33 — Lot 67 — any campus roadway (including Southwest horseshoe)
Lot 34 — Lot 68 — all parking meters, including Fearing Street meters
Lot 35 — Lot 71

SNOW EMERGENCY PARKING — ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL

During a snow emergency closing period, essential personnel who report to work may only park in the following areas

Lot 21 (west of Southwest)
Lot 25 (west of Physical Plant and north of roadway to yellow lot only)
Lot 30 (adjacent to Power Plant)
Lot 31 (north of Engineering and Lederle Graduate Research Center)
Lot 32 and 34 (south of Whitmore and Isenberg Schools)
Lot 62 (south of Morrill Science Center)
Lot 63 Worcester Dining Common lot only (west of Worcester DC)

SUGGESTIONS / IDEAS FOR PARKING SMART ON A SNOW DAY

1. Use the 5 Main bus service
2. Car pool rides wherever possible
3. Walk if possible
4. Have someone drop you off
5. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to either Lot 25 or yellow lot (both west of Physical Plant)
6. During snow conditions, it is not possible to guarantee normal lot capacity will be available.
7. If you receive a parking citation and believe it was improperly issued, you may appeal it at Parking Services
8. within 21 days from the date issued. Appeals can be submitted in writing, appealed in person to the Hearing Clerk, or emailed (hearings@admin.umass.edu)

Castaway Lounge
181 to exit 24, south on Rte. 5, Whately, Mass. (413) 665-8732
Proudly presents another successful Amateur Night
Monday Decem... 3rd
starting at 7 P...
◆ Cash prizes awarded!
◆ All ladies over 18 ...
◆ Every Monday ...
Exotic Dancers ...

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 413-587-4223
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Domestic
Disturbance(PG13) 11:30 2:40 5:00 7:20 9:50
K-Pax (PG13) 7:25 10:10
Serendipity (PG13) 12:00 2:40
Behind Enemy Lines (PG13) 11:40 3:00 7:15 9:45*
*one passes/super-savers
senior movie 12/05/01
Life as a House opens at 10:45am
Coming 12/7
Ocean's Eleven
cinemark.com

New School University
Robert J. Milano Graduate School of Management and Urban Policy CHANGE.
Milano
Earn a Master of Science degree in:
• Health Services Management and Policy
• Human Resources Management
• Nonprofit Management
• Organizational Change Management
• Urban Policy Analysis and Management
Ph.D. degree:
• Public & Urban Policy
Program Concentrations in OPEN HOUSE
December 5, 11 & 13
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Courses Available:
On-Line • Day and Evening • Saturday • Site-line (1/2 on-line and 1/2 in-class) • Degree and Non-Degree • www.newschool.edu/milano

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

America must know:
all casualties regretable

The Central Intelligence Agency confirmed yesterday that one of its agents, John Michael Spann, was killed by Taliban and al-Qaeda prisoners in a riot at a fortress near Mazar-e-Sharif, Afghanistan. It has been widely reported that Spann was interrogating prisoners at the time of his death, but the CIA has been reluctant to provide details.

This makes Spann the first American casualty in the war in Afghanistan. Eight journalists have died there since Sept. 11, but none are Americans.

Spann's death has received a significant amount of press coverage. His tragic death should serve as a wake-up call to us that in the war against the Taliban, there will likely be more American losses to come. If a ground war develops, or if the war spreads to Iraq, the number of casualties could be extremely high. This is not to say that the war should be stopped, but rather that we should be prepared to accept its consequences, which will likely include significant losses of life – of both Americans and Afghan civilians.

Any time that the United States engages in military conflict, the possibility for casualties exists. Yet Americans in the past have been reluctant to risk the lives of their own soldiers, even while supporting military intervention. A good example of this was the U.S. intervention in Somalia in the early 1990s, which polls showed a large number of Americans supported. Yet after the deaths of 18 soldiers, the Clinton administration hastily pulled all forces out of the area, and it was generally agreed that it was probably a bad idea for the U.S. to have intervened in the first place.

While the 18 deaths were certainly tragic, especially when one considers the extremely brutal nature of their deaths, few took into account the fact that far more Somali civilians were killed as a result of the military conflicts than 5 American military personnel. Where was the coverage of their deaths? While the U.S. military must naturally place the utmost concern on losses of its own soldiers, it is wrong for the United States to value only the lives of its citizens, and disregard foreign civilians who are killed as a result of our battles. The U.S. intervention in Somalia was done with the best of intentions, but proved our reluctance to value the lives of civilians.

The death of Spann is unfortunate. But there is no reason why his death should receive front-page headlines in newspapers across the country, while the deaths of Afghan women and children uninvolved with the military are ignored. The war against the Taliban is a just cause, but we owe it to the civilian victims of our bombing raids to recognize their casualties as much as we recognize our own losses.

Civilian death is, if course, an inevitable part of war. Most Americans have decided that is worth risking the lives of American soldiers, and the lives of Afghan civilians, in the name of retaliation. But when far more press coverage is given to the one American killed than to all of the Afghan civilians killed combined, it is a clear sign that our priorities are out of order. Most citizens of Afghanistan are victims of the Taliban, not supporters. Surveys after surveys has shown that the American public does not feel that the civilians that have been killed during the bombing of Taliban strongholds are reason enough to stop the war. But they certainly deserve our recognition.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

From blowback to blackout

BILL LARKIN

Ah, family and politics.

The conversation at the Larkin Thanksgiving table mentioned nothing of terrorism. No one discussed anthrax. In fact, the only hint of war I heard came from my grandmother, who blessed America's soldiers as she poured gravy onto her stuffing. Everyone seemed carefree, delighted at the success of our overseas intervention.

The Afghan cities of Mazar-i-Sharif, Kabul, and Kunduz have fallen. The president has authorized civil service employees to staff airline security. Four Afghan factions have met in Germany to discuss what government will replace the Taliban when the war ends.

So, then, should we start planning parades for the military and hoist the flag into the sky for all the proud to see? The Bush administration has handled this crisis wonderfully, so shouldn't we prepare the confetti? After all, we have nothing to worry about, right?

Wrong.

For the past 78 days, our government has violated our constitution to ensure a successful response to the attacks of Sept. 11. Even worse, a majority of Americans approve what little they know about this. Unless we stop this tendency, the government will continue to commit heinous acts in our name. Fueled by popular support, the president and the attorney general have pressured Capitol Hill with proposals that violate human rights.

How can Washington D.C. do this? Well, the opposition does not know enough to stop them, so the majority flows with the tide. Protected by secrecy, the military and the F.B.I have disclosed the success of their operations and suppressed the aberration. In a democratic state, the press must have access to the government. Unfortunately, that has not happened over the past two months.

But what's so wrong with secrecy? After all, we can't have the Taliban know where our marines plan to attack their stronghold at Kandahar. However, the government has used our fear about the war to blanket their post Sept. 11 actions. Only now have we learned that Afghanistan will not receive about half of the relief planned by the United Nations this winter. Food trucks cannot drive across roads and bridges destroyed by bombs.

Since Vietnam, the U.S. military has blocked the media from covering war. In the Gulf, officers allowed reporters to watch staged operations in areas far from the combat front. Otherwise, the news contained paraphrased press briefings and little more. Sadly, this practice has worsened. In Kosovo, and now in Afghanistan, the military restricts the press from direct reporting. Our correspondents have switched roles; the watchdog of government has become its mouthpiece. Do you think secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld can tell the press about civilian casualties or military failures? Of course not. Even if he could, he wouldn't, and the reporters aren't on the battlefield or in the cities to observe for themselves.

"For the past 78 days, our government has violated our constitution to ensure a successful response to the attacks of Sept. 11. Even worse, a majority of Americans approve what little they know about this."

This blanket extends over more than the Middle East; it covers America as well. Since Sept. 11, the government said it has detained over 1,100 unidentified people believed to be involved with the attacks. According to Attorney General John Ashcroft, the FBI still holds 930 at unidentified locations. What else is unidentified? When we accepted the U.S.A. Patriot Act, we gave the government the power to detain any foreigner who publicly endorses terrorism. But we didn't get assurances of disclosure in return.

Ashcroft, who claims he wants to maintain the privacy of the accused, said, "I am not interested in providing, when we are at war, a list to Osama bin Laden and the al-Qaida network of the people we have detained that would make any easier their effort to kill Americans." But what is he interested in providing? None of the detainees have been brought to the speedy and public trial guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment. Does the justice department lack the evidence to prosecute these alleged terrorist sympathizers? Or have they launched a panicked crusade guided by racial profiling and unquestioned by public scrutiny? At least we knew about the location and the rationale of the Japanese internment camps established during World War II.

President Bush doesn't seem to mind this trend. In fact, he has considered holding military tribunals for suspected terrorists at sea or foreign bases. The press wouldn't have any access to the proceedings, as their locations would be kept secret. They might learn the defendant's name, perhaps his charge. That's it. No court documents, nothing with which to inform the public. So why is the administration considering this?

"We're an open society, we give people access to the American dream," said Dan Bartlett, the White House communications director.

"With that privilege there is a responsibility. That responsibility has not always been lived up to, and it's not always been asked that they live up to it, either."

Right.

Wouldn't an open society disclose the state of those it imprisons? Someone should tell the White House about the government's responsibility to its citizens. Our votes put their agents in office, and our taxes fund their actions. I think we should know if they are pursuing policies that violate human rights and draw the wrath of foreigners on our behalf, don't you?

Information from The New York Times was used in this column.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the editor:
In defense of Crawford

To the editor:

Professor Neta Crawford is good for UMass. She is bright, hardworking, interesting and a figure in the study of international relations. She put a raw nerve in the department, our department, where a small committee, in a secret meeting, voted to deny her tenure. The editorial article that you responded to seemed to me to say that the department, not the university that granted her tenure, was strange.

You're right, this was not in one important, high profile ruling during some of her "probationary period" before tenure. But UMass didn't pay her while she was at Brown or Harvard or partly in a conference in South Africa, they were paying her.

Yes, in the past, the way these things ultimately were resolved was to give Al Harwood one of the pieces in the same situation. All the Crawford's are the best part of them. Sometimes we have to go to their places and ponder them, how good we are, how bad or like the differences between various sports and intramurals.

The university administration did step in. Sided not only with members from the college that political science is part of, but against the department too. Both agreed that we need to go our separate ways with her tenure. Without her we are pretty lost.

John Bigelow
Political Science Department

Ed/Op: It's evolution, baby. Write to us at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, or come by our office at 113 Campus Center basement.

An enlightening device:
Putting the human back into politics

The other night I was in the Campus Center looking to attend a certain event. Having no idea where it was being held I looked at the directory for the evening's events. Glancing up and down the list, the event I was looking for wasn't listed. Something caught my eye though. It was the word "Palestine." As a Palestinian, this is one of the things you look out for. So I looked back and there it was, a teach-in was being held on Palestine on the 9th floor of the campus center.

So I decided to go to the 9th floor and got a seat up near the front of the room. There isn't much I don't know about the subject but I never turn down the opportunity to learn more about it. The event was well organized thanks to its sponsors, the Palestinian Action Coalition and the Arab Students Club.

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

The audience was advised by the coordinators of the events to keep their questions till the question and answer period after the speakers were finished. They were also advised to keep their questions under 60 seconds in length and to direct them as questions as opposed to statements. This was a very fair request on behalf of the organizers for obvious reasons, yet some people had trouble complying with the request.

Both speakers were very educated people who, from what they said, have obviously done their homework on the issue and knew what they were talking about. Unfortunately, I was extremely angered when a few attendants decided they wanted to "take" the floor. And they did it so well it made me think they had experience at this. I have to be honest an say that the majority of the questions asked were kept under the 60 second time limit and were in the form of a question. Yet there were those who decided they were above rules and regulations.

When the event "ended" many people were disappointed because they couldn't say what they wanted due to time constraint. I stayed behind for a little while because I wanted to ask the speakers a couple of questions and thank them for coming. We'll I didn't get a chance to do that. Both speakers were barraged with members of the audience who all wanted to ask questions and argue about Palestine.

The speaker reacted in a very calm manor, as he should, having had experience in this sort of thing. There was one lady in particular who continued to try to justify Israel's oppressive policy toward Palestinians. And with every claim she made the speaker responded with documented facts about why she was wrong. He suggested several books for her to read and also documents written by Israeli historians, which proved her wrong. She, not surprisingly, refused to accept these facts and continued to support the Israeli policy. I had no problem with this. Every question she asked had a documented answer and the speaker knew exactly what to tell her.

The problem arose when she started to talk about the Palestinians right to return. She said that there was no reason why Israel should allow Palestinians to return (to the land which they were ethnically cleansed from in 1948). This is what set me off. I'm usually a very calm person but when she said that I could no longer hold back.

I very politely told her I wanted to ask her a question and redirected her attention from the speaker who seemed relieved to stop talking to her because she was not very open-minded and refused to accept documented facts.

Once I had her attention I told to stop thinking about politics for a moment and to consider a true story. I told her my grandfather had worked for years in Palestine to afford a house to live in with his young family. Before he could settle in, he was aggressively forced to leave by the Zionist movement during the mass deportation of towns and ethnic cleansing. So I asked her "If you can morally justify this action in any way, you can have the land."

She looked at me shocked; she almost didn't know what to say. Obviously there is no moral justification for what they did to my grandfather. In fact, there was no morality involved in their actions at all. My grandfather's story is one of millions just like his. This is why the Palestinians not only deserve to return but they have the RIGHT to return.

Now back to the lady I posed this question to. After thinking for a moment she responded to me by asking me a question - Have you heard of the Holocaust?"

So without thinking too much, I looked her straight in the eye and said "Which one?" She was shocked. Her eyes opened up in amazement as if the messiah was standing behind me. "The only one" she replied.

This was a big problem for me. At this point I just began to rattle of genocides that happened throughout the world before and after World War Two. It angers me to think that there are people out there who want to make the rest of the world believe that the genocide in World War II was the only genocide in history. "What about the Armenian genocide and the Sudani genocide and the Sri Lankan genocide and the Algerian genocide?" I just kept saying these things to her. She didn't know how to respond.

Why is it that I know about these massacres worldwide? Is it because I am a Political Science major or because I am Palestinian? In part yes, it's both, but it is primarily because I hear about Palestinians dying everyday without ever having tasted freedom.

I think by telling this lady, who was so strongly sure of her convictions, about my grandfather and about the rest of the genocides in this world, that she will go home and think differently about Palestinians. And because I had the chance to reach this one person, I am grateful to have stumbled upon this event.

Yousef Munayyer is a UMass student.

Get your eyes checked - Dilated Peoples in Boston
Show was great - even though the review's a bit late

COURTESY CATHERINE TURNER

Evidence and Iriscience worked the angles at the Middle East.

By Catherine Turner and Mike Delano
Collegian Staff

In the broader genre and community that encompasses hip-hop, there are several schools that graduate artists with certain sounds. In the dirty south, artists come out rappin' with southern twangs and have lyrics about caddies and soul food. OutKast, Ludacris and Goodie Mobb all have the same sound, and Jermaine Dupri and Timbaland and Magoo, who are also from the south, contribute to that southern feel. Likewise, the East Coast, mainly the New York scene, is awash with a more upbeat, urban flava that includes everyone from De La Soul and Busta Rhymes to Jay-Z and P. Diddy.

Like its Eastern counterparts, the West Coast also has a unique sound. Similar to the other areas of the country, the West has a few different cliques that work together. While Snoop and Dre may be mainstream, there is another posse coming out of Cali that is becoming more recognized.

Many Pioneer Valley residents caught Dilated Peoples last year when they played at Pearl Street with lyrassic 5 during the Word of Mouth tour. This year they're headlining and promoting their own protégés, Source of Labor, as well as showcasing a true hip-hop legend, MC Supernatural, who is the premier freestyler out there today.

The Middle East is a hotbed for artists who visit Boston. The basement is a cramped but comfortable venue with low ceilings and chili-lights casting a red glow. It was within this perfect club ambience that the visitors from 3,000 miles away came to prove that they have enough talent to give the New Yorkers a run for their money.

Evidence, Iriscience and DJ Babu walked out on stage and were met by a mass of head-nodders ready to be inspired by the lyrical prowess and Beat Junkied cuts that are the trademark of this upcoming group. When they performed songs from their first album, The Platform, released last year, hands shot into the air to add waves to the sea of kids singing along.

"Triple Optics," "No Retreat," "The Platform," and "Ear Drums Pop" were among the favorite tracks that the group performed from The Platform. However, it was "Work the Angles," that got the crowd rowdy.

From their latest release, Expansion Team, the two emcees and one DJ brought "Live on Stage," "Pay Attention," and "Proper Propaganda" to life. At one moment, Iriscience took the mic alone and teased the crowd with an a capella version of "War" from Expansion Team. Babu then brought the beat in and Evidence joined his afroed partner to hype up the audience with "Trade Money."

Throughout the entire show, the band played all of the ill tracks from their two albums. While The Platform made its mark in the underground, the sophomore release is demanding attention from a wider audience, which was evident by looking at the people who attended the show.

"I heard we got M.I.T. in the house," Iriscience taunted at the beginning. "We got some Harvard muthafuckers out here too, don't we? Yeah Cambridge, represent!"

Not only did the two lyricists show their appreciation and respect for their Boston fans, but they also spent a considerable amount of time between songs to promote the latest project to join their posse, Source of Labor, out of Seattle, Wash.

Source of Labor, headed by front-emcee the Wordsayer, is a collection of musicians from the Northwest with a serious sound. Backed by a DJ, a drummer and a guy on bass, the Wordsayer presented some wicked lyrics depicting the plight of the oppressed, as well as the weather in Washington. Wordsayer had talent and kept the crowd entertained, but he lacked the carefree nature of a seasoned and recognized group. Nevertheless, Source of Labor put on a good show and was an excellent start to the West Coast evening.

Also keeping the party live was veteran freestyler MC Supernatural. Fans in the Valley were first introduced to this phenomenon last year when he joined Dilated and J5 on the Word of Mouth tour. His specialties include a joint named "3 Words," which involves him taking three words selected from audience members and then freestyling about them; and another trick called the "3 MCs" in which he invites the spirits of three separate emcees to enter his body and take over. In this particular show, M.O.P., Guru and the Notorious B.I.G. were the three to grace the stage through Supernatural.

Source of Labor, MC Supernatural, and the Dilated Peoples together made up a dynamite combination of beats, sounds, lyrics and jams. It is evident that the members of Dilated Peoples are learning the trade of performing live, as

Turn to DILATED, page 6

COURTESY BI PAPPAS

Royal exit

The Amazing Crowns play their last ever show tonight at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence, R.I.

Jokes fall flat in Jerusalem

By Justin Conforti
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON – Memo to Marc Maron: Woody Allen called. He's read your latest book, The Jerusalem Syndrome, and he's pissed. He wants you to create your own voice and leave behind the cynical, ultraintelligent, hyperneurotic Jewish New Yorker persona made so famous in his own stand-up comedy, movies and books.

In this familiar-feeling comic memoir, Maron chronicles his lifelong quest of coming to terms with the Jerusalem syndrome, a psychological phenomenon in which a person thinks he's a prophet who communicates directly with God after a visit to the Holy Land. The realization of his condition occurs after his trip to Israel – not "to get Jewy," but fueled by Maron's manic obsession with capturing the face of God on his expensive video camera ("I mean, where would we be without Sony? Certainly unentertained. Sony: It has four letters, like 'good,' like 'love.'")

An understanding of his destiny comes as no surprise to Maron, who has always felt specially chosen. At Hebrew school, he recognized his "unique talent for driving people over the edge." As a student at Boston University, he channeled his untapped spiritual energies toward beatnik culture, embracing a community of "five to seven disenfranchised white kids" who devoted their existences to smoking cigarettes, drinking coffee and writing awful poetry. On his journey toward celebrity-hood ("I should mention that I also wanted to be a star. Sometimes I forget to mention that because I think it undermines my credibility as a seer."), Maron moved to Los Angeles and became the doorman at a comedy club, where he did tremendous amounts of cocaine and became a cabana boy for the self-destructive yet brilliant comic Sam Kinison.

In the hilarious climax of the book, Maron's pilgrimage leads him to the Philip Morris headquarters. He writes, "I started to realize that my relationship with God was tenuous at best, but my relationship with the Philip Morris company and Marlboro cigarettes was very deep, had been for years." His reflection on brand loyalty as a replacement for true spirituality and religious commitment leads to a celebration of American consumerism and corporate emblems of all kinds. True revelation comes as he joyously watches the employees at the tobacco factory chain-smoke as they work and remarks, "It was beautiful. It looked like Utopia. It's what socialism was supposed to look like."

Sections of the book are enjoyable and thought provoking, and Maron does occasionally have interesting insight into the universe. For example, his comparison between the paths he has followed in his lifetime to the crumbs being dropped by God as He runs with a piece of cake from the Last Supper on his way to "deal with the end of the world" is particularly striking. However, the narrative has too many gaps and the story lacks the overall unity needed to make this tale of searching for identity and coming into one's own truly powerful and unique. Instead of inspiring the reader to question all the materialistic things that replace real devotion to spirituality, this memoir comes off as a collection of incidents – a series of complex jokes leading to a punchline that never actually occurs.

The seeming resolution to Maron's identity conflict occurs within the last 14 pages, shoved in so the story can

Turn to JERUSALEM, page 6

Josh Gobran's self-titled debut album an explosive journey

By Ty Allison
The Shorthorn (U. Texas-Arlington)

(U-WIRE) ARLINGTON, Texas - Alongside superproducers David Foster and Walter Afanasieff comes the voice of a 21-year-old who will likely follow the successful paths of fellow opera singers Luciano Pavarotti and Andrea Bocelli.

Josh Groban is and will be different. His stylings are more contemporary, yet they don't lose their classic qualities.

Some of the album's lyrics are sung in English and others in Italian. It is the latter in which Groban grabs hold of the listener's ears and an explosive journey begins.

The first track on the album "alla luce del sole (In the Light of the Sun)" starts off mid-tempo with mellow xylophone and orchestra playing mystically in the background. Then Groban's rich tenor voice lays perfectly over the music throughout the track's first verse. Approaching the chorus, and in the chorus itself, the song turns bright and dramatic. His voice seems to be longing for something, to be reaching out. On "alla," Groban shows what a chorus should sound like: powerful and effortless. It provides intensity and release.

"Gira con me (Turn with me)" is the second selection and what many would consider a "power ballad." What makes this track different from anything Celine or Mariah can produce is its authentic, classical nature. While obviously no lack of production quality exists, Groban relies on voice and music to carry the tune, rather than just making one's voice rise and fall rapidly and killing high notes.

Two more standouts on the album are "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" and "The Prayer."

"Jesu" may be familiar to many. It's heard often around Christmas time. Groban once more adds his commanding contemporary operatic intonations to this Bach classic.

"Prayer" joins Groban with fellow "contempo-classical" songstress Charlotte Church. This pairing is magnificent, and the harmonies produced are precise and palatial. Surprisingly, Church sounds more like a Whitney or Christina on the cut – nice, just shocking.

Groban's debut displays that he can sing in two languages with great vigor. There is something to be said about not understanding lyrics sung in Italian. He sings these in a way that allows listeners to attach their own meanings according to his use of inflection and crescendo.

An absolute and definite assurance dwells in his voice, something not found in this age of "phony pop."

Groban's voice is truly a gift that will hopefully have everyone saying thank you.

Hey now

Fat Rat will Da Cheeze" who'll make you want to "Bend Ya Knees, Touch Ya Toes" and "Do Ya Thing". His lyrics are "The Throwdest", so there's no "Wonder Why" you'll want to "Beg, Steal, and Borrow" [illegible] new release – or you could just buy it, assuming that you "Ain't Broke No Mo." "As Yo" "My [illegible] "Ooh Wee."

Hateship, Friendship, Courtship... is a powerful(ship) book(ship)

By Zak Salih
The Breeze (James Madison U.)

(U-WIRE) HARRISONBURG, Va. – Alice Munro's latest collection of short stories, "Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage" is wonderful to read.

For a first-time reader of Munro (which many of you reading this article might be), her stories depict the natural ebbs and flows of life. There are no earth-shattering incidents or violent lines of prose to hook the reader in; many of the stories in "Hateship" begin smoothly, as if the reader just has waded into the current of a river. The stories are about everyday life but more importantly, as the title implies, the relationships between people in love.

The stories in this collection are littered with love affairs, love obsessions, love-hate relationships, kisses both chaste and deep. The love Munro writes about in "Hateship" is a love of both happenstance and destiny. Take, for instance, the title story, in which a teenage girl unearths correspondence between her father and the housekeeper and orchestrates love letters in her father's name to the point that the housekeeper, Johanna, abandons her old life for dreams of love. For the juvenile girls in this story, like two fates whose tool is a typewriter, love is a game.

This kind of pain is not uncommon in the love stories littered throughout the book. Keep in mind, the love stories I describe are not bodice-rippers or rivers-of-tears; the affairs and fleeting, extramarital kisses between Munro's characters are the encounters that real life is made of. It is painful to read pockets of emotion in which the characters lose themselves for mere moments, be it the lingering al fresco kiss of "Floating Bridge" or the speedy one-night-stand of "What Is Remembered."

Munro's writing style is a wonderful delight to read. Descriptive passages are savored like a fine wine not because they reveal universal truths but merely because they ring true with universal experiences.

In Munro's world, which may be the world we all live in, destiny interwines with randomness. Death takes on an organized feel, as in the opening to "Post and Beam" where a character's mother estimates the time of her death. Organized for the deceased perhaps, but not so for those left living, who are caught in a flurry of emotional panic and release. Nina's desperate search for a suicide note left by her husband in the story "Comfort" provides a standout moment in the standout story of the collection.

I can say with a booming voice that "Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage" is an intriguing and sincere collection of emotions: a collage of subtle, subdued, yet overwhelmingly powerful pieces of short fiction.

UCLA has strong ties to Necklace

By Willy Flockton
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – The Affair of the Necklace has such a major connection to University of California-Los Angeles, it's a surprise the eight-clap wasn't included in the movie.

Not only is the screenplay the award-winning work of UCLA alumnus John Sweet, but theater professor Jean-Louis Rodrigue coached the lead actors in traditional 18th century movement.

The Affair Of the Necklace, directed by Charles Shyer, is the color-enriched journey of political intrigue and skullduggers in the royal court of 18th-century France.

With the foreboding of the French Revolution weighing heavy on the production, it covers events that would ultimately be the impetus for the falling of guillotine blades.

Oscar-winner Hilary Swank, renowned for her androgynous role in Boys Don't Cry, plays Jeanne de la Motte Valois, the traumatized young aristocrat who, stripped of her family honor, must conspire to rob a necklace that will restore her rightful place.

"I was really pleased when Hilary got into it," Sweet said. "She totally immersed herself in it. I really admired that."

Dressed in cowboy boots and hailing originally from the South, John Sweet graduated from the UCLA Film, Theater and Television masters program in screenwriting in 1997. Based on true events nearly lost to history, Sweet researched the story for a whole summer before writing. But he was fearful of it turning into another period historical.

"I decided that I wanted to make it accessible and that there was some connection with the character. What drew me to the story was that it had a lot of contemporary themes. I did not want it to be a museum piece," Sweet said at a sneak preview of the film at James Bridges Theatre on Monday.

Unusually, Sweet was also involved heavily during the production process.

He changed the tragic script that was tinged with dry humor, cutting childhood scenes he felt showed Jeanne true motivation.

"I was so close to the story that I never wanted to let go of it," Sweet said. "Jeanne is a very clever woman and a bit more mercenary than the way I portrayed her. However, I stayed true to the character. Everything in the screenplay was how I felt she'd say it in real life."

There is nothing but praise for the film from Jean-Louis Rodrigue.

"This was a project of love," Rodrigue said at the sneak preview. "I enjoyed it immensely."

Classically trained actor and collaborating acting trainer on many plays and films, Rodrigue coached the leads in period movement.

He was first approached personally by Hilary Swank to aid in her preparation for the film. They worked together several hours every day for weeks in full costume.

"To help realistically portray a character, not only do you do it from the outside but also the inside," Rodrigue said. "I taught her to move with ease as if from that period. This was all part of the detail of the film."

Shyer specially flew Rodrigue to Prague and France where filming was taking place to specially work with all the leads, including Jonathan Pryce, who had recently fallen from a horse.

"Hilary and I worked for weeks to find the character's natural impulses," Rodrigue said. "I was able to help her transform her posture and carriage and teach her to move with elegance and poise."

Rodrigue employs the century old Alexander Technique, an awareness of movement habits that can be applied across all arts, including theater, music and film. He also has recently acquired funding from Lucy Gonda's Center for Integrative Health, Medicine and Research for a new program to help musicians avoid injury. He has already worked with such groups as the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and his latest work is with the actors of The Time Machine, slated for release this winter.

"Swank was a sheer joy to work with," Rodrigue said.

"She was such a hard worker. She is amazing."

■ Jerusalem

continued from page 5

make some sort of sense. Maron all of a sudden finds the redemption he's been searching for, is left with the same unanswered questions and brims with bitterness and dissatisfaction toward a lifetime filled with disillusionment. It's understandable that he would take us in this circle, leaving us at the same place he began with a little more understanding, but it's wholly unsatisfying, even disappointing.

Why bother writing a memoir at all? The cynicism and jadedness that Maron revels in are geared toward stand-up comedy, but simply feel whiny and out of place in an actual book. Whereas Woody Allen, a similarly discontented, typically whiny stand-up comic, was able to somewhat transcend his attitudes towards the world to make actual pieces of art, Maron flounders and becomes petty – trying desperately to make a profound overall statement about something, anything. He should stick with the stage, a familiar place, where his brand of comedy and views of the world are better suited. On the stage, a joke can be unfunny and forgettable, but at least it's there and gone; it doesn't linger on the page.

■ dilated

continued from page 5

they've mastered the art of interacting with a crowd and making sure that the time between acts is short and the performance is high-energy. No matter what coast one may be on, they're in for a terrific show. And Dilated is the type of group that can only get better. With the Beat Junkies adding flavor to their beats, and the lyrical duo of Evidence and Rivelence writing powerful prose, Expansion Team and the current promotional tour is only the beginning of an inevitable hip-hop empire.

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist

Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

Rock, chalk, Jayhawks visit AZ

By Jeff Lund & Connor Doyle
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

(U-WIRE) TUCSON, Ariz. – Coming into a season with high expectations, the Kansas basketball team received a rude awakening in its first game of the season. The No. 8 Jayhawks were upended by underdog Ball State in the Maui Invitational, starting a flurry of questions as to just how good the team was going to be.

The Jayhawks (2-1) were impressive in their next two games, blowing out Houston and Seton Hall by playing how many prognosticators expected them to from the beginning of the year – pounding the ball down low and spreading the court for outside shots.

How well they'll be able to do that against Arizona, however, will likely be the key to KU's game against the Wildcats Saturday in the McKale Center. UA head coach Lute Olson, for one, said he expects the Jayhawks to come into McKale Center with all cylinders firing.

"Kansas is going to create tremendous problems," Olson said. "They do a great job with offensive execution."

Topping the Wildcats' list of concerns will be the inside duo of forwards Nick Collison and Drew Gooden, both of whom are known equally for their scoring and rebounding.

Gooden – an All-America candidate – is averaging 22 points and 10 rebounds so far this season, while Collison has logged 19.7 points and nine rebounds per game.

"(Gooden and Collison) are as good a pair as there is in the country," Olson said. "They can score facing up, they are very good in the post. The matchups there will be very key for us. A lot of the time there will be freshmen guarding them."

The two are familiar to Arizona juniors Ricky Anderson, Jason Gardner and Luke Walton, who played against the Kansas duo in Nike summer camps.

"We played with Collison and Gooden," Walton said. "They are two of the best players I have ever played against. They are both really strong. Gooden can go inside or outside."

On the outside, Kansas will use a three-guard set of Kirk Hinrich, Aaron Miles and Jeff Boschee. Olson said the Wildcats will have to be wary of the perimeter capabilities of the three, especially Boschee, who is hitting a team-high 46 percent of his three-point attempts.

"They create problems on the perimeter because all three guards are capable of hitting threes and putting the ball on the floor," Olson said.

On the other side of the ball, Kansas employs high-pressure defensive schemes designed to wear down its opponents. In their first three games, the Jayhawks have tallied 33 steals, allowing just 62 points in their last game against Seton Hall. Olson said the onus will be on the Arizona guards to minimize turnovers.

"Defensively, they create most of their problems in this stage of the season because they can hit you will full-court pressure, half-court trap, double-teams," Olson said. "Those are the kinds of things that later in the season you are more capable of dealing with. The key thing is they hit you with so much [that] taking care of the ball will be huge in the outcome of the game. The second thing that will be huge is the boards."

Though conference lines separate the teams, the Wildcats and Jayhawks have a history of epic battles both on and off the court. KU and Arizona often compete for the same high-school players.

"Anytime you're an elite program in the elite status, you will draw attention to the top recruits," Olson said. "Most of [the recruits] went to Kansas. [KU Head Coach] Roy Williams is a good friend, though. He does things the right way."

Among the recruits that chose Jayhawk crimson and blue, as opposed to Wildcat red and blue, are former All-Americans Raef LaFrentz, Scott Pollard and Jacques Vaughn, and current players Nick Collison and freshman guard Aaron Miles.

One Kansas player who did not pick Lawrence over Tucson was UA freshman Dennis Latimore.

"We would never have gotten him if he hadn't been out here [for high school in Phoenix] his sophomore year and realized that he didn't have to freeze his tail off every day in the winter," Olson said.

Latimore said he is excited to battle a team from his former state.

"It feels good," Latimore said. "This is what it's all about, playing the best teams in the nation. We have to play scrappy and show that we want to win the game more than they do."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Pumped up

Despite Amber Sneed's excitement here, the Minutewomen have not had all that much to celebrate, as yesterday's loss dropped them to 1-4 on the year.

Stripe offers not much charity for Maryland

By Patrick Stevens
The Diamondback (U. Maryland)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE PARK, Md. – In a usual season, concerns about a basketball team's conditioning, defensive tenacity and ability to turn a base offense crisply are among the questions that normally come up.

But in its first five contests, the No. 5 Maryland men's team has addressed all of those potentially dicey problems. Instead, its most glaring deficiency is perhaps the most fundamental aspect of the game: free throw shooting.

The Terps' production at the free throw line has ranged from adequate (18-for-28 against Temple Nov. 9) to awful (4-for-12 a day earlier in a loss to Arizona) and nearly everything in between. For the year, the Terrapins are 65-of-118 (55 percent) from the free throw stripe, easily the worst in the ACC.

"You have any suggestions, I'm open to them," coach Gary Williams said. "I don't know how that works. I've been doing this a long time. The great thing is that book is still there [to write]. If anyone ever figures it out, they're going to make a ton of money."

Some of the woes could be expected with the histories of some players. Senior center Lonny Baxter, who leads the Terps in free throw attempts, is a career 59-percent foul shooter but has tailed off to 54 percent this season.

Other drop-offs are more glaring. Sophomore forward Chris Wilcox shot 61 percent at the free throw line last year, but has plummeted to 32 percent (8-of-25) this month. Juniors Tahj Holden and Drew Nicholas are also well below their career averages, although neither has taken more than eight foul shots this year.

Even senior forward Byron Mouton has suffered from the team's foul line freefall. A career 76 percent shooter entering the year, Mouton is 6-for-14 (43 percent) as the first month of the year comes to an end.

"It's kind of strange. I've been practicing and [Monday] I shot 100 free throws and made 94, 95, 96 of them," Mouton said. "I think it's just a mental thing. I look at it as a disease. When one person misses free throws, everybody misses."

Junior point guard Steve Blake also believes the opposite – that a string of successful free throws is just as contagious as an epidemic of poor foul shooting.

"I think if one guy just starts making free throws, if Chris just starts making them or Tonny just starts making them, I think it'll just catch on and everyone else will start making their shots," Blake said.

The problems haven't affected the team's entire rotation. "If we get the right guys on the line at the end of the game, we're going to shoot good free throws even though our team free throw percentage might not be great," Williams said.

Shannon Crooks, pictured here at the line, has garnered 14.3 points per game thus far, leading the Minutemen in scoring. He will try and improve that number this Saturday when UMass travels down south to take on North Carolina State.

■ hoop

continued from page 10

he uses what he has well." Lappas said of his sophomore forward who has already scored more points this season than he did all of last year. "He knows how much space to give a guy, and that is important."

At the other end of the court, the Minutemen will look to expose the Wolfpack's lack of size and experience on the interior with their own two big men, Micah Brand and Kitwana Rhymer. The duo comes into the game averaging more than 22 points and 12 rebounds between them, numbers they will look to expand upon on Saturday.

"I'd like to get Micah and Kit involved early in the game so that they can take advantage of [N.C. State's lack of size and experience.]" Lappas said.

Josh Powell, the reigning ACC Rookie of the Week, will be given the task of stopping one of these two down on the blocks. He registered just six points on 2-of-6 shooting and five boards on Tuesday against Ohio State, and UMass will be hoping that he has a similar off night on Saturday.

The other key for UMass at the offensive end will be Crooks. The senior guard is the only Minuteman to score in double figures in all three games so far this season. He is playing a team-high 35 minutes per game, averaging a team-high 14.3 points per contest as well as leading the squad in steals and assists. Perhaps the most pleasant surprise for Crooks this season is his 42-of three-point percentage, almost 16 percent better than in his first two years in Amherst.

All the action gets underway from the Entertainment and Sports Arena at 2:30 on Saturday afternoon.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

549-RENT

- Cars • Mini Vans
- Trucks • SUV's
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
- MHEC Rates

(On bus route)

www.umass.edu/umim

UMass INTRAMURAL SPORTS

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Spring Basketball (M/W/C)..... 12/3

Mandatory clinics for spring basketball officials are scheduled in two parts. Clinics are scheduled for January 28th & 29th at 6pm and for January 30th & 31th at 7pm. Call for requirements and locations.

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!

OPEN 7 DAYS
Delivery Available

ICHIBAN

Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)

What is the Difference?

#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice.
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"

#2 Tatami Room
- Cozy & private
- Parties available up to 25 ppl

10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)

Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up

Reserve for Karaoke

UMass Ballroom Dance Club Presents

The Snowflake Ball

Celebrate the end of the semester by dancing the night away!

In the Campus Center Auditorium

Wednesday, December 5, 2001
7:00-8:30 Dance Lessons
8:30-Midnight General Dancing

$5 for students
$7 for adults
Refreshments will be served!

No partner or experience necessary
All are welcome!!!

Any Questions? Contact Danielle at 546-1938 or Drmdancers@aol.com or Rachel at rmandell@student.umass.edu
Visit our website at www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom

DJ solo Sal

Every Sunday
Live Music

positive ID required

McMurphy's

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978.

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport. Just like a Chevy Tracker. 5 spd 4X4 loaded 75 mpg asking $4,999 call 549-4506

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

1985 Olds Calais New Tires 30 mpg Good Condition $700.00 O.B.O. 413-250-1826

AUTO FOR SALE

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Clean 93 Subaru Legacy Wagon 103k, AT, loaded, green. Perfect for travel! $3500 B.O. 413-330-0688

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Several P/T Temp. positions The Umass Textbook Annex has several cashier openings to work our book buyback (Dec. 13-22). Interested candidates should stop by the Annex and fill out an applicaion.

EMPLOYMENT

Native Speakers of Japanese needed for listening experiments $7/hr 545-6837

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location. Call FMI 888-423-5381

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, pagemaker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare: Handicapped experience, references, housework, car, 6/20hrs/wk. $10/hr 413-247-5800

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR SALE

Refrigerator for Sale 4.0 cubic foot Haier Refrigerator with freezer. Little more than a year old and in near perfect condition. Has a can dispenser in the door and it is lockable. Asking price: $100, but price is negotiable. Call Mike at 546-6791

FOR SALE

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

Room Available for Jan. 1st. walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-3492 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

1 Room in 2 Bedroom Apt. Located in Boulders on bus route. Call Mike 253-0911

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for two females to share a one bedroom apt. in Townhouse of Amherst. Please call for more information 549-8162

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom -Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

ROOM WANTED

2 Girls looking 4 winter sublet call 546-2609

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Martin's Auto Saab & Volvo Martin's Auto Repair ASE Certified. Reasonable rates, friendly service. 323-6362

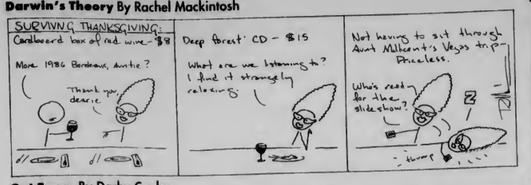
Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN



Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

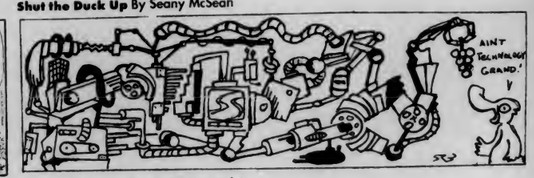
Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

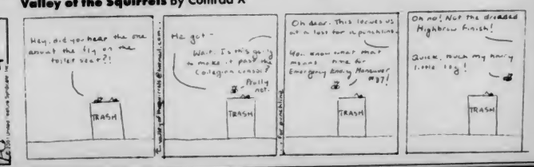
Penthouse Blues By Mike

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Monty By Jim Meddick



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"There are certain rules about a war and rule number one is young men die. And rule number two is doctors can't change rule number one."

– M*A*S*H

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 44	HIGH: 58 LOW: 36	HIGH: 49 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21) – You've been asked to take part in something that is not a "sure thing," but you're confident that your involvement can better the odds. So bust out your steroids and inject that greyhound!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) – It won't take you long to figure out today just where you stand and where you want to be come nightfall. Freezeframe!
AQUARIUS (Jan.20 – Feb. 18) – It is a good day to keep your fingers crossed and hope for the best. Not that it's going to turn out that way, but it'll at least make you feel better.
PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) – The cosmos are in a tizzy over the cancellation of Bob Patterson. Better stay in bed.
ARIES (March 21 – April 19) – You're going to step on a crack today, but fortunately it won't break your mother's back.
TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) – Hmm, your future is cloudy. I'm seeing flashing colors and strange lights. That may just be the Sudafed kicking in, though.
GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) – Today will be trying, but don't worry; the jury won't convict.
CANCER (June 21 – July 22) – Make sure you have a chicken feather on you at all times today. Don't ask questions, just obey, you mindless peon!
LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) – It'll be essential to get messages sent ahead of time today if you expect total victory in your battle with Skeletor.
VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) – This is a good day for hammering out an agreement with someone who has been at odds with you for some time. Can't we all just get along?
LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) – What you get today is not likely to be what you originally bargained for, and some adjustment is sure to be necessary by day's end. One size fits all – those liars.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov 21) – Work may have you traveling far from home today. Take a note from the Boy Scouts and 'Be Prepared.'

Say What?! By Frank Cassella

(Back in the day, they had silent comics)

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Pot Roast

Fish & Chips

Spinach Noodle Bake (vegetarian) (W Basics)

Wild Barley Pilaf

DINNER

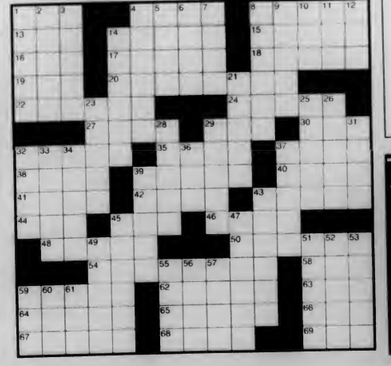
Veal Parmesan

Boston Scrod

Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E. HAMPTON 413-584-8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413-781-5742



ACROSS
1 Afternoon break
4 Carpenter's tool
8 Recur
13 Ballpark official
14 Actor Romero
15 Thick cords
16 Drink like Rover
17 City near Kyoto
18 Proverb
19 Clock numeral
20 Understate
22 Put
24 Hold up
27 Rushes off
29 NATO cousin
30 Retina cell
32 Treat wood
35 — and kin
37 Forum wear
38 Errant GI
39 Sauce with basil
40 In the course of 41 Bookish type
42 Margarita ingredient
43 Pile up, as wealth
44 Fetch
45 — and yang
46 Party-thrower's plea
48 Nevada lake
50 Stopped
54 Put at risk
58 Billiard stick
59 One on the move
62 New Orleans player
63 Goat's-hair garment
64 Upstairs
65 Flooring pieces
66 — Abner
67 Kited musician
68 "Woe is me!"
69 Favorite

DOWN
1 Dutch flower
2 Message by modem
3 Via —
4 Dwell
5 Wise — owl
6 HH Munro
7 A nanny pushes it
8 Falls
9 Alpine refrain
10 Spreadsheet pro
11 Chair part
12 WNW opposite
14 Enter
21 Utah neighbor
23 TV chef Julia
25 Bouquet
26 Hindu mystics
28 Yarn measure
29 Aquatic weasel
31 June honorees
32 Crooned
33 Peep
34 Main artery
36 Doctrine
37 Devil Rays' home
39 Wielded
43 Prevents
45 Thataway
47 Public tiffs
49 Hoist
51 Cut too short
52 Jazz's Blake
53 Handed out
55 Movie terrier
56 Fasten boards
57 — monster
58 Short snooze
60 Geisha's accessory
61 Unruly mane

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

J	O	S	H		D	O	L	L		S	W	A	T
A	L	I	B	I		A	L	E	E		O	H	I	O
V	E	N	O	M		G	I	S	T		L	O	D	E
A	S	K		P	O	G	O		S	C	A	L	E	D
		L	U	R	E		A	D	O	R	E
C	A	T	E	R	E	D		R	O	B
A	G	A	V	E			N	E	W	B	O	R	N	S
R	U	L	E		P	A	E	A	N		M	A	C	E
R	E	L	E	V	A	N	T			F	I	N	A	L
			E	I	N		P	A	R	T	I	A	L
	R	O	M	A	N	O		S	P	A	S
R	E	C	A	L	L		D	E	E	M		A	B	S
O	P	E	N		E	C	R	U		E	L	F	I	N
A	L	A	N		S	P	U	D		R	I	A	T	A
M	Y	N	A		S	U	M	O		P	R	E	P

12-15-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Tod.tv Staff

Night Editor	Ken Campbell
Photo Technician	Martha Oliva
Copy Editor	Matt Brady
Production Supervisor	Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff	Alicia Upano, Meraj Hydary, Mike Kufal

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Route to 4-0 record goes through south; Wolfpack in the way

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Hot on the heels of a 62-38 victory over the University of Oregon on Tuesday night at the Springfield Civic Center, the Massachusetts men's basketball travels down to Raleigh, N.C. for a matchup with North Carolina State on Saturday afternoon. This will be the Minutemen's first road game of the season and probably their toughest test up to this point.

"It'll be interesting to see how our younger guys respond in a different environment," UMass Head Coach Steve Lappas said. "That's why the Springfield game was good. Even though it was a favorable environment, it was still a different location, a different place. So hopefully that will help us going into a completely hostile environment on Saturday."

The Wolfpack come into the game with a 3-1 record, but were on the losing end of a sloppy 64-50 decision in their last game Tuesday night in Columbus, Ohio against Ohio State in the ACC/Big Ten Challenge. Against the Buckeyes, NCSU turned the ball over 21 times and hit just 25 percent of their field goals, including a dismal 4-27 showing from behind the arc.

Their three wins have all come at the friendly confines of the Entertainment and Sports Arena and were all against weaker competition. But despite N.C. State's struggles against quality competition, Lappas and Co. know that they will be in for a fight on Saturday afternoon.

"They run a very Princeton-like offense, they're a very good slashing team and they back door cut very well," Lappas said. "Yet they are also a good three-point shooting team."

Leading that "Princeton-like offense" will be a pair of guards, senior Anthony Grundy and freshman Julius Hodge. Grundy leads the team in scoring with 15.5 points per game, while Hodge, one of the most highly recruited high schoolers last year, is close behind averaging 12 points a contest.

If UMass is to be successful and improve to 4-0 for the first time since the 1985-86 season, it will need to stop those two from having a major impact. Shannon Crooks will likely be given the task of containing Grundy, while sophomore Willie Jenkins, one of the biggest surprises for the Minutemen this season, will be asked to shut down Hodge.

"Willie is a pretty smart defender

Turn to HOOP, D-3:20

Hustle plays, such as this Kitwana Rhymer dive to the floor, have helped UMass get out to a 3-0 record

Women's hoop gives early holiday present

Jen Butler goes up strong for two. The junior center totaled 12 points and 13 rebounds in her squad's 56-49 loss to James Madison last night.

Falls in yet another hard-fought contest; Turnovers and foul shooting main issues

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

James Madison	56
UMass	49

In the holiday spirit, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has made the 2001-02 campaign a season of giving. Thus far on the year, the Minutewomen have politely handed game after game to the opposition, in part by turning the ball over 25.2 times a game.

Last night, James Madison was the latest benefactor of the UMass turnover machine, taking advantage of 27 Maroon and White gifts to pull out the 56-49 victory. It was the typical Minutewoman contest, in which the team used good defense and rebounding to keep the game close before a lack of offense and numerous miscues finally caught up to it in the late going.

"The same people are making the same mistakes," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We have kids who are scatterbrained sometimes."

With the loss, UMass dropped to 1-4 on the year, while the Dukes used the win to improve to 4-1.

"They made shots when they needed to and we lost some of our composure," O'Brien said about yesterday's game. "If you can't make your open shots and if you miss your free throws then you're not going to win, and that has been our problem all year."

Early on, it looked like the Maroon and White was finally conquering its offensive demons, as it rushed out to a 20-13 lead. By halftime, JMU was only able to make up one of those points, and the two teams went into the break with UMass up 24-18.

Defensively, it was a remarkable first half effort for the Minutewomen, as the Dukes had previously been averaging more than 56 points per frame.

In the second half, however, things quickly turned around, as James Madison used a 7-0 run to regain the lead.

The two squads battled it out evenly for the next few minutes, until the Dukes used a 5-0 run to take a 47-42 advantage with two minutes left. Amber Sneed and Jen Butler kept the game close down the stretch for the Maroon and White, each hitting a clutch basket to close the JMU lead to two with under a minute remaining, but when the Minutewomen were forced to foul, the Dukes hit their free throws to pull away for the seven-point win.

UMass junior center Butler led her team with 12 points and 13 rebounds on the night, but she did most of her damage in the first frame (eight points, 10 rebounds) and was absolutely woeful from the line (0-for-7).

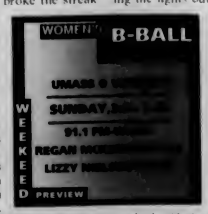
"[Butler] kept us in the game with defense and rebounding," O'Brien said. "But she has got to hit her free throws."

Suri Tuivandi chipped in with eight points and Sneed and Nekole Smith each had seven, but overall, it was yet another tough offensive performance for the Maroon and White.

"We have to clean up our offense," O'Brien said. "But we did do some of the things we wanted to do. In the first couple of games we weren't running our offense correctly and now we are running it correctly, but we are missing our shots."

The Minutewomen get a chance to stop being so generous this Sunday when they take on Vermont.

"Everyone has been struggling," O'Brien said. "We just have to keep on fighting and see what happens."



Minutewomen to hunt for Catamounts

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

These two teams started out the season heading in completely opposite directions. Through the first three games of each team's respective schedule, one team was winless and one team was undefeated.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (1-4) began the season with a frustrating three-game losing streak that included four overtime periods. The Minutewomen broke the streak Sunday with a 54-51 thriller over Clemson, but could not add to their momentum last night with a disappointing defeat against James Madison.

The University of Vermont (4-1) blew out St. Bonaventure, Canisius and Siena to open the 2001 season at 3-0. UVM was handed its only loss of the season by St. Peter's – a team that UMass went into overtime with – on the same night that the Maroon and White won its first contest. Vermont then bounced back Wednesday with an 80-60 blowout of Dartmouth.

The Minutewomen struggled with turnovers and poor shooting – both in the field and from the charity stripe – in the losses. The team's three top players in terms of minutes – juniors Jennifer Butler and Amber Sneed and freshman Katie Nelson – have each committed 18 turnovers so far this season.

It was the team's strong defense that was keeping the Maroon and White in the contests and finally held Clemson just enough to earn victory number one.

The Catamounts, meanwhile, have been shooting the lights out all season. Leading scorers Morgan Hall and Lani Boardman are both shooting around 90 percent from the free throw line and shooting a combined 15-for-28 (54 percent) from beyond arc. The Vermont defense has been solid as well, allowing just 57 points per contest.

Hall, the team's best player statistically, is leading Vermont in most categories, including scoring (15.4 ppg), rebounding (7.4 per game), steals (seven) and is tied for the lead in blocks (four).

Boardman, a 6-foot-1-inch freshman, is coming off a 9-for-9 performance from the line against Dartmouth. Usually the first person off the bench for Head Coach Keith Cieplicki, Boardman is second on the team in scoring at 10.2 ppg.

Heading into the weekend, the Maroon and White is out-rebounding its opponents by more than six per game behind Butler's 11 boards per contest. But beating the Catamounts to the glass will be no easy task, as the team is averaging an impressive 43 rebounds per game.

There is no dominating rebounder on the Vermont squad, just a bunch of players that can collectively dominate the blocks. UVM has four players with five or more rebounds per game and three more at three per game or better.

While the Catamounts have taken almost twice as many three-point attempts as the Minutewomen (73-37), no Vermont player has taken as many threes – Hall leads with 18 – as UMass' Nelson (20), despite having played one more game than the 5-foot-7-inch point guard. The UVM squad is made up of a lot of women that will not hesitate in taking the long-range jumper (five players have shot nine or more threes this season.)

Butler has accounted for seven of UMass' 10 blocks this season. The Brooklyn, N.Y. native has also made 14 steals thus far.

Sunday will be UVM Women's Basketball Poster Day at Patrick Gymnasium. The game will be the second half of a doubleheader that also features the men's game against Lehigh.

DECEMBER

Owen Wilson tries to use force against Potter and friends... Read about it in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass beat NC state 69-62. Read about it in Sports!

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 59 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, December 3, 2001

COURTESY WWW.JESSEMARTIN.NET

Martin will set sail this spring on his 54-foot yacht, Kijana. Care to join the crew?

OUT TO SEA WITH JESSE MARTIN

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

At age 18, Jesse Martin did what no one else his age had ever done; he sailed alone, unassisted, non-stop, around the world. This year he looks forward to making a second trip, this time with four crewmates. One spot has left to be filled, and Martin would like to fill this spot with an American college student.

Martin's first journey inspired him to write the book, Lionheart: A journey of the human spirit, co-written by Ed Gannon, a writer of the Herald Sun. The second journey "The Journey of Kijana" has been named for the ship the crew will live, work, and sail on. The Journey of Kijana will be the basis for a television documentary series and will produce The Global Classroom, an interactive online classroom program allowing students around the world to watch and interact with the crew. The Global Classroom will become a classroom program offline as well, containing live footage of the trip, and curricular opportunities focusing on cultural, ecological, environmental and scientific studies.

Martin named his ship, a 54-foot old-style yacht, Kijana because it translates to "young people" from Swahili.

"She made my heart flutter when I stepped on her teak deck for the first time," said Martin. "She is a marvel."

The five crewmates of Kijana will all be between the ages of 18 and 23, giving the boat a young Captain and crew. Martin will lead his crew for two years beginning this January and ending in July of 2004. The trip will depart from Melbourne, traveling first to the Queensland Coast, then to the Spice Islands of Indonesia, onto Sri Lanka, India, across Africa through Kenya and the Congo, to the Amazon River and onto South America. From there the trip will travel through Venezuela, the United States, the Caribbean, the Galapagos Islands and Ecuador. From Chile, the group will travel to Easter Island, Pitcairn, Tahiti, Samoa and Papua New Guinea.

"This is not a simple holiday cruise," explained Martin. "We will be out to see the world that can't be taught in a classroom and to experience the excitement of scrapping through situations where it really counts."

Born in Germany to Australian parents, Martin lived his first years in the remote Daintree rainforest in Far North Queensland, Australia. When his parents divorced, Martin moved with his mother and younger brother to Melbourne. Their father, an active sailor, visited five years later asking to take Martin and his brother on a sailing adventure to Cape York. Martin and his brother took a five-week course at the Port Melbourne Yacht Club in order to build their sailing and safety skills in preparation for the trip. This would become Martin's first experience with the seas, an expedition that would excite and addict him.

"This was the adventure that got me dreaming in the first place...and so the first idea to sail around the world was born, and boy was it exciting thinking about the prospect of it," wrote Martin.

Soon after his trip to Cape York, Martin began serious preparation to sail around the world. His mother, fully supporting him, took a second mortgage on their home to buy the boat for the trip.

After years of planning, Martin was ready to leave. The morning of his departure no materials had been checked, and he'd spent a total of three hours navigating his ship alone. He

Turn to SAIL page 3

Another casualty reported

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

A U.S. soldier supporting Operation Enduring Freedom has died in Uzbekistan.

The Department of Defense has not released the soldier's name pending notification of the soldier's family. While the death is not the result of enemy action, the incident is under investigation, the Pentagon said.

The death comes on the heels of CIA agent John Michael Spann, who died in a prison uprising at Mazar-e Sharif. Rumsfeld commented on Spann's death to reporters.

"[Spann] knew the risks of his profession, and he accepted them on behalf of his country. We certainly are proud of him, and his family is right to call him a hero," Rumsfeld said. "And let there be no doubt: there will be further casualties in this campaign – in Afghanistan and elsewhere. There will be other downturns involving our forces. We may have troops captured or killed. There will – but it will not deter us for a day or for a moment from our objectives."

Taliban and al Qaeda forces now control only a "small segment" of Afghanistan, secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said.

"Coalition forces continue to apply pressure on Taliban and al Qaeda forces around Kandahar, and they are unquestionably having an effect. The Taliban can no longer freely move around the country. They're finding it increasingly difficult to manage their remaining forces," Rumsfeld said. "Ironically, however, as the size of the Taliban real estate diminishes, the danger to coalition forces may actually be increasing. As the president said earlier this week, the campaign against terrorism has entered a dangerous phase.

"Every day coalition forces face difficulties and dangers, but they have already made a difference in the lives of hundreds of thousands of Afghans who have suffered under years of brutal repression," Rumsfeld added. "And before the fight is over, they will make a difference in the lives of hundreds of thousands or more of the Afghan people."

The goal of Operation Enduring Freedom has not changed, Rumsfeld explained.

"Our objective remains unchanged," Rumsfeld said. "It's to put pressure on the Taliban and the al Qaeda in a variety of ways, in what clearly will be over a sustained period, until they're not a viable force and they're no longer capable of terrorizing people and destroying lives in Afghanistan or elsewhere."

The Pentagon confirmed that the number of American troops in Afghanistan has gone up.

"Over recent days the number of U.S. forces in both the North and the South have increased," Rumsfeld said.

More than 100 planes were used in last Thursday's air strikes.

"Approximately 110 strike aircraft flew missions in Afghanistan. They focused primarily on targets in and around Kandahar and also in the cave and tunnel complexes near lalalabad," General Peter Pace, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said. "Humanitarian relief, food distribution – the 34,000 that were delivered yesterday brought to over two million the number of rations that have been delivered by the military."

The Marines deployed in the South have been setting up a base and reinforcing their positions, Pace explained.

"The Marines have continued to improve their forward-operating base location in Southern Afghanistan," Pace said. "About a thousand Marines there now. And they will continue to operate from that for the foreseeable future."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

HELENE C. STIKKEL/DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld (right) and Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Peter Pace provides reporters with an operational update on the missions in Afghanistan during a Pentagon press briefing.

Fac senate faces budget realities

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The state has made $650 million dollars in budget cuts, cutting $50 million dollars from the budget for higher education; the Faculty Senate was addressed Thursday by Senator Stanley Rosenberg on how this will effect the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Following Rosenberg's presentation senate members were addressed by Dr. Robert Levin Chair of the Service Departments Committee and Kenneth Toong, Director of University Dining and Retail Food Services on their plans for changes at UMass Dining Commons and eateries.

Senator Stanley Rosenberg spoke to the Faculty Senate concerning the "Current Budget Conditions: State Finances and How They Relate to Higher Education." Rosenberg began his presentation by explaining the numerical facts of the state's current economy; how they are handling the recession, and what cuts have been decided for the University.

"We are in a recession," began Rosenberg going onto explain that overall Governor Swift and the state's legislature have made a total of $650 million worth of cuts in the state's budget for the coming year.

According to Rosenberg the generally agreed upon numbers show a $1.4 billion deficit for the fiscal year. October of this years revenues came in at $120 million below last October's revenues, showing that despite hope that October would prove more economically advantageous than September of 2001 had been, the difference was not large and was not enough to bring back some stability in the economy.

Rosenberg reported that many economists believe that our economy has bottomed out, and that within the coming months we may see vast improvements. However, he agreed that many economists disagree saying our economy has not yet reached bottom and things may continue to grow worse. For UMass, cuts have been severe; because UMass - Amherst receives the largest portion of the state's budget for institutions of higher education it takes the largest cuts when the economy is in recessions.

"We are all deeply concerned whether there will be another year of this," Rosenberg said, adding that the state had not used its entire "rain day savings" in case the upcoming fiscal year remains as dry.

The budget for higher education took the second worst hit according to Rosenberg. Local Aid was suffered the largest cuts from the state. Budget cuts for higher education came in at $50 million.

Due to budget cuts half of the Educational and Reference Materials (ERM) has been lost, affecting the UMass libraries ability to maintain their research materials, and periodicals collection. Initially it was thought that the ERM budget would be decreased from $14 million to $11 million, howev-

GERALD ENG/COLLEGIAN

Closing Time?

Construction halted at the Eisenberg School of Management on a wet and gloomy Friday afternoon.

Search for missing professor continues

By Dawn Moore
Collegian Correspondent

The FBI is monitoring the investigation into the disappearance of Harvard biologist Don C. Wiley that has now been missing for sixteen days.

Wiley, 57, was last seen in Memphis, Tenn., where he was attending the annual meeting of the Scientific Advisory Board of the St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. His car was found Nov. 16 on a bridge over the Mississippi River with a full tank of gas and the key still in the ignition.

He had left the Peabody Hotel just four hours before his rental car was discovered. He was supposed to have met his wife and two children that same day in Cambridge, Mass.

FBI agents took an interest in Wiley's disappearance because of his expertise and "given our state of affairs post-Sept. 11", FBI agent William Woerner told The Boston Globe. With the renewed concern over biological warfare police have made statements that they have not ruled out the possibility that Wiley was kidnapped for these reasons. The professor studied deadly viruses, including the Ebola virus.

However the Memphis police department made a statement last week explaining that they believed that Wiley had committed suicide because of the location of his abandoned vehicle. There have also been rumors to that effect claiming that Wiley was depressed because he was passed over for the Nobel Prize in 1996. His colleges and friends however do not believe that suicide was the reason for his disappearance and continue to look for other answers.

Final lab reports on Wiley's car will not be available for at least a week.

Wiley's wife, Karen Valgeirsdottir, doesn't think his disappearance is related to his work because most of it is available in books and on the Internet.

"That just doesn't seem plausible," Valgeirsdottir told The Boston Globe.

His sister-in-law, Susan Wiley, who lives in the Memphis area, has said it is uncharacteristic for Wiley not to leave a note.

Days before his disappearance, he left a note for his 85-year-old father telling him when he planned to return from a jog, she said.

Wiley is a Harvard biochemistry and biophysics professor and is considered a national expert on Ebola, HIV and influenza. Ebola is a highly contagious virus that kills 50 to 90 percent of its victims; there is no vaccine. Ebola viruses are found in Central Africa.

The source of the virus remains unknown. A patient suffering from Ebola, as one doctor put it, "literally melts in front of your eyes."

In 1999, Wiley, and another Harvard professor, Dr. Jack Strominger, won the Japan Prize for their discoveries of how the immune system protects humans from infections.

The last disappearance of a professor from Harvard occurred in 1987 when Lawrence Kohlberg, an instructor in the Graduate School went missing for several months. His body was later found in Boston Harbor.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this article.

Queer Café

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Stonewall Center gave members of the UMass community a chance to perform at its annual Queer Cafe and Open Mic last Thursday night in the Graduate Student Lounge.

Performers from a diverse array of backgrounds, talents, and performance styles participated in the event, which included a slam poet, a musician/comedian, performance artists, and a few singers.

Several participants put on offbeat performance art pieces. A highlight in performance art took place when a group of two men calling themselves Rod Stewart performed a selection of Christmas carols in their unique style: one man sang a medley of carols on a deliberately out of tune guitar, while his co-performer wrapped him like a present, with a roll of Christmas gift paper and Scotch tape.

Rod Stewart also substituted their own lyrics for those of the traditional songs, such as "round your virgin girlfriend's uncool...sleeping on a subway train," during "Silent Night."

The unorthodox artists were not always warmly received. During his performance, a singer introducing himself as Dave pointed to a random audience member and said, "This next song is dedicated to that guy right there!"

The man left.

"Well, I guess I can't play it anymore," Dave yelled after him, and left the stage to confused applause.

Somewhat more orthodox performances included slam poets who wrote provocatively about the transgender experience. One selection, from a slam poet calling himself Andrew, was written, he said, to "challenge your conceptions of who you're supposed to be."

Another poet's selection explored the complicated nature of transgender relationships. It included the equally complicated line, "you were my first lesbian lover until you became my first gay boyfriend and I was your straight girlfriend until I became your first gay boyfriend."

Generally, the performances were offbeat, informal and colorful in the relaxed atmosphere of the cafe. One performer, introducing himself as Scott, chose to sing a song from the TV cartoon show Animaniacs that lists every country in the world. He was given an enthusiastic ovation for his performance. The evening's host, Erin, sang a few original compositions, accompanying herself on the guitar. Another man introduced as Michael gave his first-ever public performance, of an original a capella vocal composition he called "Number 41."

Performer Nathaniel Glasser, a junior Music Major, blended humor with his musical performance. "Call out your favorite Billy Joel tune," he said to the audience.

"Italian Restaurant!" someone requested.

"Okay, as long as it's from Greatest Hits Volume I," Glasser yelled back, to laughter from the audience.

Finally, a poet called Joseph finished out the program with a lengthy poem that explored a number of facets of gay identity, including depression, confusion, gender performance and politics.

"All I want is to be worth more than the lies I tell myself," Joseph read. "I have learned and unlearned how to at and how to be, and sometimes, still, I forget.

"In the end it's about being ourselves," he concluded. "Becoming ourselves."

International Briefs

By Arjun Mahalingam and Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

Germany Four Afghan factions representing different ethnicities, met at a United Nations (UN)-sponsored meeting on Nov. 30. The three factions other than the Northern Alliance, are the Rome group, representing Afghanistan's former king Mohammed Zahir Shah, the Cyprus Group, representing Afghan exiles in Iran, and the Peshawar group, representing the Afghan refugees in Pakistan.

They had agreed on basic principles to share the controlling power in Afghanistan, but they have not yet reached an understanding on other details, according to Naftali Gals.

"We are inching forward here, inch by inch, towards an agreement that is acceptable to all four," said Ahmad Fawzi, the spokesman for Secretary General Kofi Annan's Special Representative for Afghanistan Lakhdar Brahimi. Brahimi was appointed to this special post on Oct. 3.

His position-leads will the overall authority of the UN in human rights and political decisions made relating to Afghanistan.

The Northern Alliance had submitted a proposal for an interim government to be established for three months before a Loya Jirga (Afghan council) will take over the control, UN sources believe.

They also said that the Northern Alliance asked for an end to the legality of President Burhanuddin Rabbani's former government. Rabbani's government is still internationally recognized as Afghanistan's government.

Since the Northern Alliance faction had not yet agreed on names put forward by the other delegations, the talks "have slowed," according to James Dobbins, the U.S. special representative for Afghanistan.

"We are hoping that we can have a final agreement here on the composition of both entities, both the supreme council and the interim administration" said Ahmad Fawzi. "The representatives[see the urgency of a handover of power in Kabul, and they think that these things should be formed in Bonn."

European Women Leaders and Afghan Women representatives also held a meeting. Britt Thorn of Sweden, Anne-Marie Lizin of Belgium and Karin Junker of Germany were the European Women representatives.

Fawzi said there was a "long suffering and suppression of women during the long years of war, especially during the past five years, they were glad that they were now going to have the opportunity to resume their traditional and historical roles as active members of Afghanistan society in all fields."

UN Secretary General Kofi Annan, talking to reporters after his meeting with US President George W. Bush, also said that the talks in Bonn have started off well.

China The Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) of Taiwan won the parliamentary elections, defeating the dominating Kuomintang Party (KMT) for the first time since 1949. The DDP took 87 seats, compared to KMT's 68.

"[We] gained an unprecedented victory," DPP chairman Frank Hsieh said.

Issues of recession, high unemployment, and possible entrance to the World Trade Organization were important matters in this election.

President Chen Shuibian who is the president of the DPP took the presidential seat away from KMT for the first time last year.

Now the parliamentary election has given the party a further edge.

Taiwan separated itself from China in 1949 after the communists take over, and DPP wants to seek independence for Taiwan. However, KMT does not want Taiwan to be independent and Beijing threatened to attack Taiwan.

The people voted more freely in this election because the Beijing's government did not threaten the voters as it did in the previous years.

"Beijing should respect the results of the elections," in Chongpin said who is a Taiwanese China policymaker. "It's the will of the people."

Analysts said this election has changed the situation for reunification possibilities.

Israel After the suicide bombing that left 26 Israelis dead, the Israeli government put a block on Palestinian areas in the West Bank.

The Palestinian Authority also declared a state of emergency in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and Yasser Arafat is faced with a lot of pressure to capture the attackers.

President George Bush told Arafat that he needed to find the attackers and punish them.

The attacks started on Saturday in Ben Yehuda, an area in Jerusalem with lots of cafes restaurants.

There were two suicide attacks and a car bombing that followed, which killed 10 people and injured 170. Another car bomb nearby also exploded.

These attacks continued on Sunday when Palestinian gunmen killed one Israeli and wounded five others.

Another suicide bomber blew up a bus the same day in Haifa where 15 were killed and 100 left wounded.

"This is a moment where the advocates of peace in the Middle East must rise up and fight terror," President Bush said.

"The only way to defend against terrorists is to go after the terrorists," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said.

The militant group Hamas claimed the attacks were their doing, but the Israeli government who said he had a "total lack of action in the domain of fighting terror" has criticized Arafat.

The Palestinian government does not agree with the attack and denounces the actions from the Hamas, and the police arrested Mohammed al-Hindi who is a top member of the Islamic Jihad.

The Hamas and the Islamic Jihad has threatened to act against the arrests.

Afghanistan The United Nations is planning to talk with Afghan groups on Monday to discuss their political future.

"We're aiming for hopefully a clean text by tomorrow morning," UN spokesman Ahmad Fawzi said in a news conference. "The missing link is the list of names."

The UN is hoping to set up a temporary board with a maximum of 30 members, a supreme court, and a commission to organize a grand assembly.

They also want a multinational peacekeeping force and does not want to grant amnesty to war criminals.

Some major members of the Northern Alliance could take a few key roles such as foreign affairs and the interior.

A list of names will also be needed from the factions, of all the different candidates.

Diplomats said the alliance, which is made up of Tajiks, Uzbeks and Hazaras agreed that a Pashtun would head the board.

"When it comes down to names it gets very difficult," Fawzi said.

The Northern Alliance Foreign Minister said he wasn't planning to run as leader.

There is a possibility, however, that the former king, Mohammed Zahir Shah would nominate a candidate formally.

"Even before entering Kabul we had made it clear that our intention...would not be to prolong our own tenure or to monopolize power, but rather to use this opportunity, to seize this opportunity for achieving a lasting political settlement," he said.

Colombia Twelve people were killed in Northern Colombia by suspected right wing paramilitaries, according to Colombian Authorities. Many of the victims are from Montebello, 135 miles Northwest of Bogota. Four of the bodies were found near Turnesis.

The letters "AUC" were marked on one of the bodies, according the the Mayor of Montebello, Jose Maria Mejia. AUC is the acronym for the banned United Self-Defense Forces of Columbia.

The National Liberation Army controls most of the areas in Colombia.

A civil war has been continuing in Colombia for over 37 years, with the National Liberation Army on one side, and the AUC on the other. In other news in Colombia, the Colombian government did not accept the proposal by another rebel group to give a dying boy's father for an imprisoned guerilla. The boy, 12-year-old Andres Felipe Perez, has cancer, and doctors believe he would die soon.

He had pleaded with the guerilla faction to release his father so they could meet before it is too late. Human rights activists supported the government's decision.

"By demanding payback for a simple humanitarian gesture," Eduardo Cifuentes, Colombia's top human rights official, told the Associated Press Saturday. "They're extorting an entire country."

An Internet site run by people supporting the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia (FARC), posted a letter by a rebel commander on it's website. The rebel stated that the police officer would be freed if the government releases Ignacio Gonzales Perdomo.

Zimbabwe The government proposed a new measure to license journalists, which would exclude foreign correspondents from working in the country, Journalists plan to fight the new regime.

"This must be fought with all the legal powers we have to prevent it seeing the light of day," Publisher Trevor Ncube said who published two of the country's independent papers, the Zimbabwe Independent and the Sunday Standard.

He called the move a dictatorship and secretary general of the Zimbabwe Union of Journalists, Basildon Peta, said it was unconstitutional.

"Any attempt by the government to license journalists flies in the face of our constitutional rights of free expression and our right to earn a living," he said.

The Access to Information and Privacy Bill prevents foreign correspondents from working in the country, and it would also prevent unofficial reports on cabinet discussions to be printed.

Journalists fear that this new regime will ultimately put an end to a free press, giving the government control of what gets broadcasted and written.

The country's media is divided between people who are loyal to President Robert Mugabe and those who are critical of him.

The Daily News, which is the only private daily newspaper was bombed in January after Information Minister Jonathan Moyo made a statement saying he would silence it, calling it an "enemy of the state."

Ncube said executives of the private media are trying to devise a response to these measures.

Russia – A Russian Military Cargo plane crashed near Okhotsk on Dec 2., leaving 18 people dead. The Russians guards operated the Illyushin Il-76. Dmitry Strashenkov, a spokesman for the emergency situations ministry in Khabarovsk, Eastern Russia, told the associated press.

The Illyushin Il-76 is a four-engine jet used for passengers as well as the military.

The plane was going to make an emergency landing near Novaya Inya, 65 miles east of Okhotsk after the fire broke out, according to the Interfax news agency.

The Emergency Ministry said that the plane was headed to Andir from Bratsk and was at an elevation of 29,530 feet when the fire broke out, according to CNN.

The immediate cause of the fire is not yet known. "According to our information from the Okhotsk region, the plane exploded in mid-air," Valery Sukhuborov, deputy chief of the Emergencies Ministry's far eastern region, told TV6 television. "People heard the sound of two explosions and saw flashes."

Four cargo handlers, nine crewmembers and five men in the Russian Border Guards Service were on board. The airplane broke into three parts and parts of the wreckage were still on fire when the rescue workers arrived, according to Russian officials.

The plane was flying over the Kamchatka peninsula when the trouble started.

An engine failure in a Mi-26 helicopter resulted in a fall of around 3,000 feet, injuring 18 servicemen, on Dec 1. An Illyushin 18 passenger plane crashed on Nov. 19, killing 27 people on board.

Information for this story was obtained from CNN.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzes-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniwski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
549-RENT
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
On bus routes

The Mercantile
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles Chams
Incense Baskets Merry X'mas Mugs Paper Lampshades Cards Gloves Chinese Shoes
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
Dec. Hours Mon-Sat 10 am-9 pm-Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

the Ground Round of Hadley
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL
BOOMER MUGS only $2.79
Budweiser BUD LIGHT MICHELOB Ultra
Nightly Specials
Sun.. Mon.. Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings -$3.00
9 TV's, Smoking Section, Monday Night Football

COUSINS MARKET
11 E Pleasant Street
(Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International
OCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Colleges tighten alcohol restrictions

By Sam J. Cooper
The Daily Princetonian (Princeton U.)

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. – Princeton University students are not the only ones fighting for their right to party. Administrations on college campuses nationwide are cracking down on alcohol consumption and binge drinking, but according to students, administrators turn a blind eye to illegal behavior and often fail to enforce their own lenient and ambiguous anti-alcohol policies.

At Yale University, disciplinary action in response to alcohol issues is rare.

"It is not a common occurrence. Hardly. Good lord," Gila Reinstein in the Office of Public Affairs for Yale University Health Services said. "Not that our students don't know how to have fun."

Yale freshman Brad Lipton said that the school would only take action if a student is caught consuming alcohol on the streets of New Haven, not within the confines of the Old Campus and residential college parties.

"There really aren't any rules about alcohol," Lipton said. "We're told that from the beginning. Yale feels it's a health issue, not a disciplinary one. The administration generally knows about the party culture, but they don't show any sign of caring at all."

Reinstein mentioned that since the New Haven area and the Yale campus are always bustling with cultural and extra-curricular activity, students' lives are not focused on drinking.

"We're in a small city and there are lots of things to do here, so everyone's very busy. Who has time? Alcohol is not a serious problem at Yale," she said.

Reinstein would not report how many students are admitted to health services with alcohol-related problems on a given weekend. Director of Yale health services Dr. Paul Genecin was unavailable for comment.

Without neighborhood bars in cities like Cambridge and New Haven, more rural schools have a different campus party environment.

"Dartmouth can certainly live up to its 'Animal House' stereotype," freshman Kate Mulley said.

Dr. Jack Turco, director of health services at Dartmouth College said that, on an average night, three students would be admitted with alcohol-related problems.

"But that's just the tip of the iceberg. There are many more students getting drunk," he said.

Turco explained that the students who seek medical attention are not the "experienced drinkers" and tend to learn from the first experience.

Dartmouth's administration does show concern. "The administration does not want to see anyone die," Turco said. The college president resides on Frat Row and is leading a push to close down some of the fraternities. Mulley said that getting rid of fraternities is "going too far."

Turco stressed that the only impediment to getting students to drink responsibly is the drinking age.

"I think a 21 drinking age is unrealistic. When you come to college, they say you have to be an adult, but then they say you can't drink. Many students start to drink clandestinely at 18."

budget

continued from page 1

er the budget has now been lowered to $5 million.

The University's ability to provide financial aid will also be drastically lowered, due to the decision to cut this budget by 7-9 million, according to Rosenberg.

University employees, as state employees suffered another blow when as part of the cuts the state legislature killed the move to increase Health Insurance for state employees.

Responding to questions concerning why specific budgets were targeted by the state legislature Rosenberg said that it was in part the scale of the University's overall budget and the legislature's need to cut into that budget in anyway possible.

"I think it's just the scale, just the scale," Rosenberg said. In response to quandaries over the devastated ERM budget he added, "When you create a target people will shoot at it, the house has not historically been supportive of this line item. When you have an $11 million budget for books it's a target."

During the period for members of the Faculty Senate to question and discuss Rosenberg's presentation many questions were directed towards how long it would take to rebuild budgets, like the ERM, to the level they were before now. In addition, several Senators wondered why the budget for higher education took such a large part of the altogether cuts.

"It's a feeling of frustration," said Senator Brain O'Conner "I guess I was naively thinking that after the events of September 11 people would be convinced that higher education was the only answer. Obviously, the people in the state house don't ever think of this."

Following the discussion over the budget cuts Dr. Robert Levin Chair of the Service Departments Committee addressed the Faculty Senate. The Service Departments Committee has recently been resurrected after several years of inactivity and brought Kenneth Toong the Director of University Dining and Retail Food Services to put forward their plans for changes at University of Massachusetts at Amherst Dining Commons and eateries.

"Why serve food that students will not eat?" Asked Toong as began a power point presentation of how Dining and Retail Services has changed, and where it is headed.

According to Toong UMass operates one of the largest and most comprehensive food service programs in the country, serving over five million meals a year on a budget of 26 million. The program is fifth in terms of revenues currently in the nation.

The program is hoping to establish a fourth meal of the day for students next year allowing students to eat around nine at night. This, Toong says would help cut down on students costs of ordering out, especially during crunch weeks like finals. In addition a major facility renovation I schedule for the Berkshire dining common.

In the past year Dining Services has hired an executive culinary chef, tried to offer more diverse menu options at each of the dining commons, added Fresh Express and more branded items, as well as increased the hours of operation.

Because of these improvements and attempts to improve student nutrition on campus the Dining Services has won several accolades in the past year. In 2000 and 2001 they were received national awards for the dining hall menu concepts, and have been recognized by trade magazines.

Toong concluded his presentation by announcing the plan to allow any student to bring a professor or TA to dinner at a dining common for free during the week of December 10-14. The student must be on a meal plan, but the teacher or TA will be granted a free meal.

sail

continued from page 1

was down the wire, and suddenly the press showed up.

"Nothing had been tested, and all of a sudden there was this attention, new cameras, microphones, faces in the crowd," wrote Martin.

Although the trip was a wild success, Martin wrote of having fears during his first days along.

"Three days later I was sitting at the nav. [navigation] table off the coast of Victoria balling my eyes out as the sun was setting on another wireless, beautiful day," wrote Martin of his first anxiety ridden days.

"The beauty of the orange sun streaming through the port holes and lighting up the varnished teak trimmings and of course, weighing heavily on my mind, the threat of the unknown and people's voices ringing in my head 'you'll never make it.'"

Later Martin wrote of his final moments on his quest and how drastically they changed his outlook on life.

"The day I rounded the cape [Port] was a very special moment," he said. "Here was this rock surrounded in an aurora of history and stories and here I was, just a kid, playing a part in some of that history even when those opinions, which I respected, said I couldn't... My whole horizon opened up and I started thinking not of what I could do after this trip, but more like what couldn't I do?"

Despite or because of Martin's extensive experience, the crewmembers on Martin's next voyage do not have to have sailing experience.

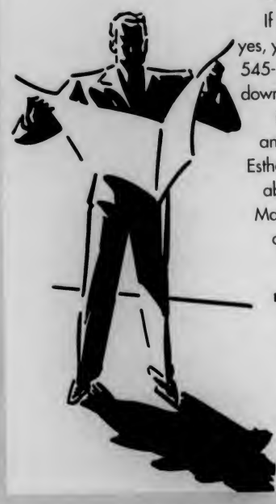
"We're looking for another young, energetic cast and crew member who, above all, must be a fun person," said Martin.

Applications to join Jesse Martin on his second navigation of the world are available online at www.jessemartin.net. Applications must be postmarked by Dec. 7 and received by Dec. 14. Anyone from the age of 18 to 23 is welcome to apply for this opportunity to sail the globe for free as part of the Kijana crew.

Info for this feature was provided by www.jessemartin.net and Catherine Bosin at Independent Publishers Group

GERALD LANG/COLLEGIAN

Ticket Master
Come rain or shine, the Amherst parking attendants never take a break from their daily routine.



GERALD LANG/COLLEGIAN

Drinking it all in
The Amherst bars stock up again after a busy weekend serving their patrons.

Write for News

J-RICH CLOTHING FOR MEN
It's Coming

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Esther or Shimauli, about the Layout Manager position opening up this spring!

Applicants should have a working knowledge of Mac's, especially programs such as Microsoft Word and Quark Xpress.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Keep the Twins alive

respected team has value

With the big shots of Major League Baseball set to meet this week regarding the elimination of two franchises, let's chalk one up for the Twins.

One of baseball's most respected and honorable teams – yes those Twins – is expected to be conveniently excommunicated from the major leagues.

That's right, commissioner Bud Selig has decided that it would be best for the game to say adios to a pair of professional baseball clubs. And if one of those squads ends up being Minnesota, than a great injustice will have been done to all of baseball.

There are a myriad of arguments to make as to why the Twins should not be one of the teams to get axed. The first one is easy, there are simply better candidates to be wiped of the face of the MLB universe.

First of all you have the Florida Marlins. It is hard to think of one more legal atrocity than that of the Marlins purchase of the 1996 World Championship, before opening a clearance sale on their roster before the champagne on the locker room floor could dry.

Baseball should love nothing more than to quell the resonance of that memory in baseball lore but no! Instead of eliminating a team from a state that has representation, albeit poor, in both leagues, Selig and his cohorts may decide to pick on the Twins.

Speaking of that other team from the sunshine state, how about those Devil Rays.

To nix the Twins is to deprive baseball fans of something great. Minnesota regularly fields one of the hardest playing teams in the game, a rarity in the age of playing for dollars and free agent shopping sprees.

They may not have the talent and they certainly don't have the money, but the Twins always play their guts out and rarely have a player leave the field without a dirt stain or turf burn.

Minnesota, especially this year, were a joy to watch. They were great on defense, they run the base paths and they played an aggressive, "fight for every run" style that was refreshing in this the age of the home run.

What the Twins also boast is history. To eliminate them is to lessen the legacy of one of the greatest figures in American sports history, Kirby Puckett. Puckett, like his team, represented perseverance and success that silenced the doubters. He along with great players such as Paul Molitor and Chuck Knoblauch give the Twins a history that far surpasses any of the nineties era expansion teams that will be alive and well after expansion

Selig and his supporters argue that Minnesota needs a new stadium and they don't generate enough attendance. The Red Sox need a new facility a no one is threatening to kick them out. While the Marlins have one of the most pathetic followings in all of sports and this only five years removed from a World Title.

Minnesota is a state teeming with pride. Pride in their culture, pride in their state and pride in their sports teams. To take the Twins from Minnesota is to deal another blow to a state that has already had to deal with the loss of their beloved North Stars.

The National Hockey League has only recently began to heal that gash with the expansion Minnesota Wild. If the Twins follow the North Stars into non-existence, than baseball will simply be reopening that wound.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

All things must pass:

Remembering the "quiet" Beatle

SHARON MAHONEY

I woke up late on Friday morning, so I had to race out the door without turning on the radio, which is why I didn't hear about George Harrison's passing until I was halfway to school. It was hard to pay attention to the road after that. Maybe it was late-semester stress or sleep deprivation, but the news hit me hard. It helped that almost every station on my car radio, including NPR, played his music in tribute. It was both painful and comforting to be reminded in such a direct way of whom we'd lost.

I'm a bit older than most of the students here at UMass, so I remember the night when the Beatles made their network TV debut. (Well, okay, more than a bit older.) I came to school that morning to find everyone in the playground buzzing about that new singing group from England. Only I didn't know that it was a singing group – no one bothered to mention that part to me, so for most of that morning I wondered why Ed Sullivan would want to show a bunch of insects on his show.

By the time recess rolled around I had been told what all the fuss was about, and I returned home after school primed for an EVENT. I wasn't disappointed. It's hard to imagine in this MTV world what kind of impact the Beatles made back then on an unsuspecting generation. Pop music, up until that point was very, very tame, unless you were an Elvis fan, and of course black musicians were off of the AM radar for most of us fifty-white kids. For the most part it was all Sandra Dee, Annette Funicello and Bobby Darin, all the time. (My best friend in grammar school was a Connie Francis fan, for God's sake. Boy, the thought of that really makes me feel old...)

But John, Paul, George and Ringo changed all that, literally overnight. The next morning every fifth-grader in the schoolyard was singing "Yeah! Yeah! Yeah!" at the top of their lungs, sporting guitar-shaped plastic pins with a tiny photo of our Beatle-of-choice where the sound hole would go. "I can't tell them apart" was the refrain from my Dad. "How do you know which is which under all that hair?"

But boy, could we ever tell them apart. Most of my friends had their favorite, and George was the one that I loved. I found John's aquiline nose and narrow eyes just a bit sinister, and Paul was too pretty to be real. Ringo had a goofy, puppy-dog cuteness about him that was appealing, but he still couldn't hold a candle to George's killer cheekbones. His intense brown eyes and infrequent, toothy, thousand-watt smile were a fit match to the dry tinder of my prepubescent lust, and I swore that someday if I couldn't marry him (he was only ten years older than me – I could dream, couldn't I?), then I would marry someone just like him, someone as talented, who radiated the same quiet intensity and intelligence.

I could relate to George. He did all the heavy lifting, guitar-wise, content to stand back in the group and let John and Paul shake their heads and make goo-goo eyes at the screaming fans. He would just play occasionally, lifting his head from the fingerboard to gaze off into space as if to remind himself where he was, reacting rather than acting, a spectator to his own fame. When it was time to sing harmony he would wait until the last possible second, and then suddenly step forward to the mike and match John or Paul note for note, only to step back again as if embarrassed at his own boldness.

It was in character. George didn't call attention to himself. While he was the first of the fab four to discover Indian music and eastern mysticism, it was the other Beatles and their musical contemporaries whose names made the headlines during their pilgrimages to the Maharishi. George learned sitar, introduced the instrument to the Beatles instrumental mix and to popular music, in general, but otherwise refrained from going public with his politics beyond his organization of events like the Concert for Bangladesh, the granddaddy of every I-live-Aid concert since.

I can only guess what it must have been like to be seventeen-years-old and riding the tiger that was the Beatles. But he did it with class and poise, and when the group broke up in 1970, he made his only real public statement about the acrimony several years later with "Sue Me, Sue You Blues," a song in the same wry vein as "Taxman," his breakout hit on Revolver, a song which refrained from pointing fingers and which had none of the bitterness of the John/Paul exchanges.

I admired the way he kept finding new avenues for self-expression, from film production (Life of Brian) to collaboration with other musicians (like his instantly recognizable rhythm guitar line on "Badge" on Cream's Goodbye album, where he was credited as 'L'angelo Mysterioso'). He liked the dynamics of group effort, and his later work reflected this, from his participation in the Pythonesque The Rutles, in which he lampooned his own fame better than anyone else had done, and in the utter joyousness and whimsy of the Traveling Wilburys. Harrison never let himself get stale.

One of the difficult things about hitting middle age is that you begin to witness, one after another, the passing of the icons of your youth, the ones who in some way with their work flavored your world and formed the common reference points for you and your generation. George himself was sanguine about such things; you could see and hear it in his lyrics, most obviously the title song of his first solo effort, "All Things Must Pass," an album that I took with me to UMass during my first sojourn here in 1972. I like to think that as he left the pain of his final illness behind to finally meet his "sweet Lord," he slipped away with that same wry but gentle smile on his face.

Goodbye, George. You helped write the soundtrack of my life. Thank you for all the music, and give our best to John.

Sharon Mahoney is a UMass student.

write for ed/op

Good idea, bad idea:

SGA, dating, and sweet Nads

BRIAN LOHNES

It seems that every good idea, product, or original invention that comes down the pike spawns a weird and altogether crappy bad idea. It is kind of like an alter ego. Usually we see the effects of this trend in the entertainment industry. Someone writes a hit show or creates a hit game show and then voila, there are copies and inferior remakes all over the place. There is usually a group of people whom scientists call "lackaxes" that inexplicably repeat the catch phrases from the aforementioned shows. This scenario of a good thing going bad is not limited to entertainment and we see and feel the effects of this in almost every facet of our lives. Here goes:

Good Idea: Government

Bad Idea: The SGA

As I have said in the past the SGA is as hopeless an organization that could ever hope to exist on this campus. The latest and probably the most embarrassing moment in SGA history? It occurred between former Senator Pat DeCourcy and Gabe "The Ice Man" Tavares. Decourcy decided to interrupt a Diversity Committee meeting while a proposal regarding the displaying of the American and Massachusetts state flag at SGA meetings was being given. Former Senator DeCourcy begins to disrupt the meeting. Tavares then decides to let DeCourcy know that he could come over and rearrange his face if it was necessary...apparently it was because the two were soon swinging at each other. These are the people who control the funds for our RSO's. These are the people who are elected by us to represent us. These are the people who couldn't find their ass with two hands and a flash-light when it comes to making an executive decision. Mr. girlfriend is student teaching a kindergarten class and they could and will do a better job than our present crop of officials if we write them in on the next ballot. Bottom line? SGA, you are incompetent, immature, and apparently in need of anger management

Good Idea: Shaving

Bad Idea: Nads

You all know about Nads, the hair removal system. Their jingle is a catchy one, "Nads, feels like a new day!" It feels like the worst day of your damn life if you are ripping your hair out with a product called Nads. When did people decide that a razor just isn't painful enough so they would create various glues to yank out all of their unwanted body hair? If you use Nads, I don't hold anything against you, but you are still a weirdo freak. Imagine this. You wake up in the morning, and have this very thought, "You know, today is the day to finally try out my Nads!" Frightening? Yes. Just think when you buy a tub of this stuff at WalMart you will have some Nads to call your own.

Good Idea: The Dating Game

Bad Idea: Dismissed

This show is the worst. Plain and simple this is a bad show. The desperation level of any of the three people appearing on this show at one time has to be pegged at extreme. Think about making this call home. "Hey Mom, I'm going to be on MTV on a show where me and another girl have to compete, well, whore ourselves out to get a second date with the guy we are trying to seduce in about six hours." I watched this show one time and on that episode, one of the female contestants took the guy she was vying for to a recording studio to get their "flow on." In the course of getting her "flow on" this woman tried to rhyme the words whack and hut. Whack and hut. Here's an excerpt, "Yo, that other girl is so whack/ It looks like she got hit in the face with a hut." She lost, for the sole reason that she didn't make out with this dude after meeting him a couple of hours before. The other girl was ready to "taint the whirlpool" after about 15 minutes of small talk. Let's not forget the male contestants on the show. Half of these guys would struggle to spell dog if you spotted them the d and the g. They seem to pair an Olympic sized weight lifter with a guy who looks like he messed the last train the Smallville There is the weird kind of psuedo-physically threatening tension between the guys on the show, but they never act on it, lest they bruise a well-formed cheekbone.

Good Idea: Guinness

Bad Idea: Tequiza

Guinness has been brewed the same damn way with the same damn ingredients for several hundred years. Tequiza was first squeezed from the bladders of wild horses a couple of years back. Beer, in all of its glorious forms, was never intended to be mixed with tequilla (unless it had something to do with making rocket fuel) and that's what Tequiza attempts to do. They also add lime. I have never seen anyone holding a Tequiza bottle in public. There is no Tequiza Toast. I made the mistake of buying the stuff once and nearly sued my own 8 bucks back. Tequiza equals tainted urine. Plus it is reportedly the favorite beer of the Taliban...bastards.

"Guinness has been brewed the same damn way with the same damn ingredients for several hundred years. Tequiza was first squeezed from the bladders of wild horses a couple of years back."

Good Idea: Freedom of the Press

Bad Idea: The Minuteman

Being a journalism major, the First Amendment is basically what I hang my hat on every day. It is there to protect this paper and all other publications, including the Minuteman. The next issue should be extra juicy considering that Patrick DeCourcy is a writer for the Minuteman and he will no doubt give us clear minded, blow-by-blow accounts of his thrubbing from Gabe Tavares. The Minuteman likes to cast itself in a heroic role on campus, fighting the evils of the liberal majority that reside here. We've all seen the paper and we know what it has to say, but it is protected speech and it is funded by our own SGA. What? You didn't know that they operate on an RSO budget allocated by the SGA every year? So the Minuteman has a right to exist on campus, and it is empowering to have a group of people at UMass so willing to admit that they have a problem with premature ejaculation.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Dear soldiers

KEN CAMPBELL

Sgt. T. B[illegible] Thompson probably didn't know what he was getting himself into when he sent pen and white his fateful letter to [illegible] Clark Philippine. The holiday had a nice and I can like for me.

Dear Sir,

Happy H[illegible] very proud of [illegible] our service men[illegible] yourself, and remember [illegible] in our thoughts and prayers.

The United States [illegible] is not letting anthrax scares stop them though. The Navy has set up a [illegible] http://anyservicemember.navy.mil/ where anyone with access to the Internet can leave a message of support and cure for our troops. The Navy has been deployed since Sept. 11, on the highest level of alert. That takes its toll on sailors and Marines. Not knowing what's going to happen is very stressful. They are now thousands of miles from home, and the holidays just around the corner.

Dear Sailor,

You're far from home at a time when family is so important. It's not easy, but you've made that sacrifice becoming a sailor in the greatest navy in the world. Happy Holidays to you and your shipmates, and thanks so much for keeping us safe.

The 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit is now deployed in southern Afghanistan, where they have set up a forward base for the US Central Command. These are some of the best-trained troops in the US arsenal. There is nothing more deadly than a Marine with his rifle. They are some of the best marksmen in the world. They are going to need all their training in this mission.

The United States Marines have served our country time and again. Embarked on US Navy ships, the Marines have been America's quick response for hundreds of years.

Dear Marine,

Happy Holidays to you and your fellow Marines. Thank you very much for serving America. We are so very proud of you. Whenever there is trouble, the United States has always sent in the Marines. You are the best of the best, and never forget that a lot of us back home are thinking about you. Stay safe.

The Any Service Member program has given thoughts and greetings to so many soldiers around the world. Whether deployed in Afghanistan, on station in the Arabian Gulf, watching the DMZ in Korea, or patrolling the No Fly Zones in Iraq, service members of the United States provide the force necessary to protect American interests and freedoms around the world. Wherever troops are deployed, America has an interest. No matter where, Americans owe a great debt to the men and women who serve our country. And now, as the holidays approach, and we sit here, studying for finals, worrying about the little things that seem so important to us, somewhere out there is a soldier, far from home, doing a job that nobody else has the guts or the integrity to do. So Happy Holidays to our men and women in uniform, and thanks for your sacrifice. We will not forget it, or forget you. You are in our thoughts, our prayers, and our holiday wishes.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Thanks, George.
1943 - 2001

Look for our Lord of the Rings page this week.

Harry Potter still surpassing

Invincible?
Unbeatable?
Unbearable?

Apparently so, as Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone again seized first place the box office, this time with a $24.1 million haul, barely distancing itself from new entrant Behind Enemy Lines.

Potter, the loveable tale of a disgusting little imp who has enough magical powers to cast a spell over a gullible American public, has grossed almost $220 million thus far. That's a staggering number for a movie about a little boy who has "science-fiction society member in waiting" written all over him.

Behind Enemy Lines, a hilarious movie about a dolphin and his wacky trainers, made $19.2 million at the box office. Wait, that was Flipper and it didn't make any money at all. Lines is a movie about a soldier downed behind enemy lines (clever title, huh?) in Bosnia. Starring Owen Wilson and Gene Hackman, the movie manages to turn a scared, but brave, soldier's harrowing ordeal into a typically Hollywood shoot 'em up action flick with a wise-cracking all-American as the lead character.

Oh sure, it's disrespectful, but at least he's singing "Dixieland" in Bosnia! That'll show those communists. Or Arabs. Or whomever. Movie executives have admitted that the film's release was moved forward to cash in on "pro-America sentiment" thus proving that, yet again, Hollywood is a whor-

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

ing body.

Robert Redford's Spy Game made $11.2 million to take third place. Brad Pitt also stars. Perhaps this is the film where Redford passes the torch to Pitt, explaining that Pitt can be professionally lazy as long as he has that great look to him.

Rascally Monsters, Inc. scared up $9.4 million. Starring a one-eyed freak voiced by Billy Crystal, the movie's ongoing success is continued evidence that the days of the hand-animated feature film are long over. It's also evidence that, yes, there still are kids getting shut out of Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone, the single greatest movie ever made about Harry Potter and some sorcerer's stone.

From the "it's unbelievable that they actually made this" department, Black Knight made $5.7 million. All right, fess up. Who are the 814,286 that bought tickets to this? Why? What could make you hate yourself so much?

The blue has long suffered from an identity crisis as a room music in a world of glitzy pop and outrageous hip-hop. Where does its subtle and restrained sound lit in? Forever tied to bluegrass in the shared rural poverty of its performers, the blues has stayed a part of the national consciousness only through the work of musicians who laid claim to the blues without bogging themselves down by the actual music (a situation not unlike the jam bands who claim to play "bluegrass" because they have a banjo in the band). R.L.

Burnside's blues is a fusion. A guitar, a slide guitar and some rhythmic drums, Burnside has recently experimented with DJs and technotica. He hasn't abandoned some of the music's real traditions – regularly repeated lyrics and simple riffs – but he has modified their usage. On the spectacular Wish I Was In Heaven Sitting Down, Burnside's emotive songs about the murder of family members in Chicago is haunting.

Burnside on Burnside captures R.L.'s other side. Playing in Portland, OR, with his grandson, drummer Cedric, and his adopted son, slide guitarist Kenny Brown, Burnside shines.

His muddled guitar with Brown's slight slides and Cedric's percussion makes for a brisk live performance. On "Shake 'Em On Down," "Skinny Woman," and "Miss Maybelle," Burnside's spirited play is inspired. His guitar pops with his gravelly voice, and especially on "Maybelle" (from Heaven). R.L. sounds like he is having a good time when he begs "Miss Maybelle/ let me be your hopping frog."

Not that he can't slow things down; "Bad Luck and Trouble," features Burnside solo singing, "If it wasn't for bad luck/ I wouldn't have no luck at all." Knowing Burnside's background, his cliched declaration seems accurate. Burnside is 74 years old. He speaks after a lifetime of hardship, he plays every song like it's his last, and he fuses the old style with new technology.

Meanwhile, Popa Chubby (stupid name not withstanding), is Burnside's professional antithesis. Ignoring more than one hundred years of beautiful music history, Chubby's blues are those of a young whiner. Name dropping numerous Mississippi musicians – apparently thinking that by mentioning them, he might benefit from their immeasurable style – Chubby's How'd a White Boy Get The Blues? is grating, aggressive, and oft embarrassing. Where lyrical subtlety would suffice, the big, bald New Yorker uses unnecessary obscenity, where simple guitar riffs would satisfy. Chubby drags out ear-twisting chords.

Turn to BLUES, page6

The appropriately-monikered Popa Chubby.

Popa and the fam.

Burnside Brilliant Chubby a Chump

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

R.L. Burnside
Burnside on Burnside
Fat Possum Records

Popa Chubby
How'd a White Boy Get The Blues?
Blind Pig Records

R.L. Burnside and Popa Chubby couldn't be more different. While Burnside is aged talent whose recent rebirth (with the help of the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion) is a welcome addition to the American music scene, Chubby's derivative sound harkens back to the worst of bad-to-the-bone George Thorogood.

The blues has long suffered from an identity crisis as a room music in a world of glitzy pop and outrageous hip-hop. Where does its subtle and restrained sound lit in? Forever tied to bluegrass in the shared rural poverty of its performers, the blues has stayed a part of the national consciousness only through the work of musicians who laid claim to the blues without bogging themselves down by the actual music (a situation not unlike the jam bands who claim to play "bluegrass" because they have a banjo in the band). R.L.

Burnside's blues is a fusion. A guitar, a slide guitar and some rhythmic drums, Burnside has recently experimented with DJs and technotica. He hasn't abandoned some of the music's real traditions – regularly repeated lyrics and simple riffs – but he has modified their usage. On the spectacular Wish I Was In Heaven Sitting Down, Burnside's emotive songs about the murder of family members in Chicago is haunting.

Burnside on Burnside captures R.L.'s other side. Playing in Portland, OR, with his grandson, drummer Cedric, and his adopted son, slide guitarist Kenny Brown, Burnside shines.

His muddled guitar with Brown's slight slides and Cedric's percussion makes for a brisk live performance. On "Shake 'Em On Down," "Skinny Woman," and "Miss Maybelle," Burnside's spirited play is inspired. His guitar pops with his gravelly voice, and especially on "Maybelle" (from Heaven). R.L. sounds like he is having a good time when he begs "Miss Maybelle/ let me be your hopping frog."

Not that he can't slow things down; "Bad Luck and Trouble," features Burnside solo singing, "If it wasn't for bad luck/ I wouldn't have no luck at all." Knowing Burnside's background, his cliched declaration seems accurate. Burnside is 74 years old. He speaks after a lifetime of hardship, he plays every song like it's his last, and he fuses the old style with new technology.

Meanwhile, Popa Chubby (stupid name not withstanding), is Burnside's professional antithesis. Ignoring more than one hundred years of beautiful music history, Chubby's blues are those of a young whiner. Name dropping numerous Mississippi musicians – apparently thinking that by mentioning them, he might benefit from their immeasurable style – Chubby's How'd a White Boy Get The Blues? is grating, aggressive, and oft embarrassing. Where lyrical subtlety would suffice, the big, bald New Yorker uses unnecessary obscenity, where simple guitar riffs would satisfy. Chubby drags out ear-twisting chords.

Enemy Lines short on plot, but replete with action

COURTESY OF JURGEN VOLLMER

Gene Hackman stars as Owen Wilson's commander.

COURTESY OF JURGEN VOLLMER

Owen Wilson, being rescued by American troops.

COURTESY OF JURGEN VOLLMER

Wilson stars as Lt. Burnett.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

BEHIND ENEMY LINES
Directed by John Moore, with Owen Wilson and Gene Hackman
Now playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley.

As a war movie aficionado, I went into this movie not expecting much. I was not disappointed.

Behind Enemy Lines tells the story of a Navy navigator Lt. Burnett (Wilson) who, growing tired of the seemingly useless job of patrolling near Bosnia, wants to leave the Navy. This ungrateful attitude irks aircraft carrier's Battle Group Commander, played by Gene Hackman. So, as sort of punishment, the admiral assigns Burnett and his pilot, Lt. Stackhouse, to the holiday mission – a routine reconnaissance flight near the demilitarized zone, where no one is supposed to be.

Of course, there are no "routine" missions in a movie, and it's unsurprising when the two pick up what seems to be illegal activity in the DMZ. They stray off mission, and the next thing you know, there are birds in the air – sorry. Surface to Air Missiles chasing them.

This is an amazing sequence, quite possibly the best movie plane scene in a long time. Stackhouse's handling of the F-18 Super Hornet is breathtaking as he tries to dodge two missiles. Of course, if he did get away it wouldn't be much of a movie, so the Hornet gets cut in two, and Stackhouse and Burnett eject.

Watching Stackhouse struggling to reach down and pull his eject cord is very nice touch here. The cockpit is gone and the G forces are very strong, almost keeping him from getting out in time.

Stackhouse breaks his leg parachuting in and can't move. Burnett goes on ahead, to try and radio for help. Of course, as Burnett is walking away, Serbian rebels roll up on Stackhouse and kill him. Burnett screams. Idiot. Every gun in the world opens up on him, and he has to run. Now he's behind enemy lines and being hunted.

That's the basis of the film. The rest is just details.

John Moore's first film is decent, but nothing spectacular. If Moore would keep the camera steady for five minutes it may have been more enjoyable.

The best thing – the absolute best thing – about the whole movie is the sound. The sound effects in this film are quite real and convincing. Whoever did the sound did their homework. The Serbian rebels were armed with a variety of guns, have 40mm Anti Aircraft guns, Russian-made tanks, etc. Each has their own distinct sound, and they come across in the soundtrack. There are a lot of weapons in this film, and their distinctive sounds come across clearly in the soundtrack. As do the sounds of a carrier at war – the steam catapults, the distinctive noise of a Huey UH-1N helicopter, and the whole ambience really does give one a sense of being there.

The action, as I said earlier, is non-stop, which is good, since they don't have to worry about all that plot and character development getting in the way. The movie is short on plot, short on characters, short on believability too, but its got lots of whiz-bang explosions and some hair-raising, suspenseful scenes.

Behind Enemy Lines can best be described as Top Gun shot down, but with less potential to become a classic.

Dance and music in dazzling harmony

By Melissa Ladd
Collegian Correspondent

COLLABORATIONS IN SOUND & MOTION
With the University Dancer and Jazz Ensemble I
Bowker Auditorium, Nov. 29

The University Dancers performed "Collaborations & Sound and Motion: HOT and COOL" at Bowker Auditorium this weekend. Accompanied by the UMass Jazz Ensemble, they displayed their diverse talents.

Terese Freedman's "African Skies," a modern dance piece that was also performed earlier this year at the Multibands Pops Concert, opened the show. "African Skies" is a warm piece of jazz music in which Freedman works with opposing dynamics. Her dancers executed calm and mellow movements followed by surprising bursts of energy, with a mood of joy. The choreography required the dancers to work together, with many assisted leaps, kicks and lifts. What gave this piece its fluidity was that the stage was never void of movement or stimulation for the eye. The costumes were richly colorful and different for each dancer, aiding the smoothness of the choreography.

"Gone," displayed the ballet talents of the University Dancers, especially those of Jennifer A. Rockwell, who danced the lead on a sprained ankle. Her professionalism is such that it wasn't noticeable. Rockwell's steps were hastily re-choreographed so all her turns, jumps and lifts land on her left foot. Partnered by Ross Swartwout, the couple had beautiful lines, extension and timing.

Choreographer Ken Lipitz gave his corps dancers a cannon series that had a pleasing shape and flow. Lipitz, perhaps since he himself has such long arms and legs, incorporates beautiful lines and angles, and deep plies that give all his dancers the look of having extended limbs. Lipitz gave the classic ballet look a slight twist with his occasional upper body curves and contractions, similar to those of modern dance, for a lovely mixture of styles. Placement and technique were exceptional, and not a step seemed out of place.

Billbob Brown's Jazz piece was a cross between Broadway and that ever-so-recognizable boy band dance style. Accentuating the hips and torso with poses and flashy costumes, the piece was close to a Hollywood musical number minus the singing. Dancer Joseph DiDonato was in his element, and did a fabulous job of smoothing together the poses and the steps in between.

The intellectual piece of the night, "Dust," was hypnotic. The two dancers, William Brown and Melissa Ham-Ellis covered in what looked like dust, commanded rapt attention. Movement was so subtle that it barely happened, and common pedestrian gestures took on new meaning. The characters spent the first half of the dance reaching out to each other, and a moment which struck deep was when Brown reaches out to touch Ham-Ellis's face ever so slowly, and upon contact she gave a flinch that looked like it needed no practice. The naturalness of their movement and gestures was mesmerizing.

Billbob gave a fun and comical solo improvisation in "Side Effects." Setting himself on stage, dressed in ripped jeans and a t-shirt, his attemps at contemplating movement was abruptly interrupted by two relentless saxophone players who followed him around stage. The musicians manipulated Billbob's moves with various squawks and squeals from their instruments, and his attempts to cease their noise were in vain. The piece was fun and easy, requiring no intense interpretation, which was a nice relief. Billbob had the audience laughing out loud. Who says dance has to always be serious? Why not let go of the elite dancer façade and go crazy?

Choreographer Terry Creach constructed an enjoyable dance in his "de viaje/Barroco." Various black costumes, as well as dancing in silence gave the piece interesting effects. The dancers shared energy, working off each other's positions and movements in continuous links. The choreography had a sort of comparative playfulness to it. Dancers that stood out were Smith graduate student, Carol Huncik, and Melissa Ham-Ellis. The latter seemed at times to suspend herself in the air, making everything look effortless, while Huncik glided through her moves, making them all part of a bigger picture.

"Street Façade," was the high energy, brightly colored finale. With Brazilian style steps and group movement executed with rivalry between dancers it was a show of performance skill and bravado. Augusto Soledade choreographed, and Brazz Dance Theater, Inc. provided the colorful costumes.

The music throughout was executed with panache, and the band had the opportunity to show their talents in between each dance piece. The Jazz Ensemble I is a talented group and many of its members play multiple instruments. Student composers who were able to display their music and abilities were, Geoff Vidal, Luis Rodriguez, Geoff Cunningham, Jeff Wissert, Martin Ivanov and Patrik and Beata Hlavenka.

Tips for the WWF

For years it has been the redheaded stepchild of both this publication and the mainstream media: Professional Wrestling. Now that the archaic, former Collegian editors are gone, a column on professional wrestling will finally have a spot in this newspaper. We should offer coverage of a form of entertainment that millions of people enjoy. With that comes the first installment of "Under The Ring."

Wrestling's popularity has wavered in the past few months. Now that the WWF is the only game in town (sorry, the XWF sucks), things have grown stagnant. Ratings and attendance are down, and the steps the WWF needs to take to make their program entertaining again are fairly obvious, yet they don't seem to realize this. In hope that a member of the WWF writing crew, or even Vince M. Mahon himself, sees this, here are the steps in no particular order that need and must be taken.

Push New Characters to the Top of The Card. The best way to keep a wrestling program fresh is to constantly push fresh faces to the top of the card. Instead of The Rock vs. Stone Cold vs. HHH etc. etc. how 'bout The Rock vs. RVD, Stone Cold vs. Edge, HHH vs. Booker T or some combination of that? Not pushing fresh faces was one of the major downfalls of WCW, yet the WWF seems to have not learned from history.

Some in the wrestling industry will say that creating a top star that the fans accept is harder than simply pushing somebody. While they are right in some respects, the WWF needs to figure out which of their wrestlers have the tools to be accepted as a top star (there are plenty), and give those characters a real push. Most of all, they can't cut the legs off the push when the ratings or fans don't respond right away.

– Rebuild The WCW Brand. The WWF blew the biggest angle in professional wrestling history simply because Vince McMahon was too cheap to buy the contracts of the established names (Goldberg, Nash, etc.) that fans associate with WCW. Nobody "believed" in the WCW angle because so few of the wrestlers associated with it were involved.

McMahon needs to bite the bullet and sign Goldberg. The Outsiders, Scott Steiner and other "big names" associated with WCW, and give them their own TV show under the "WCW" banner, get some of the past WCW announcers (as bad as some of them are) and build a set that looks like Nitro during the program's hiatus. Give the program a different feel and identity from the WWF show. This is the only way to bring back the millions of disgruntled ex-WCW fans who have turned off pro wrestling entirely now that the WWF has a monopoly on the industry. The promotions can be brought together at some point for the inevitable "supercard." When it does happen, the angle will seem special, not like another run of the mill storyline.

RVD! RVD! RVD!: It's obvious that the fans want him, and Vince needs to give it to them. When Stone Cold and The Rock started getting over they weren't given some half-assed push like Van Dam. Sure, he doesn't work in a "traditional manner" and pushing him might upset some of the established main eventers, but at some point you have to give the fans what they want.

Surprises: Make watching WWF programs unpredictable again. When the WCW names are signed (Goldberg, etc.), "shock" fans with their appearance. Raw featuring the return of Ric Flair and Jerry Lawler was a good start. When Nitro was but five years ago, one of the main reasons to watch every week was to see who would show up. With a monopoly, the WWF has the opportunity to have several more "Nitro moments."

Run-of-Style Booking (in some ways). Say what you want about Vince Russo, but it was his booking style that made the WWF popular at the time and that same style is copied (in a watered down manner) today. Think back to just two years ago when wrestling was far more of a pop culture phenomenon with the college audience than it is today. Why is that? Because of angles and characters. Wrestling's prime audience is young males, and this is the type of entertainment that draws them. There is a reason why more males listen to Howard Stern and Opie and Anthony and not Top 40 radio. Because one of them provides them with the type of entertainment they want, and the other does not. Is it too risky to head in this direction because of advertising backlash? Put it this way, TNN isn't going to cancel any program that is drawing 3's and 4's.

Give The Shows a New Look. New sets, music, and graphics will help to make the shows seem "fresh" again. When Raw went live more often and became "Raw Is War" in early 1997, they accompanied the name change and change in booking philosophy with a new set that looked radically different from what they were using before. The easiest way to let fans know about a new and improved WWF is to have a new and improved set.

Take these steps, and the WWF will regain its popularity. Or better yet, just hire me as booker right now.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member

Bringing down the house, a capella

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Six a capella singing groups took the stage yesterday afternoon in front of a near-capacity audience at Mahar Auditorium for the semi-annual A Capella Jam.

The concert, hosted by the all-male a capella sextet The Doo Wop Shop, also featured the all-female group Six Minutes and the Vocal Suspects, all UMass groups. They also opened the stage to several groups from other colleges and organizations: the Smithereens, from Smith College, Jewish a capella group Kolot, and a Brandeis University group called Spur of the Moment.

According to Doo Wop Shop member Christiaan Heijmen, yesterday's event was put on to showcase and promote a capella singing in the region. "[The Doo Wop Shop] is not affiliated with any particular department or major," Heijmen said. "So we're getting people together on our own to put groups on display."

Students in the audience said that the work of the a capella groups adds another dimension to the campus. "I'm interested in music – not just classical, but jazz, music theater, and a capella," said senior Vocal Performance major Kate Walczyk. "This type of group gives students a chance to get together who have the same passion to express themselves through music."

"It's just a new way to hear songs," said Marielle Vena, a sophomore Art History and Italian double major. "You get to hear another person's arrangement."

Vena said that she also liked the groups' independence from the University. "I think that the way that they're student run and less formal makes [music] a lot more accessible to students who might be more standoffish toward other groups," she said.

The songs of the evening were mainly covers of popular tunes by groups including the Beatles, En Vogue, George Michael, Blackstreet, Barry Manilow, Dido, Michael Jackson and the Temptations. The groups approximated the sound of the original songs using only the human voice, and, at times, hands and feet, clapping, stomping, dancing and producing percussion sounds vocally.

Sound effects produced by Joe Hunt, of the Vocal Suspects, were a highlight of the program – Hunt produced a wailing high note for the group's rendition of the Beach Boys' "Good Vibrations," a hip hop beat for their cover of Barry Manilow's "Copa Cobana," and even let another member of the group play his cheeks like drums for the Suspects' version of George Michael's "Freedom."

A sense of humor was also a common trait among the otherwise diverse groups.

The Smithereens choreographed a tongue-in-cheek hip hop dance sequence for their cover of Blackstreet's "No Diggity." Six Minutes performed a show-stoppingly sassy version of "Lady Marmalade" that imitated the remake recently performed by Mya, Li'l Kim, Pink, and Christina Aguilera, featuring one of their members, Michelle Camara, as "Li'l Mish." When Kolot's first number got off to a shaky start, the lead singer stopped to joke, "sorry, I only joined this group last night." During a sultry performance of The Corrs' "Breathless," by a female lead for Spur of the Moment, a male member of the group dramatically mopped his forehead with his tie. The Doo Wop Shop worked "man she's cheatin' on you," into the background vocals on Aman Sprigg's emotional rendition of the Temptations' "My Girl," and performed their trademark cover of Jim Henson's "Rainbow Connection," complete with Jason Moldov as Kermit the Frog, along with impromptu vocal appearances by several other Muppets.

Humor wasn't limited to singing – onstage banter gave the show another entertaining dimension. In sending around a collection plate, Moldov joked, "so put in any money, coupons, rebates, children you don't want any more, et cetera."

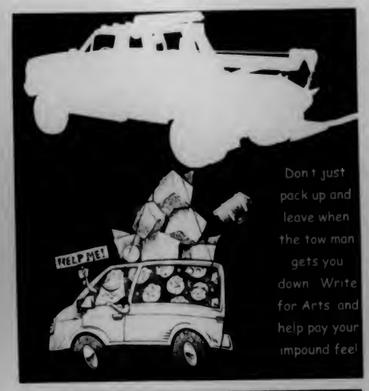
Nor was it limited to the performers. The audience got into the act as well, clapping along and shouting for favorite performers. "This is the most musically inclined audience I've ever seen," said Spriggs in mock amazement. "You guys clap together, and you know when to stop!"

One exchange revealed another appeal the Doo Wop Shop in particular had in drawing an audience to yesterday's performance. "You guys are so hot!" an unknown female attendee yelled as they took the stage. Her cry was met with shouts of agreement, wolf whistles and catcalls from other audience members.

"Attention, attention," Kull joked, bringing down the house: "Seat number 223 wins a date with Christiaan."

●●◆✱▲ page 5

continued from page 10



R.L. Burnside singin' the blues.

Released before September 11, Chubby's "It's a Sad Day In New York City When There Ain't No Room For The Blues," still seems hollow. When he isn't busy calling out Rudolph Guliani, he's complaining about drug sentencing or mourning his late rent or missing his New York City. In lieu of legitimate lament, Chubby sings fall flat.

Of course, often Chubby is more interested in the posturing of the tradition less than music itself. "Carrying On The Torch Of The Blues" might be Chubby's most arrogant song. Claiming to carry the mantel of Muddy Waters, Willie Dixon, and, most scandalously, Robert Johnson (who supposedly sold his soul to the devil to make the music he did!), Chubby's vain claim is ridiculous. Sounding more like Stevie Ray Vaughn than any of the musicians he chose to name, the New Yorker sounds stupid comparing himself to some of the music's giants.

Vocal Harmony

The Vocal Jazz Ensemble will present an evening of contemporary and jazz vocal music on Dec. 10 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.

UMass Ballroom Dance Club Presents
The Snowflake Ball

Celebrate the end of the semester by dancing the night away!

In the Campus Center Auditorium

Wednesday, December 5, 2001
7:00-8:30 Dance Lessons
8:30-Midnight General Dancing

$5 for students.
$7 for adults

Refreshments will be served!

No partner or experience necessary
All are welcome!!!

Any Questions? Contact Danielle at 546-1938 or Drmdancers@aol.com or Rachel at rmandell@student.umass.edu
Visit our website at www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom

Sunraise
printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY

T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166

BUSINESS CARDS
Our Specialty!
Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs

- Stadium Cups
- T-Shirts for:
fraternities / sororities intramurals bar crawls
special events

MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Mr. Rhymer faces former pupil

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

RALEIGH, N.C. – Kitwana Rhymer must have felt just a bit on the elderly side Saturday afternoon. Because when the 23-year-old took to the hardwood of North Carolina State's Entertainment and Sports Arena, one of his former pupils – by the name of Julius Hodge – joined him.

"I've known Kit for a long time," said Hodge, who in 31 minutes of play, mustered only three points against the UMass defense – that score being a trey from the left corner to tie the game at 35-35 with 17:31 left in the second half. "When I was a kid, I used to go to St. Raymond's basketball camp. And he was the coach of my team for two of those years."

Both products of St. Raymond's high school in the Bronx, N.Y., Rhymer and Hodge are in different stages of their careers. Rhymer is a proven fifth-year senior, with last year's Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year award to his credit, while Hodge, a 2001 McDonald's All-American is still trying to prove why he was so highly touted as the No. 1 high school shooting guard in the country last year.

"We went to the same school and everything and I remember coaching him as a little kid in the camps," Rhymer said. "He's a good player. He'll definitely be good down the line."

So far this season, Rhymer is averaging eight points, six rebounds and over three blocks in UMass' four games. While Hodge, New York's 2001 Mr. Basketball, has averaged 10.7 points and five boards in the Wolfpack's seven contests.

***

At the beginning of the year, Steve Lappas said the No. 3 spot was the only questionable position in his lineup. But that has now changed. Willie Jenkins and Raheim Lamb are sharing time at small forward and are doing quite well for themselves while forcing Lappas to shy away from the small, three-guard set.

UMASS HOOP NOTEBOOK

Saturday, Jenkins netted a career-high 12 points, grabbed six rebounds and dished out three assists in 23 minutes. He also added six free throws to extend his streak of consecutive free throws after the 4:50 mark of the second half to 12 (coincidentally, where all of his attempts have come this year).

Lamb added just two points and two rebounds in 17 minutes of play, but did not turn the ball over for the first time this season. Together, the two are averaging 13 points and over eight rebounds a game.

"[Willie] runs the floor well, he knocks down shots, he's hit clutch free throws in the last few games, it says a lot," Shannon Crooks said. "Raheim – he just keeps going to the board, getting put backs, and we need guys like that on the team."

Lamb sat out last year as a partial qualifier, but under Proposition 48, was able to practice with the team for the entire season. Jenkins, on the other hand, was eligible to play, but managed only 75 minutes the entire season. So far this year, he has 81 and has started all four games.

"I'm not saying Bruiser (James Flint) wasn't a good coach, but his system wasn't doing it for me, so if he was staying I think I would have had to transfer," Jenkins said. "But then Lappas came in, so everybody started at zero. And that let me know that if I work hard I will get playing time."

Kit Rhymer has started off well in defense of his A-10 Defensive Player of the Year award.

COURTESY NC STATE SPORTS RELATIONS

Julius Hodge

umass

continued from page 10

UMass (48.1 percent) out-shot State (33.9) from the field and out-rebounded the Wolfpack 41-30, but could not pull away from the ACC squad due to the full-court pressure, which caused 18 UMass turnovers – double the amount of its own follies.

In turn, the Pack scored 17 points off Minuteman mistakes, many of those coming in a key 11-4 run in the first eight minutes of the second half to take a 39-37 lead. But baskets by Rhymer, Raheim Lamb, and two free throws by Eric Williams – with Rhymer and his four fouls on the bench – gave UMass the last advantage.

"Everyone just kept their head," said Brand, who also made a key block to end the Wolfpack's early second half run. "And Eric played great. He got some rebounds, hit open shots, made good passes, played good defense – and that's what has to happen. When one person gets in trouble we just have to compensate for it."

"They have a big, strong, experienced frontcourt," said State coach Herb Sendek, who told his big guys to play in front of Ryhmer, Brand and Williams in the second half, to force the UMass guard to make on-target lob passes. "They're pretty good around the basket."

The Minutemen raced out to an early 14-7 lead, thanks to a one-handed Kyle Wilson runner from behind the arc with the shot clock winding down, but State tied the game up at 23-23 with 8:33 left in the first stanza on a Grundy three from the left arc. Grundy had a chance to give the Pack the lead going into the half, but his three-point miss in the final seconds turned into an Anthony Anderson putback on the other end to give UMass the 31-28 advantage.

"You want your seniors to get you started, until the young kids get settled in," Lappas said. "What happens, unfortunately, on the road a lot is the young kids – if they don't settle in you don't know what's going to happen. But Shannon, Kit and Micah got us going, and everyone else just followed along."

Falling
Mike Warner and the UMass hockey team fell hard this weekend in two Hockey East games versus Maine and B.C.

Free throws uncharitable for UMass

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

HARRISONBURG, Va. – Free throws? Not when they're this costly. Foul shots? Now that's more like it.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team gave one of its most dismal performances of the season from the charity stripe last Thursday night, allowing host James Madison to cruise to a 56-49 victory. UMass (1-4) converted a single free throw opportunity in nine chances to waste one of its better defensive efforts of the season and help the Dukes (4-1) pick up the win.

JMU	56
UMASS	49

"We just didn't play, get the job done when we needed to," said UMass head coach Joanie O'Brien. "If you can't do the simple things like making free throws, you're not going to win the basketball game."

The Minutewomen gave their best Jekyl-and-Hyde imitation at the JMU Convocation Center, out-hustling the Dukes over the first half with solid play on both sides of the ball. JMU managed a paltry 18 points before halftime on 6-of-26 shooting from the field, while the visitors enjoyed a dominating first-half performance from their biggest gun, center Jennifer Butler.

Butler headed into the break just two points short of a double-double, with eight points and 10 rebounds.

"Those are the kinds of things we expect from Jen," O'Brien said.

But despite her big first-half line, the junior from Brooklyn, N.Y., had also shown one weakness that would prove paramount over the course of the game: Butler shot blanks on all four of her first-half free throw attempts.

One other Maroon and White round baller also enjoyed a big first half, as sophomore guard Paige Harris connected on a pair of big three-pointers with the shot clock winding down. Harris had been struggling throughout the season's early goings with her shot selection, and O'Brien saw her performance against the Dukes as a possible confidence builder for the Michigan native.

"Let's hope so," O'Brien said. "Paige is still learning what a good shot is, so it's huge to see her taking shots like that and making them."

As bad as the Dukes were from the floor in the first half, they caught fire in the second frame behind junior guard/forward Shanna Price. The 5-foot-9 Virginia native connected on five field goal attempts and an equal number of free throws for 15 second-half points to go along with her team-high 11 rebounds.

The former high school Regional Player of the Year got a big hand from her team's smothering press, as the Dukes defended full-court for much of the second half and forced 12 UMass turnovers in the process. JMU converted seven of those miscues into fast-break baskets the other way, three of which came courtesy of Price.

"We can't allow ourselves to make those kinds of mistakes and expect to win," O'Brien said.

Price finished with a team-high 16 points for JMU, while Butler led the Minutewomen with 12 points and 13 rebounds but ended up 0-for-7 from the free throw line.

UMass also got strong overall performances from junior forwards Siti Lilvandi (eight points, three rebounds) and Amber Sneed (seven points, four rebounds, three assists).

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

Work over Break

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
BACON 'N' CHEESE SKINS 8.75 4.38
FRIED SHRIMP TEMPURA 7.25 3.63
SWEET POTATO FRIES 6.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978.

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Toyota Tercel great dependable transportation. 4 speed low miles 1,800 or B.O. Call Josy 253-5149

1991 Blue Ford Probe 130K miles. Good condition, fully loaded. $2700 546-1505

1987 Subaru runs good 142K $250 or B.O call 549-7816

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center. 545-1995

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport. Just like a Chevy Tracker. 5 spd. 4X4 loaded 25 mpg asking $4,999 call 549-4506

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

1985 Olds Calais New Tires 30 mpg Good Condition $700.00 O.B.O. 413-250-1826

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Software Sales/Telemarketing for economic forecasting and policy analysis firm. Part-time. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Japanese Speaking candidates for software firm. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Several P/T Temp. positions The Umass Textbook Annex has several cashier openings to work our book buyback (Dec. 13-22). Interested candidates should stop by the Annex and fill out an application.

Native Speakers of Japanese needed for listening experiments $7/hr 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location.
Call FMI
888-423-5381

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR SALE

Refrigerator for Sale 4.0 cubic foot Haier Refrigerator with freezer. Little more than a year old and in near perfect condition. Has a can dispenser in the door and it is lockable. Asking price: $100, but price is negotiable. Call Mike at 546-6791

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Room in 2 Bedroom apt. located in boulders on bus route call mike 253-0911

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-3492 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

ROOM WANTED

2 Girls looking 4 winter sublet call 546-2609

SERVICES

Martin's Auto Saab & Volvo Martin's Auto Repair ASE Certified. Reasonable rates, friendly service. 323-6362

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun-coastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

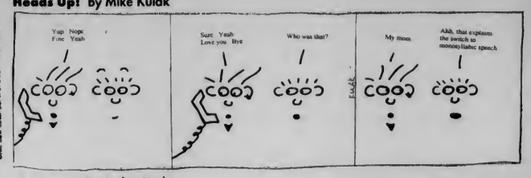
TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

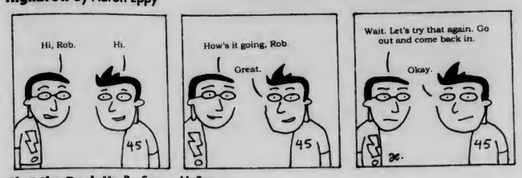
Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com



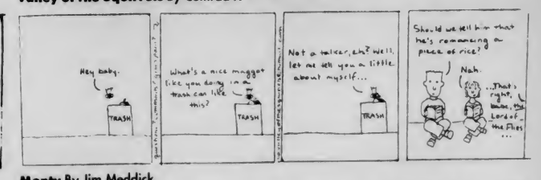
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

Quote of the Day

"...and Harry Potter and all his wizard friends went straight to Hell for practicing witchcraft!"

–Ned Flanders

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wendsday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 34	HIGH: 66 LOW: 38	HIGH: 60 LOW: 42

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21) – So this weekend you went to a party and you met a great guy. It turns out you had already hooked up with him last weekend, but were too drunk to remember. This is called "deja booty." Learn it. Love it. Live by it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your birthday is coming. You should ask for something good, like a pony.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Venus is in the house of Mars today. Jeez, last I heard she was shacking up with Jupiter. That Venus sure gets around, huh?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Eat lots of cheez whiz. Sure it is a funny orange color, but that's just MSG. The Chinese have had it in their food for years.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You will find yourself with a regrettable nickname after being caught in an act of sexual congress with one of the campus swans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You will learn the meaning to the phrase "kids can be cruel" when they start setting fire to your reproductive organs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Today's going to be a bad day. Your shoelaces will break, you're going to lose your pen and that paper you've been working will be eaten by your computer. On the plus side, you get some later on tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Quitting smoking is one of the best things you can do for yourself. If you don't smoke, start, then tell everyone you're trying to quit. They'll feel sorry for you and be impressed by how fast you did it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Monday's are never easy, but this one will be particularly difficult. You can get through it, but you're going to need to use all your wit. Then again, this is you we're talking about. Stay in bed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Talk to your dog. He doesn't want to be petted he just wants to talk. Prove to him that he is truly man's best friend.

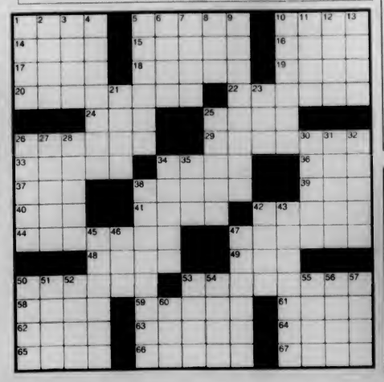
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Cosmically speaking, you've been wondering what to do with your life, but the answer's been right in front of you all along. Yep, that's vague enough.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Play more of the original Mario. Sure the XBox and the Game Cube are cool, but nothing beats shooting fireballs in two dimensions.

THE HARP IRISH PUB
Crossword not challenging enough?
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition

ACROSS
1 Emerging magma
5 Pierre's coin
10 As cousin
14 Ken of "thirtysomething"
15 Wild West show
16 Excursion
17 Necklace unit
18 Of yore
19 Capital of Norway
20 Lunar events
22 Common houseplant
24 Lab animal
25 Fishing gear
26 Knights' suits
29 Hearing range
33 Show gratitude
34 Meat entree
36 — out: stretch
37 Involuntary movement
38 Field protectors
39 Colorless
40 — hurry
41 "Woe is me!"
42 Chirps
44 Ranch hand
47 Villain
48 Help a burglar
49 "The Greatest"
50 Leaf vein
53 Pocket item
58 Colorado natives
59 Prize
61 Nolion
62 Verne's skipper
63 Reef component
64 Fossil fuel
65 Smile
66 Singer Rogers
67 Coastal bird

DOWN
1 Hoop's place
2 Novelist Waugh
3 Glass bottle
4 Firedog
5 Cold snaps
6 Cattle-call reward
7 Uses a calculator
8 Formerly named
9 Hides
10 Bikini and Tarawa
11 Medicinal amount
12 South African native
13 Mythical archer
21 City greenery
23 Above, to poets
25 Brings in the crop
28 Storage place
27 Big animal
28 Harsh-voiced squeaker
30 Chopped down
31 Giraffe cousin
32 On edge
34 Type of parking
35 Period of time
38 Return
42 Get boring
43 Structure
45 Minister
46 Kimono sash
47 Plainly
50 Bean-sprouts bean
51 Appian Way, e.g.
52 Ms. Moore
53 Livestock shelter
54 Persia, today
55 Bloodhound's clue
56 Prop
57 Carnegie or Evans
60 Trouble



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

C	O	P	S		E	P	O	C	H		Y	E	T	I
A	V	E	C		N	O	B	L	E		A	G	A	R
L	A	S	H		G	R	O	U	N	D	W	O	R	K
F	L	O	O	D		T	E	E		R	I	S	E	S
		L	I	R	A	S		C	A	N
A	P	P	A	R	E	L		R	I	G	G	I	N	G
L	A	U	R	E	L		P	E	N	S		D	O	E
O	U	R	S		E	V	A	D	E		E	A	S	E
U	S	E		L	A	D	Y		M	A	S	M	E	S
D	E	E	P	E	S	T		V	A	M	O	O	S	E
		I	V	E		R	E	S	E	T
S	T	A	L	E		G	U	N		N	E	C	K	S
W	A	F	F	L	E	I	R	O	N		R	A	I	L
A	C	R	E		B	L	A	M	E		I	S	L	E
B	O	O	R		B	A	L	S	A		C	H	O	W

10-18-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-3626 for more information.

LUNCH
Chicken Nuggets
Chili Nachos
Broccoli-Cauliflower Casserole (vegetarian)
California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
Omelets to Order
French Toast Sticks
Scrambled Eggs
Baked Ham
Six Bean Stew (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Melissa Hamimel
Photo Technician	Gerald Ling
Copy Editor	Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor	Jarrett Brimmer
Production Staff	Sean Becker, Shannon Farrington

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Winning beginnings

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Anderson scored six points and dished out four assists Saturday in Raleigh, N.C.

Streak extends to four on famed Tobacco Road

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

RALEIGH, N.C. – The season may be only four games of age, but the feel in the Massachusetts men's basketball team's locker room – especially after its 69-62 win over North Carolina State Saturday in Raleigh – does not correspond to that infancy.

"Another win," said fifth-year senior Kitwana Rhymer after his Minutemen worked their way to 4-0, already topping the amount of wins from last year's 3-10 non-conference slide. "Tuesday we had our celebration with the first big win against Oregon. But now, we're just like, 'okay, we're just going to keep pounding them out.'"

UMass	69
NC State	62

The streak though, is about to enter trying times. Because after Tuesday's game at home versus Holy Cross, UMass – which moved to the top of the RPI chart last week due to its tough schedule – must travel to Chestnut Hill Saturday to scrap with No. 15 Boston College, with a Mullins Center date with UConn lurking just three days later.

Still, with the way the Minutemen have been playing, coach Steve Lappas may not be as nervous over the upcoming tough slate as he was when the schedule was first released.

"Did I think we would be 4-0, knowing what the games were? No," said Lappas, after leading UMass to a 2-0 all-time mark against the Wolfpack (5-2). "I'm really proud of our guys – just the way they compete, the way they play. They get after it."

Saturday's game was rather similar to UMass' first three. It began with vicious blocks from Rhymer, which sent an early message to the Wolfpack guards not to use the lane as a safety valve. It continued with patient play from the young backcourt (along with survival of a full-court press that State put on for most of the afternoon), hard defense, and solid contributions from the bench. As usual, it ended with a clutch play from Micah Brand – this time a baseline jumper from the junior on the Wolfpack's Marcus Melvin with 1:13 left to put the game relatively out of reach at 60-54.

"It was straight one-on-one coverage the whole time," said Brand, who also connected on key late minute hoops in both the Arkansas-Little Rock and Oregon games. "But instead of letting me back him down, he just tried to play off me, so I just hit a jumper on him."

With 2:19 left to play, Shannon Crooks received the ball on the right wing, crossed up Clifford Crawford and broke clear to the basket – and with that lay-in, the senior extended the UMass lead to 58-50. Two UMass turnovers and two easy hoops for State's Anthony Grundy though, brought the Wolfpack back into contention at 58-54. But Brand's jumper, and free throws from Crooks and sophomore Willie Jenkins in the final minute proved too much.

Crooks led UMass with 20 points and seven rebounds, while Brand netted 14 points and sophomore Jenkins contributed 12.

Turn to UMASS page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Thomas Pock was physical versus Maine, but was forced to sit out against B.C. with a sprained ankle.

Mass attack drops two in tough weekend

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – The Minutemen followed historical suit this weekend by taking two brutal losses to annual powers Maine and Boston College.

B.C.	4
UMass	0
Maine	6
UMass	1

Colin Shields scored the game winner, his 12th of the year, on a five-on-three power play to bolster visiting Maine to a dominating 6-1 win over UMass at the Mullins Center.

The Minutemen followed the lackluster performance on Friday with a 4-0 loss at the hands of defending National Champion Boston College on Saturday. Sophomore forward Tony Voce had a pair of goals including the clincher on a first period power play.

"We've got a long way to go," said UMass head coach Don "Toot" Cahoon after his team dropped its fourth straight Hockey East game. The Minutemen now stand at 2-5 in conference play and 6-8 overall.

The theme of the weekend was defensive lapses. Against the Black Bears, UMass allowed numerous odd-man rushes that led to prime scoring chances and power plays – as the Minutemen struggled to recover on defense – for the most dangerous offensive team in the conference.

"Those guys have fire behind them when they get the puck in the neutral zone," said senior captain Toni Soderholm.

Maine's offensive strategy was unlike anything the Minutemen have seen this season. The Bears are adept with the puck in the neutral zone, as they consistently control the one side of the ice before feeding the puck across to a streaking wing that would likely have a prime scoring opportunity.

Only the Bears' tape to tape passing allowed them to execute this strategy, which led to a trio of goals in the win. Niko Dimitrakos and Lucas Lawson were the two most prominent thorns in the Minutemen's side, as each had a goal and an assist on two-on-one breaks with each other.

The Eagles, on the other hand, used aggressive forechecking and superior talent to garner breakdowns on the part of the UMass defense.

BC's first tally came on the power play when Ben Eaves fed down low to Dave Spina who threaded a goal-mouth feed to Voce, untouched on the doorstep, for the goal.

"We had a guy sitting right on the coverage," Cahoon said. "But he wasn't thorough. That's goal number one."

Goal number two came just five minutes later on a face-off deep in the UMass zone.

"We win the draw, our defenseman releases coverage and our guy just throws the puck away," Cahoon said.

The beneficiary of the own-zone miscue was Spina who waltzed in on Johnson and shelled a backhand for a two-goal lead. Voce scored again less than a minute later to all but seal the game before the first Intermission.

In game one against the Bears it was broken coverage that proved to be the fatal flaw for the Minutemen. Against BC it was ill-timed giveaways and half-assed defensive stands that gave way to the first period floodgates.

"I was upset with my team [against Maine]," Cahoon said. "I wasn't as upset with them [against BC]. But we have a lot of areas that need serious improvement."

The improvement will come in time and with one of the younger teams in college hockey, time is of abundance. But despite its inexperience, this team – its players, coaches and personnel – refuse to make excuses; they choose to move forward.

Distractions not bothersome

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

RALEIGH, N.C. – Most young teams usually struggle when forced to deal with a series of distraction. The Massachusetts men's basketball team, however, proved the contrary on Saturday afternoon as it went down to Tobacco Road and knocked off a stony South Carolina State squad 69-62.

There was merit than enough distractions all weekend long to derail the young Minutemen, but they persevered and did not let it all overtake them. They followed the lead of their seniors, notably Shannon Crooks at the offensive end and Kitwana Rhymer at the other and came out on top.

The problems started for UMass before it even arrived in Raleigh with sophomore swingman Jamel Pugh missing the team bus to the airport and its flight, thus being left behind in Amherst. Pugh, who has only played four minutes this season, is trying to work his way into the Maroon and White's regular rotation, a goal made all that more difficult by this latest faux pas.

Pugh's absence, however, was not the only pre-game distraction for the Minutemen. Sophomore Anthony Anderson did not start at point guard for the first time since UMass' season opener against Arkansas-Little Rock after violating an undisclosed team rule. This was the second time this season that Lappas was forced to discipline the Lynn, Mass., native. Anderson missed the Maroon and White's first preseason game against the BABC All-Stars while serving a one-game suspension because of a team rule violation.

Despite coming off the bench Anderson made up for his mistake the best was possible, by playing a key role in the UMass victory. He scored six points, grabbed seven rebounds and handed out a team-high four assists while only turning the ball over twice in 29 minutes against the Wolfpack's full court press.

That press was the major obstacle for the Minutemen to overcome once they stepped on the court. N.C. State had utilized its press in each of its first six games, but never had it sustained that pressure for all 40 minutes like they did on Saturday.

"We knew they would to press us, but didn't know they were gonna come with it the whole game," UMass head coach Steve Lappas said. "They didn't play that was against anybody. They were relentless with it."

That relentless pressure helped cause a season-high 20 turnovers, 13 in the first half, for the Minutemen and led to 17 points off turnovers for N.C. State. But it also led a number of bad fouls that, in the end, proved to be the undoing of the Wolfpack.

UMass made 15 of its 20 free throws, all of which came in the second half. Crooks was the only UMass player to miss from the charity stripe all day long, making just 3 of 8 on the afternoon. Not only did the free throws give UMass 15 extra points, it helped the Minutemen catch a quick breather, something that was necessary for a number of players who logged large numbers of minutes.

"I think we got fatigued a little bit at times," Lappas said. "We had some guys out there for a lot of minutes. Shannon with 35 minutes, Micah Brand with 36 minutes. But we got a heck of a lift from our bench. I was very happy with that."

The final distraction that UMass was forced to overcome was the raucous crowd of 10,801 inside the Entertainment & Sports Arena. This was the first time that UMass had played in a hostile environment in this young season and the young squad adequately handled the crowd and the noise.

"We just kept our composure, the guys just didn't show like they were scared," Crooks said.

The Minutemen opened the game on a 14-7 run to help take the crowd out of the game and never really let them get back into it. Even when the Wolfpack forged ahead early in the second half, the crowd never seemed to effect the Minutemen, as they were able to regain the lead and eventually hold on for the victory.

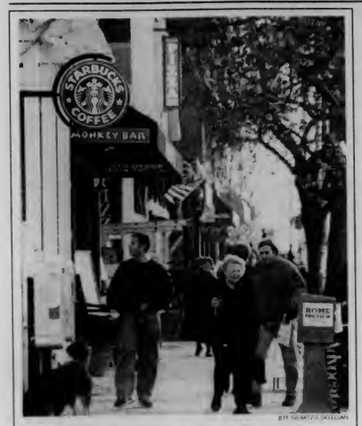
"I didn't know what to expect coming on the road but it doesn't seem like a whole lot fazes these guys," Lappas added. "They're fun to coach."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Micah Brand's jumper with 1:13 left in the game proved fatal for North Carolina State.

Oops she did it again...badly. Read about it in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN



The UMass women's hoop team lost to Vermont 69 - 51. Read about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 60 www.dailycollegian.com Tuesday, December 4, 2001

BEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Brought back to life

Amherst was rejuvenated this weekend with temperatures reaching near 70 degrees.

Women of color explored in seminar

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Correspondent

Chief Editor of the magazine Essence Joan Morgan hosted this weekend's Women of Color Seminar that was aimed at addressing different issues facing people of color and women in particular. It was held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Dec. 1 at the New Africa House.

Black Student Union secretary Kara Green, who spoke about the program and its aims, opened up the event and introduced Morgan. Author of a number of books, like When the Chicken Heads Come to Roost, Morgan has written for a number of projects including oxygen.com and VIBE.

The first workshop held was an informational discussion about black sororities and fraternities. Led by Olubukola (Bukky) George Taylor, a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority at the University of Massachusetts, this presentation dealt with addressing misconceptions and questions about Greek organizations.

Taylor commenced her presentation by giving a brief history of the origination of black sororities and fraternities and what factors brought the need for their establishment. Giving her personal experiences on sororities, Taylor addressed questions and comments from the audience. Addressing one attendee's question about selecting the right sorority, Taylor stressed the need for research. Describing her own research process, Taylor said, "I loved everything that they stood for," focusing on the community service aspect of the organizations and their efforts for the "betterment of the black community."

An exchange student to Louisiana State University last year, Taylor also gave insights on the differences of the presence of the organizations at different college campuses. She later turned to other women in the audience belonging to different sororities to share their personal experiences with their individual organizations.

Joan Morgan held the next workshop, which dealt with the issue of the role of women in hip-hop and the problems with the misrepresentation of black women in the media. Morgan opened up this discussion by first stating her position on the issue.

"My first story as a music journalist was in 1991 when my editor asked me to critique Queen Latifah's new album," she said.

She explained how she was first hesitant to write about music but later came to be concerned. "I felt that hip-hop should be documented by black people," Morgan said, giving an example. "Like I wouldn't want my two-year old to grow up and read that Eminem was the most important moment in hip-hop history."

She also discussed the issue of the "deteriorating quality of the media." She went on to say, "I think that 90 percent of hip-hop content is not suitable for children."

The discussion then turned to the audience where many voiced their opinions on the problems with the Black Entertainment Television (BET) network. Attendees raised issues on the increasing "pornographic" nature of some of the videos shown on the channel. When asked what people can do to stop this type of programming, Morgan stressed the need for voicing one's opinions to the network executives.

"Flood them with letters and emails," she said. "The bottom line is that your dollar counts. They want to please the audience. If you show them you are unsatisfied they will change that. It's sometimes as simple as making one phone call."

Answering to the question about her opinion on BET, Morgan replied, "I think it (BET) is falling short of its potential that it could be."

She ended the discussion by stating again that individuals can make a difference, saying "It's all in your hands."

The seminar recommenced after an hour-long break for lunch with the next workshop about issues with interracial dating held by Florence

Turn to COLOR page 3

BEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Splish, splash!

This fountain is still alive and working, despite it being December.

Dean elected president of national arts council

The University of Massachusetts is a virtual hotbed for outstanding professors and administrators. Once again this has been proven by the election of Dean Lee R. Edwards as president of the Council of Colleges of Arts and Sciences. CCAS Edwards has been the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at UMass for 11 years.

CCAS is a national, non-profit association of baccalaureate, degree-granting colleges of arts and sciences. It was formed in 1965 as an outgrowth of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges. According to a released statement, the purpose of CCAS is to sustain the arts and sciences as a leading influence in American higher education. It serves as a forum for the exchange of ideas and information among deans, and plays a role at the national politi-making level.

"The knowledge and methodology offered by an arts and sciences curriculum serves as a bridge between contemplation and action for students, certainly, but also, more generally, for citizens of a functioning democracy," Edwards said in regards to her new opportunity to help lead the nation's higher education institutions through the challenges and prospects faced by the arts and sciences within the political and educational spheres.

Edwards served as president-elect of CCAS since May. She was responsible for organizing the association's 2001 annual meeting. She will present the keynote speech at the 2002 meeting. She will serve for one year at the post.

– Catherine Turner

Film highlights lives of gay youth

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

When it came time for former University of Massachusetts student John Kazlauskas to write a senior thesis, he decided to buck tradition. Rather than spending long hours in the W.E.B. DuBois Library researching embryology or particle physics, Kazlauskas decided to make a film about the experiences of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (GLBT) high school students.

His film, titled, Speak Up: Improving the Lives of GLBT Youth, was shown last night in Thompson Hall. Kazlauskas, who graduated from UMass in May, was on hand to speak about his experiences making the film, and the importance of awareness of GLBT issues in education.

He explained that the idea to make a film about anti-gay discrimination came to him after he himself was a victim of harassment. He decided to focus on GLBT high school students, although he hopes that the issues explored are universal.

Speak Up features testimony from both students and educators. They describe the negative experiences that GLBT students often suffer through, and urge teachers and administrators to work to prevent such behavior. Information is included about the Massachusetts Safe Schools Program, which works to assure GLBT students of a peaceful educational environment.

Also included in the film are interviews with noted figures such as "Real World: New Orleans" cast members Danny Roberts and Julie Stoffer, Rent star Anthony Rapp, and Judy Shepherd, mother of slain college student Matthew Shepherd.

"I was wondering about how to get in touch with young people," Kazlauskas said, explaining why he chose to interview celebrities. "Since I knew it was aimed at youth, I thought that a way to get them to connect to it would be to use national figures that everyone would know."

He said that one of his greatest difficulties in making the film was reluctance from administrators to allow their students to appear.

"One person said to me that they didn't want straight students to be stigmatized by appearing in a gay video,"

Turn to FILM page 3

BEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Recent films shown in the area have catered to the GLBT community on campus.

GLBT lecture series prepares for finale

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

In an ongoing effort to open eyes on campus, the Stonewall Center has presented a series of lectures about Lesbian, Gay Bisexual and Transgender issues. In the last two lectures of the semester, experts will finish the Stonewall Center Lecture Series' program tackling the topics of the transgendered and lesbian activism.

The first lecture, entitled "Who Cares about a Few Trans People?" will take place this Thursday, Dec. 6 at 12:30 p.m. in the campus center. The talk, by UMass doctoral student Alisha Clarke, will give a sociological perspective on the place of transgender people in modern culture. It will cover several areas of study, including the medicalization of homosexuality, in which it is studied as a physical condition, feminist theory, and queer theory. The lecture will also evaluate the need for a transgender theory within Queer Studies.

The final lecture will be offered next week, also at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Becky Thompson, a professor of African American Studies, Women's Studies and Sociology at Simmons College, will visit the campus to discuss the history of lesbian activism. She will relate lesbian history to the history of racial activism and civil rights. Lesbian activist history will also be discussed in the context of feminist history in her talk.

The lecture series is co-sponsored by the University of Massachusetts' Departments of Women's Studies, English and Communications, along with the Chancellor's Task Force on GLBT Matters. It is coordinated by Mitch Boucher and Stephen Pereira of the Stonewall Center.

The series is intended to raise awareness on campus on GLBT issues, as well as providing a forum for scholars in the field of Queer Studies to present their research. The ultimate goal of the program, according to Pereira, has been to raise support for a GLBT Studies major or certificate program at the University.

So far this semester, the talks have been popular among UMass and Five College Students. Some topics, on "hot button issues" such as bisexuality and transgender identities, have drawn bigger audiences than others. Many speakers have also put on evening cultural programming in their field of expertise.

The lecture series will continue next semester, with more speakers on a variety of topics that are still TBA. Students may register to attend the lectures for credit.

The Stonewall Center also hosts its own Educational Resource Center, with a number of academic resources and research materials in the field of Queer Studies. According to their

Turn to LECTURE page 3

BEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Tis the season... for shopping!

As the holiday season nears stores prepare for the rush by over stocking. And remember, there are only 21 more shopping days left.

National Briefs

Iowa

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan (U. Iowa)

(U-WIRE) IOWA CITY, Iowa – The alcohol-related death of Matthew Garofalo will leave an indelible mark on the University of Iowa even after a settlement was reached in a wrongful-death suit filed by his parents, said a university fraternity leader.

The parents of the Elgin, Ill., fraternity pledge settled a wrongful-death claim in October against Chad Diehl, the Lambda Chi Alpha mentor and provider of alcohol to Garofalo during a pledge ceremony in 1995.

"The UI campus will never forget this," said Chris Siro, the president of the UI Interfraternity Council.

However, Phillip Jones, the UI vice president for Student Services, said the settlement bears no significance to the university because the school was not involved in the litigation.

"Garofalo's death didn't initiate interest [in alcohol consumption]; it dramatized it," Jones said. "It is a tangible example of consequences of abusive use of alcohol."

The Garofalo family's attorney, Edward Gallagher of Waterloo, said the family is pleased the case is closed, averting a trial that had been scheduled to begin Monday. The Garofalos hold no ill will toward anyone involved in the matter, he said.

Details of the settlement were not revealed.

Garofalo's death occurred at the beginning of the UI's efforts to curb binge drinking. It resulted in all fraternities voluntarily becoming alcohol-free in 1998.

The Stepping Up Project formed shortly after Garofalo's death to raise awareness about binge drinking. Garofalo's death underscores the dangers of drinking on campus, said Stepping Up Director Julie Phye, adding that she is happy for his family's settlement.

"This was an example of an already important issue made more personal," she said.

The then-sophomore's family is happy the university and fraternities have worked to improve alcohol awareness, Gallagher said.

"This is the main reason they went ahead with this ... to see that this didn't happen again," he said.

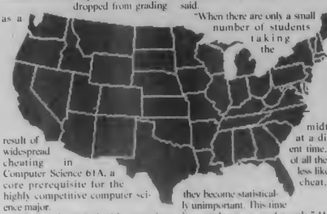
Officials determined that Garofalo, 19, died of pulmonary edema and fluid in the lungs because of excessive drinking during a "Big Brother/Little Brother" pledge ceremony at 222 N. Clinton St. on the night of Sept. 7, 1995.

In September 2000, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled that the fraternity was not responsible for the death and that the family could pursue legal action against Diehl. The fraternity was banned from the UI six years ago; it reopened this fall, attracting 52 members.

Diehl's attorney could not be reached for comment.

California

By Helen Hwang
Daily Californian (U. California-Berkeley)



(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. – Cheating, plagiarism and all categories of academic dishonesty have experienced dramatic spikes in recent years at University of California-Berkeley. Earlier this year, an entire midterm was tossed out because of widespread cheating.

Reported cases of cheating alone have more than doubled at the university, from 61 in 1998 to 148 last year. The increasing numbers reflect a corresponding rise in cheating at universities across the nation, said a UC Berkeley official responsible for upholding the code of student conduct.

The accessibility of the Internet has been a significant factor in the rise, making it easier for students to download, purchase or plagiarize term papers, said Neal Rajmaira, UC Berkeley student judicial affairs director. The national trend is troubling, in particular after considering that a great deal more cheating goes on than is caught or pursued, he said.

"Academic dishonesty is anathema to the idea of higher education," Rajmaira said. "It cheapens and diminishes the degree of everyone who has graduated from this university and threatens the integrity of the name Berkeley."

Even the computer science department, which is consistently ranked as one of the top three in the nation, is not immune to cheating. A midterm was dropped from grading as a result of widespread cheating in Computer Science 61A, a core prerequisite for the highly competitive computer science major.

"I'm not interested with protecting the academic reputation of the university," said Brian Harvey, the course's computer science professor. "Who cares? I'm more concerned about the effect on students."

Cheating can affect how students get into the highly competitive computer science major, which requires students to apply. Cheating can inflate students' grades and make it more difficult to get into the major.

"Admission to the major is based on lower division grades, and students are essentially competing against each other for places," Harvey said. "Cheating is significant because it raises the bar for getting in the CS major."

The second midterm for Computer Science 61A was scheduled at the same time as one in Computer Science 61C, another major prerequisite. As a result, about 50 students took the midterm early. There are normally only a few students with conflicts who take the exam early, and it had never posed a problem before, Harvey said.

But this year some early exam-takers gave out test questions to other students, and there was quite widespread discussion of the exam questions.

The problem was the sheer number of students taking the exam early, Harvey said.

"When there are only a small number of students taking the midterm at a different time, first of all they are less likely to cheat, and they become statistically unimportant. This time it was a large group of people," Harvey said.

Usually, students do not make a premeditated decision to cheat – it arises as a student panics on the spur of the moment, he said. In this case, the decision to cheat was deliberate and "cold-blooded."

The midterms in question were graded before the cheating was discovered. Although the average was only slightly higher than expected, the test score that appeared the most, the mode, was just one point off from a perfect grade.

Harvey estimates that 40 of his 500 students were involved in cheating on the exam.

"My own feeling is that when people cheat they only hurt themselves," Harvey said. "In the long run it's true, especially in a course like mine, which is a core class for the major. If you can't get through the first course, you can't make it in upper division. It's just postponing the crisis for cheaters."

People build habits of behavior through their every action, Harvey added.

"If you learn to cut corners as a student, you are preparing yourself to cut corners later in life," he said. "There are plenty of ways this can become problematic, especially as a computer programmer."

Harvey said he will not change his policies about test-taking, saying he believes that this was an isolated incident. No one on the faculty believes cheating is OK, but opinion varies as to how cheating should be handled, Harvey added.

"Cheating is simply one thing among many that you have to consider in a large class like mine," Harvey said. "I'd rather focus on meeting the needs of students who want to learn rather than devote lots of energy to those who don't want to learn."

Washington D.C.

By Justin Steinkamp
The GW Hatchet (George Washington U.)

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – George Washington University medical researchers mapped a new gene called BP1 last month that has been linked to leukemia and may contribute to breast cancer. The findings, published in the science journal Gene, will lead to further research and possible long-term treatments, University medical staff members said.

If extra BP1 is proven to cause breast cancer, doctors would be able to treat patients by turning the gene off or interrupting its activity. Doctors now know 40 percent of women with breast cancer who do not produce receptors for the female hormone estrogen have had their BP1 gene "turned on." A gene that is turned on is sending a message actively to cells in the body.

"This finding suggests that BP1 could be a new target for breast cancer patients lacking the estrogen receptor, who are otherwise difficult to treat," said Dr. Patricia Berg, senior author of the study and associate professor in the department of biochemistry and molecular biology.

The presence of BP1 also is tied to leukemia.

In one form of leukemia Berg investigated, the disease killed 60 to 70 percent of patients. In these patients, BP1 turned on very early in blood cells but did not turn off as it normally should. The overexpressed gene stops the blood cell from maturing, contributing to leukemia.

Berg found the mapped BP1 gene is in close proximity to a gene that has been found to cause breast cancer in past cancer research.

In breast cancer the BP1 protein also is overproduced, but the way the gene works in breast tissue is not known fully.

"Maybe it's a similar mechanism (to leukemia). Maybe it's not. We'll be testing for that," said Holly Stevenson, a third-year graduate student in the genetics program working on the project.

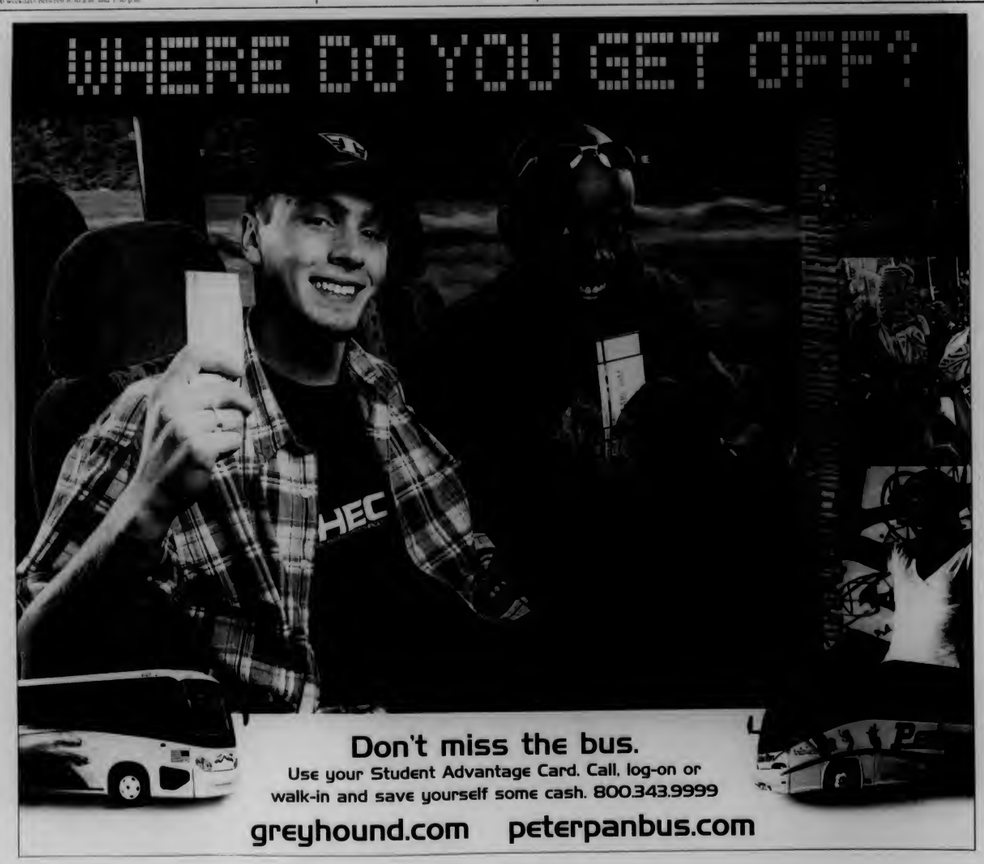
Overproduced BP1 in breast tissue could contribute to cancer in a similar way that the gene does in the blood. If so, the goal for doctors would be to find a drug to reduce BP1 production in breast tissue.

"Dr. Berg found a new gene that no one else has found," said Dr. Arnold Schwartz of the GW Hospital. "The question we will be determining over the next few years is the significance of correlation."

The rate of scientific research is often too slow to save patients living with cancer, but Berg is convinced that in the long run the treatments and cures will be found.

"We all have mothers or sisters or wives to create a tremendous interest in breast cancer research," Berg said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Voice in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fry Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Lanswood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Friday, Nov. 30

Larceny
Six poinsettia plants were stolen from the French Hall Greenhouse #6 and suspect was seen leaving through window. Reported at 8:22 a.m., and plants were returned by 1:51 p.m.

Assist Citizen
Person called at 10:13 a.m. to request that an officer check on a man reporting person had met on a bus. Person said man was flagging down cars and spoke of space flight. Police officers found no person matching the description at the Haigis Mall bus stop and surrounding area.

Vandalism
Person reported from Pierpont Dormitory at 12:17 p.m. that their compact disc drive on their personal computer was glued shut.

Liquor Law Violations
Two reports from the Hole (Lot 50) of liquor law violations – the first at 7:46 p.m. was unfounded and the second, 11 minutes later, resulted in an arrest of a 19-year-old male an officer saw handling beer in the parking lot.

Saturday, Dec. 1

Disturbance
Police received a report from John Adams Dormitory at 2:17 a.m. of a fight between the ninth and tenth floors of the building. Upon arrival, officers found 14 participants and/or witnesses as well as two males with minor face injuries. One of the males was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for care.

Alarm-Elevator
Call from Kennedy Dormitory at 2:41 a.m. of seven people stuck in an elevator. Environmental Health and Safety advised.

Police Log

with Alicia Upano

Assist Agency
Environmental Health and Safety requested assistance dealing with people taking down smoke detectors in Coolidge Dormitory at 4:10 a.m.

Disturbance
Intramural hockey referee reported from the Mullins Center practice rink at 3:33 p.m. that a person he ejected for a penalty made a verbal threat of bodily harm. Referee did not press charges.

Breaking and Entering/Burglary
Report of a motor vehicle entered forcefully in Lot 49 (east of Van Meter Dormitory) at 7:31 p.m. Car stereo had been removed and military clothes stolen.

Liquor Law Violations
Plainclothes officer found a 19-year-old male take a 30-pack of beer out of his trunk to place in a bag and arrested him for the possession of alcohol at the Hole (Lot 50) at 7:46 p.m. Another 19-year-old male was arrested in Patterson Dormitory an hour later for the possession of alcohol and use of a false driver's license.

Sunday, Dec. 2

Noise Complaint
Person called UMPD to request assistance at the Campus Center Hotel at 12:56 a.m. as they were going to evict individuals not responding to a noise complaint. Party agreed to leave.

Liquor Law Violation
Two underage non-student males were found at the Hole (Lot 50) possessing alcohol at 2:12 a.m. Officers dumped alcohol, told males to leave campus and issued trespass notices.

Assault and Battery
Mackimmie Dormitory Resident Director reported at 3:04 a.m. that an intoxicated male had thrown a bottle down the hall, which hit a female resident in the shoulder. Victim refused to press charges and housing considered evicting the individual.

■ color

continued from page 1

Petitquoi and Kara Green. Petitquoi began the discussion talking about her personal experience with dating a white man and some problem and issues she had to deal with while in the relationship. The women in the discussion addressed questions about the reluctance to date outside their race and culture and shared their opinions about others who do so. One attendee localized the issue by commenting on the tendency of some black UMass athletes preferring to date white women.

The seminar's last workshop was a presentation titled "Life After College: Life in the Workforce" conducted by recent UMass graduate Rahilya Napoli. Now a research assistant at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, Napoli shared her experiences and gave advice on how to deal with issues at the workplace. She detailed her post-graduate activities saying, "I had three job offers after eleven days of graduating from college and I had to make an important decision."

She also gave advice on how to deal with politics at the workplace adding, "You must always, always stay in contact with the top people because they have the power to make you or break you."

"I wish more people could have made it but I do feel that it went well," Kara Green said, commenting on the day's events. "It gave people some things to think about and go home with. We dealt with many relevant issues in our daily lives as women of color."

■ film

continued from page 1

Kazlauskas said. "My reaction was, 'What about the stigma that gay students have?'"

He also said that he had difficulty getting students and teachers to discuss issues regarding the transgendered. Many who were willing to speak about homosexuality, he said, refused to comment on the rights of the transgendered.

"One teacher told me, 'I don't want to touch that with a ten foot pole,'" he said.

In addition to commenting on his film, Kazlauskas took questions from the assembled audience.

Women's Studies Professor Arlene Avakian asked Kazlauskas about the effects of Sept. 11 on his attitude toward his work.

"You made this movie before Sept. 11," Avakian said. "For a lot of us, life has profoundly changed. Have you thought about this film differently?"

Kazlauskas responded by explaining that his apartment in Manhattan was only a block away from the World Trade Center. He was standing near the towers when they collapsed, and feared for his life.

"I was profoundly affected," he said. He explained that witnessing the attacks has only strengthened his belief in the importance of the issues explored in the film.

Sut Jhally, the director of the Media Education Foundation, which will be distributing the film to educators, offered words of encouragement.

"If a [straight person] were to ask me why they should watch this video," Jhally said, "I would say, 'it will make you feel a little bit guilty, but it will empower you.' This video offers a non-threatening way to think about an important issue."

■ lecture

continued from page 1

website, academic programs like the lecture series are continually being added to the Stonewall Center's programming in order to further Queer Studies at UMass and at colleges and universities across the country.

According to the website, "When we opened in 1985, the Stonewall Center was one of only three centers of its kind on college campuses across the country. Our program has served as a model for many colleges and universities, leading to some 60 centers now in existence."

On the web: http://www.umass.edu/stonewall

Police arrest U. Northern Colorado student on suspicion of drug manufacturing

By Dave Steffenson & Nate A. Miller
The Mirror (U. Northern Colorado)

(U-WIRE) GREELEY, Colo. – A University of Northern Colorado student was arrested Wednesday after police simultaneously raided his apartment, located in the Brentwood Park apartment complex, and his storage building in north Greeley.

Graduate student Robert Bunn, 27, was arrested on a felony charge of possession with intent to manufacture a Schedule I controlled substance.

Schedule I drugs, which include PCP, heroine and LSD, are those with high potential for abuse and have no accepted medicinal use in the United States.

According to Steve Nelson, a lieutenant in charge the Weld County Task Force, police recovered substances from Bunn's apartment during the raid.

"They would be classified as dangerous chemicals," he said. Bunn, who is a chemistry student, is the leaseholder for both his apartment and the storage building. He said he is the owner of a chemical company called Greeley Scientific and the police may have been alarmed by a purchase he made.

"I have every reason to possess chemical equipment," said Bunn, who is out of jail on bond. "Maybe they didn't like what I purchased."

Greeley Police, however, tell a different story. According to Nelson, authorities have found no evidence that Bunn works for or owns a chemical company.

"It's awful strange," he said. "You don't usually run a chemical company out of your apartment."

The raids followed an investigation by the Weld County Task Force and the Drug Enforcement Agency. Investigators determined that large quantities of chemicals, which can used to manufacture drugs, were purchased in Denver and transported to Greeley.

Sgt. Dave Adams, a Greeley Police spokesman, said that while police did not know exactly what kind of chemicals were found, those who conducted the raid know which chemicals can be used to produce narcotics.

"They have the training to know what chemicals are used to make Schedule I drugs," he said.

Bunn said the incident is a misunderstanding.

"This is embarrassing because I haven't done anything," Bunn said. "This is a lose-lose situation for me."

Bunn was a mystery to his neighbors.

"I didn't even know anyone lived there," said a Brentwood Park resident who wished to remain anonymous. "They never opened their blinds or anything."

Another neighbor also wished to remain anonymous.

"I've never seen him before," the resident said. "I don't even know what he looked like."

The residents in Bunn's building were evacuated and stayed overnight at the Super 8 Motel on 29th Street as authorities cleaned up the chemicals.

Brentwood Park Manager Judy Hotz issued a letter of apology to residents of Bunn's building for any inconvenience caused by the incident.

"I am deeply sorry if this resident's stupidity caused any distress or inconvenience for you," Hotz's letter stated.

The letter went on to say Bunn had been asked to leave the complex.

"I want all of you to know that I have begun an expedited eviction this morning on the resident," the letter stated.

Bunn said he thought he was being evicted because of the effect the raid would have on Brentwood Park management.

"They don't like the bad attention," Bunn said.

Officials from Brentwood Park declined to further comment on the event.

UNC Dean of Students Jean Morrell said she could not comment on the specific case but did not rule out university disciplinary action.

"If we find that students are involved in a major criminal activity, then there is usually university follow-up," she said. Adams said the Weld County Task Force has raided 24 suspected drug-manufacturing labs this year.

An evening of scenes
Dennis Heaton and his fellow classmates performed selected scenes, from four plays, to a select crowd last night in the FAC.

2nd to last news meeting of the semester, tomorrow at 5:30pm, last chance to be famous...like Ken.

STUDENT TICKETS

UMass basketball VS CONNECTICUT HUSKIES ESPN

Tuesday • DEC. 11TH • 9:00 pm

$ 5.00 each

WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

THE BATTLE OF THE BORDER
THE BIGGEST BASKETBALL GAME OF THE YEAR!

TICKETS ONSALE NOW!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810

GET YOUR TICKETS AT
CAMPUS CENTER • THE CAGE • MULLINS CENTER

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Budget cuts:

UMass hit hard

The shinola has hit the fan. The Massachusetts legislature has finally approved a state budget. While the budget isn't finalized, it's indicative of what UMass' budget will look like in the not too distant future. According to the Campus Chronicle, the budget that the legislature passed last week cuts the UMass budget approximately four percent, or by nearly 20 million dollars for the next year. Higher public education in Massachusetts will receive a cut in the neighborhood of 50 million dollars.

The budget cut was not unexpected; UMass administrators have seen it coming for months. In fact, the budget cuts should have been made months ago – the budget approved is already four months behind schedule.

With the economy down both statewide and nationwide, it comes as no surprise that the money that UMass receives from the state government is being reduced. It's just not there.

That's fine, this year. There are classes that will be cut, projects that will be pushed off again, equipment that won't be purchased, and library resources that will be ignored. We all know that. There are going to be some major inconveniences that go along with the budget cut. Grin and bare it, UMass. Everything isn't rosy in the state and in the country right now. Why should we expect better here?

The danger that lies in cutting UMass' budget for the year lies in the precedent it sets. The economy, both nationwide and statewide, is unstable right now, to say the least. Massachusetts has had an up and down financial period just like everything else, and the Big Dig is never a help.

If things don't improve, though, UMass could have a problem. UMass' budget got cut this year. Fine. What happens to UMass next year? Or the year after that?

"We...believe it is our responsibility to communicate to the Commonwealth and its citizens that severe and sustained cuts to the University jeopardize its investment and weaken the long-term prognosis for the Commonwealth," Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams said.

She's got a good point. UMass can handle these cuts for a year or two. The precedent that cutting the budget sets, though, is not a good thing. We're going to feel it. We're going to whine about it. The money will be missed.

As long as the cuts aren't sustained, though, we'll be okay in the long run. Institutions with the longevity of UMass don't fade into nothingness with one four percent budget cut. Things will be okay.

We as a university need to communicate clearly, though, that a cutting of our budget like this on a regular basis would be detrimental to our educations and the educations of all those at UMass who go here after us. It can't and won't be us. Our state government probably realizes that, but it never hurts to remind them. From time to time, they do forget the silliest things.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial staff.

Losing a light of hope

SIMON PONGRATZ

The world will never be the same. A light of hope and love has gone out, and we may not see its rekindling in our lifetime. These past two months have seen so much anarchy and violence, particularly in the recent weekend. One is tempted to wonder if his passing means something – clearly this is not a world in which George Harrison belongs.

The news was preceded by two conversations the night before that are frequent topics among my friends and myself. One was that the remaining three Beatles are getting old and the world will eventually be Beatle-less, a disturbing thought to those of us who proclaim that the Beatles' magic extends well beyond music, into the boundless realm of immortality. Of course, Ringo will probably live the longest.

Our second conversation concerned the eternal question: who is better, John or Paul? Strawberry Fields or Penny Lane? Happy Christmas (War is Over) or Wonderful Christmastime? I'm of the opinion that both have their time and place – they're opposites, and one could not exist without the other.

George is often left out. People can name the Beatles – "John, Paul, Ringo, and oh, what was that other one's name?" Often we forget that some of the greatest Beatles songs came from George. Revolver, the album that may be their most experimental and revolutionary, contains three of his precious creations.

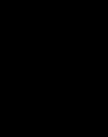
His style is instantly recognizable, his unique lyrics punctuated by a Cockney accent that is inimitable. His genius shows up early in "Don't Bother Me," recorded in 1963 when George was only about twenty years old, and continues through their early albums into Rubber Soul, Revolver, and Sgt. Pepper's, when his experiments with Eastern Music and the sitar blossomed into some of the Beatles' most memorable moments...what would "Norwegian Wood" be without George and his Sitar?

His concerts for Bangladesh to relieve hunger involved many famous musicians, including his friend Eric Clapton, and were precursors of Band Aid and Live Aid. Always charitable and good natured, last year his words to an attacker moments before he was stabbed were "Hare Krishna, Hare Krishna."

His passing seems to be the real catalyst into this new world in which we live. There is no room for that part of his message that can't be corrupted and co-opted into the way in which we're now supposed to think. It's a portent of things to come, in this world of military tribunals, DNA banks, manufactured musicians, and new wars every day, that the voices of restraint, hope, and love are disappearing.

There is no room for peaceful voices in the new world, and the present situation on almost every continent is deteriorating rapidly into anarchy. The recent killing of about twenty-five Israeli's by Palestinian suicide bombers will most likely be the last straw for the Israeli government, who will respond brutally. Arafat already by Sunday had declared a state of emergency amid Israeli and US high-level meetings that reportedly discussed the options of exiling him, or outright invasion.

Financially, the global economy that last year was chugging ahead with much-touted promise now seems headed for an outright train wreck, the result of fiscal irresponsibility and outright greed. Argentina's inter-bank interest rates soared above 500 percent over the weekend, the result of $95bn in debts that may force a currency devaluation. Reports are just now surfacing putting the Insurance industry's exposure to the Sept. 11th attacks around $40bn. This, coupled with their exposure to the failure of Enron under $2bn in debt, the largest bankruptcy in US history, paint a grim picture indeed, especially if the latter causes ripples that spread to other sectors of the economy.



The term 'Crisis of Capitalism,' which many economists apply to the 1970's, will take on new meaning as more and more scenarios like the two above emerge. Today's world looks a lot more purely capitalist than that of the '70's, and in a study, S. Motozi writes "These last years Chinese and Indian official statistics say that the agricultural population is starting to diminish in absolute numbers. According to Marx this is the most evident indication of capitalism spreading into the rural areas."

What we're seeing is lender greed coming back to haunt them. In Argentina's case, debt was forced upon the country that accumulated to such an extent that the only solution now is more borrowing, even though the IMF concedes that it probably won't help. Currency devaluation, and even default, could follow, both potentially devastating to many of those same lenders who forced the loans originally. The existing networks that international capitalism has created threaten to bring down the entire system.

The outlook is indeed grim. All the portents point to a worsening of the situation, if current ways of thinking prevail. Infinitesimal changes in only one of many different areas of concern, such as an expected widening of the 'War on Terror' to Iraq, could be the coup de grace. With George Harrison's passing, the whole world has lost one of the most sincere proponents of this course, which means the rest of us will just have to work that much harder.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist. Information from International Academic Conference was used to write this article.

Blame is in all the wrong spots again

MELODY ZAGAMI

Children can be so cruel sometimes. Some kids spend their entire middle and high school careers picking fun at others, but does that warrant shouting profanities at them? Of course not, and any level headed person, or even one without that level of head can see that.

I am talking about the recent disaster that was averted in New Bedford last week. There is a problem with the youth of America. It is evident every time you pick up the paper or turn on the television to witness yet another high school shooting or an attempted conspiracy that involves children that have been driven to the edge by their peers.

Driven to the edge by their peers? Kids have been making fun of other kids since the dawn of time. I guarantee if you went back to the prehistoric period you would find cave teenagers making fun of one another. "Thog, you're fire isn't burning as brightly as ours, we beat you up after lunch."

I am in no way making light of these situations, but I am trying to prove a point. Sometimes people are mean and there's nothing you can do about it because it's just a part of growing up.

Unless of course you buy some guns and explosives and make sure that everyone can claim that you are such a good kid after you attempt to annihilate large groups of your peers. Then, it's fine. Then people will study you and try to figure out where our society has gone wrong and try to decipher what we could've done to help you so you didn't get the bag beaten out of you in the boys locker room. And it's also fine because the media will automatically question how many Marilyn Manson CD's you own and why you wear black. And then there's the obligatory background check on your parents.

The young boys that were the "ring leaders" (the media uses this term as if these kids are top performers in the New Bedford case) were tattered (and I use the term loosely) by a heroin and alcohol addict.

Oh, there ya go. The rest of America will read that in the papers and see that the response to, "How could this have happened?" is an easy one. It's the parents. It's always the parents. If the parents abusing drugs isn't enough proof for you, the boys, apparently, had what the Boston Globe calls "a healthy predilection for marijuana." Thank god then, at least we can rule out bong hitting as an accomplice in this crime. The next time my mother yells, "What's that smell?" I can respond with the simple, "Just a healthy predilection." It's also reported that their group of friends dubbed themselves the "freaks" of New Bedford High. One of the brothers, Eric McKeehan went to grade school in the inner city and talked "black." He also made the mistake of listening to Tupac early on in his youth.

I read this information in yesterday's Globe. It's yet another teenage shooting plot where we struggle not to find answers to the problem, not to find a solution (no that would be ridiculous), but where we strive to place a blame on something, anything we can dig up.

I'm sorry. I am all for human individuality. Where better to start practicing yours but in high school, where you are freshly forming your identity?

But if you're going to dub yourselves as "freaks," kids are going to make fun of you. Personally, I'd find it refreshing that they know their social status and don't try to hide the facts that they're on the bottom rungs of the cursed high school social ladder. The media is clearly stating that they had friends, that they had one another, alluding to a strong network of support. Still they plotted, and thankfully, were stopped.

I have been friends with prom queens, football players and complete nerdlings, everyone has insecurities. High School is a difficult time for everyone, even the pretty people. I wasn't made fun of (too much) in high school, so I have no idea what these kids have been going through. But whatever it is, surely there is another way to deal with it then shooting up the cafeteria.

Life isn't fair most of the time. Kids beat other kids up. People don't like you because you're different. Sometimes people are just losers in the eyes of others and they get cemented into a certain stereotype, buck it up. Everyone feels out of place at some point, and the only thing you can do is hang out with the friends you do have and make fun of the cool kids.

If you want to wear a black trench coat and play Dungeons and Dragons, so be it, but realize that in reality, not everybody's going to accept that. People are shallow because they don't understand the need to be different. The high school junior sporting the Abercrombie sweater is going to be accepted and the kid wearing the black spiked collar isn't (woo! isn't as threatening as metal spikes).

People reject what they don't understand. Our society is completely guilty of foolish speculation when dealing with these cases because we don't accept the truth about our social dynamics. Until we do that, we will continue making desperate attempts to lay blame in all the wrong places.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

80's toons timeless

REGAN MCKENDRY

Quicksilver vs Lions. No contest... Quicksilver wins every time.

If all this is Greek to you, then apparently you did not grow up watching cartoons in the 80s, one of the best times for animation in recent memory. The first great renaissance for cartoons occurred from the late 1930s to the mid 1950s. During this time both Disney and Warner Brothers were at their peak, as Bugs Bunny and Mickey Mouse became as commonplace as Coca-Cola and the Sears catalog. Through the 60s and 70s though, cartoons began to decline. Warner Brothers had slowed production and Disney, while still primo at the box office, had drastically scaled back its number of shorts. What was an animation fan to do.

Then, like a saving grace from God, the 80s arrived. Cartoons were once again a top art form. Unlike the past though, when the cinema was the place to catch latest release, television was now the medium of choice. Instead of shorts, half-hour episodes of a regular series were made for the small screen. Even with the blossoming of cable, the two predominant ways of getting a cartoon on the boob tube were syndicated afternoon cartoons and the lost childhood classic, the Saturday morning cartoon.

Saturday mornings have completely changed since the decade of decadence. Now NBC airs a weekend edition of the Today show with its tween and teen dramas. ABC and CBS still try to air cartoons, but ABC's shows are heavily influenced by their Disney parent into producing shows that don't have as much appeal, while CBS airs mostly retreads from its cable sister Nickelodeon (Nickelodeon, a child itself of the 80s, is basically a roller coaster of good and bad cartoons and other kids programming, but that's another story). Even Fox, who went through its only glory days in the early to mid 90s, has begun to show chinks in its armor.

In the 1980s, however, Saturday morning was the one time of the week specifically devoted to kids. The Big Three programmed from 8 a.m. until noon, and sometimes 1 p.m., with nonstop quality cartoons. It didn't matter that the time these shows aired is a time when most of us now are sleeping away the bad memories from the night before; at the age of 7, anyone who wasn't wide awake by 8 a.m. had slept in. About the only downside was that this joyous time occurred but once a week. I found a way around that though. At the clever young age of four, I learned how to program our good old Sears VCR (with all those little buttons on the machine...nobody had ever heard of "on-screen" programming). I would program in all my favorite shows from 8 a.m. until whenever, complete with the changes between 4, 5, and 7, and then let the machine go to work. When all was done I had a tape full of hours of great cartoons that I could watch all week long at anytime. At 6 a.m., after school, or before bedtime, my cartoons were always with me. And when the week was over, the same tape went back into the VCR ready to record all the new action for the next week.

Saturday morning was not the only cartoon time, however. As I mentioned, there were syndicated cartoons throughout the week that aired on those channels that used be independents (who are now affiliates for Fox, UPN, or The WB). There were also videocassettes for rent or sale to pop in that VHS VCR (I know some people had Beta, but does anyone really admit that anymore?). All combined, the complete engulfment by cartoons was sheer paradise to a child of the 80s. Everyone had his special cartoons and I was no exception.

When I think of Saturday mornings, two shows immediately come to mind: "The Wuzzles" and "Pole Position." "The Wuzzles" were perhaps the most underrated project Disney has undertaken in the past twenty years. Clearly one of the most creative, funny, and wholesome (amazing...a show parents and kids could both enjoy), "The Wuzzles" only produced about a handful of episodes, but man, are they classics. For those who missed the boat, a wuzzle is a creature made up of two different animals, a mutated hybrid. The names helped one figure out the combinations: Eleroo, Bubmellion, Butterbear, Hippotamus, Mooseal, and of course Rhinokey (yes I did that all from memory). Episodes were full of tongue in cheek jokes and some of the most colorful animation of the time, clearly more vivid than their Asian drawn counterparts.

If "The Wuzzles" are the lost child of Disney, then "Pole Position" is the cartoon everyone seems to forgotten. Talking cars, stunt car drivers, fighting evil, this cartoon had the makings of a great hit. Unfortunately, people just never seemed to discover it. While it aired for over two years, less than twenty episodes were made. "Pole Position" did have a great theme song though (something any good cartoon from the Reagan years required). It is remembered by almost ever fan of the show. It also introduced two awesome cars, Roadie and Wheels, automobiles with both hydrofoil and hovercraft modes.

When it came to amazing drivers and vehicles though, few could argue with the success of "MASK", or Mobile Armored Strike Kommand (they would the show have been as great if it was called MASC?). The premise was fairly simple. A rich philanthropist assembled together a group of do-gooders who each had an incredible vehicle that could transform into a second vehicle, complete with weaponry, to fight the bad guys from VENOM and their equally impressive vehicles. In addition to the vehicles, each character, both good and bad had a mask, which was more like a helmet, that had a special power. There were many a day in elementary school that I wished for some of those magic abilities. The marketing for this cartoon was supreme. Every vehicle that ever appeared on the show could be purchased as a toy that transformed completely and included a driver, complete with mask. In our toy room, we had a majority of the "MASK" vehicles but few VENOM ones (I guess I grew up as a morally conscious child).

The only toon toy that I had more of than "MASK" when I was a youngster were the "SilverHawks". As I alluded to above, the SilverHawks were partly metal and partly real (to quote the theme song). They soared through outer space like metallic human birds, fighting evil Monstar and his goons. I had just about every toy one could possibly own from this series. Granted the show was a spin-off of "Thundercats," even using some of the same voices. In my eyes though, "SilverHawks" was clearly the better cartoon (and the rest of you who disagree can just shove it). Personally it is one of the cartoons I also fantasized about. I mean what child wouldn't want the ability to fly everywhere and anywhere whenever his heart desired?

Even with all these great cartoons, though, when it gets down to picking my favorite, Saturday morning were really only a minor outlet for these creatures. Created originally by card company American Greetings, these characters made their way into the hearts of American children, literally, through videos, movies, television shows, and of course lovable plush stuffed animals. While I only owned Funshine Bear and Lotsaheart Elephant, "The Care Bears" were, and still are, my ultimate cartoon.

A society of bears with huge hearts and magical tummies that lived up in those cumulus clouds in the sky, or Care-A-Lot, as it was known, "The Care Bears" monitored the entire world, coming to the rescue of any person, usually a kid, who was in need of cheering up and a reassurance in his own self confidence. The Care Bears showed that every person in the world truly had a good heart; at times it was just hidden away. When they weren't raising a child's spirits, they were battling their nemeses Coldheart, Darkheart, and Noheart.

People can say what they want about "The Care Bears." In fact, I've been personally given grief about my collection of Care Bear movie songs from a number of my friends. Personally, I don't care. Wait! That's not what I'm supposed to say. What I meant to tell you is that I respect your opinion, but mine is not going to change. Is that more friendly and caring? "The Care Bears" rocked. I know it and you know it. That girl you've been trying to date all semester, ya know...she sits behind you in Bevilacqua's class...she has a huge collection of Care Bear memorabilia in her dorm room. So bone up on your tummy symbol knowledge, guys. I'm here if anyone needs some pointers.

There's many cartoons I've yet to touch on, but we all have our favorites. Whether it was the creativity of the "The Muppet Babies," the masquerades of "Ducktales," the Caboose clubhouse of the "Get Along Gang," or the action of "Transformers," (I never watched them but most guys on campus would kill me without a mention of the Autobots and Decepticons) my point is this. Someday soon, this-retro will be very in vogue (sort of like the 70s nostalgia of the late 90s). By this point we'll all be in positions of money and power, except those English majors still struggling to write the great American novel. When this day comes, we need to embrace our 80s heritage and bring the cartoons back so we can relive them all over again. Let's admit it: What is better than watching Bluegrass fly Mirage through the highway of the heavens, Matt Tracker assemble his team for the latest mission, or a full-blown, all-out, Care Bear stare? Absolutely nothing.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Staff member.

Write for Ed/Op.

Dear Britney, your bubble gum banter grows old...

COURTESY JIVE RECORDS

Britney tries to shed her bubble gum image in her latest CD release. But Britney, you've still got such a long way to go!

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

BRITNEY SPEARS
Britney
Jive

Dear Britney,

I hope this letter finds you in good spirits during these troubled times and that your current tour is going well. I write this letter to you as both a spirited and passionate critique of your latest self-titled album. By now your record has been dissected by hundreds of critics; hopefully you will find this review a welcome twist.

However, first I would like to congratulate you for becoming the first female solo act to reach No. 1 with your first three albums. I would also like to applaud your worldwide sales figures – having sold 40 million albums in less than three years is quite impressive.

Your first album Baby...One More Time captured the world's attention by spawning four hit singles including the infectious title track, which has gone on to become one of the best pop songs of all time. As for the rest of the album, you popped your bubble gum and it got stuck all over your blond mane. It was clear that the remaining tracks were there just for the sake of filler.

You then surprised me during the release of Oops...I Did It Again by creating one of the best – dare I say the best? – albums to come out of the current teen pop movement. Only perceptive and unbiased critics realized how instantaneously appealing the album truly was. Nearly all the singles, including the unreleased "What U See (Is What You Get)," were all so cutesy and damn catchy – Oops was a snappy teen pop confection. The only track which worried me was "Dear Diary" which was one of the worst – dare I say the worst? – songs to come out of the teen pop movement. What worried me wasn't so much that the song was terrible, but because it was the only song you had ever written.

Where does your fantastic journey take you next? A little album simply called Britney, an album in which you write five of the twelve tracks. I must say, the ones you wrote are, much to my relief, better than "Dear Diary." Lacking a clear chorus or an easy groove to latch onto, the Neptunes-produced "I'm A Slave 4 U" is a questionable lead single. But it's a move you undoubtedly had to make. The song may have been the cause of a nearly 50 percent decline in your first week sales but you are one step closer from escaping the teen pop realm. You bid farewell to your teen years this past Sunday as you hit 20. "Baby...One More Time" and "Oops...I Did It Again", as ludicrously derivate as one is to the other, were ultimate teen pop hits, but you can't sing about love sent from above forever.

"I'm Not A Girl, Not Yet a Woman," co-written by Dido, is another stepping stone towards your quest to adulthood. On the track, the gooey slime found in most teen pop ballads is stripped away. Also similar to "I'm A Slave 4 U," the song finds yourself proclaiming "All I need is time, a moment that is mine/ While I'm in between/ I'm not a girl." For the first time we finally get to hear your voice devoid of any computer manipulation, much to our satisfaction.

You continue to sound off on "Overprotected," except this Max Martin produced track sinks back into the teen goop. Nevertheless, the song is another sparkler with a chorus that hooks the listener right in. "I need to make mistakes just to learn who I am" are lyrics that will be appreciated from your younger listeners. To retain the attention of younger fans and to entice new listeners, the decision to combine both juvenile and grown-up songs was a smart move but still makes for a rough coherency on the overall record.

Since Swedish teen pop creator Max Martin, who has crafted hits for the Backstreet Boss and *NSYNC, is back on board much of the same teen pop that was found on Oops can be expected. Vocoders, heavy beats, whirling tempos are all characteristic of the Martin-produced tracks. And the kitten act, heavy sexual breathing, and pre-teen dance pop are all prevalent.

A few tracks successfully mend the teen Britney and the more mature Britney. You sound strikingly like your idol Janet Jackson on "Lonely," "Anticipating," and "What It's Like to Be Me" (which was co-written by beau Justin Timberlake of *NSYNC and choreographer Wade Robson) either through the aggressive staccato and syncopated beats or the wisps and breathy vocals. Come to think of it, Britney is similar to Jackson's Control but where Jackson made statements, you idly sing about "Boys" and "Bombastic Love." Moreover, what Jackson pulls off sounds better as she has a more aggressive and delicate voice. Nevertheless, your attempts aren't entirely failed, as the songs are delectable pop treats.

One thing I've noticed about your covers is that while they're respectable they never live up to the original. I envision preteen girls grabbing their combs and singing your version of "I Love Rock 'n' Roll," oblivious to how much better Joan Jett's version was.

"Let Me Be" and "That's Where You Take Me" are both unnecessary stuffing, and by this point the bubblegum banter grows old. Unfortunately, you also wrote both tracks. Lacking the flamboyance of most of the dance tracks, the two grooves spin round and round propagating nausea. You spend most of the record (eight of the twelve tracks) singing about your repression and desire to break free, eventually the motif becomes a tired one and begins to loose its message.

So how does Britney hold up to its predecessor? Oops is still the reigning champ, but Britney comes awfully close to matching its carefree nature. The use of vocoders, as they did on Oops, work well with your restrained vocals. As stated earlier, however, the more mature tracks and the kiddie songs don't work well together. Furthermore, there is no clear-cut killer single on your latest effort, such as "Baby...One More Time" and "Oops...I Did It Again."

Discouraging too is that the album is just under 40 minutes and none of the songs has the strength to sustain themselves for over four minutes. The majority of your teenybopper fans may suffer from ADD, but such short cuts serve to insult your audience.

On Britney you have yet to come into your own, but instead continue to play the nymphet cast by your songwriters. As you get older your current sound won't sound as appealing – especially since your fan base will continue to grow.

I would suggest you learn how to play guitar or use those piano skills you're so proficient in, especially as you continue to write more and more of your own songs.

The visions in your music are not resounding and fail to resonate with the world's youth. Most pop stars (Madonna, Michael and Janet Jackson instantly spring to mind) make powerfully moving statements in their music. These are all roads you should seriously consider taking.

Sincerely yours,

Nick

'Waking' full of longwinded diatribes

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

WAKING LIFE
Directed by Richard Linklater
Starring Wiley Wiggins
Playing at Pleasant Street Theater

Who do we dream? What is dreaming? Are events in our dreams as real as real life – or more real? Is reality perception? And most importantly: what's the point and why do we care?

Waking Life, the unjustifiably acclaimed new film from Richard Linklater, is a painfully calculated attempt to be as im-Hollywood as possible. Linklater's last film, his only studio movie, was The Newton Boys, a genial crime caper that starred Matthew McConaughey as the leader of the nicest and most successful bank robbers in U.S. history. Not nearly as bad as many made it out to be, the movie was a change of pace for a director more accustomed to verbose, small-scale comedies like Slacker and Dazed and Confused. After Newton Boys stiffed at the box office, Linklater once again turned his back on Hollywood to come up with Waking Life, an existentialist roundelay about the nature of reality, perception and dreaming. Except, even if this kind of art-house twaddle were your thing, I wouldn't recommend it.

Waking Life is Slacker filtered through Jean-Paul Sartre. The movie opens with two kids (including Linklater's own daughter Lorelai) playing the paper game where you pick a number or color, and get a message. The outcome reveals this bon mot: "dream is destiny." About ten years later, Lorelai's playmate Wiley (Wiley Wiggins, from Dazed), now an aimless twenty-something, hops off the train in a large city and hitches a ride with a guy who drives a boat-shaped car. With nowhere specific to go, Wiley lets his fellow passenger decide his stop. When exiting the vehicle, he's bit by another car and goes off on his journey.

For nearly an hour, Wiley does nothing but listen to a nameless string of people: academics, philosophers, ordinary armchair existentialists each offering their views on Linklater's Big Themes (life, death, reality, whatever). Linklater obviously wants to be thought provoking, but the endless ruminations (and this movie does feel endless) of these monologists are banal, Philosophy 101 observations. Worse, the cogitations are repetitive, each boiling to one of two tangents: reality is malleable or live life to the fullest. Deep, real deep. It's clear that by now, Linklater can do nothing but spin his wheels, retracing the same old territory he's surveyed before (maybe imprisonment to the confines of big studio filmmaking will do him some good.).

When Wiley begins to respond himself, Waking Life opens up somewhat. Wiley discovers he's trapped in a world of dreams and can't wake up. This just inspires more meandering, but it doesn't seem as insufferable as the monotonous first half. The extensive cast (only Wiley appears in more than one scene) is mostly comprised of unknowns, though Ethan Hawke and Julie Delpy reprise the sparring romantics of Linklater's Before Sunrise, and Linklater himself makes a pivotal appearance.

Waking Life is mostly a soporific, artfilm-off. There is no narrative cohesion to the movie. Those among the entranced may say I missed the point, that movie doesn't need a plot because it's about dreams. I agree that there is nothing intrinsically wrong with movies that are all talk, no action; some of the best movies are like that (think of the oeuvre of Kevin Smith, especially the heartfelt Chasing Amy). But there must be some rhyme-and-reason, some connection between scenes. All movies – even adventurous ones placed in the realm of dreams – must have a single unifying thread. Waking Life is nothing more than an interminable series of shorts compiled as a feature. Some of the shorts don't even match, as in a disturbing sequence involving a ranting prisoner. Vivid, but it doesn't jibe with the rest of the movie.

Waking Life has earned a lion's share of glowing reviews since its early festival showings, but even the good reviews have concentrated on the movie's visuals, which are hypnotic. The movie was shot in a process called "rotoscoping" in which the actors were shot in live action with digital cameras. Then animation director Bob Sabiston and a team of thirty painted over the images, to give the movie a unique animated feel. The images are liquid, characterized by wavy, undulating lines and floating backgrounds; the movie looks like it was filmed through a babbling mountain creek. The animation is beautiful, evocative and dazzling. The score by Glover Gill (performed by the Tosca Tango Orchestra) is a perfect match, the sawing violins lovely accompaniment to the visuals. The movie is art on the purely sensory level. On the intellectual level, it's rambling, confused and naive – the work of a man who likes to hear himself speak.

In the most self-indulgent scene, two friends discuss the power of cinema and suggest the best films are ones without narratives (a not so subtle reference to this film on Linklater's part, perhaps?). The ponderous Waking Life is proof that originality is only half the battle. Movies need to supply a catchy story, or likeable characters, or, at the very least, dialogue that lets the viewer appreciate the nuances of the writing. Linklater merely hammers home his long-winded diatribes that he believes are profound. This isn't profundity – this is intellectual masturbation.

Beatnuts disappoint, Ben-Ari delights

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

A concert should never, ever, EVER be held in a gym.

Amherst College, please heed this advice. The acoustics at your Friday night show were absolutely unbearable. Does anyone in your organization know anything about sound? Well, I know that here at UMass we have some competent sound people. Anyone who has been to the Fine Arts Center or the Student Union Ballroom or even the old Skybox know that we know what we're doing over here on our campus. Maybe next time you decide to get a group to come to Amherst, you can send them over to a school that knows how to put on a show.

Despite the horrible, HORRIBLE conditions of the "venue," the show still went on, although inaudibly.

As veteran players in the hip-hop game, the Beatnuts should have their live show wrapped up, but judging from Friday, they care little for pumping up a crowd. Perhaps they're bitter that they have to do shows at places like a gym at Amherst College because they're so hard up for cash, or maybe they're just stoned all the time and don't want to do shows. Whatever the reason, their performance was mediocre at best.

The show started out with tracks from their older stuff, mainly songs that nobody in the crowd knew from albums that no one bought. Eventually they started playing songs that fans did recognize, such as "Prendelo," "Yo Yo Yo," and "It's Da Nuts," from Take it or Squeeze it, and selections from A Musical Massacre, such as "Beatnuts Forever," and the extremely popular dance hit, "Get Money." Finally, after a long 45 minute set (sarcasm), they played their latest single, "No Escapin' This" from Squeeze It.

Every song that they played lasted approximately 1.5 minutes and involved the DJ bringing in a beat that no one could hear, and then Les and Juju practically putting the mics into their mouths, shouting their rhymes at a volume somewhere near five million decibels. Those in the crowd who were not lucky enough to have earplugs covered their ears in pain, others just ran out. Meanwhile, Les and Juju looked annoyed as they asked the crowd selfishly, "Who here copped our latest album?"

Much of the crowd's attention was turned toward the back of the gym, where a collection of break-dancers had assembled to show off their skills. Guys who could only have been gymnasts spun on their backs and heads to astonishment and egging on by their encircling onlookers. They were so involved in their tricks that they seemed to be unaffected by the piercing shrieks coming from the speakers.

Turn to BEATNUTS page 6

'Dave's' latest- Live in Chicago!

By John Reid
Collegian Correspondent

DAVE MATTHEWS BAND
Live in Chicago

Ever since the 1994 major label release of Under the Table and Dreaming, listeners have flocked to the sound of the Virginia quintet's unique mix of jazz, funk, and rock. Opinions have been struck about the recent release of Everyday, produced with a new electric sound by Glen Ballard. Tedious discussion about if the Dave Matthews Band were to use Steve Lillywhite again, or stick with the sound Ballard gathered on Everyday. It is of no matter; the DMB are not a 75 minutes or less kind of act. It is in the element of the live shows, where all the magic happens.

This live album was recorded at United Center in Chicago, the last stop of the Fall 1998 tour on December 19, 1998. The show was also the band's first live web-cast, hosted by the Rolling Stone Network and JAMtv. The sold-out show gave thousands of online viewers a chance to see and hear a show not worth missing. The fiery set was only further ignited by numerous guest musicians – famed saxophonist Maceo Parker, Flecktones' bassist Victor Wooten, and even DMB's caterer (yes I said caterer) Mitch Rutman on guitar. Even Tim Reynolds played the entire set, in a performance that showed the top-grossing fall tour had no burnout. The power and feeling of this album captures the band's full energy and is the closest thing to attending the live show.

As Chicago was the last show of the tour, it is fitting that the first song of the set was "The Last Stop," setting the tone for a dynamic and animated performance. The song ends with a beautiful reprise outro jam, showcasing the DMB's ability to take a gloomy song and play it out into a striking melody. The good times roll straight through "Don't Drink the Water" into "#41." At over ten minutes, Victor Wooten adds an outstanding guitar solo, bringing another dimension to a great song.

"What Would You Say," the bands stepping-stone to stardom, shows how much progress the band has made. They play it so well now, that a burst of adrenaline rushes when one hears that funky opening riff, complimented with a solo by Tim Reynolds. The song will never run dry – it is to the

Turn to DMB page 6

WHERE'S THE LOVE?

By Cara Bedick
Collegian Correspondent

CRAIG DAVID
Hippodrome
December 2

Craig David, the British R&B star who won his fan base with songs of romance and fidelity on the radio, performed at the Hippodrome nightclub in Springfield on Sunday. The crowd, though of a college age majority, consisted of a wide variety of ages. Kiss 95.7, the radio station that sponsored the concert, hyped it up for weeks ahead of time, announced that there had been people waiting outside of the Hippodrome since 8 a.m. I reached the club at 6:30 p.m., after about an hour of primping with the group of friends I attended the concert with. We were looking forward to a night of music performed by David, whose album had earned its place in our CD rotation by seducing us with smooth beats and original rhymes. The cold temperature mixed with gusts of wind was not enough to deter anxious fans from creating a line that stretched down the block and around the corner. Hundreds of couples, groups of friends, parents and children, waited outside in the cold for the concert that from a look at the tickets started at 7:30 p.m.

At 7:30 p.m., the doors to the Hippodrome opened and the crowd focused on pouring into the club, rather than the fact that they had expected the concert to have begun already. Close to capacity at about 2,200 persons, the Hippodrome provided each concert attendee with approximately two inches of space with which to move their feet – this while Kiss 95.7 played popular dance music to deter from the fact that an additional hour and 15 minutes of waiting was in store for the audience. The radio station also had some of its personalities from the morning show come onto the stage to greet the crowd, and to plug the next concert they were sponsoring, for the next Tuesday, featuring the group City High. After the third or fourth time the crowd heard the phrase, "Craig David will be on this stage in just a few minutes," they were restless. Anticipating an amazing performance by the person they drove for hours to see, they kept themselves contained. There were no apologies given for the wait, either by Craig David or anyone from Kiss.

Preceded by his guitar accompaniment, a man constantly referred to as Frasier, David came on stage decked out in his signature bandana which appeared to have various writings covering it. Starting his performance with "Time to Party," from his hit album Born to Do It, David worked the crowd, dashing from one side of the stage to another, almost as fast as he ran through his set list. From "Time to Party" he flowed directly into "Seven Days," and the concert went on just like that. David flew through his act, which had seven songs in total. Halfway through his approximately 50-minute performance, David performed a rendition of P. Diddy's "Bad Boy For Life." He sang, "I ain't goin' nowhere, I can't be stopped, it's Craig David for life." How can Craig David be for life if he can't satisfy his fan base? After twenty minutes of performing, David left the stage, and the fans went crazy. "We paid 10 bucks for this?" echoed throughout the nightclub. People turned to each other with shocked expressions, but their mouths dropped even further when David came back onto the stage, this time after shedding the jacket that he had adorned for the first portion of the show. He then performed two additional songs, one of which included a lengthy guitar interlude by Frasier, and ended with an excerpt from "Seven Days," the same song that he performed about twenty minutes beforehand. Maybe if the performance had been a bit longer, the crowd would have forgotten.

This time when Craig David walked offstage, the same popular dance music that extended the wait earlier on in the night, returned out of the speakers in the room. A Kiss D.J. reminded the crowd not to forget about the City High show on Tuesday. This time the majority of the crowd responded to the voice by sticking their middle fingers up in the air, and leaving the club angry and disappointed.

"It's Craig David, he did all of his songs," said the marketing manager of the Hippodrome when questioned about the show.

If one were to ask one of the fans at the concert if Craig David performed all of his songs, they would most likely respond with laughter, and proceed to cite the fifteen songs on his album, along with additional non-album tracks. The manager also said, "He did what he was supposed to do and he did a good job."

Who is to judge how good a performance is? Most people would agree that fans of the performer would be the optimum judges. Craig David wooed his fans with songs of romance and fidelity, songs that he once stated on a television show were derived from his life experiences. Where was the fidelity to his fans on Sunday night at the Hippodrome?

Craig David and Kiss 95.7 failed fans with a brief and sorely lacking concert at the Hippodrome on Sunday night.

■ Beatnuts

continued from page 5

The headlining band may have been disappointing, but the opening acts made the trip over to Amherst worthwhile. The first group was a local foursome from Springfield or somewhere who called themselves the "Rival School." Three emcees and a DJ came on stage to show off their bourgeoning talent. Though it felt as though their show was one big inside joke between them and their personal friends who came to the gym, they put on an entertaining show. The white guy in the band looked like Michael Rappaport and wore an ice cube tray around his neck. One of the other guys looked like he was about to drive away on his Honda ATV since he was wearing what looked like Fox Racing gloves. The third guy concentrated on actually pumping up the crowd. Amusing yet talented, the local band was a good group to warm up a college crowd.

The highlight of the evening came when newcomer Miri Ben-Ari graced the stage with her absolutely fantastic experimental groove. This small, Israeli-American woman quietly walked on stage with a flower in her hair and a sweet smile. At first, the DJ, keyboard player and two emcees who took the stage before her dominated the joint. However, after Miri plugged in her electric violin, the crowd went wild over her. Her mix of hip-hop beats, rhymes and classical instrumentals stirred the audience into a frenzy. She played the hooks of popular rap songs such as, "The Breaks," by the infamous Curtis Blow and "Ugly" by recent rap phenom Bubba Sparxx on her electric violin. For a couple of songs, she played violin while her emcees rapped over it. In others, she stood alone and let her violin write the rhymes. Throughout her entire performance, the crowd at Amherst was in was completely attentive; for a moment they could hear each note and word clearly despite the despicable sound quality.

Amherst college students, you tried, you did. But you made mistakes. How about the next time you plan on booking a show, you follow these simple rules:

1. Sound check. Wait, maybe you should leave this to the experts. Okay, rule one, get someone from UMass to come over and get your sound stuff taken care of. Someone like Angela Ruggiero, from FAC. She was a roadie for *NSYNC this summer; she knows all about setting up for a concert.
2. Alright, this is the tough one. When you book a band, make sure it's someone who is going to actually play a show, not just wander around stage for 35 or 40 minutes shouting and then get off early. How about booking a band that people like and who is excited about coming to the school?
3. Don't ever, EVER have a concert in a gym. Period.

Hopefully if you follow these simple guidelines you'll host a successful jam.

My ears are still ringing from Friday's debacle.

COURTESY SAM ERICKSON

Dave Matthews Band released their fifth live album, Live in Chicago. Hey, sometimes the familiar is repetitive, and sometimes the familiar is just fantastic. Our reviewer tells you what this release is.

■ DMB

continued from page 5

DMB as "Stir it Up" was to Bob Marley and the Wailers. In routs through Leroi Moore's sax solo, a change was made to "Pantala Naga Pampa", flowing into "Rapunzel" followed by "Stay," all from Before These Crowded Streets. That album was already well accepted by fans, and the band adds great improvisation to the selections.

"The Maker," a Daniel Lanois cover, was only performed three times prior to Dave and Tim Reynolds' acoustic performance on this album. Victor Wooten plays bass on the jam along with DMB carteret Mitch Ruman on guitar. If you are looking for a rare Dave song with great sound quality, this is for you. "Crash," comes next to the delight of the 99% of the crowd who had no idea what "The Maker" was. The "Dixie Chicken" reprise seems more energized than that of previously released live versions. "Jimi Thing," Dave's reverence to Jimi Hendrix and herb, over 14 minutes long, is always a great jam all around. "So Much to Say" ends the same as on the album, but starts right back up and into "Anyone Seen the Bridge?" which crunches into another funk driven track from the Crash album, "Too Much."

DMB went into the encore showing no signs of fatigue, about a week before Christmas; therefore, "Christmas Song" was a must. Dave, in a humorous way introduces the song, but his performance reminded me of the "Typical Situation" encore from Live at Red Rocks disc, for its emotion and raw power. For the finale, came "All Along the Watchtower," the song mastered by Hendrix from the original version by Bob Dylan. The Dave Matthews Band has taken the tastes of both songs and made it their own. The song itself is a classic of our time, and it is nice to see it still performed in the light of the mass populous. Live in Chicago really captivates DMB in their pinnacle of the 90s; the album does great justice to the stature of the music and the spirit of their live shows.

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist

Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

Equal Opportunity Employer

STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER
ANNUAL HOLIDAY CRAFT FAIR
UMASS CAMPUS CENTER
DEC. 5TH, 6TH, 7TH
9AM-4PM
545-2096

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE FOR UNDERGRADUATES
MIT HAYSTACK OBSERVATORY
SUMMER 2002

Undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and computer science students are invited to apply for summer research positions at the MIT Haystack Observatory in Westford, MA.

Resurch projects include:
- radio astronomical studies
- atmospheric physics investigation
- hardware & software development for data acquisition
- processing
- recording systems

The program extends from June 3 to August 9, 2002 and carries a weekly stipend of $400.00 plus a housing allowance.

Women, minorities and students with disabilities are encouraged to apply.

For further information and application materials, see http://www.haystack.edu/reu/

Application deadline is Febuary 1, 2002

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY • 256-8811
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-3 a.m.
Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
Buy any medium or large pizza & get a second pizza of equal or lesser value
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out Expires 5/31/02
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

The Hockey East concluded its second month of play this weekend with five teams in the US College Hockey Online Top 15 and three teams in the top seven. Those three teams (New Hampshire, Maine and UMass-Lowell) went a combined 16-4-2 for the month and each school had one representative when the conference named its monthly honorees.

Wildcats winning ways continue

After another week of success, New Hampshire continued its hot streak this weekend by dropping top conference opponents Boston College and Maine on consecutive nights. The Wildcats are arguably the hottest team in the nation, and have ascended all the way to fourth in USCHO's weekly poll.

The pair of wins also cemented UNH's place atop the conference, and Darren Haydar made his case for the Hobey Baker Award, going to the nation's top player, by putting up three goals (all against BC) and four assists for the weekend. All told, he notched a point on all but two of the goals the Wildcats scored this weekend.

That capped off a phenomenal November for Haydar, a month during which he tallied 17 points in eight games, leading the 'Cats to a 6-1-1 record in the month. That prompted the conference to name him the Koho Player of the Month. Haydar put up three games in which he scored four points, and won the MVP award for the Dodge Dealers Conference Classic, where host UNH upended national powers Ohio State and Denver.

McCormick Continues Sizzling Stretch

They don't get much hotter than Lowell's Cam McCormick. The senior netminder, who had a 3.10 goals against average, an .860 save percentage and a 3-5-2 record last season, posted his fourth shutout of the year in a 3-0 win over Union on Wednesday night. The win upped his record to 7-0-0 for the season, and he has allowed only four goals all year.

His presence has helped the River Hawks to an impressive 10-2-0 overall record, and they now stand at sixth in the nation in the USCHO poll and fifth in the USA Today poll. The combination of McCormick and a stingy defense has kept opponents from finding the goal mouth for the most part, as Lowell has allowed a mere 23 goals on the season.

Hockey East voted the Kamloops, British Columbia native the ITECH Defensive Player of the month. In November, he allowed a total of two goals, both coming in a 3-2 victory over Massachusetts, good for a 0.43 GAA and a .980 save percentage. He started the season by racking up a scoreless streak of 209:25, a school record. He also made 17 saves in Lowell's 3-2 win over BU on Saturday night.

Shields a bright surprise for Bears

Maine Head Coach Tim Whitehead knew he had a talented winger in first year player Colin Shields. What he and the rest of the nation now know is that Maine has a goal-scoring machine. The Glasgow, Scotland native leads Hockey East and the nation in goals, with 13, and power play goals, with seven, on the young season.

The Black Bears went 5-1-1 in November, with Shields posting points in all but one game. How important is Shields to Maine's success? The one game he didn't post a point in was the one that Maine lost, a 3-2 defeat at the hands of BU.

His ten points in the month resulted in the conference naming him Rookie of the Month this week. He beat out fellow first-year players Sean Collins, who scored 11 points for UNH, and BC's Matti Kaltiainen, who went 3-1 with a .927 save percentage between the pipes.

He, along with Niko Dimitrakos (15 points) and senior goaltender Mike Morrison, have been pivotal in a rejuvenated Bear offense that went 5-1-1 in November.

Morrison has been yet another pleasant surprise for Whitehead. In a season where senior starter Matt Yeats (3.25 GAA, .869 save pct.) has struggled mightily, Morrison has stepped up to the task, allowing less than two goals per game (1.96) and turning away over 93 percent of the shots he has faced. His record stands at 4-1-1 on the year, as Morrison has been a fantastic complement to a high-octane offense that has tended to show some defensive lapses at times.

HOCKEY EAST STANDINGS CONFERENCE
(OVERALL)

New Hampshire
6-1-2 (9-2-2)
Lowell
6-2-0 (10-2-0)
Boston College
4-3-0 (8-5-1)
Providence
4-6-0 (6-9-1)
Boston University
3-2-1 (8-3-1)
Maine
3-2-0 (7-5-2)
Northeastern
2-4-1 (7-6-2)
Massachusetts
2-5-0 (6-8-0)
Merrimack
1-6-0 (5-9-0)

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Thomas Pock is stoned by Mike Morrison, as many Minutemen were, last Saturday night versus Maine.

"GLASS!"
Yes, he called it.

■ minutewomen

continued from page 10

23.

But Smith sunk two consecutive treys and MacAulay added another from three steps beyond the arc before halftime, which saw a 38-27 Catamount lead.

Smith started the second half with her fourth and final three and sophomore Morgan Brownlee drilled an 18-footer that extended the UVM lead to 43-27 and took away any hope UMass had of tugging momentum over to its side.

A four-for-four performance down the stretch by junior Dawn Cressman gave the co-captain her season-high point total. Cressman scored 11 of her 15 points in the final frame.

Junior Nekole Smith played a season high 24 minutes, a good sign for the forward who is recovering from a devastating knee injury that occurred in the 2000 preseason. Smith led the team with 15 points and nine rebounds, including six on the offensive end.

Jennifer Butler, a preseason All-Atlantic 10 selection suffered through foul trouble throughout the contest. The junior center scored just five points while hauling down nine rebounds in 26 minutes of action.

Butler (2-for-4) and Smith (6-for-12) were the only two UMass players that shot 50 percent or better from the field.

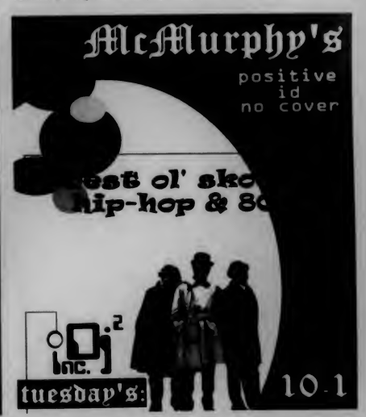
The free throw shooting improved after a woeful performance at James Madison last week. The Minutewomen made two-thirds of their free throws Sunday.

With a road trip down south to take on the likes of Memphis and Arkansas-Little Rock coming up this weekend and less than a month before the A-10 schedule begins, it is time for the players on this Maroon and White squad to realize their true potential soon, or face a truly disappointing remainder of the season.

"Nobody's playing up to their potential," O'Brien said.

■ minutemen

continued from page 10



guards Brian Wilson and Ryan Serravalle, who are averaging 11.6 and 11.4 points, respectively. Last year, Wilson and Serravalle combined for only eight points in the Purple and White's victory. But besides Szatko, the Crusaders that hurt UMass in that game – Josh Sankes (25 points and 17 rebounds) and Juan Pegues (13 points) – have since graduated from the team that lost to Kentucky in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

In order to go 5-0, all UMass has to do is shoot about 40 percent from the field and take advantage of their size underneath. Six-foot-11-inch Nate Lufkin patrols the paint for Holy Cross, but he is only a freshman and his inexperience has shown with his 3.0 points and 3.8 rebounds a game.

"We have to rebound the ball," Lappas said. "We need to be the aggressors in the game. We need to go after the ball hard. We need to put some pressure on their perimeter guys. And we need to take control of the game and not be back on our heels."

Look for the Crusaders to pack themselves in on defense and force UMass to hit its shots, but look for the opposite on the other end of the court. The Minutemen will most likely switch up a lot on defense, and pressure the ball intensely, as they have done all year.

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

MFM
MILES FROM MARTY
ACOUSTIC ROCK LIVE AT ATLANTIS
TUESDAY NIGHTS

UMass Ballroom Dance Club Presents
The Snowflake Ball

Celebrate the end of the semester by dancing the night away!
In the Campus Center Auditorium
Wednesday, December 5, 2001
7:00-8:30 Dance Lessons
8:30-Midnight General Dancing
$5 for students
$7 for adults
Refreshments will be served!
No partner or experience necessary
All are welcome!!!
Any Questions? Contact Danielle at 546-1938 or Drmdancers@aol.com or Rachel at rmandell@student.umass.edu
Visit our website at www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.
TUESDAY: KARAOKE HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY: MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY: STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs DOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES
FRIDAY: GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs NUSH, SIMI AND BON BONS
SATURDAY: HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY: LIVE JAZZ
COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Free Tickets to Picasso Commuter Area Government is giving away 100 free tickets to the Umass Theater Guild show Picasso at the Lapin Asile Dec. 6-8 at the Student Union Ballroom. Just mention this ad when you set your ticket at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union

ANNOUNCEMENTS

GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESIONS WEDNESDAYS OR THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'88 Ford CrownVic Wagon 130K mi, good condition except transmission, runs well $2000 w/ new transmission, $1500 w/out. 413-665-6832

'92 Toyota Tercel great dependable transportation, 4 speed low miles 1,800 or B.O. Call Josy 253-5149

1987 Subaru runs good 142K $250 or B.O call 549-7816

1996 Suzuki Sidekick JLX Sport. Just like a Chevy Tracker. 5 spd. 4X4 loaded 25 mpg asking $4,999 call 549-4506

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

1985 Olds Calais New Tires 30 mpg Good Condition $700.00 O.B.O. 413-250-1826

AUTO FOR SALE

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

91 Subaru Legacy 155k Great condition $2500 253-4772

Red Dodge Spirit 1993 New brakes, battery, transmission, Rachel 549-4285 $2,200/B.O.

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser. com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser. com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

EMPLOYMENT

Software Sales/Telemarketing for economic forecasting and policy analysis firm. Part-time. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Japanese Speaking candidates for software firm. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Several P/T Temp. positions The Umass Textbook Annex has several cashier openings to work our book buyback (Dec. 13-22). Interested candidates should stop by the Annex and fill out an application.

TELEPHONE RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS

Set your own schedule (evenings and weekends). Paid training. PVTA accessible; Hadley location.
Call FMI
888-423-5381

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR SALE

Refrigerator for Sale 4.0 cubic foot Haier Refrigerator with freezer. Little more than a year old and in near perfect condition. Has a can dispenser in the door and it is lockable. Asking price: $100, but price is negotiable. Call Mike at 546-6791

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

MOTORCYCLES

1983 Yamaha Virago 500, great bike, $1100 or B.O., Call Matt 256-1862

ROOM FOR RENT

Bedroom with own bathroom available call 253-8915 for details

1 Room in 2 Bedroom apt. located in boulders on bus route call mike 253-0911

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-3492 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Bus Trip to New York Commuter Area Government presents its bus trip to NYC. Leaving Haigis Mall at 10 AM on Wed Dec. 5 and returning the same night. A limited number of tickets to The Daily Show with Jon Stewart are available on a first come/first served basis. $5 for commuters $10 for others. Sign up at the off-campus housing office Student Union 428.

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

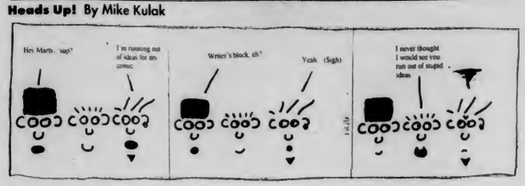
Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

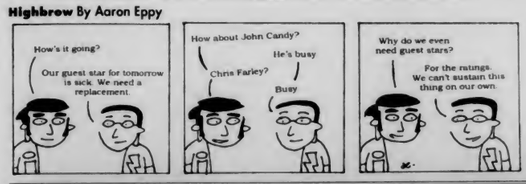
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick

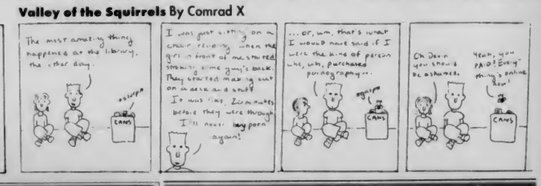


Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



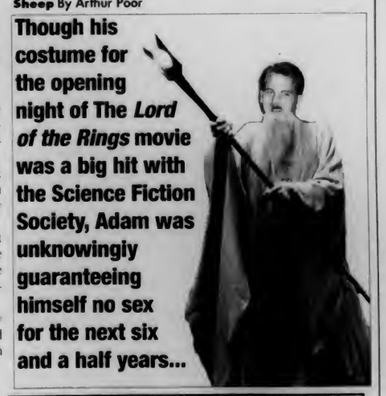
Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

> "Call me old-fashioned, but I think I should at least know the guy's last name before I have sex with him."
>
> –Corey Hessinger



Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 53 LOW: 41	HIGH: 58 LOW: 42	HIGH: 58 LOW: 35

Horoscopes

Sagittarius (Nov 22 - Dec 21) - Watch out for interstellar gothic hippie doom. It could be contagious. Damn dirty hippies!
Capricorn (Dec 22 - Jan 19) - Grandma got run over by a reindeer. Watch out for runaway toboggans.
Aquarius (Jan 20 - Feb 18) - Need help with your 'laundry?' Call Lizzy. She'll put the spin in your cycle.
Pisces (Feb 19 - March 20) - Back by popular demand: You are a god walking amongst men.
Aries (March 21 - April 19) - Watch out for black squirrels bearing gifts. It could be the head of a gray squirrel.
Taurus (April 20 - May 20) - Heads Up! No, not the comic you twit! Watch out for falling anvils!
Gemini (May 21 - June 20) - Shouldn't you have been separated at birth, you freaks?
Cancer (June 21 - July 22) - You're a Cancer? That sucks.
Leo (July 23 - Aug 22) - We're tired of listening to your roar, shut-up!
Virgo (Aug 23 - Sept 22) - Just when you thing you're out, they pull you back in.
Libra (Sept 23 - Oct 22) - Looking for some hot fun? Try the Bartlett basement bathrooms.
Scorpio (Oct 23 - Nov 21) - What does 'would you like fries with that?' really mean?

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Though his costume for the opening night of The Lord of the Rings movie was a big hit with the Science Fiction Society, Adam was unknowingly guaranteeing himself no sex for the next six and a half years...

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Macaroni & Cheese (vegetarian)

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Vegetable Egg Rolls (vegetarian)

Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER

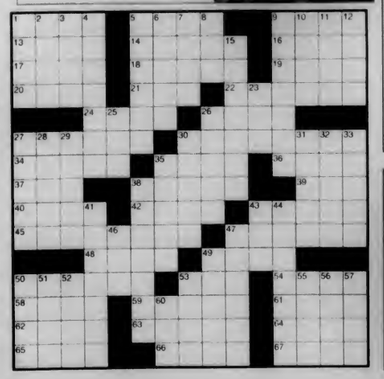
Seasoned Roast Pork

General Tso Chicken

Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan) (W Basics)

Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

Do YOU have a quote of the day? Tough beans :-P



ACROSS
1 Obscure
5 Raise
9 Arrived
13 Similar
14 Dwight's rival
16 Bankrupt
17 Sign of the future
18 Yogurt choice
19 Con
20 Foundation
21 Swamp
22 Banged up
24 Widebeests
26 Writer Morrison
27 Difficult time
30 Chandler genre
34 Wildflower
35 Tresses
36 Bog
37 JFK info
38 Pours
39 Auto
40 Singer Turner
42 Social insects
43 Verse makers
45 Tiny bubbles
47 Command
48 Snow boots
49 Paper toy
50 Rice alternative
53 Dawn goddess
54 Tardy
58 Dance or Ferrara
59 "Violet" start
61 Leave out
62 Fish organ
63 More rational
64 Dainty pastry
65 Electric fish
66 Lady's title
67 Mets home

DOWN
1 Sci-fi classic, with "The"
2 Type of bean
3 Hawaiian strings
4 Breaks a promise
5 Largish amount
6 Is between jobs
7 Custard
8 — chi: martial art
9 Skull
10 Family member
11 Small amount
12 Writer Bagnold
15 Not alfresco
23 Terminate
25 Opposing vote
28 Adds water
27 "Golden Boy" playwright
28 Math term
29 Prince William's mom
30 Postpones action
31 More pleasant

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

L	A	V	A		F	R	A	N	C		A	D	Z	E
O	L	I	N		R	O	D	E	O		T	O	U	R
B	E	A	D		G	O	L	D	E	N		O	S	L	O
E	C	L	I	P	S	E	S		C	O	L	E	U	S
			R	A	T			R	E	E	L
A	R	M	O	R	S		E	A	R	S	H	O	T
T	H	A	N	K		V	E	A	L		E	K	E
T	I	C			T	A	R	P	S		W	A	N
I	N	A		A	L	A	S		P	E	E	P	S
C	O	W	P	O	K	E		B	A	D	D	I	E
			L	A	B	E	T		A	L	I
M	I	D	R	I	B		B	I	L	L	F	O	L	D
U	T	E	S		A	W	A	R	D		I	D	E	A
N	E	M	O		C	O	R	A	L		C	O	A	L
G	R	I	N		K	E	N	N	Y		E	R	N	E

10-19-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician	Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Jess May, Cara Horowitz

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

West Coast waters unfriendly

Water Polo drops two in Final Four

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It all came pouring down, in a place where it's not supposed to rain.

Stanford	8
UMass	4
L-M	14
UMass	6

The Massachusetts men's water polo team finished its season this weekend, losing a pair of games in the NCAA Championships, held in Palo Alto, Calif.

The Minutemen ended their season at 28-7, with losses to the Stanford Cardinal and Loyola-Marymount Lions.

Saturday's loss to Stanford came in the middle of a rainstorm, which made the play in the outdoor Avery Aquatic Center slow and defensive. The Maroon and White was still able to run with top-ranked Stanford, behind some spectacular play from senior goaltender J.R. VanderWall. VanderWall who made 15 saves, but it wasn't enough, as the Cardinal beat UMass, 8-4.

Still, head coach Russ Yatworth had nothing but praise for his troops after the match.

"I am very pleased with the season that we had. We showed [Saturday] what UMass water polo is all about."

The Minutemen were able to solve the Stanford defense with goals from semors Adam Moore, Mike Foley, Evan Lutz, and junior Justin Houck, each with one apiece. Moore also contributed an assist. However, Stanford's powerful offense proved to be too much for the Minutemen, as the Cardinal received three tallies from junior Jeff Nesmith, as well as two from freshman Tony Azevedo, who has been the crown jewel of the Stanford offensive this season. Azevedo also received the Most Valuable Player award for the tournament.

Said VanderWall of the match: "We played great, we played well as a team, and we just came up short."

Stanford also had an emotional edge, as this is the final year for longtime head coach Dante Dettamantie, who won his eighth career NCAA title after the Cardinal beat the University of California at Los Angeles, 8-5 in the title game.

The Maroon and White's season didn't end there, however. It still had one more contest for the year, the third place game with Loyola-Marymount. However, the Minutemen were essentially out of it from the beginning, and lost 14-6.

Showing some signs of a letdown after their valiant effort against Stanford the previous day, the Minutemen weakened on the defensive front, and VanderWall was only able to make seven saves on 21 shots, for an uncharacteristically mediocre .333 save percentage.

"I think [our being tired] was more mental," Foley said. "We're always pretty ready to play, we've been training all season to get to this game. We played a lot harder against Stanford and when we came out for LMU, they came out harder than us."

UMass received goals from Foley, Lutz, Moore, and fellow senior Carlos Ramos, who also set up Foley's tally, but junior Loyola goalkeeper Kevin Paulsen was able to keep the Minutemen at bay throughout the match, allowing only six goals on 16 shots.

Though disappointed at their lack of success this weekend, the Minutemen were still upbeat about their season as a whole, the tenth consecutive 20-win effort for the team.

"I was really proud of our team," said senior Greg Trayer. "We did come out a little flat today and it was unfortunate that we had to end our season. But all in all, you have to look at the perspective of the whole season and we did win Easterns once again, and it was a great experience to come out here as always.

"You can't look at the whole season by this one game. The whole season and our whole careers have been a success."

GERALD LINGE/COLLEGIAN

Senior Adam Moore and the Massachusetts men's water polo team ended their season as the fourth best team in the country.

Cross-ing out old habits

UMass, Holy Cross have both changed

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It is a play that maybe no one remembers. But it is one that separates last year's version of the Massachusetts men's basketball team from the present Minutemen.

Early in the second half of last year's game versus Holy Cross, former UMass shooting guard Monty Mack had the ball stolen from him at half court. But instead of hustling back to try and make a play on the ball, Mack just stood there, shaking his head as the Crusaders converted on the other end.

It was that laziness that led to Holy Cross' fatal 15-5 second stanza run and its 74-65 upset of the Minutemen – which handed UMass its first-ever loss at Worcester's Centrum Centre – and more importantly, proved the irregularity of last year's 15-13 squad.

Things are different this year. Well, so far.

Last year's team most likely wouldn't have won this year's Nov. 16 game versus Arkansas-Little Rock, in which the Minutemen overcame a 10-point Trojan halftime lead to win 66-60. And last year's team most likely wouldn't have pulled out this year's Nov. 27 game against Oregon (62-58) and Saturday's game at North Carolina State (69-62) – both games in which UMass had to hold on to win in the final minutes.

The reasons for change could be many things. The new coach. The new cast. The new offense. But that doesn't matter. What is important is the fact that UMass has shown consistency. The Minutemen could have easily folded to Little Rock (like they did to Holy Cross last year) when the Trojans went up 10, especially with the game being their first of the season. And they could have given up all hope last weekend in Raleigh when the Wolfpack tied the game up early in the second half, thanks in part to its full-court pressure, and sent its 10,000-plus fans into frenzy.

But they didn't.

"That was the first time we played someone who really pressured us that much," said coach Steve Lappas, whose squad turned the ball over 18 times to State's pressure, but negated those mistakes with its out-shooting and out-rebounding of the Pack. "So hopefully we learn from that, and not turn the ball over as much next time."

Those are the essentials, so far.

Tonight at the Mullins Center, Amherst will get its first look at undefeated UMass (4-0) since its 66-59 defeat of Marist back on Nov. 24. Welcoming Holy Cross (2-3) to the neighborhood, the Minutemen will look to avenge its loss to the Crusaders a year ago, trying not to overlook them with games against No. 15 Boston College and UConn slated in the next seven days.

"After what happened last year, they can't be looking past these guys," said Lappas, who is just the third first-year coach in UMass history to begin a season 4-0. "I can see a look in their eyes that they're determined."

The Crusaders are led by Tim Szatko, the Patriot League's preseason Player of the Year, who is averaging 10.2 points a game – just three under the number he put up versus UMass last year.

He is joined in the starting lineup by

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 7

GERALD LINGE/COLLEGIAN

Raheim Lamb, who has played well at small forward, and the UMass men's hoop team could go to 5-0 tonight with a win over Holy Cross.

Minutewomen's struggles continue

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt. – The Vermont's women's basketball team's annual poster day at the Patrick Gym on Sunday transformed into Senior Night for the Catamounts as they defeated the Massachusetts women's basketball team 69-51.

Vermont	69
UMass	51

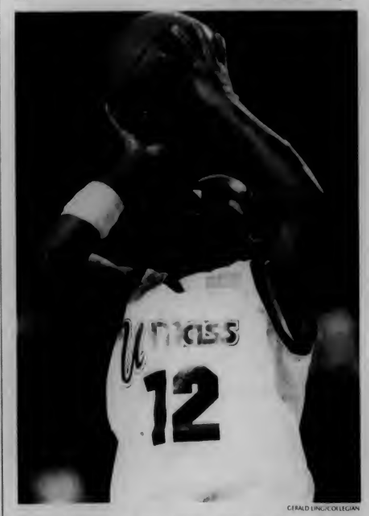
Vermont seniors Libby Smith and Jen MacAulay combined to go 7-for-10 from the three-point line for 27 points to lead UVM to victory. Smith scored 15 of her 18 points in the first half while MacAulay dished out five assists to compliment her nine points.

Open looks and easy layups didn't fall for the Maroon and White throughout the contest as the squad trailed the Catamounts the whole way.

"We've got a couple kids just tossing the ball at the basket in positions where [with] a little bit of discipline it would have been a basket," Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said.

Highlighted by an 0-for-6 performance from the field by freshman Katie Nelson and a 3-for-13 by junior Amber Sneed, the Minutewomen simply couldn't get the ball to drop with a 30 percent performance from the field.

"[Making open shots] is something we're not very good at right now," O'Brien said.



The team also shot just 3-for-17 from behind the arc.

The Catamounts, on the other hand, shot nearly 45 percent from the field and 50 percent from three-point land behind Smith and MacAulay's sharp shooting.

"They are a great shooting team and have been for a long time," O'Brien said. "They did a great job of executing their offense. They took us out of what we wanted to do."

After falling behind 6-0 to start the game, the Maroon and White clawed its way back into the contest when Ebony Pegues was left with no passing options while standing behind the three-point line. The junior set herself and drilled the three to cut the Vermont lead to 25-

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 7

GERALD LINGE/COLLEGIAN

Ebony Pegues and the UMass women's hoop team are struggling early this season.

Creed. How many times can we picture them in today's paper? Turn to Arts for the answer.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass hoops came back to earth with a 67-56 loss to Holy Cross last night. Get the bad news in Sports.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 61 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, December 5, 2001

Amherst goes to the birds

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Robins, Geese and Nuthatches are all part of the fun of bird watching.

Hampshire Bird Club ready for action

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

For those members of the community that could tell you exactly what a Yellow-billed Cuckoo or a Common Nighthawk looks like, the Hampshire Bird Club met last Monday in order to discuss upcoming events and to watch a slide presentation.

"This is the only time of the year [the meeting] is this informal," president of the club and retired University of Massachusetts employee Mary Alice Wilson said. "Usually we have a speaker, sometimes from inside the club and sometimes from outside, who gives a formal presentation."

At the beginning of the meeting, the club organizers went over upcoming events, most notably the Christmas Bird Count that will be taking place in a few weeks.

For the Christmas Count, birdwatchers scour the area and count every bird they can find. These birds are then recorded, and the results are compared with what other birders saw in their respective geographical areas.

This event is open to beginner and expert birdwatchers alike, and there is no designated time limit on how long a person needs to observe for. Birdfeeders are also fair game, so it is not even necessary to leave the comfort of your own home in order to participate.

What makes the Christmas Bird Count especially appealing this year, is that it is an irruption year for finches that usually spend the winter in Canada. Common Redpolls, Pine Siskins, Evening and Pine Grosbeaks, Bohemian Waxwings and even both species of crossbill can all be expected in large numbers.

These rarities should combine with the normal winter birds of Massachusetts to add up to a great day, in terms of species recorded.

"This time of year, sea ducks on the coast, especially at Plum Island and Cape Ann, are the main attraction," Wilson said.

Next, the migration report was listed, and it was noted that many rare species have been recently com-

Turn to BIRDS, page 3

Jhally, Media Ed. collaborate on film about portrayal of Muslims

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Radical Student Union continued its series of video screenings last night in the Campus Center with a presentation titled "Edward Said on Orientalism."

The video, narrated by University of Massachusetts Communications professor Sut Jhally, and created by the UMass Media Education Foundation, discussed the perceptions held by European and Western civilizations about Arabs and the Middle East.

According to RSU member and senior Neuroscience major Arthur Seelig, though the video presentations have been timely in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks, addressing the issues raised by Sept. 11 have not been the sole focus of the video series, which has been in planned since last spring.

"September 11 put certain issues into focus that maybe haven't been there before, although the series has remained the same," Seelig said. "But the RSU is an organization which works on several different fronts. The first step in our action is always the education of the public in general in order to draw people into organized action."

Said a Palestinian-American scholar, has written several influential and controversial books, the most famous of which is titled Orientalism.

According to Jhally in his introductory narration on the video, "Orientalism asks, how do we come to understand people who are strangers, who look different from us, because of the color of their skin? Orientalism [as a theory] is a lens we use to make people from the Middle East look different and threatening."

According to Said, "there is a repertory of images that is used again and again to portray Oriental people – the sensual woman, the East as a mysterious place full of magic and monsters. It has very little to do with what anyone had seen who'd actually been there.

"These images perpetuate the Western theory that the Orient is always the same, as if the East didn't develop. It's an image outside of history," Said commented.

"This means that all people in the Arab world are looked at in this same negative light," Said remarked, "which takes away from the humanity and dignity of those in the Middle East who are leading normal and decent lives."

Television and movies, according to Said, "portray Muslims as members of a lesser breed who only understands the use of force. The idea is that unless you give them a bloody nose, they won't understand. You know, 'you can't talk reason with these people.'"

In support of these ideas, video montages that contained clips from news sources as well as from other pop-culture references such as Disney's Aladdin, were played throughout the video.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

The Radical Student Union continues to show various documentaries to offer different opinions on campus.

Said also remarked that Arabs themselves may have played a role in the formation of Western attitudes toward them. "Many Arab countries are dictatorships that are in desperate need of U.S. and foreign patronage," he said. "They're not about to criticize the U.S., and so, in not mounting a critique of this, Arabs have allowed themselves to be a part of this system."

Where Orientalism applies to Islam is where politics become difficult, Said observed. And, he continued, where this branch of Orientalism extends to the Palestinian/Israeli conflict is of particular importance to him.

"Palestine is being asked to pay the price for what happened to the Jews in Europe," he claimed. "We have become the victims of the victims."

Still, he said, "we have another vision. A vision of coexistence. The greatest goal is to transform identity so that it includes the other without suppressing differences.

"The idea that we must protect and defend ourselves from the infiltration and infection by the other, I think, is the most dangerous idea of the twentieth and early twenty-first centuries," he said.

Jhally had the final word on the video, summarizing Said's point of view and its relation to world politics. "Because of the complex and bloody history of the Middle East," he said, "the Israeli/Palestinian conflict is for Said the test case for whether we can live in peace, with our differences, or whether we will always live at war, in fear and loathing of one another."

Flags, violence among topics tackled by SGA

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With only a few days to cool off, members of the Student Government Association will convene tonight to discuss the ever-so-controversial flag motion.

The motion that drew controversy when brought before the Senate last spring has once again been raised from its grave by Senators this year. The motion asks for the State of Massachusetts and American flags to be present at every SGA Senate meeting.

The motion was tabled at last week's Senate meeting due to the Diversity Committee's request to review the motion prior to it being voted on by the Senate. While discussing the motion at the Diversity Committee's meeting on Nov. 29, a physical fight occurred between former Senator Pat DeCourcy and

Turn to SGA, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

The SGA is debating issues about the Massachusetts and United States flags at their meetings.

Liquor law violations hot ticket for UMPD

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department arrested three students for liquor law violations and responded to reports of several injured students, ending a week that included reports of rape and larceny last weekend.

Two of the liquor law violation arrests took place at the Hole, parking lot 50 west of Patterson and John Quincy Adams Halls. Michael Meisner of Upton, Mass. was arrested on Friday, Nov. 30 at 7:57 p.m. An officer on duty saw Meisner handling beer and requested identification. It was found that the student was 19-years-old, and was charged with transporting and possessing liquor under 21 years of age.

The following night, Scott Gelin of Saugus, was spotted at the Hole by a plainclothes officer at 7:58 p.m. He was seen taking a 30-pack of beer from his truck and placing it into a black hockey bag. Like Meisner, he was also 19-years-old and charged with the same violation.

Approximately an hour later an officer on routine patrol witnessed Brian Rice of Acton, Mass., set two 12-packs of beer on the sidewalk in front of Mackimmie Hall. Upon questioning, he produced a fake California driver's license and was charged with possession of liquor as well as use of a false license. He was also 19-years-old.

Another liquor law violation occurred at the Hole on Sunday, Dec. 2. Two males allegedly handling alcohol appeared underage but were not students. The officer issued trespass notices, dumped the liquor and told the boys to leave campus.

"People should know alcohol enforcement is a priority for us," UMPD Spokesman Jim Lyons said. "It should be obvious by the number of arrests we make."

A fight between the ninth and tenth floors of John Adams Hall was called in at 2:17 a.m. on Saturday, Dec. 1. Fourteen people were listed as participants and/or witnesses of the fight, one of whom informed the responding officers of two male residents who had minor face injuries. One of these males was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital and none of the fourteen individuals involved pressed charges.

Both assault and battery reports came on Sunday morning. The first, at 3:04 a.m. in Mackimmie Hall, an intoxicated resident threw a bottle down the hall, which hit a female resident on the shoulder. The female resident opted not to press charges and housing was considering evicting the individual for being a threat to the floor.

Six minutes later, a male subject was found lying on the ground near the Visitor's Center and had visible face injuries. Witnesses said he was attacked by a large number of males who were chasing him down Massachusetts Avenue. Subject refused to identify the group, why they were chasing him, where he was coming from and also refused medical assistance. He left the scene with his friends.

A rape report reached the UMPD on Monday, Nov. 26 when a female

Turn to UMPD, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Emergency vehicles were out in full force this past week, keeping up with the many incidents around campus.

Cultural Events Calendar

FILMS

UMASS – The Graduate ALANA/International Caucus will present the film On Orientalism on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:00 p.m. in the Ping-Pong Room of Crampton Dorm. The film illustrates the theories of noted academic Edward Said. The film will be followed by discussion and a social event.

AMHERST – Boogie Down Productions will present Bronx Teens and Their Stories at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 7, in Amherst College's Stirn Auditorium. Eight young filmmakers will screen short narrative films that they shot, wrote and directed in affiliation with the Ghetto Film School, located in the South Bronx neighborhood of New York. An information session on The Ghetto Film School and a catered reception will follow the screening. This event is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Pedro Almodovar's film La Flor de mi Secreto [The Flower of My Secret] will be broadcast on Tuesday, Dec. 11 at 7:00 in room 101 of Dwight Hall. This event, part of the Spanish Film Series, is free.

UMASS – Alles Wird Gut [Everything Will Be Fine], an Afro-German lesbian screwball comedy, will be broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 11, in room 227 of Herter Hall.

PERFORMANCES

SMITH – Lillian Hellman's play The Children's Hour will be performed at Smith College's Hallie Flanagan Theater on Wednesday, Dec. 5, at 8:00 p.m. The play will also be performed on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, also at 8:00. The theater is located in Smith's Mendenhall Performing Arts Center. The play is a drama about a spiteful child who, angry with the authorities at her girls' school, seeks revenge by claiming to have evidence that the headmistresses are lesbians.

UMASS – The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company & The Dirty Dozen Brass Band will perform "When the Spirit Moves" on Thursday, Dec. 6 at 7:30 p.m., in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The event will combine New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

AMHERST – Danny Hoch's play Some of the People will be performed at Amherst College's Experimental Theater on Thursday, Dec. 6, Friday, Dec. 7, and Saturday, Dec. 8, at 8:00 p.m. Amherst student Bernard Bygott will perform excerpts from Hoch's "Some of the People" and "Jails, Hospitals and Hip Hop." The one-person show features New York City's rich oral traditions. Brooklyn Polish, Puerto Rican English, Black American street talk, Jamaican patois and Hip Hop all get flipped and flexed center stage. This event is free, but reservations are suggested. Call 542-2277 for tickets. The Experimental Theater is located in Kirby Theater Building.

HAMPSHIRE – The Rania Khalil Show, featuring Egyptian multimedia performance art, will be held at Hampshire College's main dance studio on Friday, Dec. 7, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $5, $3 for students.

UMASS – The Black Student Union will host ...All That Jazz on Monday, Dec. 10, from 6:30 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event will include singing, poetry, and soul food. Tickets are $5, and can be purchased from Tix Unlimited.

UMASS – Students for a Free Tibet will present Tibetan Culture and Dance: A Live Performance of Tibetan Music on Monday, Dec. 10, at 7:00 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

RELIGIOUS

AMHERST – Amherst College will be hosting a Hillel Hanukkah Festival at Alumni House on Wednesday, Dec. 5 from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m. The festival will feature games and novelty booths hosted by students. Food will be served. From 8:00 to 10:00 p.m., a Hannukah party will be held, featuring Amherst acappella groups. Klezmer music and traditional Hanukkah latkes and other food. Both events are free.

SMITH – A Hannukah party for the Five College community will be held at Smith College's Davis Ballroom on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 8:00 p.m. This event is free.

UMASS – "Light the Menorah" will be held on the front lawn of Hillel House at 8:30 p.m. on Sunday, Dec. 9, and at 5:00 p.m. on the following Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. It will also be held at 5:30 p.m. on Thursday, at 5:30 p.m. on Friday, and 5:00 p.m. on Sunday.

UMASS – Hillel House will host latke making on Sunday, Dec. 9 at 2:00 p.m. The latke-making is in preparation for the Jewish Student Union's party [see below for more information].

UMASS – The Jewish Student Union will be hosting a Hannukah Party at Atlantis on Sunday, Dec. 9, at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $3 at the door. Participants must be 18 or over, and have identification. Information for this event can be found at http://www.geocities.com/jsuparty. Atlantis is located at 41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst.

UMASS – Hillel House will attempt to break a world record by building a 36-foot-tall candle on Wednesday, Dec. 12, starting at 9:00 p.m. Join in the fun!

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

UMASS – Alisha Clarke, a PhD student in Sociology at UMass, will deliver a lecture, "Who Cares About a Few Trans People?" at 12:30 on Thursday, Dec. 6, in rooms 904-8 of the Campus Center. The speaker will look at the symbolic positioning of transgenderism in the key discourses of medicalization, feminist theory, and the queer theory to understand the reason and need for a transgender theory. This event, part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series, is free.

UMASS – Speak Up!, a health workshop by women, for women, will be held in the basement of Mary Lyon Dorm on Thursday, Dec. 6 at 7:00 p.m. Mary Lyon is located in Northeast.

AMHERST – Author Tom Hayden will read from is latest book, Irish On the Inside, at Food For Thought Books on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:00 p.m. The bookshop is located at 106 North Pleasant Street.

UMASS – The Women of Color Leadership Network will present Sex Talks With Kassia Ringell at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Dec. 6, in room 203 of Wilder Hall. This event promises conversations about sex, gender, preference and wisdom.

UMASS – A forum, titled, "The Impact of September 11 and the Afghan War on the Global Economy" will be held in room 124 of Hasbrouck Hall on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:30 p.m. This event is free and open to the public.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Mattilde Schmitt will deliver a lecture, "The Appropriation and Management of Public Spaces by Foreign Migrants in Germany," at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:30 p.m. The Center is located at 85 College Street, South Hadley.

AMHERST – Nationally recognized social justice activist Elizabeth Toledo will speak in the first floor lounge of Amherst College's Chapin Hall on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:30 p.m. Her lecture is titled, "Everyday Acts of Rebellion."

AMHERST – Members of the Kensington Welfare Rights Union and local welfare rights/anti-poverty activists will speak on Thursday, Dec. 6, at 7:30 p.m. in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall. Discussion topics will include the real-life effects of the welfare reform law of 1996, the idea of the "feminization" of poverty, the current affordable housing crisis in the U.S., the effects of the recession and Sept. 11 on poor and working people, the development of a global network of anti-poverty organizing, and the growing international movement for economic human rights.

AMHERST – The Media Education Foundation will hold a public forum on Friday, Dec. 7, from 7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. in Smith College's John M. Greene Hall. Panelists will include Naomi Klein, author of No Logo, Douglas Rushkoff, author of Coercion, and Mark Crispin Miller, author of The Bush Dyslexicon. They will discuss the future of global justice movements and progressive politics after September 11.

AMHERST – A Hillel latke and hamantaschen debate will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Sunday, Dec. 9 in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall. Two teams of three faculty will debate on "why, from the perspective of their discipline, the latke or hamantaschen is the superior food item that has contributed more to the advancement of civilization and the American way of life."

UMASS – Comparative Literature Professor Lucien Miller and Comparative Literature Professor William Mobeius will discuss "Cultural Studies in the Future of Comparative Literature" in room 601 of Herter Hall on Tuesday, Dec. 11, at 5:30 p.m. This event is part of the OPDICS 8: Dialogues in Cultural Studies series. Refreshments will be served.

AMHERST – A Stress Management and Relaxation Technique Workshop will be held at the Cadigan Center for Religious Life on Tuesday, Dec. 11 from 7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. The Center is located at 38 Woodside Ave., Amherst. Effective ways of coping with the physical and emotional effects of stress will be taught, including diaphragmatic breathing and guided imagery.

UMASS – A community forum on the events of Sept. 11 and their aftermath will be held from 5:00 to 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 12, at Bangs Community Center. The Center is located at 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst.

EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – An opening reception for Nora Valdez's exhibition, The Journey, will be held at Hampden Gallery on Thursday, Dec. 6 from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. A gallery talk will be conducted from 4:30 to 5:00.

UMASS – An opening reception for Cynthia Poirier's exhibition In Touch, and Jesal Kapadia's exhibition New Videos, will be held at the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery on Monday, Dec. 10 from 5:00 to 7:00 p.m. Poirier's exhibition will run through Dec. 12, and Kapadia's will run through Dec. 14.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Simiawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

GIVE HOUSING SERVICES A PIECE OF YOUR MIND!

Your thoughts about on-campus housing might just get you one of 15 gift certificates!

Housing Services needs to have input from students as we plan for the future. We want to know what you think, and we're willing to pay for it! Fifteen survey respondents will receive a $100, $50 or $25 gift certificate at one of the following places:

Media Play, Barnes & Noble, Amazon.com, Sugar Jones, Antonio's, Northampton Bowl, University Store, Pinocchio's or Judie's

Fill out our quick survey at http://www.housing.umass.edu/housing_survey/.

It will only take a few minutes of your time, AND YOU COULD WIN BIG!

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The UMass craft fair will be filling the Campus Center concourse for three days this week.

■ UMPD

continued from page 1

student walked in to the police station to report the incident that occurred in October in the Southwest residential area. Very little information is being released about the incident as it is still under investigation. However, it is known that the victim and two perpetrators were known to one another and alcohol was involved. The case was previously classified as a "sex offense" but has been updated to "rape" since it was originally reported a week ago.

According to Lyons, sex offense reports have been fairly low this semester, however, "a lot of sex offenses are not reported directly to the police." Other campus agencies that receive sex offense reports include Counselor Advocates at Everywoman's Center, University Health Services, the Dean of Students, resident halls and the Greek system.

Credit cards and poinsettias were among the larceny incidents last week. A Pierpont resident reported on Monday, Nov. 26 that his MasterCard was stolen from his dormitory room over the weekend and had accrued a number of charges in the Boston area. On Friday morning, French Hall Greenhouse #6 reported that six poinsettias had been stolen and someone had witnessed a person leaving through a window. As the investigation was bearing fruit, said Lyons, the poinsettias were returned by 1:51 p.m.

While trying to administer an exam in Morrill Auditorium, a faculty member reported on Monday at 6:59 p.m. that a group of people entered the auditorium, exhibiting "rude and obnoxious" behavior. Reporting officers found no suspects upon arrival and faculty member said the group may have been involved in some sort of theater project.

One of the six reports of a request to assist a citizen last week involved a man the reporting person had met on a bus. Reporting person explained that the man was making bizarre statements about space flight, was stepping into traffic and waving down cars he thought were buses when he called at 10:15 a.m. on Friday. He described the man as a white male in his late 20s, approximately 5 foot 8 inches tall. Officers found no suspect matching that description at the Haigis Mall bus stop or surrounding area.

Other reports include a Crabtree resident's concern over a raccoon on the porch near the building's front entrance, a call from Environmental Health and Safety to assist the agency in dealing with people taking down smoke detectors in Coolidge Hall at 4:10 a.m. on Saturday, as well as an intramural hockey referee's concern over a verbal threat of bodily harm from a player he ejected from the game for a penalty reported later that day.

Police Log: Week in Review
Reports to UMPD, Monday, Nov. 26 – Sunday, Dec. 2

Total Reports: 183 Total Arrests: 3
Traffic Stops 43
Alarms (Pre-Fire, Trouble?, Intrusion, Elevator) 21
Suspicious Person/Activity/Vehicle 12
Assist Agency/Citizen 11
Parking Complaints 11
Liquor Law Violations 9
Annoying telephone calls/behavior 9
Vandalism 8
Follow-up Investigations 8
Larceny 8
Medical Emergencies 7
Warrant/Summons Service 6
Disturbance 5
Lost and Found Property 4
Disabled Motor Vehicle 4
Assault and Battery 2
Breaking and Entering/Burglary 2
Drug Law Offenses 2
Accidents (Property Damage) 2
Health Safety/Hazard 1
Animal Complaint 1
Rape 1
Domestic Disturbance 1

■ birds

continued from page 1

ing through the Northeast. A Sage Thrasher and an Ash-throated Flycatcher, both of which are usually found in the western half of the United States, were seen in Maine, while two Calliope Hummingbirds were recorded in Manhattan for the first time ever.

Other late migrants also included a female Baltimore Oriole, a Chipping Sparrow, a Carolina Wren and numerous Yellow-rumped Warblers.

With the conclusion of the migrant report, the slide projector was wheeled out, and the second half of the meeting began.

The first speaker recounted her recent trip to the short-grass prairies of Wyoming and Nebraska, and went on to describe the birds of the area. Highlights of the trip included all kinds of shorebirds in the ponds and alkaline pools of the prairie, while the power lines proved to be great habitat for American Kestrels, many different species of flycatchers and Mourning Doves.

Vietnam was the subject of the next presentation, although the speaker's trip proved disappointing in terms of birds seen. Apparently, the Southeast Asian country has had a problem with the capture and concurrent incarceration of almost every wild bird in the area, and despite the tropical habitat, there are almost no wild species remaining.

The final speaker of the evening went over his slides of Hawaii, and described the many different land and sea birds that he was able to identify. White-tailed Tropicbirds, Red-tailed Tropicbirds and Fairy Terns were just a few of the many species he was able to get on film.

"We do have field trips," Wilson said at the conclusion of the slide show. "They average about two a month and we have some overnight trips as well – usually one in the spring and one in the fall. And except for the overnight trips, you don't need to be a member for anything."

For more information on the Christmas Bird Count or the Hampshire Bird Club in general, e-mail Wilson at mwilson@k12s.phast.umass.edu.

"To me, one of the most interesting things is the differences in people," Wilson said. "They are all drawn together by one thing, but there is serious diversity among them, and that is what makes it fun."

Meetings usually take place on the second Monday of every month, but December's get-together was pushed forward because of Chanukah.

The meeting took place at the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant Street, and began at 7 p.m. Holiday refreshments were served.

■ SGA

continued from page 1

Secretary of Finance Gabriel Tavares regarding the motion and internal conflicts.

"There was a lot of debate regarding the motion, and my main concern was how it would effect diversity on campus," Scott Turnberg, Chair of Diversity said. "I'm opposed to the motion, but I support my committee's decision. I think it will be interesting to see what happens when it goes to the Senate."

The issue of violence, and what could happen tonight, has also been an issue among Senate members and students. Speaker Aaron Saunders explained that violence is in no way acceptable and that he won't tolerate that kind of behavior in Senate. Turnberg and Saunders also both expressed that they felt the motion itself had already taken up too much of the Senate's time, and were questioning its relevancy.

"We've dedicated an awful lot of time on this internal motion, and I don't know how much it will affect the Senate," Saunders said. "What good is really coming from this motion and is it a valid concern. We need to be focused on issues that affect the students and not internal issues."

Other issues affecting the Senate are those surrounding the budget outlook for the future of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and the SGA as a whole. With a recent 12 million dollar cut in higher education by the government, members of the SGA have been looking into what effects it will have on the SGA and students at UMass.

"The budget cuts as a whole will hurt us, in the fact that the Student Activities Trust Fund [SATF] will also be cut due to a lack of funds," Saunders said. "We're looking to be cut up to $20,000, which means that student businesses are going to be effected."

Saunders continued by explaining that the SGA is looking at ways to avoid major financial cuts. One idea was increasing the student activities fee. The $75 fee is currently included into every student's tuition; however, the SGA is looking at the possibility of increasing the fee up to five more dollars.

"In the fall Senate elections, we placed a referendum question on the ballot requesting students' opinions on a three dollar increase, and we received an overwhelmingly positive response," Saunders said. "It would not be an enormous increase, and we as a University are going to be scraping for whatever we can get."

Other motions being presented tonight will be that involving financial allocations, and separating the University Public Policy and Relations committee into two separate committees. The split would separate University Policy and University Public Relations into two individual committees. And finally, a motion will be presented requesting for a search committee for a new SCARA (Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy) director.

"It should be an interesting meeting with lots of good debate," Saunders said. "People are really skeptical about things right now, and it will be interesting to see how everything presented will play out."

Tonight's SGA Senate meeting will take place at 7:15 p.m. in Room 168 of the Campus Center.

STUDENT TICKETS

UMass basketball VS CONNECTICUT HUSKIES™

ESPN

Tuesday • DEC. 11TH • 9:00 pm

$ 5.00 each

WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER

THE BATTLE OF THE BORDER
THE BIGGEST BASKETBALL GAME OF THE YEAR!

TICKETS ONSALE NOW!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810

GET YOUR TICKETS AT
CAMPUS CENTER • THE CAGE • MULLINS CENTER

Bring your professor or TA to dinner at the Dining Commons!

Now that the fall semester is almost over, you may want to show your appreciation to your professors or TAs by taking them to the Dining Commons for a meal. The DC will be the best place since we will pickup the tab.

Here's how it works:
During the week of December 10-14, 2001, any student on the meal plan can bring one professor or TA per day to any DC for any meal on us. All you need to do is to have the professor or TA sign-in at the cashier's station and be accompanied by a student on the meal plan. Limited to one meal per day.

What's Cookin' at UMass
Great Food, Great Fun!

UMASS FOOD SERVICES

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

OJ faces more trouble

assumptions of guilt unwarranted

After several years out of the limelight, O.J. Simpson once again returned to the public view yesterday when police searched through his Miami home for evidence that he was involved in an ecstasy ring.

This news aside, what is more interesting is that a man who could be heralded as Miami's most famous citizen has already faced problems with the Miami police department. He was acquitted on charges six weeks ago of a road rage incident in which he ripped a pair of sunglasses off of another driver. The interesting part about this statement is that he was acquitted. Yet the fact that he got into a fight, something that many Americans do on a daily basis, made the news.

When he moved from California to Florida it was under the pretense of starting a new life, to move out of the shadow of the deaths of Ron Goldman and his wife Nicole Brown Simpson. However less than seven years after he was tried for the murders and even less time following the civil trial that left him virtually penniless, he is back in the spotlight. Are these the actions of a man that is looking to clean up his life and improve his public image? Is O.J. Simpson predestined towards crime or just a victim of an overzealous police department? Has the FBI made O.J. a "usual suspect" in terms of high profile crimes? Maybe. These questions and more will be pondered over the next couple of months.

The truth still remains that his name was mentioned in a telephone conversation in conjunction with the selling of illegal drugs. It is also true that he did have a high-speed chase with police previous to his arrest for the murders. But he was acquitted for those murders.

America's justice system is founded on the fact that one is innocent until proven guilty. Regardless of what O.J. Simpson was tried for in the past and regardless of how high profile his case was, the fact still remains that he has yet to be convicted of anything as of yet. His house was simply searched. In terms of anyone else this would not be news however because it involved O.J. Simpson it was an important story.

When the FBI searched O.J.'s home they found nothing, however he is still being treated by many Americans as someone who has committed a crime. Perhaps because some people believe that his murder trial was handled the wrong way or perhaps because his name is now automatically associated with criminal activity.

The fact still remains that because he was on trial in the past, all of his actions from now onward are under serious scrutiny. If he simply has a fight with another driver on the road, he makes the news. If the wrong sort of person mentions his name in passing, he is under scrutiny for potentially being involved. Does this mean that he isn't? No. But we should keep in mind that he is innocent of all crimes until proven guilty, and should be treated as such.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Booze, buses and Little Pete:

Wilkinson goes way downtown for three

Instead of wasting three columns on three separate ideas, I thought this week I'd try to boil my feelings on three separate topics into one uber-column. Why?

Because I'd originally wanted to write about the ridiculous liquor laws in the state of Massachusetts, especially the ones pertaining to drivers. For instance, an 18-year-old (who can legally vote, own a car, and go to war...) can't drive a 21-year-old to the liquor store around here. Furthermore, if a 21-year-old drives to the liquor store with an 18-year-old (who, by the way, can legally vote, own a car, and go to war...), that minor can't even hold onto the purchase of the legal driver for fear of arrest should cops pull the automobile over. In my frustration on this topic, I was going to observe the following: there is no state more alcohol-ridden than Massachusetts. I offer the following as evidence.

-This state has the single most alcoholic politician in recent memory. At this point, Ted Kennedy has a red nose even if he hasn't been drinking, which generally means the five minutes right after he wakes up and right before he gargles with whiskey instead of mouthwash.

-This state's two major ethnic groups – the Irish and the Italians – are some of the more, shall we say, "drinking friendly" peoples in the modern world. If the Irish aren't busy downing pint after pint of sweet Guinness, the Italians are swimming in pools full of red wine. (Before anybody writes to say that both are negative stereotypes, please, remember that I'm pushing for fewer restrictive laws, which means I fully endorse alcohol in all of its goodness)

-This state's major religion serves alcohol as a part of its Sunday morning service! Oh sure, it's supposed by a "sacrament," but if it were truly so holy, then wouldn't have so many alcoholic priests.

-This state's street corners generally feature one of two things: a liquor store or a bar. In some places around here, it's both. Yes, even in super liberal Amherst, a drunk fed up with the uptown scene can go around the corner to Russell's liquors and grab a bottle of Bailey's for a night of solitary swill.

For this state to accept all of the above, and then tell its citizens (the ones who can legally vote, own a car, and go to war...) that they can neither drive a legal drinker to a liquor store nor ride in a car with a legal drinker who has purchased alcohol is absolutely stupid. If anybody really believes that enforcement of that law will truly prevent the 18-21-year-old college crowd from drinking is a complete moron.

If Massachusetts really wants to cut down on the underage drinking, why not sent a SWAT team to each of the 800 million Catholic churches around here to arrest the confirmed kids who are allowed to drink "Christ's blood" in plain violation of the Commonwealth's laws against underage consumption of alcohol? If a legal citizen can't legally decide whom to get a ride from, then it seems like Massachusetts could at least make an effort to cut down on the boozing in God's own house.

Then I thought, that topic seems like it makes me too angry. Why not write about something joyful and happy?

So I figured, why not a column about my Danny Tamberelli sighting at the New India House? Canoodling with a young lady (who might have been named Peruniat, the actor who played the Younger Pete Wrigley on Nickelodeon's Adventures of Pete and Pete, seemed perfectly innocent.

Which didn't stop Amanda, Julie and I from being barely able to breathe when we spotted him. It's not the equivalent of Christopher Walken at Rao's (it's more like Mario Lopez at Mystery Train), but still, seeing one of the stars of the single greatest children's show ever was enough to make us gag on our own breath. Did we handle the sighting in a calm, rational fashion once we finally found our lung capacity again?

I don't know; does laughing hysterically, writing notes to one another and stealing longing stares at the red-haired mp count? What about taking his place instead after he'd left the restaurant?

Needless to say, anybody who brings Danny Tamberelli (who apparently attends Hampshire College) to a party will be a hero for the rest of his or her life. Just imagine: the party's slowing down, the flip-cup table lays fallow, there's a lot of "this is the third hour we've been drinking lag" setting in, and suddenly, through the door comes Pete, star of The Adventures of Pete and Pete, a Coors Light case under his arm! It would be the greatest thing to ever happen in the United States. Well, except for maybe pounding a beer with Pete.

And, umm, pounding another beer with Pete.

Would it ever get old?

No.

But while thinking about the greatest sighting of my life (and I have met F.W. de Klerk, the former President of South Africa, amongst other political luminaries), I got stuck in the traffic that is created on the crosswalk from Southwest to Campus. And nearly had an aneurysm.

I swear to God, if you Southwest people don't start using that tunnel, I'm going to commandeer a PVTA bus and drive it into a huge crowd of you. The reason the tunnel was built was to prevent the horrific traffic that you create every time you insist on walking in front of my car.

Would it really be so difficult to walk through the tunnel? What is the tunnel anyway, one hundred feet out of your way from that crosswalk?

That said, as a special pre-disaster warning to the University of Massachusetts Police Department, I'm serious about the bus threat. To avoid said catastrophe, maybe we could send an officer down to the crosswalk during class changes to hand-direct foot traffic? Wouldn't it be worth it to pay a few officers the overtime necessary to keep them at the crosswalk when compared the possible loss of human life?

I'm writing this only because, if I don't totally lose it, somebody else will. It'll be 9:50 on a Tuesday, he'll be late for class, sipping on a large latte after getting two hours of sleep because he'd been bailed out early in the morning after getting arrested for driving a minor around with alcohol in the car, somebody won't wave after walking right into traffic forcing him to slam on the breaks, and he'll just lose it.

And that man will be the star of The Adventures of Pete and Pete. Hampshire College's own, Danny Tamberelli!

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Foul wordplay:

Cringing at "war" phrases

In the past two months, I have cringed every time I heard the phrase "war on terrorism." I thought it might have been an impulse, long programmed into my perception and personality, but I was wrong. My gut reaction has not disappointed me, my confidence has.

I never should have doubted my allergy to the phrase.

It has no limits, no constraining boundary. "Terrorism" alone is a vague word, especially in today's world. Certainly, it is not a word to which our government should have attached "war." Now, the United States finds itself locked in an exothermic conflict, a victim of its vocabulary.

Unfortunately, no grammarians would dare chastise the Bush administration's use of the phrase. In fact, it is catching on in other areas as well. Our policy makers seem to have withdrawn their patent on it. On Monday, Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon introduced the phrase to his constituency.

"A war has been forced upon us, a war of terror," Sharon said.

The prime minister was justifying an Israeli helicopter attack that destroyed tanks and helicopters located near Palestinian leader Yassir Arafat's house.

The phrase is appealing because it is fresh. The political interests who direct policy have heard "civilian casualties," "blowback" and "diplomacy" too many times. They need something more palatable. They need something that the ignorant can believe in.

Besides, if America can label the Taliban as terrorists after one attack, then Israel should have no problem with Palestine. I might even allow it. But then again, I still can't stop cringing.

I don't want to see the world cave in on itself. It is, after all, replete with religious regimes and corrupt coalitions with access to nuclear arbitration. And, if the Afghans and Palestinians are terrorists, so too are the Americans and Israelis.

I'm assuming Bush and Sharon both can't read a dictionary. Either that, or the sky really is falling.

When the president said "any nation that continues to harbor or support terrorism will be regarded by the United States as a hostile regime," he condemned both East and West to conflict. After all, the reticent bibliophiles at Merriam-Webster have claimed for hundreds of years that "terrorism" means the systematic use of fear, especially as a means of coercion.

Are they really going to suggest that their nations don't continue to harbor or support that activity? Maybe they should consult with some Palestinian widows or Iraqi children first. Actually, just forget I mentioned Iraq. I'm sure we'll be seeing plenty of that nation soon.

The war on terrorism is carving a global arc that will cut across the Middle East, and eventually, the world. That is why, myself, and others like me, cried out the tired phrases. I wonder how many people who believed a peaceful response to Sept. 11 would be a dangerous idea still think that way. Or maybe they still can't see what parallels.

The nation continues to plunge into conflicts it cannot hope to resolve. Our list of foes grows every day. Yesterday, Afghanistan. Today, Palestine. Tomorrow, Iraq.

With each explosion, a new foe materializes in the Middle East. New allegiances, new commitments. More pressure generated by the war on terrorism. For now, CNN broadcasts have beamed safe images onto our television sets. I'd wager the warhawks approve of the military's progress reports.

But what surprises lay ahead?

It's time to start cringing, America. Let's send the wordsmiths to work, before the phrase becomes a mantra for a third world war. I know they can still fashion words unassociated with bloodshed.

I'm but a novice, but I think "victorious retreat" might work for our administration. It sounds patriotic enough, and I'm sure the White House can spin it into popular approval for the president. Hell, he'd have my vote.

This new policy would mean some sacrifices, however.

We might have to shut down the military-industrial complex for a while and stop sending munitions to our allies. We might have to pay our debts to the UN and World Bank and invest in the government-genesis committee in Germany. We might have to start taking responsibility for our actions overseas by withdrawing our support of repressive governments.

Every party in a dispute has their grievances – Israel, Palestine, and America included. I am not so naive as to suggest that our country is the only perpetrator of evil in the world. I am so naive, however, to think that the wealthiest nation in the world can spend some of their capital – monetary and otherwise – to settle those grievances. It is racist to suggest that Westerners are the only human beings capable of concession.

A victorious retreat would not erase the scars of Sept. 11, or free the world from the vice of terrorism. But it would be a nice start. Who knows, it might even popularize other phrases, like "representative democracy," and "human rights."

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

> "I am not so naive as to suggest that our country is the only perpetrator of evil in the world. I am so naive, however, to think that the wealthiest nation in the world can spend some of their capital – monetary and otherwise – to settle those grievances"

Not a democracy

RENE GONZALEZ BERRIOS

The news that so-called President Bush (I'm he was) got put in power by a Supreme Court coup, not elected is establishing military tribunals is further proof of the beginnings of a dictatorship. "Not in America," you would say. "The American people are too accustomed to democracy. Democracy is an institution that can't be broken here." First of all, we've already seen what happened to long held assumptions about safety in this country (completely destroyed along with the Twin Towers). Second of all, I'm not so sure of that claim. Similar governmental moves have been made in the undeveloped world (such as Latin America) and have brought immediate protest and mass uneasiness. But here in the United States, in our paralyzing status as "support the war on terror" we question absolutely nothing of what the government does. "They must be right if they do it," is the latest answer I'm hearing about the government's action. With that kind of "active" participating citizens, who needs external enemies? President Bush's move is tantamount to him claiming the power of the judicial branch, at least to what pertains to non-citizens in this country. But citizens will surely feel the heat.

Let me refresh the memory of readers about the military tribunals' implications. The tribunals have been established by military order (meaning Bush or subsequent presidents have the final word) to try suspected terrorists. Their jurisdiction will be permanent residents as well as other visitors and residents of the United States (but not citizens). The trials will be held here, or in foreign countries or even in battleships cruising the seas, so as to avoid "protest" from the people in the world. They will be held in secret. Panels appointed by warhawk Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld will be the arbitrators instead of juries, and they can convict and sentence even to death with a simple 2/3 majority. There will be no appeals to sentences. No appeals. Defendants may not choose their own defense or lawyer. Evidence admitted is at the whim of the panel and will be a lot more restrictive than that admitted in regular civilian trials. Unlike civilian trials, illegally obtained evidence (like wire-tapped information) or hearsay evidence will be allowed. The prosecution's evidence will not be available to the defense for preparing for trial because it could "compromise U.S. secrets." Indeed, these trials are nothing more than Soviet-style justice. The "national security" is what is as stake, not the prosecution of real justice.

John Ashcroft, who we feared would undermine civil liberties when he was being questioned in the Senate, has done just that. According to him, "people who are suspected of terrorism do not deserve the protections of the U.S. Constitution." Never mind that it has been a long practice of the United States to extend its democratic protections to all residing in the U.S., regardless of their citizen-status, but there is a very serious flaw in this approach. Who is to say that a person is a terrorist? Let's think of a hypothetical example. A man from the Middle East who practices Islam (or a Sikh Indian, or a Peruvian; doesn't matter as long as he is sufficiently brown and black haired) is arrested on suspicion of terrorism. By virtue of his suspicion, he is sent to a military tribunal on the U.S.S. Roosevelt instead of a normal civilian court in the U.S. What has happened? One of the basic (and indeed international law's) sacred judicial customs has been broken. The man is now "guilty until proven innocent" instead of the other way around. And with the military tribunals' restrictive rules, he may not be able to defend himself properly. Is it any wonder if the military tribunals produce hordes of "successful prosecutions?" How can a verdict other than guilty be arrived at with the unfair rules of the tribunals? There will be no appeal and no judicial overview. Even the U.S. Supreme Court is excluded from this travesty of justice.

How will this affect citizens? First of all, we should all be concerned about what happens to all in this country. If the law does not work for some, it will not work for all. Those are our democratic principles on which this country was supposedly founded on. But, these laws will have more immediate and tangible consequences. Governments around the world who in the past would have been wary of establishing such courts will now begin to establish similar "kangaroo" courts and possible try U.S. citizens in them (such as the courts established to try the U.S. aid workers for preaching Christianity in Afghanistan). They will now say to the U.S., "what are you angry about, you do it yourself." We have set an international precedent for the subversion of justice. Bush seems to revel in such simplistic "good versus evil" outlooks. Very well, so-called President Bush, then you have committed "evil." Simple as that.

And so begins the first chapter of dictatorship in the U.S. The executive branch (Bush) has ordered that the judicial branch's prerogative be under its jurisdiction under military tribunals (at least for non-citizens). The corrosive effects of this order are yet to be seen. But one thing is for sure. The terrorists won. The terrorists terrorized us to the extent that we have given up our precious civil liberties. And what is the American public doing about it? Nothing.

Rene L. Gonzalez Berrios is a UMass Graduate student.

You know how Beethoven couldn't hear his music? Well, we can't read our editorials. But, also like Beethoven, we know it's real good...just 'cause it feels so right.
Rock on Ed/Op!!!

Don't forget to check out our Lord of the Rings page tomorrow.

Stocking stuffer ideas for geeks

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

I figured that since it is around that time of year, I might mention a few trade paperbacks that would make for some cool stocking stuffers. Trade paperbacks, for non-geeks out there, is a compilation of comic book issues, typically collecting a multi-part story in one handy, dandy volume. These are far classier and more practical than the 22-page pamphlets you see on the creaky newsstands.

You might notice that there are no superhero books mentioned in these capsule reviews. I want to demonstrate that there are loads of other kinds of books out there other than ones that depict grown men in tights. Though a lot of those books are pretty damn cool, that is one genre among many in the medium. People tend to forget that.

Whiteout
Writer: Greg Rucka
Artist: Steve Lieber

Though Greg Rucka is getting all kinds of well-deserved accolades with his take on Batman in Detective Comics, the writer – who also writes crime novels – put himself on the comic book map with this hard-boiled thriller about murder in the Antarctic. U.S. Marshal Carrie Stetko, due to a mistake in the line of duty, is posted on the white desert as punishment. Stetko, resigned to her own private hell in the snow, is surprised to find herself on a murder investigation when bodies start turning up.

This book, thanks to the very capable and realistic pencils from Steve Lieber, is very authentic and exciting. The build-up and action move along with the pace of a great mystery novel while the art, with its depiction of the open expanses of the Antarctic as well the claustrophobic confines of the quarters, moves the story like a movie. It is that rare case when one can see the true uniqueness of the comic book as a medium, as its words and pictures mingle so that it is not quite a movie on paper and not quite a book with pictures. For anyone who enjoys mystery or thrillers, this book is pretty awesome.

300
Writer and Artist: Frank Miller

Frank Miller perhaps best known for bringing the crime noir element to the superhero with his work in Daredevil and Dark Knight Returns. And while he explores the genre further – undiluted by superhero antics – in Sin City, he throws every Frank Miller for a curve ball with 300, which chronicles 300 Spartan hoplite soldiers, their stand against a Persian legion, and their tragic end at The Hot Gates.

The writer plays to his strengths, focusing on King Leonidas, the quintessential Miller character – honorable, defiant, and tragic. Though the story is destined to end in tragedy, the characters come alive and you find yourself hoping they will come out okay in the end. But the book, in the end, is about martyrdom and winning, in terms of honor and glory, even in the face of defeat. Even though the story takes place 2,500 years in the past, Miller is still able to write a hero that the reader can respect and empathize with; in a lot of ways, this character is Dirty Harry with a spear. But it works.

The art gives the book its historical credibility. It is essential in creating drama through the scenes of intense warfare, which is depicted in all its bloody glory.

100 Bullets: First Shot, Last Call Writer: Brian Azzarello
Artist: Eduardo Risso

What would you do if a strange man in a really nice suit handed you a briefcase that contained information that linked someone to one of your misfortunes as well as an untraceable handgun with 100 bullets? If you were guaranteed to get away with murdering someone who has done you wrong, would you do it? This is the question that Brian Azzarello poses in 100 Bullets: First Shot, Last Call. This trade paperback collects the five issues of the ongoing series and introduces the reader to Agent Graves, a spook whose motives are unknown. Each storyline begins with the aforementioned premise but what the person does with the information is where the true story is because not every person would do exactly what one would expect.

While the premise is awesome in of itself, the dialogue and atmosphere of the book really makes it shine. The street talk is genuine in the first storyline, where a former gang member is just released from prison when Agent Graves gives her information on who killed her baby and husband. What unfolds is a thriller that has twists and turns. Azzarello plays on the fact that humans, by nature, are different and will react to certain things in completely different ways. This isn't the land of superheroes, where the only alternative to a situation is the right thing or the wrong thing. Rather, Azzarello revels in the ambiguity that lies between right and wrong, which intensifies the story and makes twists and turns unpredictable.

As the story goes on it becomes clear that Graves has certain motives to providing this service to people and that there is some sort of conspiracy that draws these stories, seemingly unrelated, together. In subsequent volumes, the book shifts from crime noir to a conspiracy story.

Transmetropolitan: Back on the Street
Writer: Warren Ellis
Artist: Darick Robertson

This is Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas meets

Turn to GEEKS, page 7

The power of a lie: Children's Hour at Smith

COURTESY OF JON CROSBY

From left to right, Julie Baber as Karen, Elizabeth Knaus as Mary, and Caitlin Egleson as Martha in Smith's production of The Children's Hour, playing tonight through Saturday.

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

With her play The Children's Hour, Lillian Hellman was something of a prophet. Written in 1934, it foretells the coming of The Crucible and the artistic backlash against the McCarthyism of the 50s. Its melodramatics, however, are completely without the Puritan gravity of Miller's play.

The story is based on the scandal that erupted when a student at a Scottish boarding school accused her teachers of having a lesbian affair. Hellman's transposition of this true story to the stage retains the scandal, but doesn't miss an opportunity to moralize on the consequences of lies and rumor in the context of class distinctions.

Martha and Karen run the boarding school in question. They're working class women who have scrimped and saved for years to finally purchase the land on which their school stands. Things have been going swimmingly thus far, and the women are living their modest dream and now making enough profit so that Karen can marry Joe, the town's resident doctor. And they can finally send the flighty Aunt Lily, Martha's relative who incessantly muses on her heyday in the theater, on a long trip to get her out of their hair.

The students' lessons are going well and all are ostensibly happy at the school – all except for Mary Tilford, a spoiled and parentless girl. She is now in the care of her grandmother, the matriarch Mrs. Amelia Tilford, and influential patrician with financial investment in the school. Upon first introduction to Mary, she seems harmless. She's late for her lessons, apparently a habit with her, and Karen punishes her. When the teachers leave, the revelation of her mercurial nature is like a slap in the face. With her machinations and manipulations, Mary exerts complete control over everyone around her, changing her entire personality in the blink of an eye.

To say that Mary has a problem with authority is a gross understatement. The desire to be back with her grandmother, whom she can control with a sweet and disingenuous smile is strong. After she runs away from school, she knows she must make her return impossible. Through blackmailing her fellow students, she begins a rumor that moves precipitously to destroy the lives of Martha and Karen. The women sue for slander but Aunt Lily refuses to answer her subpoena to testify on their behalf. Thus they cannot win their case, and the rumor is as good as true.

Hellman's script takes a turn towards melodrama in the third act, but to both the director's and the cast's credit, they staunchly refuse to follow the playwright's lead. After the girls are pulled from the school, the house becomes and painful and eerily quiet reminder of the life before the condemning verdict. Visiting director Austin Pendleton, a Tony nominee and member of Chicago's famous Steppenwolf Theatre, achieves well the weighty presence of silence here.

And in this silence, Julie Baber as Karen thrives. Although greatly disturbed by the rift in her relationship with Joe, she must be there for Martha (played by a solid Caitlin Egleson), who hitherto seemed the stronger of the two. The end of the play is hers for the taking. Indeed she doesn't fail in doing this, with a combination of a new self-realization of strength and delicate emotion. But up until that point, Elizabeth Knaus as Mary Tilford is captivating. Mary is more than a precocious child who needs discipline; sometimes it seems that an exorcism is in order. Knaus moves between possessed fury and charming sweetness with dexterity.

Thanks to the skilled ensemble, college aged students in the roles of young girls never seem awkward or forced. This fit so well that after seeing this production, it's hard to imagine any other age actors playing these girls. It seems fitting that, with all of the powerful women onstage the competent Quinlan Corbett as Dr. Joe is bland and lacks substance.

Though the shocked reaction of the accusation of lesbianism may seem outmoded, the power of lies and rumors are just as applicable today as they were in 1934. In fact, this later turned out to be quite powerful for the playwright as well as many of her contemporaries. Hellman, branded as a Communist, was called before the House Un-American Activities Committee and was subsequently blacklisted.

The ending comes in the form of a bumps third act that ends with a little too much preaching and moralizing for an audience to easily swallow. The Children's Hour, though deals with its subject matter no less intriguing than its position, The Crucible. But it is Pendleton and his cast, by masterfully veering the outdated and moralizing melodramatics with grace, who finally make it so absorbing.

The Children's Hour will be playing at Smith tonight through Sat. at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre. Call (413) 585-ARTS for tickets.

Inconsistency mars Creed's new album

COURTESY OF LEN IRISH

Creed releases their new album, Weathered, and then commences to stare wistfully into the distance.

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

CREED
Weathered
Wind-up

Yes, it's true. The Creed of four years ago is gone. The searing power that Creed held from start to finish in their 1997 debut album, My Own Prison, has been severely turned down. It's still there, but it's in spurts. Not surprisingly, many have left Creed for dead. They're not. In fact, they're still making some damned good music, – it's just tossed into a mixed bag that, unfortunately, has some sapps nothingness in it as well.

Weathered, released on Nov. 27, is their latest offering. The disc is pretty much an even split between the emotion filled, roaring Creed that we grew up loving and the commercial sell-out Creed that many feared would rear its ugly head after the success of songs like "With Arms Wide Open."

There's no denying it: the unbelievable success of Creed's second album, Human Clay, changed the band forever. Frontman Scott Stapp realizes that if he markets to more then one genre, he makes substantially more money than he otherwise would. Human Clay brought us the single "Higher," a song with uplifting lyrics and swirling guitars, but a song that was palatable to nearly every sector of the music world. Weathered brings us "My Sacrifice" first. It's a song that, well, has uplifting lyrics, swirling guitars and palatability with pop stations nation wide. Notice a pattern? Maybe they just should have called the tune "Higher II."

Take some heart, though, if you're a three-album Creed fan and are worried that your band has lost every sense of masculinity and heart that they had back in the day in favor of poppy fluff and sap. They're not N' Sync yet.

Weathered has some outstanding hard rock tracks on it. That's right, hard rock tracks. Those would be songs that have some depth, power and emotion to them. The title track for the album is outstanding, filled with the emotion one would expect on a track from My Own Prison. The lyrics for it speak to the same people that My Own Prison did, the downtrodden that refuse to give up. "Believe what you will / That is your right / But I choose to win / So I choose to fight," Stapp sings.

Other impressive tracks on Weathered include the first two songs, "Bullets" and "Freedom Fighter," and the fourth song, "Signs." "Bullets" could probably be compared to "What If" from the Human Clay album – it's loud, passionate, and riff-heavy. If there's a song on this album that has heavy hard rock airplay written all over it, this is the one.

Turn to CREED, page 7

Zombie's sophomoric solo, Mobius makes good

COURTESY OF MARINA CHAVEZ

Rob Zombie proves with his new release that he's not dead, or undead. And still eating brains.

- THE CURE
Greatest Hits
Elektra

The Cure, that ghoulish post-punk band from Britain dropped a new greatest hits disc last week. That makes what? Three? Four? At least one is called Greatest Hits.

Previously, my experience with The Cure was just what I heard at the bookstore where I worked while in high school. This album is pretty much what any Cure fan or newcomer would expect: very easy album to listen to, with quite a few gems mixed in.

One of the biggest and brightest is the shiny second disc packaged with the album. The second disc contains acoustic versions of the first album, and in some cases, notably, "Let's Go To Bed" where the acoustic version may be better than the original. The power of Robert Smith's vocals comes across really well in the acoustic versions of "The Lovecats" and "Wrong Number."

Of course, with such classics as "Just Like Heaven" and "Friday I'm In Love" in both electric and unplugged, the album's got a lot of power behind it. The caveat, in the words of musical Jedi Master Rob Schulze, is that "Friday I'm In Love" gets played on department store loudspeakers. "Lovesong" is always a great tune, and the guitar work on "Boys Don't Cry" still turns heads in the Collegian newsroom.

Showcasing early, middle, and new Cure, the discs present the listener with several moods to choose from: depressed, jealous, happy, in love, and simply "High."

It's not all roses and star shine though. "Mink Car" (never a personal favorite) checks in, as does "A Forest." However, these are easily balanced by "Why Can't I Be You?" and "Never Enough."

The album also includes two new tracks, "Cut Here" and "Just Say Yes." "Cut Here" is The Cure at its best: depressing, with a catchy electric pop feel to it that sort of works its way into your head. "Just Say Yes" tries to do the same, with Indian influences and random vowels mixed in, but falls just sort of the mark. The lyrics are just not what you'd expect from a band that made "Inbetween Days."

Overall, Greatest Hits is a very listenable album. Is that a word? (Editor's Note: Spell Check doesn't seem to think so.) Oh well. This is the kind of disc you throw on in the background and work, and every few songs or so you'll find yourself singing along or humming. It's a good soundtrack to rainy afternoon. The acoustic disc is a wonderful bonus, although the comments kind of gets repetitive. (Ken Campbell)

significant others

- THEY MIGHT BE GIANTS
Holidayland
Restless Records

They Might Be Giants extensive library contains at least eight albums, an MP3 collection and a strange assortment of slight EPs. On Why Does the Sun Shine?, TMBG paid homage to our closest star, also covering songs by the Meat Puppets and the Allman Brothers Band. On S-E-X-X-Y, TMBG lumped Factory Showroom's only single with soundtrack work from the Power Rangers movie.

Nothing conventional about its work, TMBG's most recent foray into half-album land is the five-song Holidayland. Minimal in music – there are only 12 minutes of actual songs – Holidayland is nonetheless a pleasant little treat, ripe as a respite from families sick of Bing Crosby's endless renditions of holiday Christmas classics.

"Santa Claus" is an energetic cover of The Sonics mid-60's song about the jolly fat man in all of his giving glory. "Santa's Beard," a strange tale of a wife cheating on her husband with St. Nick, is an old TMBG song, originally off of Lincoln. "Feast of Lights" and a surfy "Careless Santa" follow from Unsupervised, an album by John Flansburgh's side project, Monopuff.

Fittingly, a TMBG rarity caps the collection with the band's cover of "O Tannenbaum." Sung in German, the song sounds lovely, standing out from the album's pop oddities with its simplistic musical saxophone and clarinet.

Sure, it's not the longest album ever released, but for a few bucks, it's a perfectly acceptable stocking stuffer for anyone's closest Giant fan. (Sam Wilkinson)

- THE MOBIUS BAND
Two Self Released

It's weird but I like it.

The Mobius Band are locally based fellows who really put their backs into trying to not sound like anything else. Two, a five-song EP Mobius has put out, is well worth checking out for someone who likes their music eclectic, rich, layered and really, really laid back.

Shorter than I'd like and much better sounding than any indy release like this has any right to be, Two basically defies any labels that an incompetent and harassed reviewer like myself could put to it. It would be electronica but for the live drums and guitars. It could be rock except for the horns and slow-smooth sampling. It could be elevator music if it wasn't so interesting. It could be really, really interesting and sometimes (especially "Epitaph") absolutely riveting but... oh, wait, it is all those things.

If there is fault to be found in The Mobius Band (oh, and you gotta love that name, too – you know you wish you'd thought of it) it's in the fact that sometimes their sheer newness and experimentation can become a bit overwhelming. The long, languid ending of "The Lights Are Always On" is a case in point – the line between experimental noodling and just drawing something out for too long is one which these boys skirt on more than one occasion.

I find, however, that they bend that line far more than they break it. Two is a great new statement on a local scene too dominated by unshaven hippies with acoustic guitars and angry nu-metal screamers with ugly tattoos. The Mobius Band takes those boundaries apart, and the results are well worth checking out. (Rob Schulze)

- ROB ZOMBIE
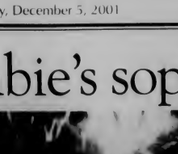
The Sinister Urge
Geffen

The Sinister Urge, Zombie's second solo outing, is for the most part a welcome recovery from the sometimes bland and bloated feel of 1998's Hellbilly Deluxe. As Queens of the Stone Age would say, it's quick and to the pointless, but Zombie's grim fables have never benefited from anything but the most direct route to lunacy.

The album is in high gear most all of the time, clocking in at less than 40 minutes with a hidden track and two throwaway sample-laden instrumentals. Toss "Scum of the Earth" out if you heard it a year and a half ago on the Mission: Impossible 2 soundtrack and you have roughly an EP's worth of new material. Not all of it hits, either. "House of 1000 Corpses," a song with the same name as Zombie's currently in limbo big-screen horror movie, has an almost country, storytelling feel that's vaguely interesting as an experiment, but seems to get off on its own atmospherics rather than developing a steady groove. Likewise, "(go to) California" and "Demon Speeding" recall too much the labored simplicity of the worst parts of Deluxe, while the messy Ozzy Osbourne collabo "Iron Head" proves that must metal duets should just be crushed at the thought.

The Sinister Urge's best moments harken back to the punk energy that flowed through much of White Zombie's material. "Dead Girl Superstar" chugs along at a champ's pace, and even includes a wink to the Ramones' "Beat on the Brat." "Feel So Numb" is Zombie's best song since at least "More Human Than Human," and accurately translates the assaultive psychedelic visuals associated with Rob Zombie into the music. Fist-pumping chants, a crater-sized riff with chaotic distortions and blissfully junked-out lyrics ("Brain trash, porn flash what is why/ Look into forever revolution eye") combine to make one of the year's best songs. While not a complete success, The Sinister Urge pumps out more vital signs than could be reasonably expected out of Zombie nowadays. (Michael Delano)

Turn to OTHERS, page 7



COURTESY OF THE MOBIUS BAND

The local band The Mobius Boys, who have released a surprisingly good EP.

the FRESH CUTS
Your alternative music source.

9.99 DEFAULT The Fallout

10.99 PETE YORN Musicforthemorningafter

11.99 MEST Destination Unknown

12.99 YES Magnification

12.99 JIMMY EAT WORLD Jimmy Eat World

13.99 ADEMA Adema

13.99 ALANA DAVIS Fortune Cookies

14.99 TENACIOUS D Tenacious D

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
Parental Advisory - Explicit Lyrics
Sale ends December 15, 2001.
www.mediaplay.com
8172611 1058C

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

COURTESY OF SACHA WALDMAN

Scott Stapp: his arms are neither wide nor open. Discuss.

creed

continued from page 5

"Freedom Fighter" is another tune on the heavy side. The lyrics reflect the times even if one doesn't agree with Stapp's message: "I'm just a freedom fighter / No remorse / Raging on in holy war / Soon there'll come a day / When you're face to face with me."

Weathered, unfortunately, ends musically after the eighth track. The last three songs are absolutely horrible. Creed has officially released their worst song of all time after this one. "Lullaby," the last thing on the disc, sounds like it's something Stapp sang to his wife one night and recorded before he went to bed. It's horrible, sheer syrup. If I can help it, I will never listen to that song again.

The biggest downfall to this album is that it isn't consistent. Because of Stapp's insistence on making Creed span the musical horizons, they don't stay true to their roots as one of the best hard rock bands in America. Weathered has some of the best songs Creed has ever put out on it. But it's not a good album. There's no continuity to the album; the pieces don't fit together as a whole. There's a hard song here, a sappy, sad song there, that horrible lullaby – and a mediocre album overall. I suppose as long as Scott Stapp is raking in the dough it's going to be like this. Don't be fooled – Creed is experimenting, finding where the most money lies for them. As long as they can play to more than one musical taste, they're going to. They're going to make some damned good music, they're going to make stuff that makes anyone other than the 13-year-old girl group cover its ears and scream. Get used to it.

COURTESY OF HUGH TURVEY

Alex Gold spinning something, well, less than gold.

others

continued from page 6

- ALEX GOLD
Xtravaganza Mix
Columbia

The problem with technotica is simple: it all sounds the same.

And Alex Gold isn't helping.

It isn't that his Xtravaganza Mix is particular bad – it's certainly far better than most of the techno-swill that gets a decent commercial release these days. His resume speaks volumes about the man. Apparently prodigious, at least according to Mix's liner notes, Gold has his own club at Ibiza, a fabulously exotic island that would likely house most modern day Caligula's.

That said, his mix, while proficient, is often boring, bland and banal.

There just isn't that much left to do with computer generated beats anymore and Gold's album is perfectly telling of that. "Rescue Me" is a particularly up-tempo piece, but five minutes after it's over, there's nothing worth remembering. "10 and 1" rehashes familiar dance beats that, when one isn't dancing, make Gold's work seem rather repetitive. In fact, that's how all of Xtravaganza Mix shakes out: perfectly acceptable if not totally forgettable.

So it goes with a music that's in desperate need of an infusion of new talent to get the proverbial wheels turning again. Until something like that happens, the Alex Gold's of the world will continue to produce material that sounds just everything else. (Sam Wilkinson)

geeks

continued from page 5

Bladerunner In a city called, simply enough, The City, we are introduced to the Babylon set in the far future. Warren Ellis uses Spider Jerusalem, a belligerent, chain-smoking, drugged-up journalist as his voice to comment on politics, religion, sex, drugs, advertising and everything in between. The satire is outrageous and hilarious because it is unhindered by manners or political correctness. This opening storylines involves a group of people who tamper with its genetic makeup by mixing it with DNA like people get tattoos nowadays; when these experiments fail, they are forced into a ghetto. Spider uses the only weapon he can to help these people: his words. As a mob of police officers brutalize the people in the ghetto, Spider uses his way with words and the truth to combat them.

This is the first volume of the Transmetropolitan (collecting #1-3) series and it only gets better from here. Spider, crazy as he may be, is the voice of reason in a world gone mad. The sad part is that the world Spider inhabits is an exaggerated version of our own. But that is what draws the reader in; using black humor, satire, and loads of swears to tell you everything that is wrong with the status quo. And it is a load of fun to watch the character try and bring it all down with his column, which is called "I Hate It Here."

Christopher Scott Kenny is a Collegian columnist

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available
ICHIBAN いちばん
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice. Stay healthy & live longer! "This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private • Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Please join us for prayer and reflection at our...
Advent Reconciliation Service
reflection by Sr Betty Broughan
7:00
*A gathering for those who will find it difficult to get through the holidays will follow at 8:30 PM with Sr. Carol Hebert in the Quigley Room
the NEWMAN CENTER

STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER
ANNUAL HOLIDAY CRAFT FAIR
UMASS CAMPUS CENTER
DEC.5TH, 6TH, 7TH
9AM-4PM
545-2096

UCLA tapes examined

By Robb Ferris
Daily Trojan (U. Southern California)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES — Problems after the University of California-Los Angeles football game two weeks ago arose when students stormed the Coliseum field, and there is little evidence of police brutality, Department of Public Safety Deputy Chief Bob Taylor said.

Despite student reports, the reaction when hundreds of students rushed the field was not an eruption of total chaos, Taylor said Tuesday.

Coliseum and university officials now are developing possible solutions to ensure such an incident is not repeated.

Suggestions for solutions to the recent problems with crowd control at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum were voiced during a meeting Nov. 21, but no conclusions have been reached, university officials said.

"There will be many more meetings in the future," said Don Ludwig, director of recreational sports. "We have a lot more work to do."

Representatives of University of Southern California faculty, administrators and students, including Taylor, Assistant Vice President of Student Affairs Cynthia Cherres and Student Senate President Hema Patel, participated in the meeting.

The group watched a video taken by members of the athletic department that captured the moments after the game when many fans claim they were trampled by crowds and mistreated by event staff and law enforcement officers.

"A lot of people went to the meeting with the perception in mind that there was this wild melee that took place, and just watching the video served to dispel a lot of that," Taylor said.

The video has not been released publically, and there have been no announcements made yet for its release in the near future.

Among the possible solutions discussed at the Nov. 21 meeting was the implementation of something Taylor called "pressure-relief tactics." The approach is intended to reduce congestion in seating areas and involves allowing students onto the field and then immediately directing them out of the Coliseum.

Garrett Brown, an undergraduate majoring in business, said while such an approach might make the environment safer, it still takes away from the college tradition of celebrating with the team after a big victory.

While it would eliminate many of the safety concerns, I think it would still take away from the idea of being with the team and celebrating," Brown said.

Taylor Williams, a senior majoring in accounting, said pressure-relief tactics even may worsen the situation. Rushing the field is a violation of a Los Angeles Municipal Code Sec. 41.56, stating, "It shall be unlawful for any person at any stadium to leave the area or areas set aside for spectators and enter upon the grounds, field."

"I would examine that ordinance to see how relevant it is and when it was drafted," Williams said. "I would also look at all the universities across the country that don't even try to keep students from rushing the field, where it's considered a tradition."

Rushing the field also is prohibited at the Rose Bowl, for many of the same reasons it is banned at the Coliseum.

"There are stadiums across the country where storming the field after the game (is allowed) – if that's their posture, that's fine," said Lt. Alex Uribe of the Pasadena Police Department. "We at the Rose Bowl see it as a danger to the public. The tearing down of a goalpost could easily injure or kill someone."

Stanford University also prohibits rushing the field at football games and has an eight-foot high fence separating the field from the stands. For many games, the first 10 rows of seating are closed off and covered with tarps.

Lt. Laura Wilson of Stanford's department of public safety said crowd control management is an issue taken very seriously. Two years ago the Santa Clara County Crowd Control Management team was used at the football game between Stanford and UC Berkeley to ensure safety. Wilson said the plan was controversial because officers dressed in riot gear.

"That definitely sent a message that rushing the field is not acceptable," he said.

Jack Hu, a sophomore majoring in business, said he never expected such an eruption on the field after the game.

"You watch games on TV where students are rushing the field, and it's all a big celebration," Hu said. "It was not good to see students – my classmates, get beaten down in front of my face."

Williams said he saw one handcuffed student get punched in the face by a member of event staff.

"If (rushing the field) was allowed (this year), it would have prevented injury and probably even contributed to school spirit," Williams said.

Brown said students on the field after the game might not have a mind to be there.

"Whether or not you want to get onto the field, there is a natural impact in that direction that will ultimately push you onto the field," Brown said. "And for students who may be in that position, to be met with a hostile police force is not good."

Staff writer Laura Olsen contributed to this report.

Track begins season on right foot

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Both the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams had stellar performances Saturday at Boston University as they were each able to pick up first place finishes against six other teams.

For the women, freshman phenom Brandy Green was the star, as she used a hot place performance in the 55-meter high hurdles (8.4 seconds) and a second place honor in the pole vault (10'6.00") to easily outscore Bentley (2nd with 70 points) by herself.

Another important contributor to the cause was Marissa Callister, who garnered a first place finish in the triple jump with a mark of 35'6.00". Christina Rayment took place in the weight throw and Christina Hutt (third place) in the 200-meter dash also scored points for the Maroon and White.

Overall on the day, UMass was able to pick up 95.50 points – good enough to out-distance second place finisher Maine (44.50 points).

Rounding out the top three was New Hampshire (38 points), while BU struggled to a mere 21.

For the men, Kwesi J. Boatengin (55-meter dash), Mike Howell (400-meter dash), Dave McMenamy (800-meter run), Eric Ufiano (shot put) and Ken Schneider (pole vault) all took first respective events to lead their team to victory.

Boatengin especially shined, finishing the 55-meter dash in an astounding 6.2 seconds.

Overall, the men's team was able to rack more damage than the women's team totaling 68.50 points to UNH's 41.5. Bentley, on the other hand, struggled mightily scoring out to the tune of a mere one point.

The Maroon and White now has a long hiatus before returning to action in the middle of January. The Minutemen will travel back to BU to compete on the New England Challenge Cup on January 18 while the Minutewomen will next compete against Brown University on January 19 in Providence, Rhode Island.

The jump hook has been one of Micah Brand's most effective moves all season

■ crusade

continued from page 12

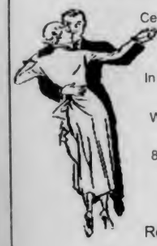
scoring nine points in the opening 20 minutes on three of three shooting, with each basket coming from three-point range.

"We thought we were in a good position but we knew we couldn't take it for granted and we couldn't be complacent," said Holy Cross' Tim Szatko, who had 12 points and nine boards. "We knew we had to keep playing our game, keep executing and stick to our game plan."

At the other end of the floor Holy Cross Head Coach Ralph Willard made defensive adjustments in order to limit the effectiveness of UMass' Micah Brand. Brand came out of the gates red-hot by scoring the Maroon and White's first nine points in the opening six minutes, but managed just one point the rest of the half.

"Our game plan was to double team him [Brand] right away, on the pass, and we didn't do that early on in the game," Willard said. "He really hurt us early and then we just told our guys, kept reiterating, that they had to go on the pass and be there when he caught the basketball, so he didn't have time to get a shot off."

One of the few bright spots for the Minutemen on the evening was the play of sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson. Anderson returned to the starting lineup after coming off the bench Saturday against N.C. State and responded with a career-high 15 points as well handing out seven assists, which also marked a career-high.



"Yes, he played well," Lappas said of his point guard. "I think we're going to watch that tape tomorrow and show him four or five instances where he could have done something, like everybody else."

The goal for the Minutemen will now be to put this loss behind them and shift their focus toward the Saturday night encounter at Boston College.

"I'm anxious to see how they react on Thursday [at practice]. I'm not even starting to see how they react on Saturday," Lappas said. "I'm anxious to see how I react on Thursday."

UMass Ballroom Dance Club Presents

The Snowflake Ball

Celebrate the end of the semester by dancing the night away!

In the Campus Center Auditorium

Wednesday, December 5, 2001
7:00-8:30 Dance Lessons
8:30-Midnight General Dancing

$5 for students
$7 for adults

Refreshments will be served!

No partner or experience necessary
All are welcome!!!

Any Questions? Contact Danielle at 546-19[illegible]
Dmdancers@aol.com or Rachel at rmandell@student.umass.edu
Visit our website at www.umass.edu/rso/ballroom

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9

AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.

TUESDAY – KARAOKE – HOSTED BY DJ STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY – MAGNITED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: ENHANCED W/ CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, AND JTB
THURSDAY – STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES
FRIDAY – GROWROOM RECORDS PRESENTS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs HUSH, SIMI AND RON BONS
SATURDAY – HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY – LIVE JAZZ

COME CHECK OUT OUR SUNDAY JAZZ BRUNCH, AND ENJOY OUR CREATIVE MENU ALONG WITH SOME ATLANTIS BLOODY MARYS AND MIMOSAS

It's Our First Anniversary CELEBRATION!

3500 FREE Monthly Minutes for LIFE
PLUS
Unlimited Nationwide Long Distance
when calling from your home airtime rate area.

That's 3200 Night & Weekend and 300 Anytime home airtime minutes!
All for only $35 monthly access when you sign up now for one year and remain on a SingleRate™ East plan.

FREE DIGITAL PHONE!

One Year Anniversary Special
December 5 - 9 only!

FREE Headset!
FREE Car Charger!
Available on select models with annual contract

HOLYOKE MALL (413) 533-2500
HADLEY 329 Russell Street (413) 587-3248

@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com

36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1-800-613-2355 ext 226 for franchise opportunities

verizon wireless Authorized Retailer

Offer valid with new activation on select plans for a limited time only. Subject to terms of Cellular Service Agreement and Calling Plan. $30 activation fee required. $175 early termination fee. Requires credit approval. Cannot be combined with other offers. Usage rounded to the next full minute. Unused allowances lost. All calls subject to taxes and other charges. Requires digital services and certain CMA equipment. Phone and accessory models may vary. While supplies last. Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri 9:00pm-5:59am; Sat 12am-5pm; 11:59pm-5pm. Some restrictions may apply. See stores for details.

Slick backed hair does nothing to help Riley

INSIDE THE NBA with Glen Straub

Over the summer, Dallas Mavericks veteran guard Tim Hardaway proclaimed that his former coach in Miami, Pat Riley, would never have a championship contender again because players do not want to listen to him anymore.

Hardaway, who played five glorious years for the Heat, was venting his anger to the media about the man who did not choose to resign him. It was hard to believe that his remarks would become a reality.

However, his words are holding true.

Going into last night's road game with the Los Angeles Clippers, the Heat was on an 11-game losing streak – the longest one in Riley's coaching career.

It is not the longest losing streak in Heat history. In its inaugural season in 1988, Miami lost its first 17 games, and a year later, it lost 13 in a row mid-season.

The Heat, however, for the first time in a very long time are living in the cellar. With a 2-13 record, they are tied with the lowly Chicago Bulls for the worst record in the Eastern Conference.

Riley has never missed the playoffs in his first 18 years of coaching in the NBA. In his nineteenth year, he may be playing golf or attempting to write his next book a little earlier than expected. In a career filled with winning, this is the lowest point for a man who was once considered the best motivating coach in the league.

With well over 1,000 victories in his career, Riley is one of the most successful coaches in the history of basketball. In L.A. when he was roaming the sidelines for Magic Johnson and the Lakers for nine years, he won four championships, including back-to-back championships in 1987-88. In fact, the term "three-peat" can be credited to Riley, as he told reporters after the Lakers won their second-consecutive title in 1988 that his team would win a third championship in a row.

With his glistening slick back hair and sharp Armani suits, Riley flourished in the glitz and glam of Tinseltown.

Riley was also successful in one of the hardest places to work – New York. His arrival to the sidelines of Madison Square Garden and knowledge of the game helped a Knicks team that had come so close to taking the extra step, get to the Finals in 1994. They eventually lost to the Houston Rockets in seven games.

In 1995, Riley made a decision that has put a major tarnish on his storied career.

He left the intense spotlight of New York and migrated to the Sunshine State where the sun shines brighter than the television cameras. He wanted more control in the Big Apple, but Knicks management was not willing to give it to him.

In Miami, he got it. He got a chance to build a franchise that had much potential.

His desire for power and money has led him to losing, though. The Heat have been one of the powerhouses in the East for some time now, but they have never been able to get to the promised land. With many big name transactions and extended winning streaks, the Heat were always one of the best teams in the regular season. Once playoff time came around, it was a different story.

Riley's motivational speeches did not seem to work in the playoffs, specifically when his team faced up with his former club – the Knicks.

Now he can't even rile up his guys in the regular season.

Riley has never been a great in-game coach. He does not use tactful strategies and he hardly makes grand decisions to switch things up during the contest. New Yorkers know this all too well, as he refused to take out John Starks in the fourth quarter of Game 7 of the 1994 Finals despite the fact that he was shooting 2-for-18.

We can give the benefit of the doubt to Riley, as All-Star center Alonzo Mourning has missed games due to injury. However, last year 'Zo missed the entire season with a kidney ailment and Miami still was able to finish above .500.

The Riley flare has discased.

He cannot get his players to commit to the system. As of now, though, he cannot find a system, as he has used twelve different starting lineups in fifteen games this season.

Since Riley cannot motivate his players anymore and he has never helped his team win while they were on the court, it is time for him leave the game. He has become worthless as a NBA coach and his team is making everyone see this fact.

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist.

■ World Cup

continued from page 12

Peninsula on Sunday and again at the Gold Cup in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. early in the new year.

But it will all come down to the final group D encounter for the U.S. on June 14 in Daejeon against Poland. A win here, coupled with at least a tie in the match with South Korea, should be enough to see the U.S. through to the next round, where it would then meet either Germany, Ireland, Cameroon or Saudi Arabia.

While the U.S. seemed to receive a favorable draw, our allies from across the Atlantic, England, was not so lucky. The Three Lions were placed into what is widely accepted as "The Group of Death." In order to reach the final 16, David Beckham and the rest of the English side will need to grab at least the runner-up spot of its group that is also comprised of tournament favorites Argentina, as well as Sweden, who finished third at USA '94 and Nigeria, who reached the second round in each of the last two World Cup finals.

The tournament kicks off on May 31 from Seoul, South Korea, when reigning champions France take on African first-timer Senegal. Exactly one month later, the 17th World Cup will be concluded with the final from the International Stadium in Yokohama, Japan.

Justin Pearson is a Collegian Columnist.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Faithful

The Mullins Center crowd did not have much to cheer about for the first time all year, as the Crusaders handed UMass its first loss.

U. Utah may close for Paralympic ceremony

By Erika Johnson
Daily Utah Chronicle (U. Utah)

(U-WIRE) SALT LAKE CITY – After the Olympics end and classes resume in March, Olympic involvement for the University of Utah will be far from over.

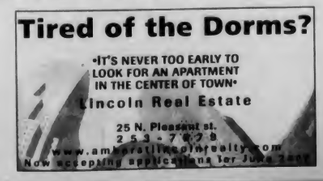
Salt Lake City is still responsible to host the Paralympic Games, a series of competitive events among disabled athletes from around the world. Heritage Commons will still house athletes, and Rice-Eccles Stadium will host the Opening and Closing ceremonies.

On March 7, a Thursday currently scheduled as a regular instruction day, the Paralympic Opening Ceremony will potentially cause major traffic and parking problems.

In order to address these problems, the administration is considering canceling classes March 7. U officials are looking for input to make an informed decision, which they hope to make within five days.

On Thursday, the Undergraduate Council discussed this matter. Classes that only meet once a week, lab classes, student alienation and the U's obligation to the Paralympic Games all surfaced as concerns during this discussion.

The Olympic coordinators have long anticipated March 7 as a difficult day for campus traffic, but recently, they have found out more about the traffic demands of the Paralympic Opening Ceremony.



"We saw all the pieces coming together," said Wayne McCormack, the Olympic Coordinator at the U. "The last piece that came in was the route for busing the village residents down to the stadium."

The bus route for the Paralympians will require parts of Fifth South to close at 5 p.m., which will cause major traffic problems during the afternoon for employees and students trying to leave the U. The Paralympic Opening Ceremony will also require equipment shipped to the stadium that day, further adding to the traffic problems.

One of the most discussed solutions was to hold morning and early afternoon classes but to cancel late afternoon and evening classes. The council also thought about sending the staff home at noon. Shutting down the campus for that entire day also surfaced as an option, although McCormack does not think that will be necessary. "I don't see much reason for that," he said. "Not on the basis of what we know now."

John Francis, associate vice president for academic affairs, identified two concerns U officials will try to address as they make a decision. Francis wants to ensure that students can take classes with a reasonable hope of being able to park and get to them, but he also acknowledges the U's obligation to the Paralympic Games.

Tired of the Dorms?

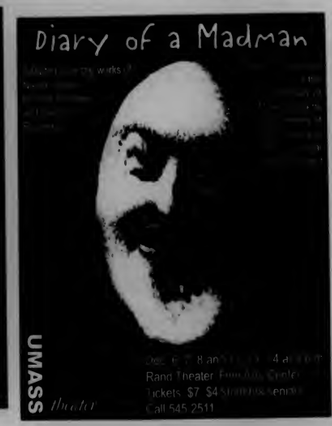
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT IN THE CENTER OF TOWN•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2002

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

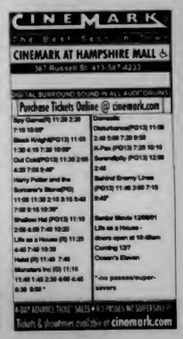
Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends



Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11
Equal Opportunity Employer



graphics intimidate YOU!

Collegian Graphics is hiring for next semester! Get a grip and come on down to the Collegian Office in the Campus Center Basement and fill out an application TODAY!

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Free Tickets to Picasso Commuter Area Government is giving away 100 free tickets to the Umass Theater Guild show Picasso at the Lapin Asile Dec. 6-8 at the Student Union Ballroom. Just mention this ad when you set your ticket at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

FROZEN PIPE ALERT! Remember to keep your thermostat turned up to at least 55 degrees while you are away on winter break. Neglecting to do this may cause pipes to freeze or water damage for which you, as a tenant, will be responsible. For more information about landlord and tenants rights and responsibilities come to Commuter Services 428 Student Union or call 545-0865, or check out our website at www.cshrc.org

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline great location. Available Jan 1. call Adrena 413-397-0978

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K Great Condition $6500 413-256-1989

1991 Blue Ford Probe 130K miles good condition, fully loaded $2,700 546-1505

'88 Ford CrownVic Wagon 130K mi, good condition except transmission, runs well $2000 w/ new transmission, $1500 w/out. 413-665-6832

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Toyota Tercel great dependable transportation, 4 speed low miles 1,800 or B.O. Call Josy 253-5149

1987 Subaru runs good 142K $250 or B.O call 549-7816

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Software Sales/Telemarketing for economic forecasting and policy analysis firm. Part-time. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fred@remi.com

Japanese Speaking candidates for software firm. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fred@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups

Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

Therapist: FT/PT to work with six year old special needs child. Training provided by educational consultants. Warm and fun personality is a MUST. Fax letter of intent to 413-549-6282

FOR SALE

Refrigerator for Sale 4.0 cubic foot Haier Refrigerator with freezer. Little more than a year old and in near perfect condition. Has a can dispenser in the door and it is lockable. Asking price: $100, but price is negotiable. Call Mike at 546-6791

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Bedroom with own bathroom available call 253-8915 for details

1 Room in 2 Bedroom apt. located in boulders on bus route call mike 253-0911

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-3492 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

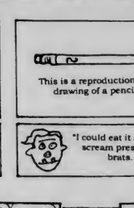
ROOM WANTED

Looking for one bedroom/apartment for winter break, one bed 546-1505

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906



TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. 5 Days in Bahamas $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

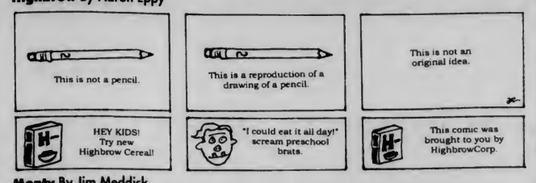
Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

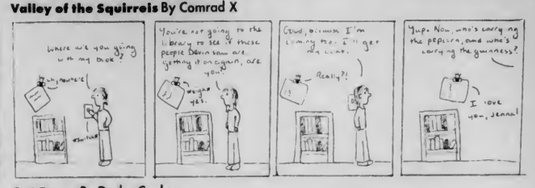
WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



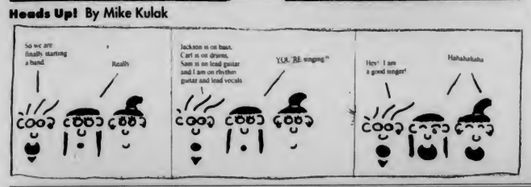
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Got Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Quote of the Day

"Did you ever find Bugs Bunny attractive when he put on a dress and acted like a girl bunny?"

–Garth
Wayne's World

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 46	HIGH: 61 LOW: 35	HIGH: 51 LOW: 28

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The perfect girlfriend would say, "you're so sexy when you're hungover."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Got a case of end of semester swipes? Call your friends and buy 20 dollars worth of fresh Bluewall cookies!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Put on a happy face...or at least take a shower, you look disgusting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Remember kaleidoscopes can be deceiving.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Do you like stick figures? I thought so. You pervert.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You slacker, what are you doing going to class, go get your sleep on!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Don't eat at the DC next week., there are professors about.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The best place to find your lost sneaker in under your bed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Go to KFC and order your chicken extra crispy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You will talk to someone today. You will also be bored in class. You will also get pissed off at the horoscopes and burn your copy of the comics page.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21) – Sure you think your friends are ganging up on you. That's because they don't like you and they're secretly trying to steal your fish.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21) — Write a letter. Compose a song. Avoid Herter at all costs, damn trick stairways.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Though Behind Enemy Lines failed to wrestle away the top spot at the box office last week, George Clooney and his gang in Ocean s 11 had little trouble taking care of that Harry Potter thing for ya.

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Shrimp Lo Mein

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Beans & Rice (vegan)

Pasta Bar
Ravioli Alfredo

Grill Station
Hot Pastrami on Rye

International
Vegetable Stir Fry

DINNER

Mandarin Chicken

Roast Beef

Garden Burger
(vegan / W Basics)

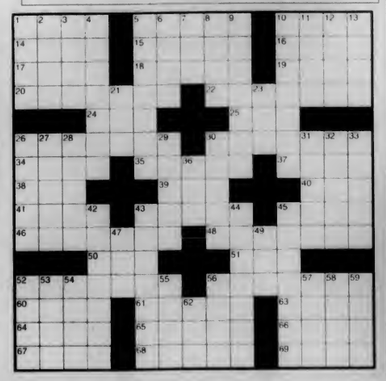
Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

Pasta Bar
Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Grill Station
Hot Pastrami on Rye

International
Stuffed Lamb
Pork Souviaki
Saffron Rice

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 "— here long?"
5 Kind of park
10 Pouches
14 Harvard rival
15 Party hearty
16 Singer Guthrie
17 Explorer — the Red
18 Blot out
19 Genuine
20 Splash
22 Guacamole base
24 Craft or skill
25 Lord Byron's daughter
26 Keep at it
30 Hid away
34 Impresses greatly
35 Tomato product
37 Compelled
38 Mimeo of films
39 Presidential nickname
40 Ms. Lupino
41 Musical ensemble
43 Vine-covered
45 Related
46 Conceal
48 Bowling groups
50 GP's group
51 Evergreen
52 Fearsome vampire
56 TV adjuncts
60 Slope
61 Bombay locale
63 River to the Caspian
64 Mayberry kid
65 Full-grown
66 Cathedral part
67 Hoses down
68 Some shoe sizes
69 Tinted

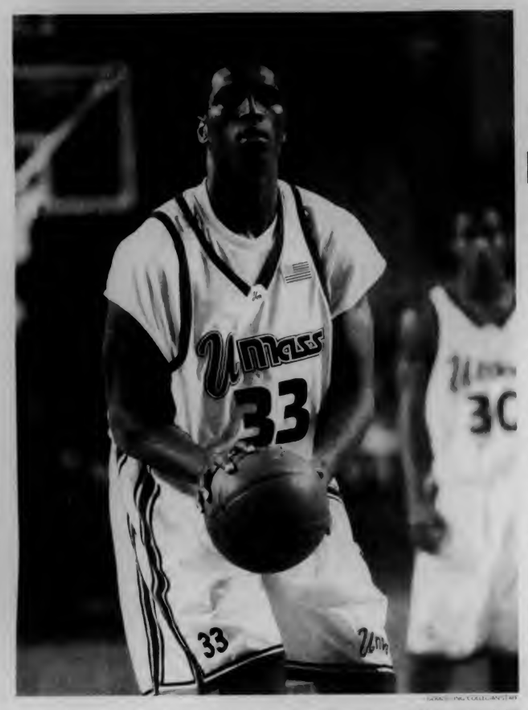
DOWN
1 Brief farewells
2 Tombstone deputy
3 Director Kazan
4 Fruit juices
5 Bird's penthouse
6 Hamburg mister
7 Zsa Zsa's sister
8 Arizona city
9 Hoist
10 Mark Twain's forte
11 Type of code
12 Alfred
13 Unaccompanied
21 Taste
23 Seraglio room
26 Stage groups
27 Cognizant
28 Flea-market find

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	L	U	R		L	I	F	T		C	A	M E
L	I	K	E		A	D	L	A	I	R	U	I N
O	M	E	N		P	L	A	I	N	A	N	T I
B	A	S	E		P	E	N		D	E	N	T E D
			G	N	U	S		T	O	N	I
O	R	D	E	A	L		W	H	O	D	U	N I T
D	A	I	S	Y		H	A	I	R		M	I R E
E	T	A		R	A	I	N	S		C	A	R
T	I	N	A	L	A	N	T	S		P	O	E T S
S	O	A	P	S	U	D	S		D	E	C	R E E
		P	A	C	S		K	I	T	E
P	O	T	A	T	O	E	S		L	A	T	E
A	B	E	L		U	L	T	R	A		O	M I T
O	I	L	L		S	A	N	E	R		T	A R T
E	E	L	S		M	A	A	M		S	H	E A

10-20-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff



Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Pete Preston
Production Staff	Mike Kulak, Andrea Mangini

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen surprised by Holy Crusade

Kitwana Rhymer eyes the hoop while attempting a free throw. The senior center totaled six blocks in his team's 67-56 loss to Holy Cross.

UMass drops first game of year

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Through its first four games of the 2001-2002 season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team had constantly found a way to make big baskets late in ball games in order to pull out the victory. However, its luck ran out last night, as the Minutemen lost for the first time in this young season, falling 67-56 to Holy Cross at the William D. Mullins Center.

Holy Cross	67
UMass	56

The Crusaders (3-3) used an 18-6 run over an 11-minute stretch in the second half to overcome a two-point deficit and turn it into a 10-point lead with under four minutes to go. During that stretch, UMass (4-1) made just two field goals and committed seven fouls while Holy Cross began to get hot from the floor. The Crusaders made 62 percent of their field goals in the second half, including three-of-four from behind the arc. This was the first time in the Lappas Era that UMass had allowed an opponent to shoot better than 36.2 percent.

"We let them shoot that," UMass Head Coach Steve Lappas said of Holy Cross' 72.7 three-point percentage for the game. "That's great shooting, that's poor defense – it's both."

The turning point of the game came during that stretch when Shannon Crooks and Raheim Lamb were called for questionable offensive fouls on consecutive trips down the floor with the Crusaders clinging to a narrow 51-50 lead. Lamb had buckets that would have given UMass the lead waved off on each trip as a result of the charges and Holy Cross made UMass pay, scoring the game's next nine points to put it out of reach at 60-50 with 3:51 to play.

Despite trailing 36-32 at halftime, the Crusaders felt good about the fact that they were hanging around with the Minutemen. Freshman Michael Smiley came off the bench to spark the Crusaders by

Turn to CRUSADE, page 8

No need for doubts after one loss

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

ERIC SODERSTROM

Get ready for it, please—because it won't be too amusing.

Today, tomorrow and for the rest of the week, UMass hoop critics from around New England will rise up once more and remind us all why the Massachusetts men's basketball team isn't as good as everyone thought it was.

And I sincerely wish them all the luck in the world with the construction of that argument.

Really, what is there to say?

They lost to Holy Cross," will be the most popular assertion. But what follows? Probably something like, "uh, they lost to the Crusaders."

It's much harder this year to construct the "UMass isn't going anywhere" argument. Last year, when the Minutemen dropped a 78-65 decision to Holy Cross at the Centrum Centre in Worcester to drop to 1-2 on the season, the Maroon and White faithful really couldn't argue against anything the doubters had to say.

But this time around, after UMass' 76-65 loss to the Crusaders last night at the Mullins Center, the Minutemen are still 4-1. They have beaten Oregon. They have beaten N.C. State (on Tobacco Road). And most importantly, UMass is not a team that's used to losing. They just got a bit too used to winning, and had trouble focusing in on a 2-3 squad from the Patriot League that had lost its three previous games to Manhattan, Dartmouth and Boston University.

"Overconfidence, without a doubt, in my opinion," said Head Coach Steve Lappas immediately after the game. "Every time you play, you have to respect the scoreboard. And we didn't respect the scoreboard because we thought we should be beating them by 10."

Teams can use "overconfidence" as an excuse. They can say they just didn't get up enough for the game, and before they knew it, they were down 10 points with five minutes left in the contest. It's a decent justification for a blunder.

But Lappas won't take it as one, even though he knew it was bound to happen. With his hiring, so began the rebuilding years of UMass basketball – years that, with any program, aren't immune to unexpected dips.

"I talked about it from the beginning of the year, that there was going to be a time – I didn't know when, where, what – that there was going to be a hard lesson to be learned," said Lappas, who in his nine seasons at Villanova had only two losing campaigns. "And unfortunately, when you're building something, you learn more from bad nights sometimes than you learn from good nights."

And Tuesday night was one of those bad nights. The key for the Minutemen is to bounce back in the next two games versus No. 15 Boston College Saturday and UConn on Tuesday.

Losing to Holy Cross isn't the end of the world. Actually, if you allow yourself to believe that some losses are good ones, then this was a good one. Let's just say UMass blew out the Crusaders last night. When would the Minutemen realize they weren't going to go undefeated? Probably Saturday at B.C.

Instead, Lappas' preparation exercises for the clash at Conte Forum will be some of the most memorable hours ever for his 14-man roster. He wasn't too happy last night.

"There's going to be a lot to be learned from this game," Lappas said. "I knew it was coming. It was inevitable, because we didn't handle our success and where we were well. We started to think of something we weren't, and we're not. And that's my fault probably more than anybody's."

In any case, nothing is over yet. It could be in a few weeks, but UMass' performances in its first four games kind of negate that prophecy.

Remember, no excuses. Just lessons. Perfection does not exist in sport, especially in college basketball.

USA vs. the world; South Korea looms

While [illegible] partying on Friday night, the United States [illegible] was busy learning its fate in the Far East. At [illegible] Eastern Standard Time, FIFA, world soccer's governing body, held the World Cup Finals Draw in the [illegible] Korean city of Busan. All 32 qualifiers were [illegible] into four groups of four, with one of the eight [illegible] from each pot placed in each group.

The U.S. was drawn into Group D alongside tournament co-host South Korea [illegible] ranked team in the group because of its [illegible] as well as European power-[illegible] Portugal, which is currently ranked fourth in the [illegible] world, and Poland. The Americans will play six [illegible] of their first round games in South Korea, and the odds [illegible] that the squad will reach Japan [illegible] if it reaches the final for the first time in U.S. history.

JUSTIN PEARSON

The United States finished third during the final phase of CONCACAF qualification thanks in large to a 2-1 victory over Jamaica back on Oct. 7 at Foxboro Stadium, and as a result, earned its fourth consecutive berth to the world's premier sporting event.

However, head coach Bruce Arena and whichever 22 he chooses to take with him to Japan/South Korea will not be satisfied by merely making an appearance in next year's championships. The entire U.S. squad will be looking to make up for the embarrassment that was the 1998 World Cup in France, at which the Red, White and Blue finished 32nd out of 32 qualifiers, losing all three games including a humiliating 2-1 defeat at the hands of lowly Iran.

The best way for the U.S. to erase the debacle in France will be for it to reach the second round, something it last did during the 1994 World Cup here in the USA. In order for that to happen, captain Claudio Reyna and the rest of the American squad will need to take one of the group's top two spots, a very realistic possibility given their first round opponents.

Most pundits agree that Portugal, who the U.S. meets in each team's opener on June 5th in Suwon, should easily run away with the group behind world class talent like Rui Costa and Nuno Gomes, increasing the importance of the final two group matches.

Five days later the Americans will be back in action against the South Koreans in Daegu. There should be no surprises from either team, as they will meet twice in the next two months – first a friendly match on the Korean

Turn to WORLD CUP, page 9

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Puck pyramid
The Massachusetts hockey team has gotten off to a solid start (6-8), despite two recent setbacks against Maine and Boston College.

See Lord of the Rings on page five. Geeks unite!

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 62 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, December 6, 2001

UMass hockey will play B.U. twice this weekend. Read the preview in Sports.

SPORTS p. 14

TIBORA GIRCYC-BLUM

Arts and Crafts
The crafts fair in the Campus Center foyer will provide all of your holiday gifts, from jewelry to pottery.

Pro-Israel vigil to be held tonight

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staffa

Five-College Hillel will be holding a vigil tonight in memory of recent victims of terrorism, and in support of the state of Israel.

The vigil will be held on the lawn of University of Massachusetts Hillel House, located at 388 North Pleasant Street in Amherst. It will begin at 7:00 p.m.

"The speakers [at the vigil] will be of different religions, races, and nationalities," Dan Yagudin, a student coordinator of UMass For Israel and an organizer of the event, said. "What we're trying to do is show the broad backgrounds of Israel supporters."

The state of Israel has seen its share of violence in the past week. Yesterday, a Palestinian suicide bomber blew himself up outside a luxury hotel in downtown Jerusalem, wounding five. Last week, 26 Israelis

Turn to VIGIL page 3

"Hot topics" in feminism debated

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

TIBORA GIRCYC-BLUM

There was a panel discussions on hot topics in women's studies in the Campus Center yesterday.

A panel discussion on "hot topics" in the field of Women's Studies was held in the Campus Center yesterday. The discussion, sponsored by the Women's Studies Department, was the first in a series of planned discussions on current debates in the field.

Panel speakers were German Professor Sara Lennox, English Professors Deborah Carlin, Margo Culley, and Radha Radhakrishnan, and Rhonda Cobham-Sander, a professor of English and Black Studies at Amherst College. The discussion was moderated by Lee Edwards, Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts.

The session commenced with each speaker being given five minutes

Turn to WOMEN, page 3

Cornucopia of crafts at fair

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Union Crafts Fair is under way at the Campus Center Concourse. The Fair is being held from Dec. 5 until Dec. 7, running from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

"The three allotted days that the Craft Fair has within the Campus Center provides convenience and a better chance for people to look around for gift ideas." Marleen Kilcoyne said, a Crafts Fair coordinator and Crafts Center employee.

Now in its 27th year, the annual Fundraiser has been an integral part of the Student Union Craft Center since it was first started in 1971. Since then, it has provided professional artists and student crafters an opportunity to exhibit handcraft works such as pottery, jewelry, stained glass ornaments, clothing, candles, and other pieces. The earned income garnered from the Fair, usually about $2,000 per year, funds workshops at the Crafts Center and buys new material for the crafters to work with, according to Paula Hodecker, the director of the Craft Center.

There will be 20 tables, each with a different kind of craftwork on display this year. Each of the artisans' tables will be set up on either side of the concourse as you enter the campus center. The types of artwork range from ceramics, aromatherapy products, clothing, photography, clothing, cards, holiday decorations.

Artisans like Edward Huitt and wife, Ursula Glasen, have ceramics, drums, and flutes displayed at their table. They, like most of the other crafters, arrived a little before nine to set up. Some arrived as early as eight to set up.

"A lot of people are looking around today, and seeing who has what here," Huitt said. "I had a number of people come up to me and ask if we're going to be here tomorrow, which we will. We will be here tomorrow and Friday."

Other crafters such as Carol Joyce, owner of White Buffalo Herbs located in Warwick, Mass, offers not just crafts but stress relievers such as oils and aromatherapy products.

"We offer aromatherapy spray for sever stress, such as Tranquil-EZ, which you can spray your skin lightly and it goes into your blood stream in about ten seconds," Joyce said.

"The people that run the Crafts Fair have been very helpful and very nice. They are very thorough." Joyce

Turn to CRAFTS, page 3

Meeting held to discuss sustainability

Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

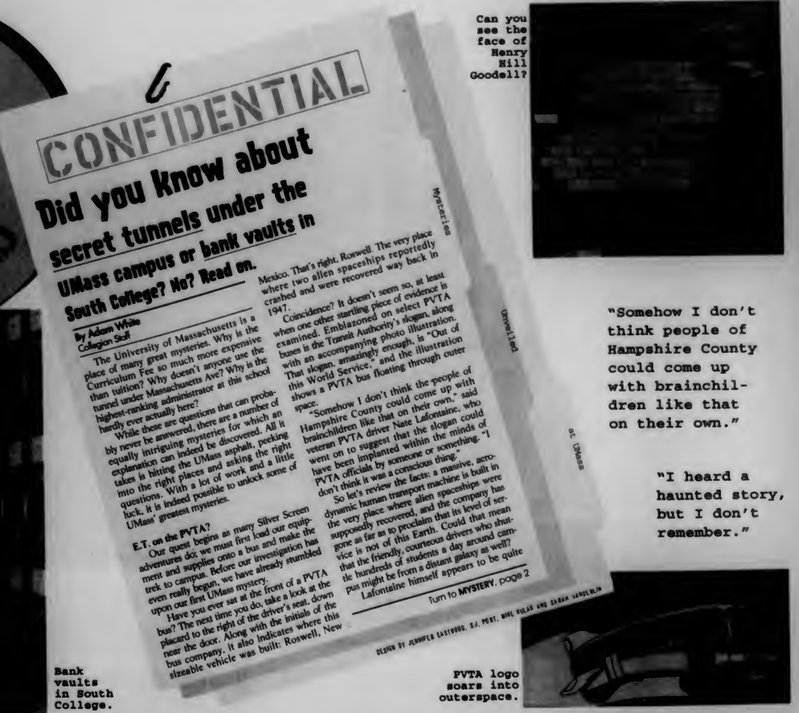
Several members of University of Massachusetts faculty and Students for Sustainability, a 12 to 15-student arm of MASSPIRG, met Tuesday night to discuss ways in which UMass can become a more sustainable campus.

Each member of the meeting took different approaches to trying to achieve similar goals. Much of the meetings focus involved increasing organization between the different efforts on campus.

"We need a way to coordinate," Ernest May, the Secretary of the Faculty Senate, said. "With so many things that can happen, it's hard to know what the right hands to doing from the left."

According to Senior Michael Keeney, co-correspondent, "UMass students for sustainability is hoping to work with all sectors of the community in order to propel the University towards becoming a more sustainable institution."

Everyone at the meeting agreed that student support was important. "Students are the KEY," Walter Bickford said. Bickford was appointed by the state to work for sustainability on the four non-medical UMass campuses. "The students must be deeply involved if this is going to work."



Several actions by UMass over the past decade have already moved it in the direction of sustainability. Mark Fornier, director of ground for the physical plant, listed several actions already taken.

"We started recycling ten years ago," he said. "We use integrated pest management which means we look at all angles of bug to avoid reverting to hazardous spray. we now have 30 electric vehicles. we were the leaders in old electronics recycling which recent legislation has now made the law. we recently were very extensive in our use of compost but recent permit problems have limited us.

Turn to SUSTAINABLE page 3

Can you see the face of Henry Hill Goodell?

"Somehow I don't think people of Hampshire County could come up with brainchildren like that on their own."

"I heard a haunted story, but I don't remember."

PVTA logo soars into outerspace.

Bank vaults in South College.

mystery

continued from page 1

human, but the senior music major has serious questions about the galactic origins of some of his coworkers.

"Sometimes I wonder," said Lafontaine. "If they fet you into our Christmas party, you would understand."

And the possibility of extraterrestrial life extends beyond just the drivers: Lafontaine speculates that many of the more quirky passengers he picks up on a daily basis could quite possibly be from other planets.

"Especially the guy who licks the floor," Lafontaine said.

Puzzle in the Sky

Once we've arrived at UMass, the logical first step is to seek the highest ground on campus and get a good look around. That place would undoubtedly be the top floor of the W.E.B. Dubois library, UMass' tallest building (standing 28 stories tall), which also happens to sit at the highest elevation of the central part of campus.

But any attempt to reach this lofty pinnacle will ultimately fail: the elevators in the library only extend as far as the library's map section on the 26th floor. But a view from out-side clearly shows at least one more floor - constantly shrouded in darkness in an otherwise brightly lit brick skyscraper.

"I've always wondered why that floor is never lit up," said Brian Punch a sophomore Theatre major, as he walked by the library. "Masks that's where they keep the bodies."

Other theories abound, depending on whom you ask. A female student who refused to go on record speculated that there are top secret government documents stored on the 27th floor; an information desk worker who also requested anonymity joked that it's a penthouse suite with a 24-hour party going on behind blacked-out windows. Without the proper key to override the elevator's access system, a mere explorer can't set foot in the mysterious crows-nest and divulge the real reason for its secrecy.

One can, however, just ask the building's maintenance manager.

"There are just mechanical rooms with things like the air conditioning unit and the elevator controls," said Karen Roy, who admits that she never goes up to the 27th floor herself. "Physical Plant workers are the only ones who ever really go up there."

The Ghosts that Haunt Us

Just next door to the library sits one of the single most mysterious buildings on campus, a place where seemingly endless secrets are held fast in dark basement tunnels and behind perpetually locked doors. You could spend all day asking passers by, and as the sun set you would be no closer to unlocking the puzzle.

Quite simply, no one knows what the University Chapel is really used for.

"I heard a haunted story, but I don't remember," said Shirley MacDonald, a UMass senior.

As with most other secretive structures on campus, the Chapel is at the center of a number of theories. One tells of a ghost that haunts the 117 year-old building, stumbling loudly through its basement and frightening off workers performing renovation on the Chapel's tower. Another centers on a hidden chamber within the bowels of the building that was once used to house dead bodies awaiting funerals.

But one thing is for certain: no one is going to simply enter the Chapel and find out for his or her self. All doors into the aging structure are constantly locked, and a view through its windows reveals nothing but empty rooms.

"The Chapel certainly has a reputation, but those of us who have been inside know just where the stories come from," said Richard Nathhorst, Capital Project Manager for the University's Facilities Planning Division. Nathhorst is widely regarded as UMass' expert on the Chapel, and he has a perfectly good explanation for the far-fetched theories that swirl around it.

"What you have are two rooms, one at the southwestern corner of the building and one at the southeastern corner, which are commonly referred to as 'crypts,'" said Nathhorst. "The reason is because of the way they're constructed, one under the main stairwell and one directly under the 117-foot tower. The walls underneath have to be able to support the weight from above, so you're talking about two-foot-thick granite walls. The doors that attach to these walls have to be extremely thick and heavy wood, clad in copper to render them fireproof. These four-foot-high, vaulted doors are what give these rooms the name crypts."

One of these crypts, the one beneath the tower, is where University administrators placed their latest time capsule last year.

In regards to the dead bodies and ghosts, Nathhorst says that there is a simple explanation for that as well. Before 1956 when the Chapel was still being used as a library, its first floor reading room was indeed used as a place where the bodies of faculty members were "laid in state" prior to their respective funeral services. One such faculty member whose corpse lay within the Chapel was Henry Hill Goodell, the University's first librarian.

Past reports of footsteps heard within the Chapel's basement were often attributed to Goodell's ghost, though Nathhorst has a rather scientific explanation for this as well.

"When the steam comes on, the old pipes in the building start creaking and clicking, making a lot of noise that could sound like footsteps to someone who is working in relative silence there," Nathhorst said. "That's where the urban legend about the haunting comes from."

A UMass alum himself (class of '79), Nathhorst believes that even an actual haunting by the departed librarian would be little reason for current UMass dwellers to fear.

"If there is a ghost and it is in fact Henry, there's no reason to be afraid," Nathhorst said. "He loved the University, so he'd really be a benign spirit just watching over it."

Under Lock and Key

Now that we've secured so much valuable information that would undoubtedly unmask major conspiracies at the University, we need a place to hide it. One does not simply walk around the UMass campus with the keys to its biggest mysteries.

So how about stashing our findings in a massive, locking vault? Luckily for us, there exist not one or two but three such vaults within the aging building known as South College.

Why would SC - a building best known for housing the Communications department's television studios and film screening rooms - require three operational vaults? Do the students there produce such high quality films that they must be kept under the tightest security possible?

The answer lies in SC's past, which is somewhat of a mystery in itself. One of the University's five original buildings, SC served as a dormitory, a fraternity house and the University's main administrative headquarters prior to its current manifestation as a collection of classrooms, offices and studios. A fire back in 1885 put an end to its days of housing students, but clues to its past identities still exist throughout the oddly configured building.

In one hallway along SC's southern side stands the smallest of the three vaults, emblazoned with "Massachusetts State College" in gold letters across its top. Communications grad student and TA Barbara Woloch has a cubicle directly across the hall from the vault, and though she has little clue as to the vault's origins Woloch is an authority on its current use.

"It's used to store film equipment for Comm classes," Woloch said. "Equipment is expensive."

One floor below, twin interconnected vaults form an L-shaped catacomb that snakes off one corner of the Graduate Linguistics Association's office. This sizeable fortress is currently used to house foreign language dissertations, arranged neatly in pull-out folders behind the hefty tumbler-filled doors.

Bank vaults full of school work? Weird. The vaults themselves existing in an academic building? Downright mysterious.

"Not when you look at the building's history," said Harlan Sturm, Associate Dean of the Humanities and Fine Arts department. "Back when this was the University's main administrative building, this is where the Bursar's office was. Those monster safes were used to keep money in."

That is not to say that the vaults' current contents aren't just as worthy of virtually impenetrable security. Sturm points out that the academic content of the basement vaults in particular has real value which may necessitate such measures.

"Those linguistics dissertations are sold all over the world," Sturm said.

Tunnel Rat

Now that we've uncovered some of UMass' biggest mysteries, it's time to make our escape. By now the powers that be will no doubt be onto our search, and there is little chance of us making it safely off campus with the answers we have uncovered.

We certainly can't make our escape in broad daylight. We'll have to use the University's secret underground tunnel system.

What? You haven't heard of it? Legend says that back when the University's steam system was first installed, a complex network of underground tunnels was constructed that connected every major academic building on campus and made travel above ground unnecessary. These underground halls were supposedly built so that students could get to class in even the most inclement weather.

A search for these catacombs comes up rather short, however; only a single tunnel, from Bartlett Hall to Herter Hall, can be found beneath the walkways of UMass. Other tunnels may exist, but no student is going to get access to them.

"That is the only 'official' tunnel I know of between two academic buildings," said Bruce Parkin, Assistant Director for Customer Service and Work Management at the University's Physical Plant. "There is in fact another network of tunnels, but they're not accessible to students."

These secret passages are in fact nothing more than crawlspaces, where steam lines snake from building to building. Even the lucky (?) few who gain access to these tunnels must use a careful process in order to prevent serious injury.

"You can get into them, but they're upwards of 160 degrees inside," said Patrick Daly, Associate Director of Utilities for the Physical Plant. "You have to vent them first, and anyone going inside must use special confined spaces equipment and maintain constant contact with our service desk."

"Some buildings – like the GRC, Polymers and Goessmann – are connected at the basement level, but they're not really tunnels," said John Robinson, Assistant Director of Design and Construction for the facilities Plant. "When I was at Columbia, there was actually a series of utility tunnels that connected most of the buildings. If you knew what doors to open, you could go anywhere."

No such luck here. So instead of making a great underground escape, the modern explorer is forced to make a quick getaway via the old reliable (and possibly alien) PVTA. After a day of uncovering some of UMass' deepest and darkest secrets, there is only one question remaining for the bus ride home.

Why is that guy licking the floor of the bus anyway?

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM

The top two floors of the library remain in darkness. Why?

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues produced by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life by men in the College Class of 1905. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian & Index. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

sustainable

continued from page 1

over the past few years we have bought recycled benches and picnic tables and UMass has finally started to use partially recycled paper for its letterhead."

Much of the focus surrounding the move towards sustainability comes from the 1990 Talloires Declaration. The Talloires Declaration was the first time that a group of academic leaders came together and recorded the actions that institutions of higher education must take in providing for a sustainable future. They convened in Talloires, France under the leadership of Tufts University President Jean Mayer.

The Declaration has already been signed by more than 275 colleges and universities worldwide, including Tufts University, l'Academie de Paris, Brown University and University of New Hampshire.

Bickford spoke extensively of the Declaration. "Like most of you," he said, "I feel I have always had a social conscious and I feel we are on an unsustainable path...this is a great opportunity to bring about social change...This trend is already starting to sweep the country, this is a great opportunity for UMass to get on board."

According to the Talloires Declaration, "Universities educate most of the people who develop and manage society's institutions. For this reason, universities bear profound responsibilities to increase the awareness, knowledge, technologies, and tools to create an environmentally sustainable future."

In regards to actual change occurring at UMass, May spoke of the most practical ways to achieve the goals associated with sustainability. He said that a "top down" strict proposal would be less likely to make it through the Faculty Senate when it votes on Dec. 13.

"It would be a tactical error to go at the Faculty Senate with specific plans," he said. "It has already passed the Rules Committee...the exact charge is not important, what it does is."

"I can't imagine this won't work unless there's no enthusiasm," May said. "Student support will greatly add to the energy."

If students are interested in participating they can either contact the MassPIRG office at 545-0199 or go to the weekly meetings on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Free Your Mind

Students for a Free Tibet are presenting a live performance on Monday Dec.10 at 7pm.

vigil

continued from page 1

were killed and dozens wounded after a round of shooting and suicide bomb attacks. And on Oct. 17, Israeli Minister of Tourism Rechavam Zeevi was assassinated. Israel has since stepped up attacks on the government headed by Yasser Arafat.

"It's important to stand against terrorism whenever it occurs," Yagudin said. "And we feel that this gives students a chance to stand alongside one of the United States' most important allies in the Middle East during this difficult time."

"In such a small community, when something of this magnitude happens, you're bound to be affected personally," he added. "26 deaths in Israel is the equivalent of a thousand in the U.S."

One of the speakers, Yagudin said, personally knew one of the victims.

"There will probably be more people in the crowd who either knew the victims, or someone who knew the victims," he stated.

The University of Massachusetts is not the first university to hold a vigil in honor of victims of the recent terrorism. Yesterday a vigil was held at Princeton University, in which members of the Princeton community memorialized the victims of the violence in Israel.

"We really want to take a stand and raise awareness that not only does terrorism affect Americans, but it's also a problem the Israelis have been dealing with for decades," Eric Wang of the Princeton Committee Against Terrorism told The Daily Princetonian. "We've been thinking a lot about what's been happening at home, but we want people to think beyond just the United States."

women

continued from page 1

to discuss hot topics in their specific fields. Among the topics mentioned were cultural studies, hybridization, and the concept of "women's studies" as opposed to "feminist studies."

Carlin spoke about her research in the field of queer theory. She mentioned a work by queer theorist Suzanna Danuta Walters, titled, "From Here to Queer: Radical Feminism, Postmodernism, and the Lesbian Menace [Or, Why Can't a Woman Be More Like a Fag?"] In the piece, Walters describes her concerns about the future of queer theory.

"I was happy to see that many of the concerns she raises have not come to fruition in the way she worried they would," Carlin said.

She stated that while Walters expressed doubts that the queer canon would include writers of color, Carlin's own research found that this was not the case.

"Queer people of color have complicated our notions of inclusion and identity," Carlin said, describing the qualities of their contributions to the field.

Culley spoke about her research in the area of women's journals and autobiographies.

"Twenty years ago I was minding my own business, working on women's diaries. Now...there's a tidal wave of interest in women's personal narratives. [My research] became a hot topic.

"We thought that what we were doing was introducing experiences," Culley continued, describing the challenges inherent in teaching personal narratives in the classroom. "We now know that there's no such thing as an unmediated experience."

She added that the most controversial issue discussed in her classes is race.

"The white students speak out of ignorance, and insensitivity," she said. "And black students are not being heard."

When the panelists were done with their five-minute speeches, the floor was opened to questions.

One student asked the panel whether they thought it was appropriate to combine feminist theory and queer theory when teaching courses.

"I think it depends on how you do it," said Carlin. "I guess I don't see anything inherently wrong, provided that you chose people who might be in dialogue with each other, and pick essays that people can read and understand."

crafts

continued from page 1

added. "It's very well organized and the people are very nice. It's an opportunity for people who create their own products to come and showcase to the students and the people who work here. And the nice thing is most of us have really low prices so that students can afford them."

Massage oils and teas are also offered at Joyce's table.

Other tables display particular University of Massachusetts achievements.

Astronomy director Professor Judy Young feels that the Crafts Fair is an opportunity to showcase scientific achievements such as the Sunwheel. Young is the director of the UMass Sunwheel Project.

"What we've been raising money for now is to put some stone paths that go from the road out to go to the Sunwheel, so that students won't walk into the muddy paths leading up to the Sunwheel," Young said.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

'Tis the Season

This small car was weighted down by it's huge pine friend.

MassPIRG will be wrapping presents for the Salvation Army's annual Christmas party for underprivileged children in the community. Anyone interested in helping can go to room 803 of the Campus Center on Today, from 1:00 until 3:00. Bring scissors. For additional information, call the MassPIRG office at 545-0199.

-Marcella Gajek

Bring your professor or TA to dinner at the Dining Commons!

Now that the fall semester is almost over, you may want to show your appreciation to your professors or TAs by taking them to the Dining Commons for a meal. The DC will be the best place since we will pickup the tab.

Here's how it works:
During the week of December 10-14, 2001, any student on the meal plan can bring one professor or TA per day to any DC for any meal on us. All you need to do is to have the professor or TA sign-in at the cashier's station and be accompanied by a student on the meal plan. Limited to one meal per day.

What's Cookin' at UMass
Great Food, Great Fun!

UMASS FOOD SERVICES

McMurphy's DELANO'S
Barsie's
"Holiday on the Strip"
"PARTY"
PRIZES!
FREE FOOD!
TUESDAY DEC. 11TH
8 PM 'TIL CLOSE
Get your tix now!
Limited supply available at:
McMurphy's
Delano's
Barsie's
Must be 21 - proper ID required

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, December 6, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Media needs to focus cover news, not gossip

Ah, irrelevant news, how we've missed you.

Televisions tuned to CNN Tuesday were treated to live images of federal and local authorities searching the estate of one Orenthal James Simpson in possible connection to a Florida ecstasy ring.

The search was in conjunction with a two-year investigation into a money laundering and drug circuit, a ring authorities are now saying O.J. had no involvement in.

His name, however, had everything to do with the fact that this story was suddenly dropped in all of our laps. Since Sept. 11 there's been a shortage of good, old-fashioned tabloid worthy gossip, and who other than Mr. Simpson to get those wheels turning again? There are few better.

The attorney of our favorite one-time murder defendant said that the search "turned up nothing...of any consequence," and that "I can assure you that Mr. Simpson doesn't have enough cash in his pocket or in his bank account to ever be involved in any type of money laundering."

Perhaps not.

He does, however, have more than the requisite amount of star power and sordid history to shift the media's gears from news that, good or bad, impacts our lives to news that is an utter waste of time for everyone. Afghanistan or Miami? Regular men and women fighting a war or celebrity? Issues few of us can understand or drugs and cash?

The media, more often than not, makes the wrong damn call. We as a society have a hunger for the trivial and the media feeds it. Simply supply and demand. Making the people happy.

How many ways can we say it's also so, so wrong?

We at the Collegian hope that this event doesn't shift media coverage back into its dirty habits. As awful as the war has been, as many lives have been lost, it's given the media a chance to serve us as a people. To keep us informed as much as they humanly can. To function with a sense of purpose and pride rather than harp on the insignificant filler that occupies so much of our time.

If anything, we've learned how precious our time is since early September. Let's not waste it, then, with stories like these. Hours of film focusing on the exterior of Simpson's house, of his car pulling away, of authorities sitting around with nothing to do – all insults to us as an audience.

Don't feed the problem by tuning in. Go get your news – real news – and cut away this fat. In the end, it serves nobody. It's a lesson we learned a few months ago, and one we're already forgetting.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Information from CNN.com was used in the writing of this article.

Housing on high alert:
RA's need to refine use of authority

ELIZABETH PARISEAU

We are currently living in a time of great tension and fear, a time when safety concerns are at a fever pitch. Every day on my television, John Ashcroft is telling me that I need to be "on the highest alert" for the next boogeyman that's out to get me. After being on a state of "highest alert" for about three months, I'm pretty exhausted. Meanwhile, it seems that members of Housing Services are taking Ashcroft's message to heart—but, in my humble opinion, they seem to be taking it just a bit too far.

Early this semester, my roommate and I were written up for burning incense in our room. One problem: we don't have incense. At any rate, we were cleared of the charges, and all of that is water under the bridge. If that had been the only incident between the Residence Life staff and me this semester, that would have been the end of it, and this column would never have been written.

But that has definitely not been the end of it.

The other night I was outside hanging out with my roommate. We were out in front of our building, in front of one of those doors that you're not supposed to go through, basically, because it's conveniently placed in the building. What is the idea with that anyway? They can say what doors we're supposed to use? Why is the door there in the first place, then?

Seriously, though, I know that students living in residence halls like to have guidance, structure, and rules. It can make them feel more comfortable being away from home knowing that someone else is looking out for them. And trust me, I'm grateful for that side of what ResLife does. But even my house at home, presided over by parents, who are definitely more concerned with my safety than an RA could ever be, has two entrances/exits, which I am free to use at any time.

I just don't get it.

We had propped the door open with a pebble so that we could get back in. Unfortunately, we seemed to have done so right under the nose of an RA. Which was stupid. I'll admit. Not that we, and other residents in our living area, haven't done the same thing dozens of times before. We just happened to get caught this time.

"Excuse me, do you have your ID?" this RA asked us.

"No, sorry," we said, wanting to negotiate as best we could. He asked us to go and get them. We did.

This is where the merely mundane, and then the merely unfortunate, becomes totally ludicrous. "Wow, I'm really surprised you guys came back," snorted the RA when we returned. He then proceeded to start writing our information down.

Let me rephrase that a little. Without having given us any identification of his own to prove that he was an RA, or a name, or a floor he worked on, or even whether he was on duty at that time, this anonymous stranger began writing the names, room number, and student ID numbers of two young women down on a sheet of paper.

At this point, this seemed more threatening than whether or not I had used the wrong door – call me crazy.

When I asked him what he was doing, he reminded me that I had committed a housing violation. I never knew that that meant I had no right to be informed of what he was doing with all of my information.

Cutting to the chase, I said, "So, you're going to write us up even though we went to get our IDs to prove that we live here."

"Actually," he replied coolly, "I asked you to go back upstairs to get your IDs so that I could write you up."

So let me boil this down for you because my roommate and I were honest with this RA, and because we went upstairs and trotted right back down with the identification he had asked for, he was subjecting us to disciplinary action. And, of course, there's the flip side which is even more mind-boggling: he was basically telling us that if we had just run away from him, giggling, like the naughty little girls we were, and gone and hidden in our room and been completely deceitful, there wouldn't have been a problem.

There is something seriously wrong here.

Maybe my issue is that, since I'm a senior, I may be getting too old for the type of pseudo-parenting that's going on here. Maybe it's an issue with the fact that most of these RAs exerting their authority over me are sometimes two or three years my junior. I don't know.

But, being a senior, I have the perspective of four years of life in the residence halls, and I have never had an experience like the one I've had this semester. RAs seem to have become more vigilant and more precise in the details of their duties recently. While it's great that they're paying attention (I have had the experience of an absentee RA before, and that wasn't pleasant either), there's a fine line between being thorough in order to facilitate residence life, and being so picky that you make life harder on residents. So far, sad to say, my experience in the residence halls this year has definitely leaned toward the latter.

Still, if it had merely been these two incidents, I would have simply felt fortunate that these had been my only two bad experiences with Housing and moved on. But my trials with ResLife staff did not end with that incident, either, and my most recent RA run-in involved something so tiny, so seemingly insignificant, that I am left to wonder what I'll be disciplined for next.

After the whole write-up debacle involving incense, I hung the notice of our acquittal on the outside of my door, so that any other RA passing by our room would know that, if they smelled incense in the hallway, it wasn't our room.

Silly me! Trying to help them!

Recently, an RA on duty came by and knocked on our door. Quite pleasantly, but emphatically, she told me that she was offended by my posting of my notice on my door. She asked me, albeit politely, to take it down. I tried explaining my reasons for hanging the notice up, to no avail.

Tenser and tenser words were then spoken; eventually, I found myself defending my (I thought) basic right to post a simple piece of paper on the door of the room that is supposed to be my home, to a complete stranger at 11:30 at night. Is it just me, or is there something incredibly wrong with that picture?

Finally, I asked this RA if there was any rule saying that I had to take the notice down. She admitted that, no, there wasn't. I thanked her for her input and told her that I would probably be keeping it up.

First Amendment or no, knowing my bad luck with Residence Life this year, I'm sure that's probably not the end of that.

Elizabeth Pariseau is a Collegian Staff Member.

America needs to remember Israel

ROBYN BROOKS

The tragedy of September 11 has opened our minds to the idea that other people inhabit the earth besides us Americans. One of our country's closest friends, namely Israel, learned that decades ago. Israel has tried to share the information with us that we are not the center of the world. America had only heard and not listened. We now know even the smallest groups of people can cause catastrophic and fatalities.

Saturday December 1, 2001 a great tragedy occurred in Jerusalem, and Sunday December 3, another tragic incident took place in Haifa. Twenty-six innocent people were killed and hundreds were injured. Minding their own business, these people were probably standing with their families, talking with their friends, perhaps using a cell phone, or eating a quick lunch. Bang, one suicide bomb in Jerusalem. Minutes later another suicide bombing in Jerusalem. Then another bomb, this time a car bomb. Not 12 hours afterward, a suicide bomber blew up a bus in Haifa. If these events were not horrific enough, the additional bombings that occurred after the initial explosions, were meant to kill those helping the victims. Medical and rescue workers were targeted in their attempts to assist the wounded.

What happened to a cease fire? Nothing can justify the mass, heartless, random killings of so many innocent people. If this is a war, aren't armies supposed to fight each other? How cowardly for a terrorist group such as Hamas, to target the guiltless citizens of Israel. American citizens have also been killed and injured in terrorist attacks in Israel. It's all closer to home than we may think.

If the UMass community watches the news their response may have been one of two things: "that's really a shame" or, "something must be done." I hope that the response was not, "What does this have to do with me?" Israel is one of the great accomplishments of the 20th century. Not only is it a monumental movement, but a state of democracy in the center of countries that breed American hatred. This hatred we have seen first-hand in New York City and Washington D.C. The supporting of Israel is a crucial movement in America, one that our own President takes on with most dignity. It is time for the UMass community to turn our heads to the Middle East. Not to condemn the beautiful faith of Islam or the many Muslims and Arabs who follow it, but to the State of Israel and the constant attacks of terror it is placed under.

"It is time for the UMass community to turn our heads to the Middle East. Not to condemn the beautiful faith of Islam or the many Muslims and Arabs who follow it, but to the State of Israel and the constant attacks of terror it is placed under."

The aim should not be to denounce the Palestinian people, but to attack those who support random mortal acts of violence as just and valid. It is a serious issue that the world must face; the Palestinian people need a homeland. Peace will never be gained because the Palestinians have accepted that the only way to peace is through car bombs and suicide bombers. The World Trade Center is an example of a fundamentalist people who sought destruction of a simple fact is place of peaceful intentions and comparable sovereignty to the U.S. We should pick and choose our fights – not allow our fights to pick and choose us.

Robyn Brooks is a UMass student.

The best case scenario for writing

When I die, I hope the headline on my obituary reads, "Rob Schulze, Advertising Representative for Local Newspaper, Found Dead in Freak Dildo Accident."

Wait, no. That wasn't what I meant.

If I do ever get desperate enough to sell ads, I hope I can take that terrible secret to my grave. I don't know if my family could take the embarrassment.

Besides, I'm a writer. I've got the itch in my blood, so to speak. If I go too long without putting in some quality time at the keyboard I start to go into withdrawal. I get the shakes. My head hurts. I'd do just about anything to get my fix.

Which is why, of course, I decided long ago that I was going to write for a living. How long ago I can't say; probably I knew before I knew that I knew, if you catch my meaning. Still, by high school it was fairly well set.

Still, there is writing and there is writing, and different ways to pursue different kinds of it. What to do?

I will confess that I thought for a very short while of being an English major. However, I've always had a poor relationship with poetry and a minimal tolerance for bullshit, so that was out of the question. Comp Lit seemed to be about the same thing with a different name; kind of the Bush to English's Pabst Blue Ribbon. Plus, I've always had a desire to get a job after I graduate. Must be that practical blue-collar background.

In a moment of soulless greed I looked into the technical writing program, but realized that I could never be happy expressing me and my innermost demons via the medium of toaster oven owner's manuals.

I ended up having a second major in history, but that was more from an interest in the subject matter than a desire to write about it. I'm content to know about history, and doing so makes me very happy. UMass has some superb history classes and professors, and my understanding of the world around me has definitely grown because of my involvement with the department, but it really doesn't help me work out my wording jones.

Journalism it was, then. But then, I should have known that all along, shouldn't I?

I get to write; ohhh yes, I get to write. There is so much more to it than that, though.

I get to be hated by the public. (Suck on that, you physics kiss-asses.)

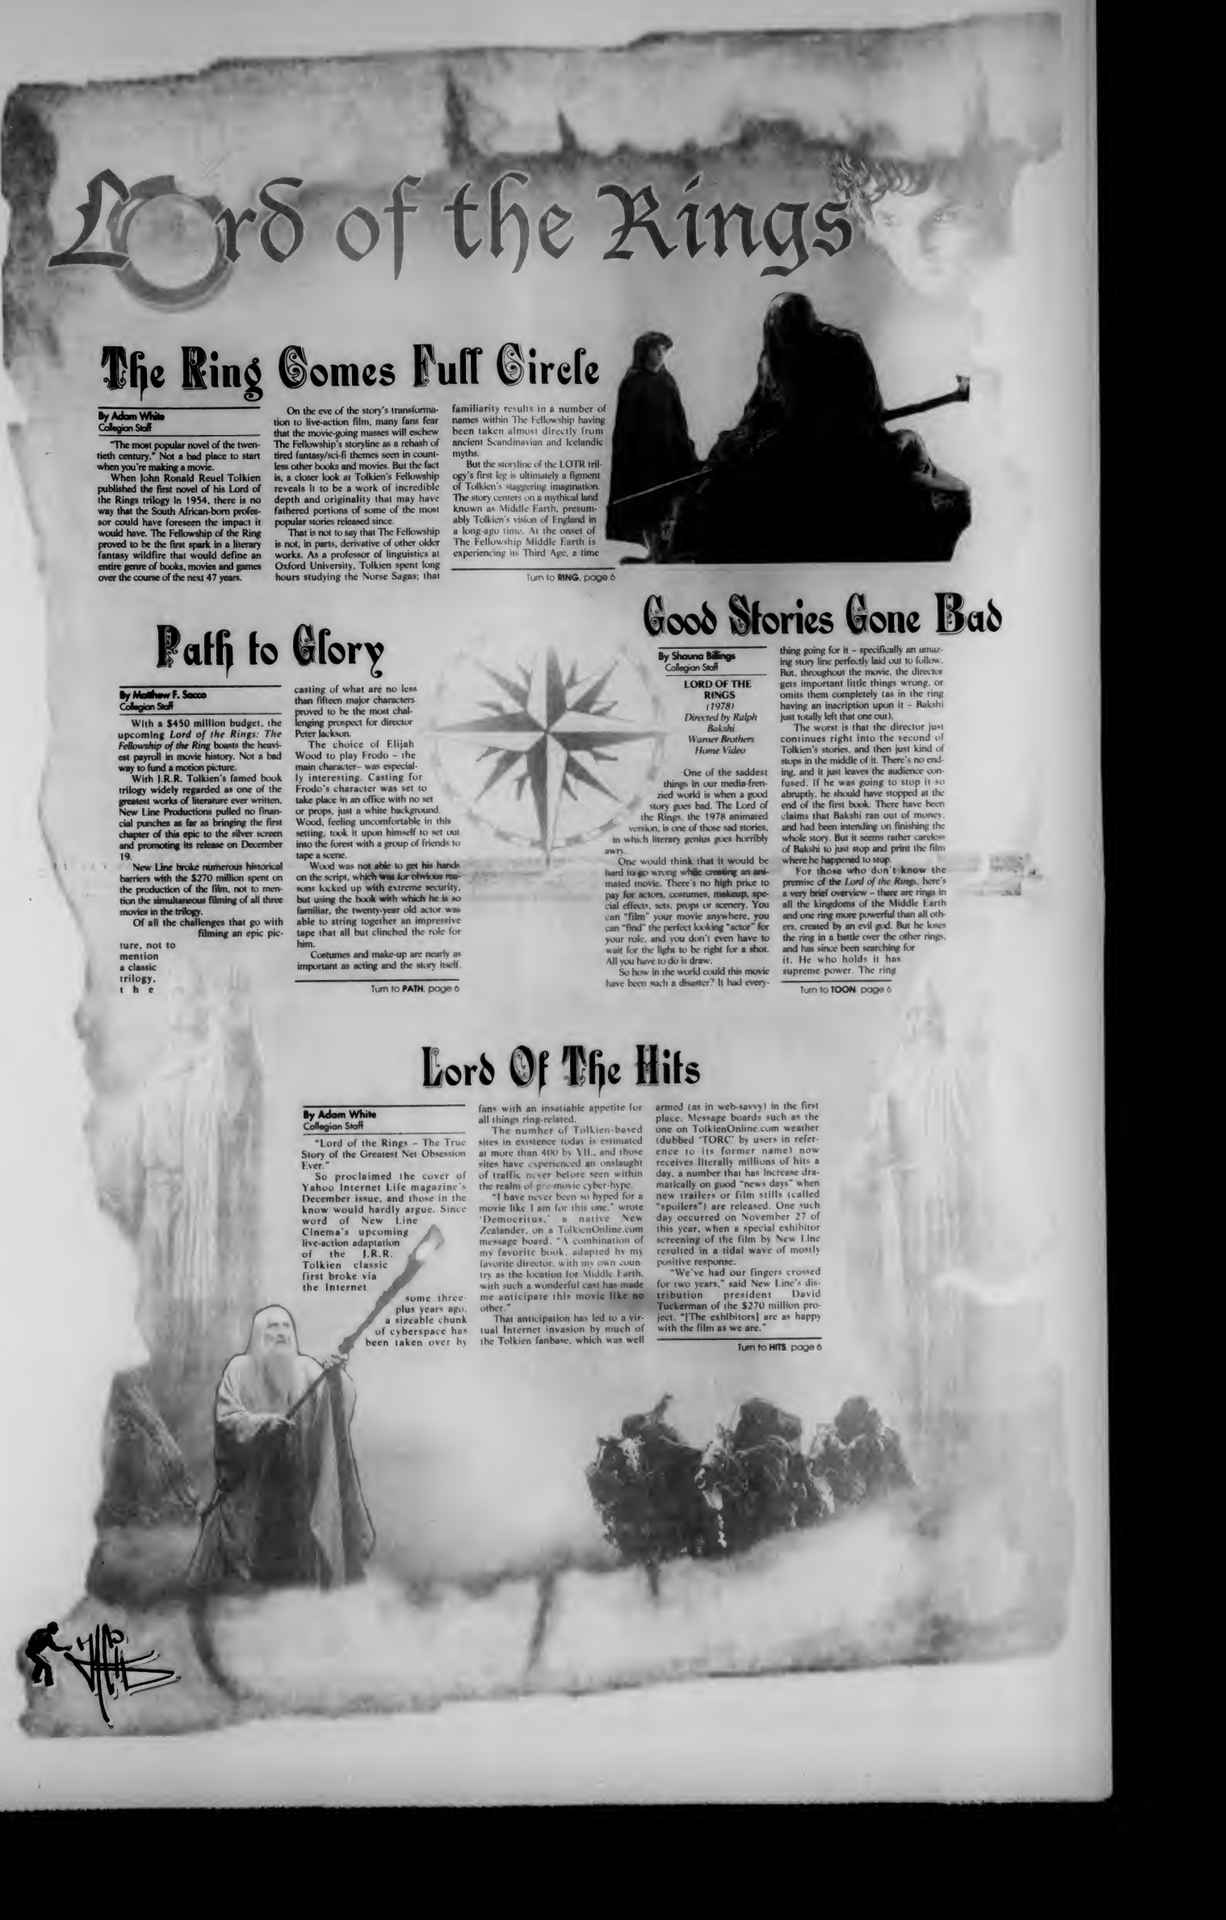
I get to go places, talk to people, seek out new experiences, find the truth...on the clock.

I get to help people. I get to right the world's wrongs with my wits and my pen and my paper (well, keyboard and Microsoft Word).

I get to explore my own personal creativity while staying within the bounds of a narrowly defined writing style. News writing is like haiku, only (usually) without the pretty butterflies.

This is, of course, the best-case scenario. I am fully prepared for the possibility of spending the rest of my life covering the sewer commission in Incest County until the day I die. Still, I need to try it. Try to make my way.

Why? The best-case scenario is just too tempting. Too perfect, too much what my ideal life would be. Writing, yes, but not just for myself, not just to amuse or to entertain myself or others. Writing with a purpose. Writing that saves lives, influences policy, makes people think.



Laugh. Call me idealistic. Tell me I'll end up at worst hanging around the Sunderland Select Board smelling of whiskey and at best riding around on a scooter like those idiot 'reporters' on TV this past Monday morning. You won't like what I tell you in return.

There's no better thing for a young idealist with an aggressive personality, hair loss and a need for composition than to be an aspiring journalist, and I mean that. Maybe, if you're still undecided, you should think about it.

As for me, I'm aiming for an obituary that I can be proud of: "Rob Schulze, Who Tried Like Hell To Make A Difference, Found Dead in Freak Dildo Accident."

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

On the first day of Christmaup mama read Ed/Op.

The Ring Comes Full Circle

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

"The most popular novel of the twentieth century." Not a bad place to start when you're making a movie.

When John Ronald Reuel Tolkien published the first novel of his Lord of the Rings trilogy in 1954, there is no way that the South African-born professor could have foreseen the impact it would have. The Fellowship of the Ring proved to be the first spark in a literary fantasy wildfire that would define an entire genre of books, movies and games over the course of the next 47 years.

On the eve of the story's transformation to live-action film, many fans fear that the movie-going masses will eschew The Fellowship's storyline as a rehash of tired fantasy/sci-fi themes seen in countless other books and movies. But the fact is, a closer look at Tolkien's Fellowship reveals it to be a work of incredible depth and originality that may have fathered portions of some of the most popular stories released since.

That is not to say that The Fellowship is not, in parts, derivative of other older works. As a professor of linguistics at Oxford University, Tolkien spent long hours studying the Norse Sagas; that familiarity results in a number of names within The Fellowship having been taken almost directly from ancient Scandinavian and Icelandic myths.

But the storyline of the LOTR trilogy's first leg is ultimately a figment of Tolkien's staggering imagination. The story centers on a mythical land known as Middle Earth, presumably Tolkien's vision of England in a long-ago time. At the onset of The Fellowship Middle Earth is experiencing its Third Age, a time

Turn to RING, page 6

Good Stories Gone Bad

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

LORD OF THE RINGS
(1978)
Directed by Ralph Bakshi
Warner Brothers Home Video

One of the saddest things in our media-frenzied world is when a good story goes bad. The Lord of the Rings, the 1978 animated version, is one of those sad stories, in which literary genius goes horribly awry.

One would think that it would be hard to go wrong while creating an animated movie. There's no high price to pay for actors, costumes, makeup, special effects, sets, props or scenery. You can "film" your movie anywhere, you can "find" the perfect looking "actor" for your role, and you don't even have to wait for the light to be right for a shot. All you have to do is draw.

So how in the world could this movie have been such a disaster? It had everything going for it – specifically an amazing story line perfectly laid out to follow. But, throughout the movie, the director gets important little things wrong, or omits them completely (as in the ring having an inscription upon it – Bakshi just totally left that one out).

The worst is that the director just continues right into the second of Tolkien's stories, and then just kind of stops in the middle of it. There's no ending, and it just leaves the audience confused. If he was going to stop it so abruptly, he should have stopped at the end of the first book. There have been claims that Bakshi ran out of money, and had been intending on finishing the whole story. But it seems rather careless of Bakshi to just stop and print the film where he happened to stop.

For those who don't know the premise of the Lord of the Rings, here's a very brief overview – there are rings in all the kingdoms of the Middle Earth and one ring more powerful than all others, created by an evil god. But he loses the ring in a battle over the other rings, and has since been searching for it. He who holds it has supreme power. The ring

Turn to TOON, page 6

Path to Glory

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

With a $450 million budget, the upcoming Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring boasts the heaviest payroll in movie history. Not a bad way to fund a motion picture.

With J.R.R. Tolkien's famed book trilogy widely regarded as one of the greatest works of literature ever written, New Line Productions pulled no financial punches as far as bringing the first chapter of this epic to the silver screen and promoting its release on December 19.

New Line broke numerous historical barriers with the $270 million spent on the production of the film, not to mention the simultaneous filming of all three movies in the trilogy.

Of all the challenges that go with filming an epic picture, not to mention a classic trilogy, the casting of what are no less than fifteen major characters proved to be the most challenging prospect for director Peter Jackson.

The choice of Elijah Wood to play Frodo – the main character– was especially interesting. Casting for Frodo's character was set to take place in an office with no set or props, just a white background. Wood, feeling uncomfortable in this setting, took it upon himself to set out into the forest with a group of friends to tape a scene.

Wood was not able to get his hands on the script, which was for obvious reasons locked up with extreme security, but using the book with which he is so familiar, the twenty-year old actor was able to string together an impressive tape that all but clinched the role for him.

Costumes and make-up are nearly as important as acting and the story itself.

Turn to PATH, page 6

Lord Of The Hits

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

"Lord of the Rings – The True Story of the Greatest Net Obsession Ever."

So proclaimed the cover of Yahoo Internet Life magazine's December issue, and those in the know would hardly argue. Since word of New Line Cinema's upcoming live-action adaptation of the J.R.R. Tolkien classic first broke via the Internet some three-plus years ago, a sizeable chunk of cyberspace has been taken over by fans with an insatiable appetite for all things ring-related.

The number of Tolkien-based sites in existence today is estimated at more than 400 by YIL, and those sites have experienced an onslaught of traffic never before seen within the realm of pre-movie cyber-hype.

"I have never been so hyped for a movie like I am for this one," wrote 'Demoeritus,' a native New Zealander, on a TolkienOnline.com message board. "A combination of my favorite book, adapted by my favorite director, with my own country as the location for Middle Earth, with such a wonderful cast has made me anticipate this movie like no other."

That anticipation has led to a virtual Internet invasion by much of the Tolkien fanbase, which was well armed (as in web-savvy) in the first place. Message boards such as the one on TolkienOnline.com weather (dubbed 'TORC' by users in reference to its former name) now receives literally millions of hits a day, a number that has increase dramatically on good "news days" when new trailers or film stills (called "spoilers") are released. One such day occurred on November 27 of this year, when a special exhibitor screening of the film by New Line resulted in a tidal wave of mostly positive response.

"We've had our fingers crossed for two years," said New Line's distribution president David Tuckerman of the $270 million project. "[The exhibitors] are as happy with the film as we are."

Turn to HITS, page 6

COURTESY THEONERING.NET

Will some please pack this, I got the last round.

ring

continued from page 5

when dark forces from the past are beginning to stir anew. The many races of Middle Earth have drifted apart since the Last Alliance of Elves and Men, when the human warrior-king Isildur defeated the dark lord Sauron by cutting from his hand the all-powerful One Ring.

The ring ultimately became Isildur's bane (which it is actually called by some) and fell unnoticed to the bottom of Anduin the Great River, where it lay lost for many years. After enticing a young misfit named Smeagol to murder his own cousin and steal it, the ring was twisted into a series of caves deep beneath the Misty Mountains where it was lost again and found by another.

This unlucky adventurer was Bilbo Baggins, who lived in a quiet corner of Middle Earth known as the Shire and was of a race called the Hobbits. Hobbits, aside from being quite small and never wearing shoes, were a reclusive people with little taste for adventure. All that changed when Bilbo returned to the Shire with the One Ring.

The preceding events do not actually take place in The Fellowship but are instead outlined in The Hobbit, a novel Tolkien had published a few years earlier and, stirring it for his children. The Fellowship picks up some years later, when Bilbo decides to leave the Shire and impart the ring to his adopted heir, Frodo. This younger Hobbit is counseled by the great wizard Gandalf, who accompanied Bilbo on his original quest, about the evils of the ring and the importance of its eventual destruction. After dark and mysterious strangers begin appearing in the Shire and inquiring about a "Mr. Baggins," Frodo decides the time has come to set out with his most unfortunate burden.

Accompanied by three other Hobbits, Frodo undertakes a journey that will take him to faraway lands both mystifying and perilous and bring him in contact with some of the most powerful figures in the history of the Third Age. He takes up with Strider, a mysterious ranger whose leadership and cunning in battle are indicative of an incredible hidden heritage as Aragorn, son of Arathorn. He seeks council at the house of Elrond, a revered half-elf lord whose daughter Arwen harbors a tragic love for Aragorn. He accepts companionship from each of Middle Earth's predominant races: Legolas the elf, Gimli the dwarf and Boromir the human. Together with Gandalf, Aragorn and the four Hobbits, these adventurers form the Fellowship of the Ring.

Tolkien's story is about so much more than just a quest by good to triumph over evil, however. The romance between Aragorn and Arwen ultimately hinges on the concept of surrendering your very life as the cost for true love. The ring's effect on and eventual power over Smeagol, Bilbo, Frodo and others is a harrowing plotline not unlike more modern stories about hardcore drug addiction. The politics of Middle Earth's separate races and their union in the face of peril is a tremendous statement in this time of actual global conflict.

And yes, The Fellowship of the Ring has greatly influenced some of the best-known stories and games of our time. The Luke Skywalker/Ben Kenobi dynamic in Star Wars is very much like the one between Frodo and Gandalf, especially Kenobi's "death" at the hands of Darth Vader that practically mirrors the climactic bridge scene from near the end of The Fellowship. The fantasy film Willow, which was conveniently released on DVD last week, is so reliant on themes from LOTR that it can be effectively categorized as a Tolkien ripoff. The first three novels in the popular Dragonlance series are virtual carbon copies of their LOTR counterparts, as are the first two books in Terry Brooks' acclaimed Shannara series. And the role-playing dynasty Dungeons and Dragons was derived practically word-for-word from Tolkien's world, from its character races, spells and magic items down to its monsters and other invented creatures.

While the soon-to-be-released film version of The Fellowship of the Ring will undoubtedly achieve great success, much of that success must be attributed to the power of the source material. Whereas Star Wars began as nothing more than ideas in its creator's head, this film is the offspring of what many consider to be the greatest literary achievement of the last 100 years.

path

continued from page 5

when it comes to the audience affect and success of this film. Never is that fact more prevalent than in the presentation of the Dwarven warrior Gimli.

John Rhys-Davies, an actor of Indiana Jones fame (he appeared as Sallah, Indy's Egyptian side kick in the first and third Jones movies), drew the role of Gimli and all the heartache that came with it.

Davies was required to arrive on the set at 4 a.m. every morning so he could spend up to six hours in make-up morphing his features to look the part of a dwarf. Davies was originally interested in a minor role, just so he could be a part of the epic, but he ended up taking on one of the more essential parts in the series.

From set design and construction all the way down to the proportional size of characters, attention to detail was essential in bringing written word to the movie screen.

As in-depth as Tolkien wrote about his conjured world, Middle Earth, the illustrations and handmade maps and pictures that Tolkien himself were indispensable aids, and were included in the published version of his epic.

It is a key element in the telling of this story to have a Hobbit be shorter than an elf, although the actors could in actuality be the same size.

From what audiences have seen as far as trailers and online promotion, it looks like Jackson and his crew have all the technical angles covered. There is just that conclusive fact remaining: you know, that thing about making a quality movie.

toon

continued from page 5

has passed from person to person, and ends up with Frodo, a Hobbit, who must bring it back to where it was created so that it may be destroyed and all on earth may rest easy again.

With a story containing so much magic, darkness, wizardry, elves, trolls and hobbits there is ample opportunity for animation brilliance. But Bakshi and his staff's capabilities fall sadly short. The characters end up just looking goofy and move like buffoons. And the craftsmanship is slap-dash –often being a mix of animated main characters placed with other characters and scenery of colored-in real film (because that apparently passed as "animation" to Bakshi). The result is bizarre and blatantly poor quality – with an animated Frodo singing to a nearly alive-looking tavern crowd.

With Hollywood's love of making over the same story again and again, it is surprising that it has taken so long for another version of The Lord of the Rings to come out. Even if the new version opening nationwide on Dec. 19, is only half as good as the book, it will still, thankfully, be a million times better than Bakshi's animated version. I'd suggest one of three alternatives to watching this version of The Lord of the Rings: 1. Read the book. 2. Wait until the 19th to see the new "real person" film. Or 3. Cut your toenails - because that will be more entertaining than this film, and time much better spent.

hits

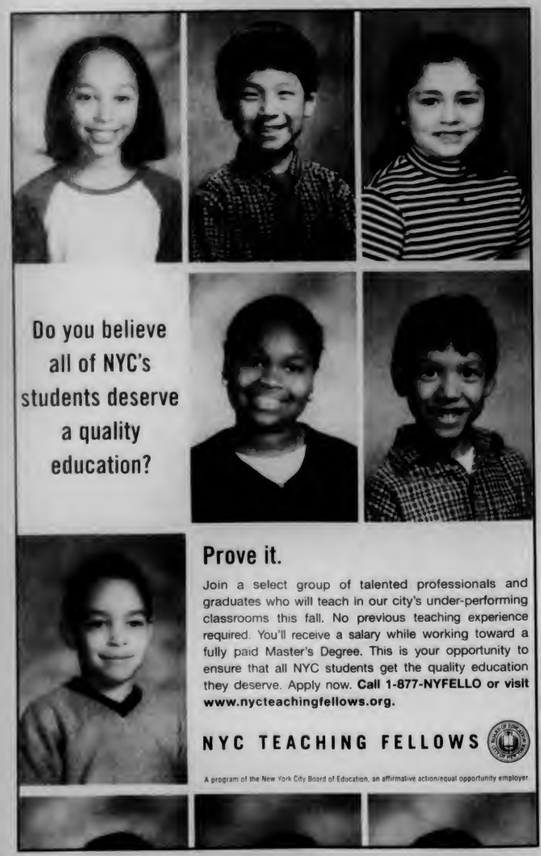
continued from page 5

Enthusiasm is equally rampant on sites like TORC, where even the slightest scrap of LOTR news is ripped apart in an arena of commentary by a rather sizeable (790 registered users) pack of "purists" and "revisionists." Some back-and-forth bickering does occur on the otherwise peaceful TORC boards, particularly between the two aforementioned groups. The former are rabidly protective of Tolkien's original intentions and detail (of which there is an almost excruciating amount) while the latter are in favor of morphing the film somewhat in order to make a better movie.

"I don't wish to become involved in the purist / revisionist debates," wrote 'Harvestar,' a 23-year-old female astronomy grad student from Tucson, AZ. "And I'm hesitant to know any more spoilers than I do now. But most everyday I'm here chatting with people."

While Harvestar may choose to steer clear of the backlash caused by New Line's changes to the sacred original texts, others have leapt squarely into the online melee. 'Nilson_The_White,' a 15 year-old male from Saskatchewan, Canada, has created a timeline for when the major plot change spoilers surfaced. According to the Canuck's calculations, the least popular of the changes (Arwen at the Ford, or 'AATF') was exposed over two years ago in November of 1999.

But couldn't too much of this inside information "spoil" the film once it finally hits theatres? Not likely, according to those opening their cinematic Christmas presents early on TORC.



"I love the spoilers," wrote 'loreth,' a 30 year-old female from Sweden. "Mostly because that way I can learn about and try to accept the changes beforehand, fret over them in some cases in private – and then go and hopefully enjoy the movie even more."

That ultimate enjoyment of the upcoming film is clearly the biggest concern of those trampling cyberspace daily for their fantasy fix. Fans on TORC have already hammered out theoretical ticket buying and viewing strategies in the forums, as well as opening day plans for who to bring and even what to wear.

"I have a pair of boots and a hooded cloak from a costume party long ago," wrote 'Erinhue,' a 45 year-old married father of two from New York City. "I shall wear those (on line and in the theater any way; I won't put on the cloak if I ride the subway) and I would carry my sword but that would be illegal."

One other key element in the inevitable success of the New Line films is clearly visible on sites like TORC: the story's massive international appeal. A staggering number of the site's users are from outside the U.S., where Tolkien-mania flourishes in such far-away places as Japan, South Africa and South America.

"Everybody seems to forget that Tolkien fans are not just English-speaking people," wrote 'Angafiniel,' a 20 year-old female college student from Santiago, Chile. "Type in Sociedad Tolkien and you'll find at least 3: Sociedad Tolkien Española, Sociedad Tolkien Chilena (from my own country) and Asociación Tolkien Argentina... all from Spanish-speaking fans that are just as hyped about it all as US fans.

Do you believe all of NYC's students deserve a quality education?

Prove it.

Join a select group of talented professionals and graduates who will teach in our city's under-performing classrooms this fall. No previous teaching experience required. You'll receive a salary while working toward a fully paid Master's Degree. This is your opportunity to ensure that all NYC students get the quality education they deserve. Apply now. Call 1-877-NYFELLO or visit www.nycteachingfellows.org.

NYC TEACHING FELLOWS

A program of the New York City Board of Education, an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.

IT'S NOT TOO LATE TO GET A CO-OP OR INTERNSHIP FOR SPRING!

It's not too late!

This spring YOU could be working with Fidelity Investments, The US Fish and Wildlife Service, The US Olympic Committee, Dateline NBC, or even with the FBI!

Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Thursday, Dec. 6		Tuesday, Dec. 11
3 pm	103 South College	11:30 am	211 Marston
4 pm	114 Stockbridge Hall	5 pm	3 Bartlett Hall
Monday, Dec. 10		Wednesday, Dec. 12
1:30 pm	114 Stockbridge Hall	1 p.m.	305 E LAB
3 pm	103 South College	Thursday, Dec. 13 (last one for the semester!)
		4 pm	114 Stockbridge Hall

Can't make any of these sessions?
Call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265.

Campus Career Network

We're HERE for YOU! * http://www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Lil' Romeo and "The Real World" signal apocalypse

Last Tuesday night was a painful night in television history. Not only was it the season finale of "The Real World New York" on MTV, but also the "Billboard Music Awards" on Fox. And no, watching "The Real World" finale was not painful because we were forced to part ways with Corel, Mike, Malik, Lori, Nicole, Rachel and Kevin. Instead it was simply a mercy killing to finally put this season out of its misery. We'll get back to the travesty that was the "Billboard Music Awards" later, but for now it's time to admit that the latest installment of "The Real World," was the most unentertaining and predictable season in the show's dubious history.

The shows uninspiring cast lacked the uniqueness of previous seasons. There was Corel (or was that Melissa from last years cast?) playing the role of the racially charged African American female, versus Mike the middle class white guy that has never met a black person before. The rest of the ensemble wasn't much more interesting. There was Kevin, the "ladies man" type who doesn't know how to do much of anything except act cool and party. Malik acted like he thought he was some high and mighty philosopher of life (seems like every cast has a few of these). There was Lori, an aspiring singer who spends a lot of time yapping about her goals and not much time doing anything to make them a reality. The cast was rounded out by Nicole, who didn't seem to want anything in life, except for Malik, and the obligatory "good girl" Rachel (or was that Julie from last year's cast?).

At the same time the cast plodded its way through an endless amount of arguments and partying, the series continued to rely on the same hackneyed formulas to propel its stories. There were the endless combinations of possible "hookups," (side note: what exactly constitutes a 'hook up?' It seems as if it can be anything from saying hello to someone to having wild animal-like sex. What's the deal people?) that never actually happen. Then there is the "job" that the cast members get. It's always something cool, yet they always manage to screw it up by being lazy, stupid, or in the case of "The Real World Boston," drinking with the school children they are supposed to be supervising. They argue over pettier issues than a typical SGA meeting. Then at the end, everybody gets sentimental when they realize they spent the least three months bickering about petty nonsense.

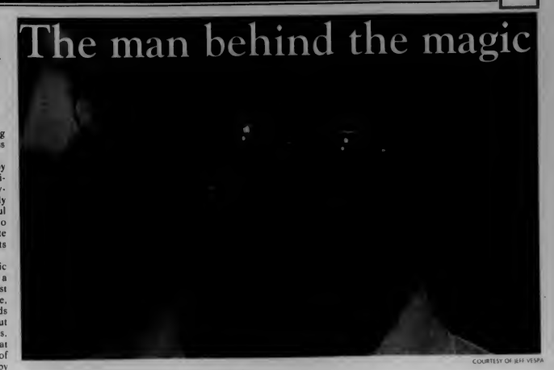
As my plea to the shows producers, break the formula already! Try changing up the cookie cutter roles that they attempt to fill with every "Real World" cast. The show has gone from a silly yet compelling depiction of twenty something life to one that is just plain silly.

There is nothing "real" about a bunch of people sitting around a house with nothing to do all day but discuss who they want to kiss.

One possibility would be to change up the format by chronicling the lives of those with actual responsibilities, like students or young people trying to earn a living. Also it wouldn't be a bad idea to cast somebody who doesn't fit the role of the current MTV "beautiful person." Give the viewers something more tangible to relate to and "The Real World" will be able to separate itself from the plethora of reality shows, live up to its name and become "real" in the process.

Oh yea, and then there was that "Billboard Music Awards" show. Over the years, the show has earned a reputation (by me at least) as undoubtedly the lamest awards show in a genre that is all lame. It isn't live, and seems to award artists based on how many records they sell rather than on any sort of artistic merit. But that is forgivable...I guess. What isn't forgivable is what happened in the category of "Best Rapper," presented by the "together at last" combination of Blink 182 and Wayne Newton.

The nominees for the award: City High, OutKast, Lil' Bow Wow and Lil' Romeo. Huh?! How in the world were these two "Lil'" rappers nominated? Even if the nominees were just based on popularity, how could they have surpassed Jay-Z, DMX, or la Rule, all of whom dropped albums in the past year? Surely, OutKast or at least City High would win.



Nope, Lil' Romeo took home the prize. If you don't know anything about rap or Lil' Romeo, here's the quick breakdown. He's the 11 year-old son of rapper/producer Master P, who's had one "hit" in his career (which spans one whole album), and that "hit" was a Jackson 5 cover. On what basis Lil' Romeo is the 'Best Rapper" in the world, I will never know. I guess OutKast, and the rest of the rap world will just have to try harder next year to live up to the lofty standards set by Lil' Romeo.

Tuesday night was one of the those nights that people refer to when they say "there is nothing good on television." But the pain didn't subside once "The Real World" ended and Lil' Romeo accepted his award. Like a staph infection, it spread even more as "Dismissed" took to the airwaves on MTV. But hey, at least I have 200 channels of digital cable.

By the way, "Real World Chicago" begins airing on January 15th of next year. Lil' Romeo's next album has no release date as of yet, but when it does come out, it should be interesting to see if his sophomore effort can live up to his first album of in your face, angst ridden, anti-establishment, indispensable street and club anthems.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member

The man behind the magic

COURTESY OF JEN VESPA

Peter Jackson, representin' for New Zealand.

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Before New Zealand director Peter Jackson was tapped to helm the massive Lord of the Rings trilogy, the casual movie fan may have known him as the guy who directed that wicked gory movie their friend made them watch. Or as the director of The Frighteners, that Michael J. Fox movie with the crappy preview they never bothered to rent.

So no, he's not the most notorious or legendary pick for the job, but his history and short filmography have all the passion and eclecticism (not to mention skill and creativity) one would want in the person tackling such a prestigious project.

The party began in the mid-80s, when Jackson and a group of friends began filming what would become his first full-length film, Bad Taste. A hybrid splatter horror/alien invasion/comedy, the film stressed the comedic elements of the characteristically outrageous gore inherent in splatter films as it chronicled the clash between hapless New Zealand natives (including Jackson himself) and wide-eyed aliens from space.

The buzz surrounding Bad Taste set the stage for the hilariously violent and foul-mouthed send-up of the Muppets, Meet the Feebles. Entirely devoid of human characters, the film was entirely animal puppet-populated, and contained, among other things, a heroin-addicted knife-throwing alligator with Vietnam flashbacks, a vomiting rabbit that mistakenly thinks he has AIDS, two cats with (separate) fixations on oral sex and sodomy, a smoking rat that makes 'nasal sex' S&M snuff films, a deadbeat elephant dad who neglects the child he had with a chicken, a gangster warthog that golfs, and a hippopotamus that goes on a killing spree after being jilted by her walrus lover/boss.

Dead Alive, the American title of what many consider the goriest film ever made, was Jackson creating a more fully realized vision of many of the aspects of Bad Taste with time, a budget, and experience. Truly a landmark in the horror genre, the film does contain probably the most actual gore ever seen onscreen, but is presented in such a way that the most accurate classification of the film would have to be as a screwball comedy. Creative and daring, Dead Alive is as serious in its approach and professionalism as it is about its own sense of humor and shock value.

If Dead Alive was a playground for Jackson's imagination, 1994's Heavenly Creatures proved the director could deftly wrap his skills around a dramatic narrative. A moving and disturbing story about two girls so madly in love they kill one girl's mother to avoid separation, the expertly paced film was based on a real-life murder case and won enormous critical acclaim.

The short film Forgotten Silver plays like a pretty boring documentary of the extraordinary New Zealand director that time forgot. Colin McKenzie, until the viewer learns, through an outside source, that the whole film is fake and angrily fooled quite a lot of viewers in Jackson's homeland.

1996's criminally underrated and forgotten The Frighteners owes much of its failure to its publicity, which pushed the film as a sort of supernatural blooper reel. Humor does play a role in the film, but at its core it's an expertly plotted thriller that weaves in and out of both the present/past and the natural/spiritual worlds as the story unravels.

Jackson's research and dedication to the current Lord of the Rings project extends as far as his close working with WETA, a New Zealand film effects specialist. The painstakingly detailed version of Tolkein's Middle Earth he hopes to present will be complete with lush physical landscapes, innovative special effects, and still further artistic progression in the area of computer-generated graphics. All of his hard work is set to pay off on the December 19, 2001 release date of The Fellowship of the Ring.

17. Office XP is now available at almost 70% off, for only $149.* You buy it because:

A) It can help students stay ahead in school..... ☐

B) It comes with full versions of Microsoft® Word, Excel, Outlook®, and PowerPoint®..... ☐

C) It's a limited offer..... ☐

D) All of the above..... ☑

Microsoft® Office XP Standard for Students and Teachers is now available at a special low price. With all the tools to help students get more done, faster and easier. It's a no-brainer. Buy it today at one of the retailers below.

microsoft.com/office/forstudents

Microsoft

Office DEPOT · COMPUSA · CITY · Fry's ELECTRONICS · STAPLES · BEST BUY · OfficeMax · TARGET · GameStop · MICRO CENTER

*Reseller prices may vary. To see this product, you must be a Qualified Educational User (QEU). See product box for details. Good in the United States only, while supplies last. Limit one copy per QEU. Not for business or commercial use. © 2001 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved. Microsoft, Outlook, PowerPoint, and the Office logo are either registered trademarks or trademarks of Microsoft Corporation in the United States and/or other countries. The names and logos of actual companies and products mentioned herein may be the trademarks of their respective owners.

SATURN™

Get service at Saturn of Hadley, no matter what year, make or model... foreign or domestic!

Oil & filter change only $19.95. Change oil & filter; top off all fluids; adjust tire pressures; hand wash & vacuum; up to 4 quarts of oil; cannot be combined with any other offer.

Cooling System Service - $39.95. Flush and fill antifreeze; pressure test system for leaks; inspect belts & hoses; hand wash & vacuum; up to 2 gallons of antifreeze; cannot be combined with any other offer.

Mass State Inspection - $29.00. Mon- Fri 8-12/1-5. Thurs 8-12/1-7; first come, first served appointments.

Free 25 Point Inspection upon request. Includes checks on steering, suspension, tires, brakes, belts, hoses, lights, wiper blades and more.

Who else will wash and vacuum your car…

while you eat jelly donuts?

10% Off All Orders With A Student Or Faculty ID.

Call our service department today at (413) 584-6066 to schedule an appointment, or just stop by Monday-Friday 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Thursday 7:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and Saturday 7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. We are conveniently located on Route 9 in Hadley at a PVTA stop and have direct access to the bike path. We also offer a courtesy shuttle service within a 15-mile radius (must call to schedule). All offers are valid with any student or faculty ID at Saturn of Hadley.

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House presents the exhibit "Echoes of the Caged Bird" artwork by Lena Shaw in watercolor, acrylic, and oil paint on canvas. The show will run through December 7. The Gallery is open on Monday and Tuesday from 1 to 7 p.m. and Wednesday and Friday 1 to 5 p.m.

UMASS – The Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House presents an exhibit by student Cynthia Poirier in multimedia performance called, In Touch. It will be there on December 10, 11, and 12 with an opening reception on Monday, December 10 from 5 to 7 p.m. The Gallery is open Monday through Wednesday 1 to 7 p.m.

UMASS – The Hampden Gallery will be exhibiting Robert Taplin's work Jupiter through December 6. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday noon to 6 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – Paradise Gate is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty, created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – Photo artist Anne Ross will be exhibiting Digital Photography in an exhibit called "A Space Odyssey 2001." Already an accomplished color photographer, Ross believes that the endless possibilities involved with computer manipulation are a natural transition." Her show will be at the Smith College Alumnae House Gallery through January 12, 2002. The gallery hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday – Friday.

NORTHAMPTON – A collection called "Virtual Tea Party" will be on display and for sale at PYNCH in Northampton. The pieces are designed and produced by American Studio Artists in ceramics, glass and metal.

THEATER AND DANCE

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Theater Department will put on their final play of the semester in its New Play Reading Series tonight. The play, Soul Repairs is written and directed by Andrea Hairston of the Smith Theater Department. The play deals with science fiction theater investigating repair as a biological, physical, and social activity. The reading will involve members of Northampton's Chrysalis Theater Company. The show will take place tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Earle Recital Hall, Sage Hall. The event is free to all.

UMASS – New WORLD Theater presents poet antTd actor Mariposa in her one-woman coming-of-age work DiaspoRicanDementia, which will make its Pioneer Valley here at UMass. It explores the intersection of theater with performance poetry, spoken word, and hip-hop culture. The show will be on Thursday, December 6 at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. It costs $10 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors.

COURTESY OF MOUNT HOLYOKE

Mount Holyoke College's production of Hay Fever by Noel Coward plays at the Rooke Theatre Dec. 6-8 at 8 p.m. and Dec. 8 and 9 at 2 p.m. Admission is free for students on opening night, Dec. 6.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The UMass Chapel Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Professor David Sporny and the Lab Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of graduate student Jeremy Winstead will perform on Tuesday, December 11 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for students, seniors and children. For tickets call 413-545-2511

UMASS – The Student Society for New Works will present its first project, Wrench: An Original Jazz Musical. It is the creation of Crescent Productions Company, a non-profit collaboration of UMass writers and designers. The performance will be in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, December 13 at 8 p.m. The show is free to the public.

UMASS - The UMass department of Music and Dance presents an evening of contemporary jazz, which will feature the work of composers Joe Henderson, Bobby McFerrin and Paul Simon. Alongwith ensemble pieces, vocal jazz majors will perform solos for the audience. It will take place in Bezanson Recital Hall on Monday, December 10 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public, $4 for students, elders and children under 18. For tickets call 413-545-2511

UMASS – Fifty high school students from across Massachusetts and New Hampshire will arrive at the Fine Art Center Concert Hall for a tribute to the twentieth century music for winds. The event will occur on Saturday, December 16 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for students, elders and children under 18.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Department of Music presents Blue Door, a dynamic piano and cello partnership. The show was composed by Deborah Gilwood on the piano and Arthur Cook on the cello and will sample the eclectic tastes of past works by Alberto Ginastera, Katherine Hoover, Ludvig von Beethoven, Ginampasola Bracali and Samuel barber. The show will be on Sunday, December 9 at 3 p.m. in Sweety Concert Hall in Sage Hall. The event is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents Ronald Gorevic on violin and viola, and will be accompanied by members of the Smith College Music Department faculty. The concert will take place on Friday, December 7 at 8 p.m. in Sweeny Concert Hall in Sage Hall. The event is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Celebrations Dance Company will present their concert "Sweet Masala" featuring the Smith based hip-hop group. The show will be on Friday, December 7 and Saturday December 8 at 8 p.m. in Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts. Theater 14. Tickets are $7 for general admission and $5 for students, seniors, and children. To reserve tickets call 413-585-ARTS.

AMHERST – The Women's Choir will perform Love Cantata a new piece of Roman Yakub in memory of the September 11 attacks, focusing in on "faith, hope and love." Yakub is an UMass graduate majoring in composition from 1998. It will be performed at the First Congregational Church in Amherst on Thursday December 6 at 8 p.m. and is free to the public, but donations are welcome.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – James Howard Kunstler the author of Geography of Nowhere and Home of Nowhere will be speaking about urban Communities in today's society. It will take place in room 105 in Hills North at 3 p.m. on Friday, December 7.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Poetry Center at Smith College will feature readings by poets Elizabeth Alexander and Ellen Dore Watson as they read from their respective newly released poems. The even will take place on Monday, December 10 at 7:30 p.m. in Davis Ballroom.

AMHERST – Associate Professor of English at UMass Amherst, Laura Doyle will be at Food For Thought Books on Wednesday, December 12 at 7 p.m. The book Bodies of Resistance: New Phenomenolgies of Politics, Agency and Culture was edited by Asst. Prof. Doyle and looks at the intersections between the physical world and the way it exists through bodies.

AMHERST - Author Becky Thompson will read and sign her new book A Promise and a Way of Life: White Antiracist Activism on Thursday, December 13 at 7 p.m. at Food For Thought Books.

AMHERST - Author Sonia Rivera-Valdes reads from her new book The Forbidden Stories of Maria Veneranda at Food For Thought Books. The book deals with the comforts and discomforts of bi-cultural co-habitation of Anglo and Latino Cultures in the form of a Latina women acting as a confessional for people. The event will take place on Tue

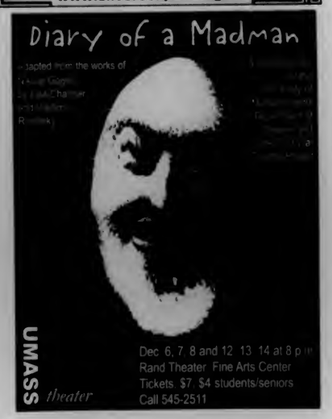
)

COURTESY OF JOE KOVACS

Gimme Five

Steven Dennis Bodner conducts the University Youth Wind Ensemble at 2 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center on Sunday, December 16.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD



starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs

GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs till 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

Zanna has it...
Sweater Dusters

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

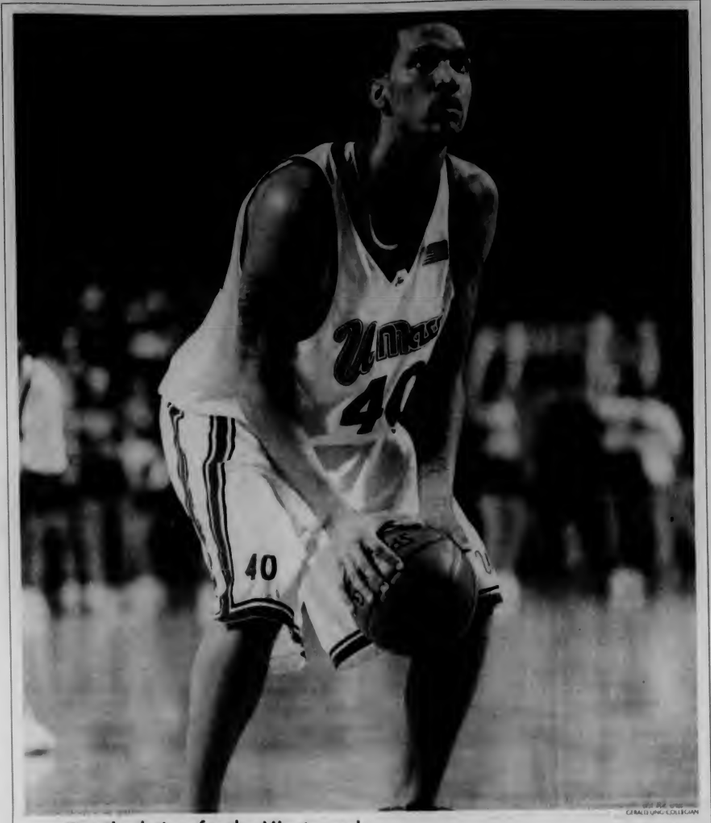
Cut out this great deal and send it home for Christmas . . .

Send your College Student Comfort & Warmth

Your son or daughter, more than ever, is seeking the comfort & campanionship of music. It is something they can control. Michaura offers you a special way to enhance that experience.

A great line of high quality speakers & matched components you order on our secure WEB site and send directly to your student's room. Buy direct and you get more to give . . .

Better quality, good prices, hassle-free . . . for both of you



Better value!

Make a Sound Decision ™

MICHAURA L.L.C.
10 Ferry Wharf
Newburyport, MA 01950
Tel: (978) 462-3329
Fax: (978) 465-7925

www.michaura.com

COLLEGIAN/COLLEGIAN

Gut-check time for the Minutemen!

Micah Brand and the men's basketball team will head down the Mass. Pike this weekend and take on Boston College. Read the preview in tomorrow's edition of the Collegian.

Indiana U. faculty passes athletics reform proposal; move a first step

By Katie Schoenbaechler
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. - Indiana University's faculty unanimously approved a plan Tuesday which puts an emphasis on academics, not athletics. The vote, supported by Athletics Director Michael McNeely and basketball coach Mike Davis, is the first step in a process of overhauling collegiate athletics across the country.

The Bloomington Faculty Council passed the intercollegiate athletics resolution after much deliberation and separately added three addendums to the proposal with almost full support from the council.

Although BFC president Robert Eno anticipated the resolution to pass, he said he was surprised the addendums were accepted with relative ease.

"I really did not expect the entire addendum package to be passed by the BFC," Eno said.

The council's passage of the proposal will have no immediate effect on IU, Eno said. The major changes that will be visible will not occur unless there is more support from other conferences and university presidents.

"This isn't policy and we didn't draft it as policy," Eno said. "This is an expression of the faculty's will. Our hope is that we can have multiple conferences' faculties expressing a similar desire to see this sort of reform that may lead towards policy changes coming from the presidents of the universities."

The approved policy outlines three points: the academic importance regarding student athletes and the integration of athlete's academic support services within the entire University; the reduction of commercialization and limitation of game schedules; and the scaling back of the intercollegiate "arms race," which includes the athletics department operating under the same standards of all other University departments.

The three addendums adopted by the council signal the importance of intercollegiate athletics within the academic community, while making the distinction that many of the athletic events within the University have been too time-consuming for student athletes, the competitiveness of athletics and the entertainment industry strains the University's financial resources and takes the public and student focus away from academics and places it on athletics, and the Committee on Institutional Cooperation (consisting of the Big 10 schools and the University of Chicago) and the Pac-10's urging to presidents and faculty of Big 10 conference schools and of other institutions in intercollegiate athletics to take control of these topics.

The council took on the large discussion of the reform, which Neely participated in, to clarify any misunderstandings that the council had on the current athletic policy and proposal issues.

"I think in general these are all very good things. Overall, I am very supportive," McNeely said. "We are always looking on how we can improve on all these areas, particularly with academics where we have a system now that has been successful and is connected with the academic units across campus, so we plug into those resources as much as possible."

The main items of the debate were single-year scholarship renewal and scaling back athletics focus. Davis said he supported the overall proposal.

"A lot of times, guys put all their eggs in one basket, it's like do or die," he said. "A lot of times guys aren't going to make it to the professional level. I'm not saying that they can all graduate, but more can graduate than play professional."

The ideas proposed in the meeting are only one small step in terms of reform, said Professor Murray Sperber, an expert on collegiate sports. Sperber said that he was surprised by the overwhelming approval by the BFC since many faculty members spoke against the proposal. Sperber also said many university presidents "walk the walk, but when it comes down to reform, they can't talk the talk."

The translation of this reform into a reality is not only dependent on the faculty councils of all NCAA universities, but various NCAA councils, Sperber said.

The overall resolution will be sent to the CIC faculty senates that will have to consider it along with the CIC presidents. Other NCAA conferences will also be looking at the proposal but how far it gets is hard to say, Eno said. University presidents and faculty support is very important, he said.

Jake Oakman, IUSA president, was present at the meeting and had a voice in the proposal discussion.

"I think it's a good overall proposal and I think that it will have positive effect on student athletes, but as for the student's not involved in athletics, I don't think that they will see a change," Oakman said. "I think that this proposal shows that IU is at the forefront of athletic reform and hopefully this will get other schools on the bandwagon."

■ random

continued from page 11

systems are so hated. If they figured out a way to have a four or eight team tournament to decide the championship, Colorado would win.

Is anyone else looking more forward to the movie Ali than Lord of the Rings? Is it just me? I will see both movies on their respective opening days, but I guess the sports guy in me sways me more than the sci-fi fan boy (see Arts page).

I figure that watching Ali will further drive home the point that boxing is truly awful nowadays. Just thinking about the supreme lack of interesting, quality fighters there are in the heavyweight division is disturbing. Now Lennox Lewis is suing Mike Tyson in an attempt to keep him from fighting in January before their proposed April bout.

Does anyone really care? At least in professional wrestling they admit that the results are staged. Boxing won't be interesting again unless Roy Jones Jr., the best boxer in the world, decides to start fighting some of the bigger names instead of simply beating the tar out of guys that no one, even in the boxing world, has heard of. Jones is one of just a few guys in boxing that have a legitimate chance to be true superstars; let's hope he doesn't waste it.

Who would have thought the Bruins, Celtics, Patriots, and Minutemen would all be worth following in December? It's a beautiful thing.

Little Pete? In the Five-College Area! Does it get any better than that? I mean, who's next, Screech from "Saved By the Bell"? Boddy from "Hey Dude"? Can we start a neighborhood watch for this kind of stuff?

I guess we will find out exactly how many people have jumped on the men's basketball bandwagon at the UConn game next week. Too bad the bigger game is happening three days before it on the other side of the Commonwealth.

Felipe Alou would be the perfect addition to the Red Sox clubhouse, especially if it helps get his son Moises to Boston. It would also ensure that firing Joe Kerrigan midseason wouldn't disrupt the team all that much. Please, someone, make this happen.

The term "rioting" is never, ever synonymous with, "a good thing." I cannot stress this enough to the Red Sox fans on campus.

The debates that come up when watching "WWF RAW" with fellow Collegian staffers are hilarious. I have never heard the name "Vince Russo" said more in my entire life. Never drank so much orange soda in my life either. Good thing? You decide.

A verbal battle between Dan Shaughnessy of the Boston Globe and Bill Simmons of ESPN.com could really liven up both guys' writing. Funny, however, that it was the established veteran that picked the fight with the new guy who is working hard to establish himself. It usually works the other way around.

Why is it that two big wins for the Minutemen (Oregon, N.C. State) are buried in the Globe, but when they lose to Holy Cross it is front-page news?

Call me naive, call me crazy, but even after a really disappointing 1-5 start, I still think the Minutewomen are going to give the A-10 a run for its money this year.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian columnist.

UMass Winter Semi-Formal

THE SNOW BALL

Celebrate the end of the semester!

Friday, Dec. 14, 2001

7:00p.m. - 12:45a.m.

Peking Garden on Rt. 9

DJ, Dancing, Dinner and Cash Bar!

(Positive ID Required)

Tickets are only $20

$25 at the door

On Sale now

at the Campus Center Concourse STARS table

J·RICH
CLOTHING FOR MEN
22 Masonic St. • Northampton • 586-6336

Now Playing★One Day Only

"Bathrobe Day"

Saturday, December 8th

20% off All Sleepwear

30% off ..... If you come in wearing your robe or PJs

Free* .... If you come in naked. (really!)

*Free Bill Blass robe of your choice.

It is make or break time for NFL's elite

The NFL season is about to enter week unlucky number 13 and we are starting to see the top part of the NFL elite show through. But with five weeks left in the year, anything can and will happen.

This week will bring three marquee match-ups that could separate the contenders from the pretenders to the throne. The game of the week will take place in St. Louis as the Rams and 49ers will put their matching 9-2 records at stake. The Rams offense is about as scary for opposing defenses to look at as it is to look at Ray Liotta eat his own brain in Hannibal. The difference is that the Rams are the ones chewing on the brains of the opposition, racking up an average of 30.1 points per game. Kurt Warner seems to have gotten over his thumb injury earlier in the year and has regained his form. Marshall Faulk had an off week running the ball last Sunday versus Atlanta with just 70 yards. What I forget to mention is that he had 130 yards receiving and three touchdowns. Forget putting a defensive back on him, where's Superman when you need him?

DAVID ROSE

As for San Francisco, no one thought they would be at 9-2 at this point of the season. Quarterback Jeff Garcia and Wide Receiver Terrell Owens lead an offense that is second in the NFL averaging 27.5 points per game. While Garcia might be a candidate for MVP and Owens might be the best wideout in the league, if not for Garrison Hearst's return to prominence, those two would not be enjoying the years they are having. Hearst has returned with an even 900 yards to this point and has easily earned comeback player of the year for the second time. Hopefully, for 49er fans, including yours truly, he won't win that award a third time.

The other big game in the NFC this weekend pits the 9-2 Chicago Bears against the 8-3 Green Bay Packers at Lambeau Field. Unbelievably, if the playoffs were to start today, the Bears would be the number one seed in the NFC and would have home-field advantage in the playoffs. They still might get the respect around the league like other teams like the Rams and the Oakland Raiders: mainly because of some of the games they have played this year.

The comeback against the 49ers and Browns in back-to-back weeks made the Bears "lucky." The wins at Tampa Bay and Minnesota in consecutive weeks made them "for real." Now, after last week's 13-10 slugfest with the hapless and winless Detroit Lions, who really do suck, the critics have gone back to saying that this team is not for real. Try telling that to Brian Urlacher. Mike Brown and the rest of a defense that is ranked number one against the run in the NFL.

However, they must find a way to get past the Pack in Green Bay this weekend. The first thing the Bears might want to do on defense is keep their mouth shut and don't say anything during the course of the game to Brett Favre to get him going. Just ask Detroit and Jacksonville in back-to-back weeks.

On Thanksgiving, Favre was just going through the motions until he was victim to a late hit late in the first half. The result of that drive was a touchdown to tight end David Martin that turned the game around. On Monday night, Jacksonville Defensive End Seth Payne talked trash with the Packer gunslinger after a failed third down attempt. The next time Favre got the ball, he threw a 43-yard touchdown to Bill Schroeder that turned the game around. I think you get the point, the second Favre starts talking is the moment you know that you are in trouble.

The big match-up in the AFC will pit the Pittsburgh Steelers against the New York Jets. The Steelers might come in without their greyhound on Sunday as Jerome Bettis is doubtful for the tilt with an injured groin, stomach and hip, but other than that he's fine. He is the NFL's leading rusher with 1,072 yards, but just like the 49ers would be without Hearst, the Steelers would not be where they are without the reemergence of signal caller Kordell Stewart.

After leading the Steelers to the AFC title game in 1997, he was lost and benched on numerous occasions during that stretch. But in 2001, he has found himself again as the scrambling threat that became an instant star in '97. He has 2013 yards passing, but just six touchdown passes. However, he has thrown just five interceptions in 298 attempts and has rushed for 378 yards making him that double threat again.

The Steelers will have a tough test against the Jets, especially if "The Bus" does not play. They will have to deal with the NFL's second leading rusher in Curtis Martin, who comes into the game just two yards behind Bettis at 1,070 (why can't the Patriots get running backs like him?). While Martin is having an MVP season, Vinny Testaverde and the passing attack are having an MIA season. The Jets fireballer is without the flame, throwing for just over 1,600 yards this year and unbelievably, Wayne Chrebet has not caught a touchdown pass. Obviously, Chrebet is paying homage to one of his closest friends, Tampa Bay's Keyshawn Johnson who also has no touchdown receptions this year.

Those three games will make the statement as to who will be at the top of the NFL by seasons end. But there are other games that will have an effect on the playoff race this weekend. Here are some of my picks.

Two AFC West combatants go at it in Denver as the 6-5 Seahawks will take on the 6-6 Broncos. The Broncos Super Bowl aspirations have gone down in smoke with injuries to their top receivers, Ed McCaffrey and Rod Smith and poor fourth quarter play by QB Brian Griese (57th out of 58 quarterbacks in fourth quarter QB rating) Mile High hopes have turned into a free fall of a disappointing season. Now it is time for either the slumping Broncos or the surging Seahawks to put up or shut up. I think at home, the Broncos will silence Seattle's playoff hopes. Favored by five, I'll take Denver.

New England is at home to take on the Cleveland Browns. While I do not like what the Pats did to Drew Bledsoe, Tom Brady has done the job so far going 7-3 in his 10 starts and after Cleveland's blowout loss to Tennessee last week, the Browns are reeling. Perfect set-up. The Browns come in with nothing to lose and everything to gain and that defense can stop teams. Getting five and a half points on the road, give me the Browns.

In the NFC West, an elimination game will take place between the Saints and Falcons. I would have given the Falcons a chance, but QB Chris Chandler is hurting, although he will start. The Saints will be able to run with Ricky Williams and beat the Falcons. Take The Saints giving three points.

Oh, I can't forget about the three big games I talked about. The 49ers lost by only four in week two, despite being out gained two to one. Take the 49ers, getting eight and a half points. In the other two games, take Green Bay favored by six and the Jets as a four-point underdog in the Steel City.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist.

Sources say most college athletes deal with media well

By Thomas Derpinghous
The Daily Cardinal (U. Wisconsin)

(U-WIRE) MADISON, Wis. – Celebrity college athletes by and large have mixed feelings about the drones of journalists who follow their every move and criticize their every botched spike, failed touchdown and missed slam dunk.

Lizzy Fitzgerald, the University of Wisconsin volleyball team's star senior setter, says she feels fortunate and comfortable with the amount of media coverage that her award-winning play garners.

"I think we are really lucky in the amount [of coverage] we get and I don't think we would ever complain about getting too much," Fitzgerald said. "Our sport needs it and we appreciate it."

For the most part, this is the sentiment of many to most famous collegiate athletes, according to the Los Angeles Times' sports editor, Bill Dwyre.

"The college athletes are not thinking about meeting us as they haven't formed this huge dislike of us yet; they need a few years in the pros to do that," Dwyre said. "[In college], they're much more accessible, they're much more willing and eager and kind of pollyannish in their approach to things and it's refreshing."

Some athletes do resent the media, however, this resentment manifests itself in press interviews and other interactions with reporters and editors, according to Dwyre.

"You have some sullen, overstuffed prima donnas at the college level too, but usually they haven't reached their peak of sullenness yet," he said.

A number of factors play into the new collegiate athlete-media relationship, according to those interviewed. For example, fan expectations play heavily into the pressures of being a successful college athlete. In addition, monetary concerns of modern professional sports recruiting play into the media's hyping of a specific college player.

"The economics of pro sports have changed it somewhat," said Tuscaloosa (Ala.) News Sports Editor Cecil Hurt. "Because when you're dealing now with what you call a celebrity college athlete, you're also dealing with guys who are on the verge of being instant millionaires."

Tuscaloosa is home to the University of Alabama and its Crimson Tide, a program that is as close to an organized religion as any collegiate program in this country could be. Despite the sacred status the team enjoys in the city and state, Hurt says he has observed little strife between the local media and UA players.

"That's really part of the fabric here, is that Alabama football players have been heroes for longer than I've been alive," Hurt says. "I haven't had too many cases where somebody was just really too big headed or too in the clouds to deal with."

Members of the media do approach reporting on college athletes differently than they do professional sports stars, however.

Professional athletes, because of their more prominent status and higher paychecks, are more accountable and far more reportable than college players. There is "more consideration" given to collegiate sports stars, Dwyre says, and he is quick to point out that there is a huge difference between a 19-year-old collegiate celebrity and a 39-year-old millionaire professional.

Athletes can be overplayed by media outlets in their daily coverage, an assertion that Hurt attributes to a medium other than his own.

"I think sometimes there's hype, there's Heisman hype and NBA hype," he said. "I think television has a lot to do with that."

Threes are wild in NCAA's early goings

It is just 98 days until Madness begins in March and the season has already seen its share of trends and upsets and the main parts of the conference schedules have not begun yet.

We have seen Bobby Knight start his coaching career at Texas Tech with just over 100 wins to go to catch Dean Smith for the all-time record for coaching victories. We have seen Arizona come from out of nowhere to knock off four top 25 teams in the first month of the season. And we have seen Steve Lappas lead the Minutemen to a 4-1 start, watering the taste buds of Minutemen supporters looking to make it back to the NCAA Tournament.

DAVID ROSE

However, with all those events that have occurred, one number has stolen the spotlight from all of them and in my view has become the biggest single number in College Basketball's first month. So now, here is the biggest trend to the college basketball season so far.

Unlucky number 3. This number has been a dread to everybody this early season. If you are ranked this number, you know you either have a scare from a team you should beat or will lose outright. Cases in point:

Maryland was the first third-ranked team this year. They had just come off of a final-four year where they had a 23-point first half lead against Duke and lost 95-84. They would go into this season and march their way back to the Final Four and this time win it all. Arizona was losing four starters from a team that lost to Duke. No way the Terps would lose to the Wildcats. That same week, they lost to Arizona 74-67. That's the first number three down.

The next week, Kentucky became the number three-ranked team in the country. But they couldn't lose their number three ranking, they were only playing Western Kentucky at home and they never lose at Rupp Arena against a non-conference team. Wrong! The Hilltoppers stunned the Wildcats 74-62 and the Bluegrass state was left turned upside down. An other number three down.

The following week, Kansas becomes number three. They were a top ten team in the preseason and with Ros Williams and his team going over to Maui, they looked like as team that was basking in the glow of the Hawaiian sun, as they would easily take out Ball State. Apparently they got too much sun and fell in the final seconds to the Cardinals 93-91. Three number threes in three consecutive weeks equaled three number three's upset. Teams are now paying not to get this ranking.

Third-ranked team number four: Arizona. The Wildcats garnered the number spot with upset wins over Maryland and Florida. They had to win one game, just one game to avoid the curse of being ranked number three. Unfortunately, they had to play Kansas, the same team that was number three the week before. Do I even have to say what happened? No, but I will anyway. Kansas 105, Arizona 97. Four number three's in four weeks going down.

Now Missouri holds down the number three spot. They played struggling St. Louis on Monday. Obviously the Tigers with Kareem Rush and Wesley Stokes in the backcourt would do away easily with the Bilacans. Oh no, here we go again, St. Louis ties the game with four seconds left on odds of the three, Missouri shot down St. Louis with a shot at the buzzer by Stokes to win 69-67. If Missouri is able to get by Southern on Saturday, they will become the first number three not to lose this season in a week when they are ranked third. Southern's record coming into this game is, you guessed it, 0-3. Speaking of three being a bad thing, North Carolina had not started 0-3 in seventy-THREE years. And while the Tar Heels bounced back to beat Georgia Tech, it has been all that has killed them this year. The loss of the backcourt of Joseph Forte and Ronald Curry has led to the ball going more and more to Kris Lang in the post. Lang, who played in 33 games last year, now has been asked to carry the load left behind by the departure of Brendan Haywood and Forte, who was the Celtics' third pick of the first round.

The number three has been a wicked number to NCAA teams so far this season. While that could change for some, it will ultimately be the team that can master the art of that number that will end up cutting down the nets in Atlanta in April. That is unless you are a number three seed.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

■ gameday

continued from page 11

"So," Corso reasoned, "if I were Syracuse, I would refuse to have 'College GameDay' come."

Miami, on the other hand, is 5-0 with "GameDay" on site, though the Nov. 17 appearance drew a record low in fans. A 3:30 kickoff, an off-campus stadium and what Fowler considered Miami fans not taking Syracuse seriously accounted for the poor turnout.

"By far our smallest turnout ever for a road show, and yet we had a good time," Fowler said. "It's not essential to have a million people back there. You play to them to a certain extent, but really the show has to be about the people watching at home."

Which is how it began. "GameDay" debuted as an in-studio show in 1986, and the first road show came in 1993 in South Bend, Ind., before a game between No. 1 Florida State and No. 2 Notre Dame. The following season, Herbstreit took over for Craig James, now with CBS, to round out the current cast, and the show hit the road six times. Last season, 15 trips to the top game each week across the country established a new high.

On a baseball field across the street from the Orange Bowl, "GameDay" begins game day at 6:30 a.m. on Nov. 17. Breakfast is served in a trailer parked outside the right centerfield fence. In deep leftfield, the set is quiet but will soon become the picture of frenzied final preparation.

The set arrived midweek from South Carolina, site of the previous week's show, and was constructed Thursday. The talent, production staff and crew filtered in Friday along with the TV truck in time to tape an evening segment for "SportsCenter." By Larick's count, 30 full-time ESPN employees travel with the show, while local cameramen and other hires from the area boost the staff on hand to 50.

Herbstreit and Corso fly in each week from the site of ESPN's Thursday night broadcast of a game, while Fowler arrives from New York.

They are expected three hours before going on air Saturday. Once on site, they gather for one to two hours for a production meeting to go over a topical outline. Then it's time for makeup, and then on to the set.

Each brings a computer printout of his notes, and use no teleprompter.

Fowler introduces the day's matchups, and Herbstreit and Corso provide analysis while frequently antagonizing each other.

"They just make notes and decide who will talk first and in what order," Larick said. "They ad-lib from there. No teleprompter. Ever. It's all off the top of their head. Yeah, they're good."

Ty Tryon. Remember the name. This 17-year-old kid dropped a bogey-free 66 in his final round at the qualifying tournament to become the youngest player to earn his tour card. Get ready for the "Did his father force him to play golf?" questions. He might be golf's superstar in 2010.

Why any of the coaches tasting sweet success in the NFL would consider taking the Notre Dame job is beyond me. South Bend doesn't exactly harbor the same super program it once did. You know, back in the days of Rudy.

Did I mention that I hate Holy Cross basketball?

I don't care if it does have two losses. Colorado is (at least) the second best college-football team in the nation, but the BCS system is destroying it. Tennessee is definitely solid and its potential matchup against Miami in the Rose Bowl for the National Championship has the makings of an ESPN Instant Classic, but the Buffs can beat anyone right now.

JIM PIGNATIELLO

In the last two weeks, the Buffalos have beaten the No. 2 and 3 teams in the nation. Nebraska seemed to be on the road to another title game before Gary Barnett's squad dropped 62 on the Huskers. So what does Colorado do as an encore? Exorcise one of the team's losses by beating a very good Texas team led by budding star Chris Simms. The only other loss for Colorado this year was an opening day 24-22 letdown against Fresno St. That shouldn't destroy its entire season.

Nebraska is ranked ahead of Colorado in both the BCS and AP Polls because they have just the one loss to the 'Buffs. But the Huskers have just two wins over ranked teams, while the Buffalos have five. This is why both the BCS and AP ranking

Turn to RANDOM, page 9

H.S. junior makes PGA grade

Looking back on it, I'm not that offended.

If I were on the verge of a PGA Tour career at only 17 years of age, then following up on a phone-interview with a reporter from Massachusetts probably would have skipped my mind too.

So please, Ty: excuse me. Mr. Tryon, don't worry about returning the message I left with your coach last March. You have more important matters to attend to, like learning how to shave.

ERIC SODERSTROM

That might sound sour, but honestly, my words are so very far from that assumption. What this kid has done is incredible – plain and simple.

Incredible.

On Monday afternoon, Ty Tryon – the high school junior from Orlando, Fla. – fired a 66 in the final round of the PGA Tour Qualifying Tournament, to give him a six-day total of 18-under (414) and place him in a tie for 23rd.

In Q-school, the players who finish in the top 35 earn their Tour card and are guaranteed at least one year of same-tournament existence with Tiger Woods, David Duval and the rest of golf's demigods.

Tryon is the youngest to ever gain PGA membership. And no one is completely shocked that he's done it.

It's just that it wasn't expected this soon. At 19 or 20, maybe. At 21 or 22, sure. Why not?

But at 17? Some courses won't even let him rent a golf cart at that age.

Someone this young, playing this game, this good, is – for lack of a better word – insane.

The hype started a year ago, when Tryon, playing junior golf at the time, made himself known at the Honda Classic in March where he tied for 39th. As a Monday qualifier, he became the youngest hacker (16 at the time) since 1957 to make a cut on the PGA Tour. Two months later he was tied for the lead after one round of the B.C. Open and finished in a tie for 57th. His talent had been established.

But after failing to qualify for the match play round of the U.S. Amateur it seemed, then, that the youngster might not be as tournament-ready as many once thought.

Still, Tryon turned pro immediately after his early Amateur exit, in a move that was highly criticized.

Until last week.

All the doubts melted away in the West Palm Beach, Fla. heat with his extraordinary finish at Q-school. In his first five rounds at Bear Lakes Country Club, Tryon shot 70-69-71-68-70 and found himself in 50th place, 15 spots away from any golfer's dream. To be in the hunt at the beginning of Day 6 is tough in the first place. But to shoot a 66 and climb 27 spots in the final day to secure your card is nearly divine. And that's exactly what he did.

In maybe the most mentally-demanding day in sports; a day in which some kid's father needed to be successful in order to pay outstanding bills, Tryon – the kid golfer already with a million bucks in his pocket thanks to sponsorships by Callaway Golf and Target Stores – threw out the afternoon's lowest number.

William Augustus Tryon IV – nicknamed "Ty" because of his father's liking for Ty Webb, one of the main characters in "Caddyshack" – is now a professional golfer, recognized by one of golf's supreme bodies.

And he's not even old enough to buy a celebratory cigar.

Information from ESPN.com used in the column.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

Clearing out all the random thoughts

Some random thoughts from a sports writer trying to ease his pure hatred for Holy Cross basketball:

The women's basketball game at Burlington, VT Sunday was the worst refereed game (of any sport) I have ever experienced in my life. Any player even thinking about breaking another's force field was called for a foul, but that wasn't what set me off. Once the game was lopsided in favor of the Catamounts, the refs began giving the Minutewomen possession out of sympathy.

JIM PIGNATIELLO

For example, UMass' Cleo Foster throws a pass to the blocks for teammate Caroline Nehls. the ball is tipped by a defender and clearly touched by Nehls (bs both hands) before it goes out of bounds. The ref blows the whistle, thinks for a second and gives the ball to Massachusetts. This situation happened at least four times in the final three minutes of action and, frankly, it was just awful to watch.

Ty Tryon. Remember the name. This 17-year-old kid dropped a bogey-free 66 in his final round at the qualifying tournament to become the youngest player to earn his tour card. Get ready for the "Did his father force him to play golf?" questions. He might be golf's superstar in 2010.

Why any of the coaches tasting sweet success in the NFL would consider taking the Notre Dame job is beyond me. South Bend doesn't exactly harbor the same super program it once did. You know, back in the days of Rudy.

Did I mention that I hate Holy Cross basketball?

I don't care if it does have two losses. Colorado is (at least) the second best college-football team in the nation, but the BCS system is destroying it. Tennessee is definitely solid and its potential matchup against Miami in the Rose Bowl for the National Championship has the makings of an ESPN Instant Classic, but the Buffs can beat anyone right now.

In the last two weeks, the Buffalos have beaten the No. 2 and 3 teams in the nation. Nebraska seemed to be on the road to another title game before Gary Barnett's squad dropped 62 on the Huskers. So what does Colorado do as an encore? Exorcise one of the team's losses by beating a very good Texas team led by budding star Chris Simms. The only other loss for Colorado this year was an opening day 24-22 letdown against Fresno St. That shouldn't destroy its entire season.

Nebraska is ranked ahead of Colorado in both the BCS and AP Polls because they have just the one loss to the 'Buffs. But the Huskers have just two wins over ranked teams, while the Buffalos have five. This is why both the BCS and AP ranking

Turn to GAMEDAY, page 11

"College Gameday" tops pregame shows

By Chris Snow
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

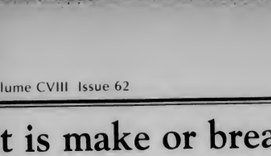
(U-WIRE) MIAMI - You may still be sleeping Saturday when students at the University of Florida, possibly numbering in the thousands, straggle out of their dorm rooms and apartments at an hour that by collegiate standards is early. Usually too early.

The motivation? A chance to be captured by an ESPN camera between 10:30 a.m. and noon. The Goliath of sports television networks will visit Gainesville, Fla., Saturday to put on "College GameDay," the only travelling college pregame show.

Outside Ben Hill Griffin Stadium, host Chris Fowler, former Ohio State quarterback Kirk Herbstreit and longtime coach Lee Corso will put on their weekly 90-minute exposition of knowledge, insight and entertainment live before a backdrop of chanting, sign-bearing fans.

"They enjoy their jobs," said Don Larick, "GameDay's" operations manager. "Who wouldn't? To talk football trash every weekend and get paid big bucks for it. In everybody's living room, it's like they're sitting around there talking with the guys, talking football. Except they're on TV."

Larick spoke in the shadows of the Orange Bowl in Miami, where earlier that day Syracuse lost, 59-0, to the Hurricanes. That marked the second time since "GameDay" hit the road in 1993 that the show visited a Syracuse game. Two years ago, Fowler and Co. were on hand for Syracuse-Virginia Tech in Blacksburg, Va., a 62-0 Orangemen loss.



"They definitely have the worst 'College GameDay' onsite record of anybody," Fowler added. "Combined 0-2, 121 points."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Let the games begin!

Sophomore Pat McFarlin and the UMass men's gymnastics team opens the season this Saturday at home in the UMass Open.

Work over Break

RGIS Inventory Specialist

Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

- Earn $2,000.00 during break
- $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
- Days, Nights, & Weekends

Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com

Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

Equal Opportunity Employer

Collegian Sports:

Today's issue has more columns than the Parthenon.

That's a newspaper in Greece, right?

Rip-off this great chance to make serious $ and go to Florida next Spring . . .

Be in on the ground-floor of a Great New Business Opportunity

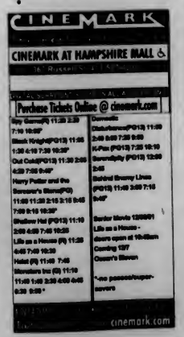
Your friends, more than ever, are getting into their music. In this crazy world it's one thing you can really experience -- If you have the gear!
Problem is: Most people don't, and it costs them too much to get.

Sell them better gear -- in a unique way -- and get $50-$100 per sale

A great line of high quality speakers & matched components. Buy them on-line and they get shipped right to your room.

Your Job: Simply pass the word & printed materials to your friends that are great deals at:

www.michaura.com



MICHAURA L.L.C.
10 Ferry Wharf
Newburyport, MA 01950
Tel: (978) 462-3329
Fax: (978) 465-7925

To join us contact Denton Hunter, V.P. Sales at sales.michaura.com <---------- or call him

Do it today & make real $ tomorrow

Make a Sound Decision ™

www.dailycollegian.com

Collegian Sports:

Start writing with us in the spring semester.

Time is your most precious resource...
Invisible Typist™
is your most valuable tool...
Instantly retype previously typed words
Automatically correct spelling errors as you type
Transform your abbreviations into words or phrases
Works invisibly with any Windows® 95/98/Me/2000 application
Great for word processing, e-mail, chat, instant messaging...
Invisible Typist
Download it now from www.Quolux.com ~ Only $9.95
Quolux™ ~ Illuminators of Cyberspace
Quolux and Invisible Typist are trademarks of Quolux, Inc
Windows is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

LIQUORS 44
OPEN SUNDAY 12-5

Everyday Pricing

Domestic 1/2 Kegs

Beers

Bud & Bud Light 24-12oz cans	$17.49 + dep
Keystone Light & Ice 30-12oz cans	$11.49 + dep
Rolling Rock 2-12oz bottles	$14.99 + dep
Magic Hat 1/2 bbl	$59.99 + dep
Heineken & Amstel Light 1/2 bbl	$109.99 + dep
Saranac 12pk bottles	$9.49 + dep
Sierra Celebration Ale 1/2 bbl	$69.99 + dep
Twisted Tea 6pk bottles	$5.69 + dep

Wines

Woodbridge 1.5l	$8.99
Jekel Chardonnay 750ml	$7.99
C K Mondavi 1.5l	$11.99
Rosemount Shiraz 750ml	$9.49
Bogle Merlot 750ml	$7.99
Martini & Rossi Asti Spumante 750ml	$8.99
Korbel Champagne 750ml	$9.99
Ballatore Spumante & Rosso 750ml	$5.49
Cook's Champagne 750ml	$3.99
Almaden 5lt bag in a box	$6.99

Liquors

Smirnoff Vodka 80 1.75lt	$18.49
Bacardi Rum 1.75lt	$17.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 1.75lt	$19.99
Dewar's White Label Scotch 750ml	$27.99
Seagram's 7 1.75lt	$15.99
Tanqueray Gin 750ml	$24.99
Kahlua Coffee Liqueur 750ml	$14.99
Bailey's Irish Cream 750ml	$14.99
Amaretto di Saronno 750ml	$14.99
Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75lt	$16.99
Courvoisier V S Cognac 750ml	$21.99

at the STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
DON'T Drink&Drive

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT

Is there something you would like to say before graduating?
If so, you ore invited to submit a proposol for consideration oos the Student Commencement Speaker.

Who is Eligible? Graduating Amherst campus senior (class of 2002)

Subject Matter: Your proposed speech should be of general interset to graduating seniors as well as to portnes and other guests. It may address your impressions and experiences, both academic and extracurricular.

Format: Submit approximately two work-processed/typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of three to four minutes speaking time. Speeches exceeding this limit will not be considered.

Selection Process: A non-voting staff Person will delete authors' names after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the prapasals. Three to five individuals will be invited ta audition before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.

DEADLINE: TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 2002, 4:30 PM
Submit Proposals to:
Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 243 Lederle Lowrise • 545-3464

EVERY MON
$4.95 All-You-Can-Eat buffet after every hoop and hockey game

EVERY TUES
Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes

BEER
12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
OCMP accepted
All Credit Cards Accepted
Full Menu From Burgers to Lobster Never a Cover
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA 548-6900

THURS. 12/6
The King Bees
(hip shakin sounds)

SAT. 12/8
RAS and The UN BAND

"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Free Tickets to Picasso Commuter Area Government is giving away 100 free tickets to the Umass Theater Guild show Picasso at the Lapin Asile Dec. 6-8 at the Student Union Ballroom. Just mention this ad when you set your ticket at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline great location. Available Jan 1. call Adrena 413-397-0978

New one bdrm loft. Private deck. Outdoor enthusiast preferred. $700+ 413-247-9138

Sub lease a one bedroom apartment at Cliffside. Dec 1 or Jan 1. $650/month everything included. 413-665-6822 or torresroxanne@yahoo.com

2 Bedroom Apt. $630/month 665-9316

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1. 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

'92 Ford Explorer Eddie Bauer 98K Great Condition $6500 413-256-1989

AUTO FOR SALE

'88 Ford CrownVic Wagon 130K mi, good condition except transmission, runs well $2000 w/ new transmission, $1500 w/out. 413-665-6832

'92 Toyota Tercel great dependable transportation, 4 speed low miles 1,800 or B.O. Call Josy 253-5149

1987 Subaru runs good 142K $250 or B.O call 549-7816

1985 Honda Accord. Runs great. $1400 586-4631

1993 Mazda Mx6 for sale. Call 549-8817

92Chevy Lumina Euro, $2800, call 586-1521

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Part-Time office help at publishing firm, Amherst, flexible hours, knowledge of M/Sword, Excel, M/Smoney a must, page-maker a plus, minimum 2year experience, knowledge of Chinese auto industry preferred, full-time for right person. E-mail to info@cbuauto.com

EMPLOYMENT

WINTER BREAK EMPLOYMENT – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: cashiers, shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th – January 28th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore sq. under the Citgo Sign on the MBTA Green Line. Meet our representatives Dec. 3rd or 4th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Deborah Kopel at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also ask about our recruitment bonus!

CSS= Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas:
Administrative Support
Data Entry Operator
Entry Level Management
Front Office Support
Customer Service Representative
CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com
Corporate Staffing Solutions
126 Northampton Street, Suite G
Easthampton, MA 01027
(413) 529-7100

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser. com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser. com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Medical Billing process insurance claims local training and doctors provided. Invest 7,500 dollars. 800-890-4467

Software Sales/Telemarketing for economic forecasting and policy analysis firm. Part-time. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

Japanese Speaking candidates for software firm. Contact: Fred Treyz, CEO, Regional Economic Model, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002, fred@remi.com

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Drums for Sale TAMA 5 piece. Mint $315. No hardware. Jeff 253-1384

TV For Sale 19" with remote control. Bought 2 months ago. $100. call 546-0978..

Refrigerator for Sale 4.0 cubic foot Haier Refrigerator with freezer. Little more than a year old and in near perfect condition. Has a can dispenser in the door and it is lockable. Asking price: $100, but price is negotiable. Call Mike at 546-6791

Sega Dreamcast Game System plus games + attachments. $450.00 or O.B.O. 548-9430

INSTRUCTION

EMT Class Spring 2002 www.umass.edu/ems For info or 545-1885

ROOM FOR RENT

Bedroom with own bathroom available call 253-8915 for details

1 Room in 2 Bedroom apt. located in boulders on bus route call mike 253-0911

Room Available for Jan. 1st, walking distance to campus. Call Lauren 549-2755 or lkendzie@student.umass.edu

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female to share room in 3 bedroom Townehouses Jan 1st please call 549-9234

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom. –Mill Valley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment Boulders. One roommate needed call 413-256-3885 ask Josh/Anthony

1 Bedroom in 3BR Puffton Apt. Heat/Hot water included $297.50/month. Contact Matt @ 549-8979

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK INSANITY! www.inter-campus.com OR CALL 1-800-327-6013 GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES! ALL TOP DESTINATIONS! FIFTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE! REPS WANTED – FREE TRIPS!

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

Local Spring Break Company Cancun $599, Jamaica $599 Call 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

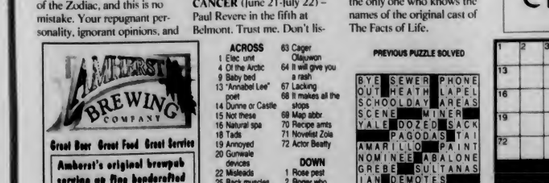
Avoid Spring Break Screw party like a rockstar and with real MTV STARS. 800-227-1166 or www.TheSpringbreakGirl.com

WANTED

Wanted Models for art classes. Experience preferred. Holyoke Community College. Contact Frank Cressotti. 413-552-2489.

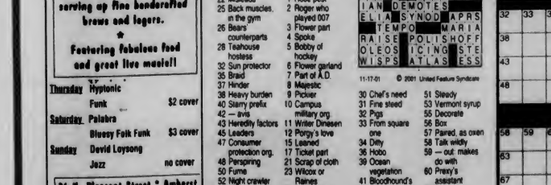
Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



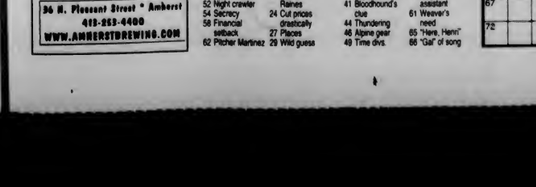
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"One ring to rule them all."

–Lord of the Rings

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 65 LOW: 37	HIGH: 51 LOW: 28	HIGH: 46 LOW: 27

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – If you're happy and you know it clap your hands! If you're happy and you're know it clap your hands! Now, everyone smack the clapping idiots.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You worry that everyone is out to get you. Don't worry, this isn't true - only the people who know you are out to get you.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your vivid fantasies of becoming the sex slave of the actress who played Blair on the Facts of Life will shockingly be realized today.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You are the last of the signs of the Zodiac, and this is no mistake. Your repugnant personality, ignorant opinions, and lax personal hygiene repulse all those who meet you. It could be worse, though - you could be a Collegian staffer.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Yeah, so the other day I was walking around whe nI thought, man, people actually believe this $#!%??? How dumb are our readers, anyway?
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The stars forsee a great day for you, filled with joy and pleasure. Plus, your mom's hot, dude.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your baby seal clubbing days take a backseat to your newfound hobby of whale hunting. Mmmm, baylene.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Paul Revere in the fifth at Belmont. Trust me. Don't listen to those jokers talking about Valantien and Epitaph. They're losers.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Further on down the road you will realize that we were right all along.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21) – Remember Kelly Bundy was never stupid. She was just misunderstood.
LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 21) – Go the hockey game Friday. You will meet your one true love: a Mullins Center employee.
SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21) — They may have laughed at you earlier, but when final Jeopardy comes around, you're the only one who knows the names of the original cast of The Facts of Life.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Mr. Poor is tired from watching
Lord of the Rings
previews online.
He is quite spent.
Try back tomorrow.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Sausage Cacciatore

Sloppy Joe

Native American Stew (vegan) (W Basics)

Vegan Sloppy Joe

DINNER

Beef Bourguignon

BBQ Chicken Quarters

Sweet & Sour Cod (F, B, H)

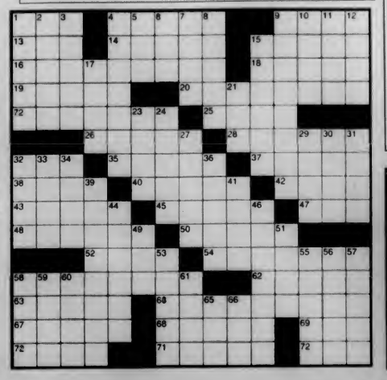
Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Falafel Burger with Sauce (W Basics)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday Hypnotic Funk $2 cover
Saturday Palabra Bluesy Folk Funk $3 cover
Sunday David Loysong Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst
413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Elec. unit
4 Of the Arctic
8 Baby bed
13 "Annabel Lee" poet
14 Dunne or Castle
15 Not these
16 Natural spa
18 Tads
19 Annoyed
20 Gunwale devices
22 Misleads
25 Back muscles, in the gym
26 Bears' counterparts
28 Teahouse hostess
32 Sun protector
35 Braid
37 Hinder
38 Heavy burden
40 Starry prefix
42 — pivis
43 Heredity factors
45 Leaders
47 Consumer protection org.
48 Perspiring
50 Fume
52 Night crawler
54 Secrecy
58 Financial setback
62 Pitcher Martinez
63 Cager Olajuwon
64 It will give you a rash
67 Lacking
68 It makes all the pisps
69 Map abbr
70 Recipe amts
71 Novelist Zola
72 Actor Beatty

DOWN
1 Rose pest
2 Roger who played 007
3 Flower part
4 Spoke
5 Bobby of hockey
6 Flower garland
7 Part of A.D.
8 Majestic
9 Pickier
10 Campus military org.
11 Writer Dinesen
12 Porgy's love
15 Learned
17 Ticket part
21 Scrap of cloth
23 Wilcox or Raines
24 Cut prices drastically
27 Places
29 Wild guess
30 Chef's need
31 Fine steed
32 Pigs
33 From square one
34 Dirty
36 Hobo
39 Ocean vegetation
41 Bloodhound's clue
44 Thundering
46 Alpine gear
49 Time divs.
51 Steady
53 Vermont syrup
55 Decorate
56 Box
57 Paired, as oxen
58 Talk wildly
59 — out: makes do with
60 Prexy's assistant
61 Weever's need
65 "Here, Henri"
66 "Gal" of song



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	Y	E		S	E	W	E	R		P	H	O	N	E
O	U	T		H	E	A	T	H		L	A	P	E	L
S	C	H	O	O	L	D	A	Y		A	R	E	A	S
S	C	E	N	E			M	I	N	E	R
Y	A	L	E		D	O	Z	E	D		S	A	C	K
			P	A	G	O	D	A	S		T	A	I
A	M	A	R	I	L	L	O		P	A	I	N	T
N	O	M	I	N	E	E		A	B	A	L	O	N	E
G	R	E	B	E		S	U	L	T	A	N	A	S
I	A	N		D	E	M	O	T	E	S
E	L	I	A	S		Y	N	O	D		A	P	R	S
	T	E	M	P	O			M	A	R	I	A
R	A	I	S	E		P	O	L	I	S	H	O	F	F
O	L	E	O	S		I	C	I	N	G		S	T	E
W	I	S	P	S		A	T	L	A	S		E	S	S

11-17-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician: Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor: Jess May
Production Supervisor: riki Alcid
Production Staff: Frank DiMeglio, Sarah Vanderlin, Mike Kulak

INSIDE: 17-year-old Ty Tryon earns his PGA card

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, December 6, 2001 | 14

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Mass Attack to take bite out of Terriers

Pair against cross-state rival up next for the Maroon and White

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Thomas Pock and the UMass hockey team will try to improve upon a 2-7 Hockey East record this weekend in two games against Boston University.

They didn't want to be in this position – two wins in Hockey East in nine tries with a pair of games against Boston University looming – but youthful mistakes have put them there.

"What it comes down to is that we've only got two wins in conference," Massachusetts senior captain Toni Soderholm said. "We need some points."

Points, let alone wins have been a thing to envy for UMass hockey when facing off against the Terriers. Historically the BU-UMass contest has been anything but, as the Minutemen have won only two games in the series, to the Terriers 30.

Since Soderholm arrived in Amherst in the fall of 1998, the Minutemen have managed only two points – both from a 5-4 home win late in his freshman campaign – in ten tries, including a pair of pastings during the 2000 HEA quarterfinals at Walter Brown Arena.

History is certainly not backing the Minutemen. No surprise there.

"We're trying not to overstate the importance of these games or the level of the competition," UMass coach Don "Toot" Cahoon said. "What's important is that we have a good practice [today] and we feel good about ourselves going into the weekend.

"We're facing a real good team and want to be at our best when we play them."

The Minutemen were far from top form in a pair of weekend games against conference powers Maine and Boston College. UMass was, as a team, a defensive liability against Maine, falling in a route 6-1 at the Mullins Center.

The Maroon and White then hopped on the Mass. Pike Saturday night, only to return with a disappointing 4-0 loss to the Eagles as the goal scoring woes continued for the visiting Minutemen.

The Black Bears and the Eagles are two teams that almost annually find themselves in the top half of Hockey East, which puts them in the category of squads UMass has to beat to establish itself – but it hasn't gone well so far.

"Our record against the top four teams in the conference, by that I mean BC, BU, Maine and New Hampshire, is staggering," Cahoon said at the weekly sports luncheon.

All time, UMass is 19-126-7 against those four teams, a trend that will have to change if the Minutemen are to reach their goal of program recognition on a national stage.

The steep climb continues this weekend with the pair against BU, but if the Maroon and White are to make any progress, the red light behind the opposing net will have to get some reps.

The Mass Attack has been more like a Mass exodus lately. The Minutemen have scored only seven goals in their last four contests and more than half of those came in a 4-0 drubbing of Dartmouth. The figures over the long haul aren't much prettier and for UMass to take the next step, they will have to start tickling some twine.

The freshman class in all its numbers has shown a slight affinity for filling the net but what this team truly needs is a gifted goal scorer. The chances have been there. The Minutemen were not seriously out shot in either of the last two games in which they scored a total of one goal.

Points leaders Thomas Pock (four goals, nine points) and Tim Turner (six goals, 11 points) have bright shown flashes of scoring touch, but the Minutemen don't need a strobe light. If this team is going to win, one of these guys is going to have to flip on the brights.

BU's got the advantage

To be the best, UMass must beat the Terriers

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Boston University's Walter Brown Arena represents some sort of fundamental glitch in the UMass system. Maybe it's a design flaw or maybe it's really a tough place to play. But every time the Minutemen go into the Terrier's house, their play just screams SYSTEM FAILURE!

"You can just feel the history in that place," UMass captain Toni Soderholm said. "The place is small, the rink is tight and the crowd really gets into it."

In many ways BU represents what UMass as a program aspires to be. The Terriers boast notable National Hockey League alumni such as Chris Drury (Colorado), Tony Amonte (Chicago) and Keith Tkachuk (St. Louis). While the Minutemen, at print time, do not have any former players assigned to a first league squad.

In this case the old adage holds true, "To be the man, you've got to beat the man."

The Terriers are the man, and this weekend the Minutemen will have two chances to beat them, but it will not be easy, especially on Sunday when the Maroon and White travel to an arena that has been historically uninviting.

In its last eight games, dating back to a 5-2 loss in 1997, the Minutemen have come away from Brown arena with exactly zero points. During that span the Terriers have outscored the Minutemen 33-17.

"BU plays extremely well at home," Soderholm said. "Even when we play well it's a big challenge."

It helps that the Terriers, with their four National Championships, ice NCAA tournament contenders on an annual basis. But having maybe the best home-ice advantage in all of college hockey helps, too.

Brown's 3,806-fan capacity is deceiving. Despite its lack of size as compared to most top-notch programs, the almost guaranteed sellout crowd is admittedly like a sixth or seventh skater out there for the home team.

Playing in Walter Brown is like playing hockey three feet away from 3,000 of your worst enemies. It is difficult to keep focus with an infuriating but knowledgeable BU crowd.

UMass coach Don "Toot" Cahoon knows all about the tradition of the Terrier and the effects that fall upon opponents that come into Brown Arena. He also knows what his present team needs to get past it.

"You can't make a big deal out of it," Cahoon said. "The game is still played between the boards."

While the teams success may hinge on Cahoon's ability to have his team forget about the winless streak at BU, his captain, Soderholm, sees his teams string of setbacks in a different light.

"You can try to put it out of your mind," Soderholm said. "But you can also use it as motivation. With the small rink and the tradition. It's a great place to play."

Walter Brown Arena is certainly hallowed ground for college hockey. But chances are nobody on the Minutemen will consider it a "great place to play" until UMass walks out with a win and all systems functional.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts hockey team will need freshman Jeff Lang to continue his stalwart defense in order to beat perennial powerhouse Boston University.

Did Harrison make the list for the top 10 Smoothest characters? Check out Arts and find out.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Micah Brand and the Minutemen head to Boston to take on the Eagles.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 63 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, December 7, 2001

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

It's a wrap!
MassPIRG and brothers from the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity wrap presents for charity.

Forum presents information on women's personal health issues

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

A workshop produced by women, for women, titled "Speak up! It's your body, your health," addressed female menstruation, nutrition, and sexual habits yesterday from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the Mary Lyon classroom at Northeast Residence Hall, allowing approximately 20 female students to discuss options open to them in dealing with health concerns.

Five University of Massachusetts students in Women's Studies 201 designed the workshop as their final group action project for the course and focused on how women can become more vocal about their bodies.

"[The project] mainly has to do with the learning experience of educating others," Catherine Halpin, a senior English major, explained. "We just [wanted] to create an open dialogue about women's bodies."

Deanne Braveman, a sophomore Political Science major and one of Halpin's fellow workshop hosts, noted how the action project's intention was to provide the students with "a better idea of the activists process."

Ilya Plavin, a freshman intended Women's Studies major, began the night with a brief explanation of the biological process of menstruation. Afterwards, she passed around magazine ads for menstrual cycle products, such as pads and tampons.

A female's period, Plavin explained, has an assortment of names to disguise talking about a woman's menstrual cycle in explicit terms. She threw out expressions such as "curse," "plague," "wrong time of month" and "monthly gifts" as examples of this.

Plavin further pointed out an ad for pads, which incorporated cartoon illustrations of clouds and rain, ranging from heavy to light, as metaphorical examples of a woman's period and its daily flow regulation and an OB's ad advocating its small tampon size as its perk for allowing a woman's menstrual cycle to go unnoticed.

Each example, she pointed out, makes a woman feel as if her period is something she should shamefully hide, which, said Plavin, is completely unnecessary.

Women's nutrition, covered by both Halpin and Kai Lantz, a sophomore undeclared major, provided lists of foods and/or beverages thought to be helpful in relieving menstrual cramps and other stomach pains.

"Not everything will work for everyone. Just play around and see what works for you," Halpin clarified, citing the example of cutting one's intake of dairy products to possibly insure less severe to no cramps during one's period. "The milk industry wants you to think you need milk to be big and strong, but there are many other ways to get calcium."

Turn to LECTURE page 2

Springfield counselor stabbed to death

A school counselor was left dead yesterday after a stabbing inside a Springfield High School.

Police say seventeen-year-old Cory Ramos of 24 Partridge Drive fatally stabbed fifty-one-year-old Reverend Theodore Brown, a family relations specialist at his high school.

According to Springfield District Attorney William Bennet, the two were arguing in a science classroom in front of students and another teacher, when Ramos was asked to take off his hoodie.

Wearing a hood up in Springfield High School is a violation of school policy.

Police say Ramos then pulled out a 4-inch knife and stabbed Brown several times in the stomach and chest. He was later pronounced dead at Baystate Medical Center.

The suspect fled from the scene and was later arrested about a half mile from the school, and has pled innocent to murder charges.

The knife used in the attack was recovered in the woods behind the school. Ramos is on probation for an assault and battery incident involving his mother.

"He was a very nice man, and was always helping children no matter what their needs were," Veronica McCullough, an outreach counselor, said of Brown. "He would go out of his way for anybody and was very dedicated to his work."

She said she feels very saddened by what happened, and that it is a total loss to the school and the community.

She also said that she thinks this is an isolated incident.

Springfield High School is an alternative school and is located at 1170 Carew Street within the town.

Officer Boyka and Officer O'Shea of Springfield made the arrest.

—Dawn Moore

Group gathers at Hillel House to mourn Israelis slain in recent attack, students share thoughts

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

A chance breeze blew some of the candles out, but Five College Hillel kept them lit.

Each of the flames, arranged in a Star of David on a table in front of the University of Massachusetts Hillel House on North Pleasant St., symbolized a life lost at the hands of suicide bombers in Israel's Haifa and Jerusalem last weekend. Each member of Hillel who lit a candle then stood on the steps of the building to further drive home the impact of the attacks.

When all the candles were lit, the steps were full.

Weeping, Talia Schwartz lit the last candle to symbolize her family friend, 51-year-old scientist Barub Zinger, who was killed by gunmen from the Palestinian extremist group Hamas as he drove home from dropping his son off at a military base last weekend.

As part of the ceremony, Schwartz also gave a speech in memory of her friend, in which she emphasized the personal connection between the victims of terrorism in Israel and citizens of the United States.

Schwartz also read a poem entitled "The Diameter of the Bomb was 30 Centimeters." The theme of the poem, she explained, "is how violence and loss of life can be felt across the oceans. The place where the bomb hits is not the only place that feels destruction."

Still, Schwartz remarked, though the more than one hundred people gathered at Hillel were united in grief, they were also united in solidarity and friendship.

Also newly united is a Jewish political group, Five College Students for Israel, which was formed out of UMass for Israel. Last night's vigil marked the first meeting of the group.

"After what happened in Haifa and Jerusalem, we got together and said 'this is enough'," explained group member and Hillel resident Daniel Ginsberg. "We need to show some solidarity. We need to express ourselves visually."

"I think the most important thing about this event is that it brought us together as a community, but tonight we're also forming a new cultural and political group that will unite the Five College Hillels for peace in Israel," said Amherst College freshman Leora Maccabee.

"Terrorism is something, as I think we realized on Sept. 11, that doesn't just happen in Israel," she added.

Other speakers included Hillel resident Dan Yagudin, who remembered "the Israel of my childhood," Jen Umin, who spoke of the "deep bond between the US and Israel," and Kemi George, who spoke about the connections between Anti-Zionism and anti-Semitism.

"I am not Jewish – I am Jamaican," George told the audience. "But I don't think you need to be Jewish to understand how the people of Israel are feeling."

George referred to a speech by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in his talk. "The Negro people, my friend, have known what it is to suffer under tyrants not of our choosing," George read.

"Tonight we unite in mourning, and we unite in hope that these victims are the last," Yagudin concluded. The vigil's program also included song. Ginsberg, along with Hillel resident Fran Benedek, recited a psalm in Hebrew and English.

"Traditionally in times of grief as well as times of joy, Jews have reflected on their scripture," Ginsberg told those gathered.

UMass junior Communications and Psychology double major Jason Moldov sang the Star-Spangled Banner, and UMass student Avi Wolf sang the Israeli national anthem, "Hatikva."

Ginsberg commented that the Israeli anthem was especially appropriate for last night's occasion.

"'Hatikva' translates as 'the hope'," he said.

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Pipe down! (Up and across too)
Don't you wonder what this campus facility does?

Pentagon announces war casualties

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Pentagon has identified the three soldiers killed in a friendly fire incident north of Kandahar, Afghanistan, on Dec. 5.

Master Sergeant Jefferson Donald Davis, 39, of Tennessee, Sergeant First Class Daniel Henry Petithory, 32, of Cheshire, Mass., and Staff Sergeant Brian Cody Prosser, 28, of California were killed when ordinance from a B-52 fell close to their position. All were members of the 3rd Battalion, 5th Special Forces Group, headquartered at Ft. Campbell, Ky. Five opposition troops were killed as well.

Twenty U.S. troops were injured in the incident, which U.S. Central Command said was under investigation. Eight wounded opposition soldiers were taken by helicopter to the USS Peleliu and 10 others were taken to the USS Bataan, both in the Arabian Sea. The wounds have been categorized as "moderate to severe." Seventeen of the U.S. wounded received medical care in the area of operations, but three remained at the forward operating base where they were stationed and are expected to return to duty soon.

"I'd like to recognize the brave service of those soldiers that were killed and wounded in Afghanistan yesterday. Our condolences go to their families and their loved ones," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said. "These men were engaged in a noble and important cause, and their families have every right to be proud, as we all are, of their commitment and their sacrifice."

General Peter Pace, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, reviewed Wednesday's attacks.

"We did have yesterday approximately 85 aircraft conducting strike operations. I have three videos for you," Pace said. "The first is a video on a compound where Taliban troops were believed to have been holed up."

The U.S.-led coalition is also focusing its weapons on the mountainous area known as Tora Bora, where cave and tunnel systems may provide hiding areas to eastern Taliban forces and al Qaeda terrorists.

"In the Tora Bora cave complex, just like everywhere else that we've assisted the opposition groups in Afghanistan, we have begun to provide support to the opposition groups that are moving through the valleys in the Tora Bora complex," Pace said. "As you know, up until this time, until just recently, we haven't been, in fact, attacking the caves from the air. Now, as the opposition groups move their troops through that complex, we're able to provide them the air support that they can help direct, because they're able to see the caves that are active, they can see the caves that are not, and we're able to provide much more direct support for them.

"So it's unfolding in the Tora Bora area as it has in Kunduz, as it did in Mazar-e Sharif, as it continues to in Kandahar," Pace added. "They have moved up the Tora Bora Valley in that cave complex area. As is the battlefield elsewhere, it's very fluid, but they have, in fact, been directing their ground attacks against facilities, and we've been assisting them with our air support."

While the peace process has been continuing, Rumsfeld said that no conclusion has yet been reached that would stop the war.

"There is nothing that I know of that has happened that is sufficiently mature that it would alter our general approach that has been taking place, and that has been to continue to put pressure on Kandahar, to be supportive of the forces that are opposing Kandahar, and to see that Kandahar is not reinforced, and to see that people who ought not to escape do not escape, and to encourage surrender," Rumsfeld said. "To the extent that requires bombing, that's what we do. And to the extent it requires interdiction, that's what we do. So we have – we do not have any pauses in effect at the moment."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

PHOTOGRAPHER'S MATE 1ST CLASS DAVID C. MERCER/U.S. NAVY

Ten Afghan soldiers wounded in the Dec. 5 friendly fire incident were transported to the USS Bataan.

Campus Perspectives

By Martha Olivo

Who is the hottest person you've ever seen?

Lori Hahn
Freshman
History
"Heath Ledger. I like his accent."

Sarah Paiva
Senior
Communication Disorders
"Ewan McGregor. He's my boyfriend."

Ron Paradis
Senior
Economics
"Emily Johnson. She showed me how to look at life in a more positive manner."

Zach Elias
Sophomore
Undeclared
"Penelope Cruz...she's flawless."

Norman Tom
Sophomore
Undeclared
"Thora Birch. She has mental beauty."

Kenji Chinone
Sophomore
Philosophy
"Tara Reid. I can't really describe it. She has really nice blue—are they blue or green—blue eyes."

Texas law sets tuition rules to penalties

By Matt Stiles & Matt Ward
The Shorthorn (U Texas Arlington)

(U-WIRE) ARLINGTON, Texas – Thanks to a change in state law, students could be withdrawn from the university next semester and in future sessions if they don't pay at least half of their tuitions and fees by the census date, officials said Wednesday.

The policy change mostly will affect students who register early, pay the university then more than double their course loads before the semester begins. In the past students could pay the additional fees resulting from late additions to their schedules weeks after the census date or Jan. 30, officials said.

But last spring the Texas Senate changed the language in the fiscal year 2002 appropriations bill, forcing the university to require full payment – or half if a student chooses the installment plan – for the enrollment to count for state formula funding.

For example, students who register for six hours in December pay half their charges in an installment plan and then add another nine hours just before classes begin would be affected. Under the new policy students must pay for half of all their courses by the 12th class day, regardless of when they registered.

"We haven't been paid for those 12 hours, but we have been counting those hours," said Bill Buttram, University of Texas-Arlington assistant controller of financial services. "The state is being much more restrictive now."

University business officials are scrambling to inform students of the change in time, sending out postcards, letters and posting information on the Web. Simply put, students should complete their registration at one time so they can receive one bill and avoid the confusion, he said.

"Try to register for what you intend to wind up with at the time you initially register," Buttram said. "Don't change your schedule unless it's absolutely necessary and if you do change your schedule after the fact, look up your tuition and fees and compare that with what you paid."

Once withdrawn, students are responsible for 50 percent of all their charges, and they only can be reinstated if all past-due charges and a $150 reinstatement fee are paid by Feb. 11.

Enrollment loans are offered at both the University Center and Davis Hall Bursar Services locations if funds are available, students meet certain requirements and pay a $25 loan origination fee, officials said.

Students interviewed Wednesday weren't pleased with the changes.

Marina Werth, an interdisciplinary studies graduate student, said she has been at the university since 1995, and every year changes in the tuition payment rules seem to affect students negatively.

"They always make it worse," she said. "Why not make it easier for students? This isn't [Southern Methodist University] where everybody's parents pay their tuition."

Criminology sophomore LonNita Wiggins said she expects some students may not return in the spring because of the tighter tuition payment deadlines.

"They're going to lose students," she said. "They are going to lose a lot of students."

Hsiao-Ying Lee, a business administration graduate student, said she usually doesn't have problems paying tuition on time but understands how changes in the payment schedule could annoy some students.

"I think for those who have that kind of problem, it bothers them," she said. "It's not fair."

Though the new policy affects students here, university officials were left with little latitude because of the law change. The policy also was an inconvenience for campus officials, who had to rework computer systems to calculate the changes, Buttram said.

■ lecture

continued from page 1

The main thing, Lantz stressed, is to listen to your body. "Doctors can't be up on everything," she added. "Do your own research."

Susie Reddy, a sophomore journalism major, and Braveman addressed sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) and female contraceptives, respectively.

"Find someone who's going to take the time to talk to you, because it's important," Reddy gave as advice for finding a practical doctor.

Braveman provided various examples of female contraceptives to prevent STDs and/or pregnancy, including the female condom, diaphragm and dental dam. She also included emergency contraceptives, such as the so dubbed "morning after pills" – Preven and Plan B – and the RU-486 abortion pill.

Coming full circle, the workshop ended with Plavin's section on truths surrounding menstruation products.

"In this society, we're told we have to cover up our period and sterilize it," she said. "The point is we don't have to buy that."

Women use in a lifetime 16,000 to 24,000 disposable menstrual products (pads, tampons), which contain a chemical called rayon. However, Plavin said, this same chemical causes Toxic Shock Syndrome (TSS).

"Tampon companies say that TSS is associated with using higher absorbency tampons. This is misleading," she explained. "Higher absorbency tampons will dry out the vagina, making the tampon harder to remove. When you pull it out, it leaves behind rayon fibers," thus resulting in TSS.

She noted that in many European countries, U.S.-made menstrual products are actually illegal for this very reason.

Mentioned alternative methods included a cloth pad and the "keeper." The cloth pad is much more comfortable than disposable pads, according to Plavin, and is washable for reuse. The "keeper," on the other hand, is made of gum rubber and is inserted into a woman's vaginal area in a similar fashion to a tampon. This too is intended to be reused after washing.

Write News! For Write News!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the (1890-91) Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1946. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauti Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiborra Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brem Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

DJ solo Sal
Every Sunday
Live Music
positive ID required
McMurphy's

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT OOPS!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

The Mercantile
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Chains Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles
Incense Baskets Merry X'mas Cards Mugs Paper Lampshades Gloves Chinese Shoes
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
Dec. Hours Mon-Sat. 10 am-9 pm-Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

Two U Oklahoma Pakistani students released from custody

By Ryan Chittum
Oklahoma Daily (U. Oklahoma)

(U-WIRE) NORMAN, Okla. – In Norman, Okla., the FBI and the Immigration and Naturalization Service have detained at least seven Muslim men – including one American citizen – since Sept. 11. On Monday, two of those men – both Pakistani University of Oklahoma students – were released from Oklahoma County Detention Center after their families posted $15,000 bond.

Nabeel Khalid and Muhammad Imran Shaikh were bailed out of Oklahoma County Detention Center, but their roommate, Mohammad Yaseen Haijer, president of the Pakistan Student Association, remains in custody on immigration charges. A judge did not allow him to post bond.

Khalid and Shaikh may be told to sign releases saying they will leave the United States within two weeks of their release date, according to a source who wished not to be identified. They could then apply for new visas back in Pakistan, though they would be unlikely to get them. The two have an immigration hearing Dec. 13 in Oklahoma City. A man who answered the phone at their apartment declined to comment.

The INS arrested the three students Nov. 8 and charged them with violating immigration violations. The INS has refused to comment on the nature of the immigration charges, but the source said it was because the three had previously been employed off campus, a minor visa violation that is common among international students.

Father Joe Meinhart, pastor at St. Thomas More University Parish, has acted as a liaison between the Norman Muslim community – many of whom are afraid to visit the students in jail for fear they will also be detained – and the students.

The three students were not being represented by an attorney when he first visited them three weeks ago, he said in an interview with The Oklahoma Daily last week. Meinhart informed them of their rights and helped them get an attorney.

A nationwide trend The Justice Department's international dragnet following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks is drawing political fire from the left and the right.

Critics say the investigation has caught up too many people and has amounted to racial profiling since it has focused on Arabs.

Following the national pattern set by Attorney General John Ashcroft, local FBI and INS agents have refused to comment on any part of the investigation. The agencies will not confirm if a person is in detention or if they have charged anyone with a crime.

The names of those detained have come out only via tips from their friends and other sources.

The first Norman arrests came just hours after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Hussein Al-Attas, an OU student, and Mukkaram Ali were roommates in OU's Kraettli Apartments south of Timberdell Road. The apartment's lease was in another OU student's name; neither Al-Attas nor Ali was on the lease.

Al-Attas, a Saudi national, and Ali, who said he is from India, were friends of suspected terrorist Zacarias Moussaoui. Al-Attas' attorney declined to comment about his client.

Moussaoui lived in Norman from February to August and went to Airman Flight School in the spring to try to get his pilot's license. The INS arrested him for using a falsified passport in Minnesota on Aug. 17, days after he left Norman and three weeks before the terrorist attacks.

The FBI believes Moussaoui intended to be part of a second wave of attacks using chemical or biological weapons. Investigators found materials about cropdusters and wind patterns on the hard drive of Moussaoui's computer.

The Bush Administration is debating whether Moussaoui should be the first person tried by a military tribunal, according to The New York Times. He has refused to cooperate with investigators.

Al-Attas drove Muussaoui to Minnesota in August, where both ran afoul of the INS. Al-Attas returned to Norman sometime thereafter, but federal officials arrested him and Ali on campus Sept. 11.

American citizens not immune

Mujahid Abdulqaadir Menepta, 51, befriended Al-Attas, Ali and Moussaoui at the Norman mosque. In an Oct. 4 interview with The Oklahoma Daily, Menepta, an American citizen born in St. Louis, defended his friends.

Moussaoui was not an extremist, despite being a stickler for the details of Islam, Menepta said. He said officials and the media are conducting a witch-hunt, in which Moussaoui was a victim.

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Cruisin' the strip
Downtown Amherst from behind the wheel.

VOLUNTEER BULLETIN

Dec. 1-20 – The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts – Volunteers needed to sort food for low-income families. Contact: Fern Spierer Events and Volunteers 413-247-9738 ext. 125; www.foodbankwma.org

Dec. 1-24 – The Food Bank – Volunteers needed to help distribute a gift catalog to raise funds for The Food Bank. Contact: The Food Bank 247-9738

Dec. 1-24 – Gift wrap help - Teams of volunteers are needed to wrap holiday gifts for customers at the Holyoke Mall. Proceeds go to Hospice Life Care. Teams must commit to three-hour shifts. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Dec. 2-8 – Festival of Trees – Volunteers are needed to assist guests in viewing trees at the Springfield Boys and Girls Club Festival of Trees at the Basketball Hall of Fame. Festival runs from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Dec. 8 – Salvation Army – Volunteers needed to staff Christmas party for low-income children. Contact: Elizabeth Cowart 586-5243

Dec. 8 – The Gray House in Springfield – Volunteers needed to help out in the thrift store, for the after-school program, in the food pantry and more. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Dec. 8 – The YMCA of Greater Springfield – Volunteers needed for Youth Basketball program on Saturdays to be head coaches, assistant coaches, referees, score/clock keepers, special event committee and concession stand attendants. High school students and older are welcome. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Dec. 15-21 – Food Bank – Volunteers needed to wrap presents at Barnes and Noble as fundraiser for the Food Bank. Hours are 4-9 p.m. Dec. 17-21 and all day Dec. 15-16. Individuals, groups and families welcome. Contact: Fern Spierer 247-9738 ext. 125

Ongoing – MassPIRG – Volunteers needed to test bottled water and to test water from the Campus Pond. Contact: MassPIRG 545-0199

Ongoing – YWCA Mentor – Professional women residing in Hampden County are needed to assist teen girls ages 12 to 18 in career explorations, social/recreational activities and tutorial support. Volunteers must commit to three hours per week. Training is provided. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Ongoing – Service Net – Volunteers needed to help with fund-raising for shelters. Contact: Lisa David 582-9512

Ongoing – The Disability Resource Program – Volunteers needed to help disabled people enjoy a wide range of sports, including bowling, wheelchair soccer, wheelchair basketball and wheelchair football. You do not need to use adaptive sports equipment to participate. Groups are welcome. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Ongoing – Lutheran Social Services – Computer-literate volunteers are needed in West Springfield to answer phones, greet clients and visitors, file and type. Meet new arrivals to the country, test them, and place them into appropriate ESL classes. Training is provided. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Ongoing – Family Outreach of Amherst – Low-income women's support organization needs child care for meetings once a week. Contact: Morningstar 665-9806

Ongoing – Holyoke Soldiers Home – Volunteers are needed to do a variety of fun activities from playing bingo, attending bible study and helping residents enjoy their model train set, to participating in current event discussion groups. Volunteers must enjoy doing social and recreational activities with residents. Contact: United Way 737-2691

Ongoing – YMCA of Greater Springfield - volunteers needed to help with after-school program. If you are a high school junior or higher, you are encouraged to become a volunteer. The program stresses literature and incorporates language skills as well as social and emotional development. Contact: United Way 737-2691

STUDENT TICKETS
UMass basketball VS CONNECTICUT HUSKIES
ESPN
Tuesday • DEC. 11TH • 9:00 pm
$ 5.00 each
WILLIAM D. MULLINS CENTER
THE BATTLE OF THE BORDER
THE BIGGEST BASKETBALL GAME OF THE YEAR!
TICKETS ONSALE NOW!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS AT
CAMPUS CENTER • THE CAGE • MULLINS CENTER

RGIS Inventory Specialist
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area:

Boston	617-484-1788
North of Boston	978-777-2253
South of Boston	508-821-5591
New Hampshire	603-926-9813
Plymouth & Cape	508-833-1145
Route 3 South	781-340-6355
Springfield	413-731-6910
Worcester	508-832-8757
Providence	508-336-5658

Work over Break
• Earn $2,000.00 during break
• $9.00 per hour and overtime potential
• Days, Nights, & Weekends
Call today & setup an interview:
24hr Job Line: 888.532.RGIS
or visit us online @ www.rgisinv.com
Visit us on the concourse Nov 28 & 29, Dec 3, 4, 10, & 11

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

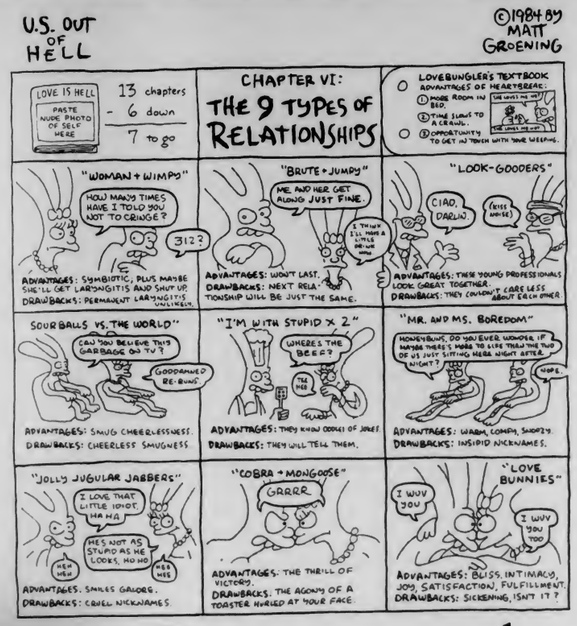
Land of the free exchange of ideas

The vast majority of Americans are in agreement that the recent military actions against the Taliban are just. Polls have shown that between 90 and 95 percent of American citizens support the bombing raids that have driven the Taliban from all of Afghanistan's major cities.

This does not excuse, however, the vilification of anti-war protestors that has occurred throughout the United States. Those who disagree with the path taken by President Bush are branded misguided at best, and treasonous at worst.

There are valid points on both sides of the debate on our actions in Central Asia. Supporters say that any government that would harbor a fugitive such as Osama bin Laden needs to be removed from power, and point to the Taliban's dismal human rights record as further evidence of its evil. Peace protestors say that military strikes against an Islamic nation will only inspire other acts of terrorism, and feel that the Northern Alliance, with its own multitude of abuses, is hardly an improvement. Supporters say that inaction at this point would only encourage terrorists further, while others say that our government would be better off addressing the needs of the world's impoverished people.

While most Americans have decided that war is the only acceptable solution, these issues need to be discussed in a national dialogue. But we are told that no national dialogue can exist. Any dissent, we are warned, is unacceptable.



Several publications have been highlighting the words of these "traitors" as evidence of their lack of patriotism. The Weekly Standard has begun offering "Susan Sontag Awards" to notable anti-war protestors, in honor of Sontag, who suggested shortly after Sept. 11 that the attacks were "the consequence of specific American alliances and actions." She also implied, as did "Politically Incorrect" host Bill Maher, that the terrorists who died in the World Trade Center attacks were more courageous than American soldiers who bomb from afar. While the comments of Sontag and Maher were ill-timed and inappropriate, it is unfair to group all those who object to military action with them. Many Americans, including Buddhists and Mennonites, are religiously opposed to warfare of any kind, and don't deserve to have their patriotism questioned because of it.

Criticism of peace-supporters is not confined only to The Weekly Standard. Activists with anti-war bumper stickers have complained of being victims of vandalism, and peaceful protests are regularly disrupted. Meanwhile the mainstream media have been ignoring the anti-war movement almost altogether. While peace protestors are certainly in the minority, their views are worthy of being heard. It is unlikely, however, that they will be given fair coverage outside of the liberal press.

Many have pointed out the hypocrisy of decrying the Taliban for its refusal to grant its citizens basic freedoms, and then insisting that all Americans march lock-step behind the current administration. While some may object to the idea that the Taliban should go unpunished for its support of bin Laden, we cannot forget that the freedom to disagree with the actions of the government is what differentiates the United States from the dictatorial regimes of the Middle East and Central Asia. Allowing five to 10 percent of the population to voice its concerns is not going to diminish our efforts to avoid another Sept. 11.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Ed/Op:
The only place to get your FDA recommended 100% daily dose of opinion.

Dangerous precedents set in this new war

JOHN HERSEY

The United States has set a dangerous precedent in the wake of the terrorist attacks. In adopting a policy of retaliation against harboring nations and citing UN law in an attempt to combat against the true mercenaries, the United States has set the bar for international justice in the name of preserving established governments. Terrorism is seen as an attack on recognized regimes or administrations, regardless of the specific historic and political details of the affected area.

Following the American standard, Israel has declared that Yasser Arafat is supporting terrorism within Arab factions. This current situation in the Middle East is simply a hint of the political cry of terrorist wolf that will undoubtedly engulf international affairs around the world for years to come.

Israelis and Palestinians have been engaged in intense battle for more than fifty years, feuding over ethnic, religious and political borders since the inception of the Israeli state in 1948. The United States has supported Israel due to its strategic location and potential alliance in the oil-rich and often-disgruntled Middle East. This support has resulted in immense malevolence toward America in Arab nations, which generally believe that a U.S.-aided Israel has maliciously and unlawfully seized Palestinian land over the past fifty years and has, therefore, dispossessed millions of Arabs. This historically ethnic relevance goes a long way to explain Arab animosity and reaction before and after the terrorist attacks in the United States.

Arab attacks on Israeli forces are regarded as terrorist because they are attacks on the established state. However, when Israeli forces attack

Arabs in response – or in initiation (chicken or egg dilemma) – Israel is justified in international law because it is defending itself against assault. Palestinians are caught in a Catch-22 – they are unable to defend themselves and their land against the state of Israel, but are unable to retaliate because of the global stigma of terrorism. Because the United States cited UN law as justification for assailing nations that harbor elusive terrorists, Israel is using similar terms of aggression against Arabs and Arafat. America is acting cautiously on this Israeli declaration – maybe because it is realizing the corner that it created and is now backing into – but how can it stay out of such a conundrum? After all, the United States sought international support in devastating Afghanistan in the name of combating terrorism, why shouldn't Israel do the same? It probably will seek UN support, and the UN will have to abide, unless Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon can be talked out of using such heavy lingo like international law, and the already catastrophic situation in the West Bank and even the Middle East will only intensify to the point where the United States won't be able to sit on the diplomatic fence.

America and other allied nations have adopted a policy of aiding the established state against insurrection. What would happen, however, if a government like Castro's Cuba or Hussein's Iraq were to be assaulted from the inside by its own people? Would the United Nations step in to aid these historically malicious rulers? According to the new doctrine against terrorism, if a nation cries wolf against terrorism, international support against the infidels, whether founded in good or bad intention, is justified and warranted. How long can the States continue to recognize and be responsible for such a volatile policy?

John Hersey is a UMass student.

Over the 'Hill' and far, far away

JAMIE LOO

Every living area has a different stigma attached to it. Southwest is party central, Northeast is quiet, Central is for the "hippies," and Sylvan is the mental hospital of the campus. And then there's Orchard Hill, home of the Commonwealth College and mean, snobby people. Supposedly, Orchard Hill is a quiet place because the students are too busy studying and playing Snood to go out and be social. Most of the ideas people have about Orchard Hill are sadly very negative, specifically of the types of students that live here. Being a resident of Orchard Hill, I think I need to put up some arguments in defense of myself and my neighbors.

I can't see why anyone wouldn't want to live on Orchard Hill. I think the rooms are the nicest you can get on campus and generally people are pleasant. The majority of the people I have met on the Hill are nice, with the exception of a few. It only takes a few people to create a stereotype and unfortunately only the snobs that live there have created it. This image includes the idea that the elitist idea that Commonwealth College students are more entitled to things than non-honors students by virtue of intellectual superiority. I completely disagree with this and many of my friends in Commonwealth College do too.

I think students on the Hill tend to be more respectful of each other. It's a rare occasion to find vomit in the hallways because the majority of people actually make it to the bathroom or will clean it up. Students open doors for each other and hold the elevator frequently too. I've also never seen video cameras at an Orchard Hill event, which I think is a really interesting observation. Unfortunately there are students on this campus who videotape things such as Northeast "freak weekend and riots in Southwest and then proudly post them on the Internet for the world to see. First of all, it's exploiting your fellow students, especially if they're doing something incriminating while under the influence of alcohol. Ladies, if you've ever flashed or streaked publicly while at UMass, I suggest you think twice next time; your image could be on the campus network or even worse, the world wide web, where more people have access to it to hurt you. Those images can be downloaded and used again for possibly worse reasons.

It's ironic how students in Southwest oppose having video cameras as a surveillance mechanism, when other students are videotaping the riots, putting them on the network or the web, and essentially showing UMPD better images than its camera did. While the surveillance camera shows you burning a couch from overhead, your neighbor from down the hall got a close up of you with lighter in hand. Secondly, putting these images on the Internet creates even more bad images of the UMass community. There is enough bad publicity about the student body without having students posting photos and images of each other drunk for people outside the campus to see.

